(Supreme Court of California. June 24, 1918. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1918.)

1. BOUNDARIES ⟸20(3) — SIDE LINE OF STREET—"DIFFERENT INTENT."
A deed giving a boundary "along the southerly line" of a street, shows a "different intent" within Civ. Code, § 1112, providing that a transfer of land, bounded by a highway, passes title to the center thereof, unless a different intention appears from the grant.

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸445—GRANTORS—DEEDS.
A deed is the individual deed of the signers, they signing as individuals, though it recites they compose the last board of directors of a defunct corporation.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1071(3)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—FINDING TITLE TO LAND.
Though plaintiff proves no title to the land, yet she, being in possession, cannot be said not to be prejudiced by the adjudication on insufficient evidence that defendant is the owner and has the right of possession; this entitling him, under Code Civ. Proc. § 380, to execution for possession.

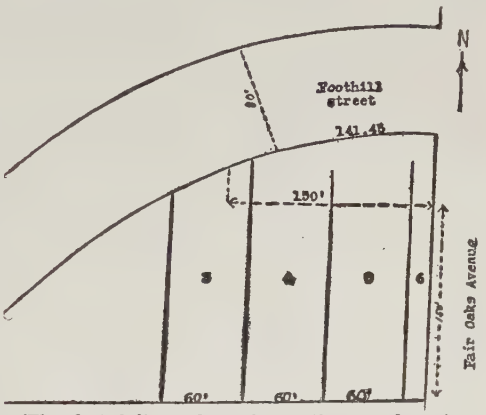
Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Grace P. Warden and another against the South Pasadena Realty & Improvement Company and others. From a judgment for defendant John R. Leahy, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

J. Irving McKenna and Catherine A. McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. Phelps, Greer, Winston & Wharton and Paul E. Greer, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiffs appeal from the judgment in favor of the defendant John R. Leahy. The complaint states a cause of action against the defendants to quiet alleged title of the plaintiff Grace P. Warden to a tract of land described therein as lot 4, tract 246, in the city of South Pasadena, as per map recorded in Map Book 15, page 18, records of the county of Los Angeles. C. P. Warden has no interest in the action except as the husband of his coplaintiff. The defendant John R. Leahy answered, denying that the plaintiffs are the owners of the property, or that his claim thereto is without right, and alleging that he is the owner thereof in fee simple. In a cross-complaint he further alleges his ownership, and that he derives title thereto under a sheriff's deed executed in pursuance of a foreclosure sale of the property, made by said sheriff upon a judgment foreclosing a mortgage on said property entered in the superior court of Los Angeles county on July 19, 1910, in an action wherein said Leahy was the plaintiff and Julia P. Warden and C. D. Warden were defendants, and from these facts he asks judgment quieting his alleged title in the premises against the claims of plaintiffs and the other parties to the action.

The plaintiffs claim title under two deeds. The first is a deed from Julia P. Warden and C. D. Warden to Grace P. Warden, executed on April 14, 1910, and recorded on August 5, 1910. This deed describes the property as "lot 4, tract No. 246, in South Pasadena," situated in Los Angeles county. The second is a deed executed on April 25, 1912, by C. C. Teague, A. C. Hardison, A. W. Ryan, and Lyman Stewart, as grantors, to Grace P. Warden, as grantee. It describes the property as "lot 4, tract 246, as per map recorded in Book 15, page 18, of Maps records of Los Angeles county."



The title of Leahy is derived wholly from the sheriff's deed mentioned in his cross-complaint. Its date is October 6, 1911. It describes the property conveyed as a parcel of land in South Pasadena, Los Angeles county, bounded as follows:

"Beginning at a point on the east line of Lot 6, 150 feet north of the southeast corner of said lot; thence west 150 feet on a line parallel with the southerly line of lots 3, 4, 5 and 6; thence north, parallel with the easterly line of lot 6 to a point on the southerly line of Foothill street; thence easterly along the southerly line of Foothill street to the northeast corner of said lot; thence southerly along the easterly line of lot 6 to the place of beginning; said lots laid down and delineated on map of Oak Lawn addition tract as per map recorded in Book 11, page 53, in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county."

[1] It should be here noted that, under our decisions, this description carries title only to the southerly line of Foothill street as shown on the survey and map of the Oak Lawn addition referred to. It does not give the grantee title to the center of that street, as in a case where the boundary line is said to run "along a street." Our decisions are to the effect that such a description as this in the sheriff's deed shows an intent to give title only to the side line of the street, the "different intent" referred to in section 1112 of the Civil Code. Severy v. C. P. R. R. Co., 51 Cal. 197; Alameda, etc., Co. v. Williams, 70 Cal. 540, 12 Pac. 530. The importance of this will be seen presently.

[2] The court found that the property covered by this description was the same property as that described in the complaint herein. If that were true, the judgment for Leahy would probably be correct. His foreclosure suit was begun on November 30, 1909, and the judgment of foreclosure was entered on July 19, 1910. The title of Grace P. Warden, derived from the deed from Julia P. Warden to her, executed on April 4, 1910, would be subject to the foreclosure sale if, as we assume, she had notice of the action, and the sheriff's deed would prevail over her title under that deed. It does not appear that Grace P. Warden obtained any title by the deed from Teague, Hardison, Ryan, and Stewart. No title was proved to have been vested in them, and hence their deed conveyed none. The deed recites that they comprise "the last board of directors of the Raymond Improvement Company, a defunct corporation." But it does not purport to convey the title of that company, assuming that it had any, which does not appear; the grantors sign as individuals, not as trustees. It is therefore a mere quitclaim deed of the individual grantors, and does not convey any other title.

But the finding that the sheriff's deed conveys the same land as that described in the complaint is not supported by the evidence. In order to understand the want of evidence to support this finding, an explanation is necessary. The land embraced in lot 4, tract No. 246 of South Pasadena, as shown on the map in book 15, page 18, has been the subject of three subdivisions. Maps of each were duly recorded. The first was recorded in the year 1887, and, as it has been superseded by a later one, it need not be further referred to. The second was a resubdivision of a part of the lots included in the first map. This map was recorded on November 5, 1906. It was styled "Oak Lawn addition tract." It will better illustrate the question to give here a plat of the portion of this subdivision which is material to the question. It is as follows:

The subdivision in which the lot described as lot 4, tract 246, first appears, was recorded in book 15, page 18, on March 23, 1909. This subdivision reduces the width of Foothill street from 80 feet to 60 feet, changes its name to Mound avenue, and also changes the shape, size, and frontage of lots as formerly delineated. The 20 feet is taken from the southerly side of the street and is added to the tract subdivided into lots. Three lots, numbered 5, 6, and 7, are shown as fronting fifty feet on Fair Oaks avenue and running back westerly therefrom 150 feet, No. 5 being the northerly lot of the three. Its northerly line is parallel with and 150 feet northerly of the former southerly lines of lots 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the Oak Lawn addition map. Lot No. 4 of this subdivision is the one claimed by the plaintiff. It lies immediately north of lot 5 and is of the same length. Its east and west lines, respectively, are continuations of the end lines of lot 5, and they extend from the line of lot 5 to the southerly line of Mound avenue, formerly Foothill street, so as to include all of the tract lying north of lot 5 and south of the southerly line of that street as reduced in width. Hence the 20-foot strip taken from the street and added to the lots is partly included in lot 4, and constitutes the northerly 20 feet thereof.

As the description in the sheriff's deed carried title only to the land lying south of the southerly line of Foothill street, as it was laid down in the Oak Lawn addition map, wherein it was shown to be 80 feet wide, it follows that it does not describe all the land included in lot 4, tract 246. Lot 4 includes the 20-foot strip formerly included in Foothill street. The description in the sheriff's deed does not include that strip. Hence the court below erred in deciding, on the evidence before it, that the description in the complaint and that in the sheriff's deed were identical, and that Leahy was the owner in fee of the whole of lot 4, tract 246.

There is evidence which leads us to suspect that in June, 1908, at the time Mrs. Jackson bought the lot from Raymond Improvement Company and made the mortgage to Leahy which was foreclosed, the new survey which culminated in the map of 1909, showing lot 4, tract 246, had been made, but that the lots were not yet numbered, and that the parties intended and believed that the description in the deed to her and in said mortgage embraced all of lot 4 as shown on the map afterwards filed. Perhaps the calls in the sheriff's deed could be explained by evidence that the new survey was in existence and was intended to be referred to in said calls. We need not decide the question. The testimony regarding it is altogether too vague, unsatisfactory, and incomplete to justify a finding that the description covers all of lot 4. The condition of the survey and the position of the lines at that time were not shown. No person except Mrs. Jackson testified on the subject. She did not testify to the declarations or intent of Leahy or of her grantors on the subject. It does not appear when the survey was made, nor is the date of the mortgage shown. The evidence is wholly insufficient to prove that the description in the sheriff's deed or mortgage, if construed in the light of the circumstances existing when they were executed, would cover the 20-foot strip added to the lots in 1909.

[3] It is proper to say, further, that the deed from Mrs. Jackson to Julia P. Warden, the grantor of the plaintiff, gives the same description as that contained in the sheriff's deed, and it did not convey to Julia P. Warden any title to the 20-foot strip in controversy. Consequently the deed from Julia P. Warden to the plaintiff Grace P. Warden conveyed no title with respect to that strip. We have shown that she proved no title by the deed from Teague and others above mentioned. She was in possession, however, at the time she began the action, and as Leahy asserted his title in a cross-complaint and the judgment was that he is the owner of all of lot 4, tract 246, and has the right of possession thereof, he would be entitled to an execution thereon to recover the possession from Grace P. Warden. Code Civ. Proc. § 380; Kitts v. Austin, 83 Cal. 172, 23 Pac. 290; Landregan v. Peppin, 94 Cal. 468, 29 Pac. 771. Under the evidence in this case, he has no right to possession of the 20-foot strip in question. Hence we cannot say that the plaintiffs will not be injured by an affirmance of the judgment which will entitle the defendant to relief of that character. A reversal of the judgment is therefore imperative. We find no ground upon which the judgment in favor of Leahy can be sustained.

ROSE v. SOUTHERN TRUST CO.

1. TRIAL ⟸85—OFFER OF TESTIMONY—EVIDENCE INADMISSIBLE IN PART—OBJECTION.
Court's ruling, excluding offer of portion of testimony of plaintiff at other trial to meet portion of testimony of defendant, since deceased, at such trial, cannot be upheld on the theory that offer containing inadmissible evidence, as well as admissible, must be rejected, where only a general objection was made to offer, and there was no indication that all of such testimony was to be used.

2. WITNESSES ⟸139(2)—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEDENTS—EFFECT OF ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE AT FORMER TRIAL.
Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3, forbidding "party" to action against executor, etc., of deceased person, on claim against estate, to testify, and section 1870, subd. 8, making admissible testimony of deceased person at former trial, in action between plaintiff at former trial and executor of defendant at former trial, plaintiff cannot introduce his testimony at such trial, or his deposition, to meet testimony of deceased at former trial, admitted under subdivision 8.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Willis I. Morrison, Judge.

Action by Margarett R. Rose against the Southern Trust Company, a corporation (executor of the estate of Frances L. Mooers, deceased). From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Shepard & Alm, A. G. Alm, Paul W. Schenck, and Richard Kittrelle, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. E. J. Fleming, W. N. Goodwin, Hunsaker & Britt, and Le Roy M. Edwards, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This case was twice heard by the District Court of Appeal, and upon the original hearing an opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice Works (serving pro tempore). It was in part as follows:

"This is an appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The action was commenced against Frances L. Mooers, but she has since died, and respondent has been substituted as her executor. Appellant sought a recovery of the amount alleged to be due upon a contract by which Mrs. Mooers agreed to pay Mrs. Rose the sum of $5,000 for acting as her nurse and companion during a journey to Europe. The trip was taken, and upon the return of the parties certain troubles arose between them, which ended in action brought by Mrs. Mooers against Mrs. Rose. That litigation will, for convenience, be referred to as the old case. It is necessary to describe that case only to the extent of saying that it involved the question whether a sum of money which passed between the parties had to do with a certain transaction concerning corporate stock, or whether it related to the contract sued on in this action. The death of Mrs. Mooers occurred before the trial of the present action.

"At the trial of this action the appellant offered in evidence a part of the transcribed testimony of Mrs. Mooers in the old case, and it was received without objection. A portion of the testimony of Mrs. Rose in that case was then offered, but objection was made, and the evidence was excluded. The correctness of the ruling is challenged, and the first question on this appeal is presented. The evidence was refused admission under the language of subdivision 3 of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, with the introductory portions of the section, reads: 'The following persons cannot be witnesses: * * * Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or administrator upon a claim, or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter or fact occurring before the death of such deceased person.' Subdivision 8 of section 1870 of the same Code provides that 'the testimony of a witness deceased, or out of the jurisdiction, or unable to testify, given in a former action between the same parties' as those in a present litigation, 'relating to the same matter' as that involved in such litigation, is receivable in evidence therein. The appellant contends that the testimony of Mrs. Mooers in the old case was admissible under the section last quoted, and that, therefore, the provisions of section 1880 cannot operate to exclude the testimony of Mrs. Rose in the same case."

A decision was reached regarding the admissibility of the proffered testimony, but upon motion the case was reheard, and then for the first time a new question was presented. The District Court of Appeal then decided, upon the authority of Stone v. Hunt, 114 Mo. 66, 21 S. W. 454, that, even conceding that Mrs. Rose's testimony was receivable at all, it could only be admitted as to matters covered by the testimony of Mrs. Mooers which had been allowed without objection a place in the record, and that, since some of the testimony of Mrs. Rose, offered over respondent's objection, was not pertinent to the subjects covered by the testimony of Mrs. Mooers, the court properly rejected all of the evidence; the rule being that where an offer of evidence includes different propositions, grouped together, parts of the offer being vulnerable to an objection made, the objection should be sustained. Swafford v. Board of Education, 127 Cal. 484, 59 Pac. 900.

[1] While the rule is announced correctly by the District Court of Appeal, we have some doubt of its applicability in this case, because of the general nature of the objection to the transcript of testimony as offered. There was nothing in the offer which indicated the intention of the plaintiff to prove all the facts as a whole or none of them, and in view of the authority of Lick v. Diaz, 37 Cal. 437–446, we are inclined to the belief that the court's ruling upon the objection to the admission of the proffered portion of the transcript may not be upheld upon the ground that the inadmissibility of a part vitiated the whole offer. It is not necessary, however, to discuss this subject at length, as we are persuaded that, in view of the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, neither the testimony of Mrs. Rose, given at the former trial, nor her deposition, which was also offered, was admissible.

[2] The rule of section 1870, subdivision 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure, does not apply to the testimony of a party who is incompetent under the provisions of section 1880, subdivision 3, of the same Code. The provisions of subdivision 8 of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the testimony of witnesses generally, does not apply to the testimony of a party who is made incompetent as a witness by subdivision 3 of section 1880. A disqualified witness is not one who is merely "unable to testify." Such a witness must not testify. In the case on trial Mrs. Rose was entirely able and doubtless willing to take the stand and to give her testimony, but the law declared that she could not be a witness as to any matter or fact occurring before the death of Mrs. Mooers. To say that such inhibition created merely an inability to testify would ignore the clear meaning of simple language. From their juxtaposition in the statute the words "unable to testify" refer, not to a legal, but to a physical, inability to appear upon the witness stand and there to give testimony. The ruling of the court in refusing to admit the transcript of the testimony of Mrs. Rose given at the trial of another action was therefore entirely proper.

If the testimony of Mrs. Rose is inadmissible under section 1880, subdivision 3, there is no ground for holding it admissible at all. It is purely hearsay, and to permit the introduction, because of the fact that the decedent had testified on the same subject and that such testimony was available, would be judicial legislation. The deposition of plaintiff taken in the former action was also offered and rejected. It was clearly inadmissible, upon the principles discussed above and upon the authority of Mitchell v. Haggenmeyer, 51 Cal. 108.

Our conclusion upon these matters makes it unnecessary to pass upon the question whether or not the superior court correctly held that the claim sued upon was barred by the statute of limitations.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

McAULAY v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF MERCED COUNTY et al. (Sac. 2867.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊜225—IRRIGATION DISTRICT—ORGANIZATION—WITHDRAWAL OF PETITIONERS.

Petitioners for the organization of an irrigation district under Act March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 254), and acts amendatory and supplementary thereto, may withdraw from the petition at any time prior to its presentation to the board of supervisors on the date fixed therefor.

In Bank. Application by L. McAulay for mandamus against the Board of Supervisors of the County of Merced, and T. H. Scandrett and others as members thereof. Writ denied.

L. L. Dennett and J. C. Needham, both of Modesto, for plaintiff.

PER CURIAM. We are satisfied that it must be held that petitioners for the organization of an irrigation district under the act approved March 31, 1897, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, may effectively withdraw from the petition for the organization of such district at any time prior to the presentation of the petition to the board of supervisors on the date fixed in the published notice for such presentation, with the result that at the time of such presentation they can no longer be considered by the board as petitioners. If this be true, it follows that the petition here does not make a case for relief.

The application for a writ of mandate is denied.

HERTEL v. EMIRECK et al. (L. A. 4573.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜523(2) — RECORD — AFFIDAVITS USED ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—AUTHENTICATION—BILLS OF EXCEPTION.

Under Supreme Court rule 29 (119 Pac. xiv), providing that upon appeal from orders of the superior court papers and evidence used or taken on the hearing of the motion must be authenticated by incorporation in a bill of exceptions, except where another mode of authentication is provided by law, affidavits, copies of which are embodied in the printed transcript, but are not authenticated either by incorporation in a bill of exceptions or under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, providing for preparation of transcript by stenographer to be certified to by court, cannot be considered on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1071(6)—FINDINGS OF FACT—FAILURE TO FIND ON PARTICULAR ISSUES — FINDINGS SUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN JUDGMENT.

Court's failure to find upon certain issues raised by the pleadings is immaterial, where the findings actually made were such as to require judgment in plaintiff's favor which would not have been affected by a disposition, either way, of such other issues.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜907(2) — PRESUMPTIONS—ABSENCE OF FINDING.

Court's failure to find on certain issues raised by appellant's allegations is not ground for reversal, where, the evidence not having been brought up, it must be assumed that appellant offered no proof in support of such allegations.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Albert Hertel against Idella Emireck, the Summerland Realty Company, a corporation, and others. From the judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying motion for new trial, the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Victor T. Watkins, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hindman & Yakey, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage of real property, executed by the defendant Summerland Realty Company, a corporation, to secure its note for $300. Said defendant appeals from the judgment, which was in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The answer admitted the execution of the note and mortgage and nonpayment of the debt. It set up affirmative defenses based upon misrepresentations alleged to have been made by the plaintiff in the negotiations leading up to the giving of the note and mortgage. The court found that no such misrepresentations had been made. The evidence is not before us, and the appellant makes no point on its appeal from the judgment.

[1] It is argued that a new trial should have been granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence. But the record contains no showing upon which this point can be considered. Copies of certain affidavits are embodied in the printed transcript. But these papers are not authenticated, either by incorporation in a bill of exceptions, or under Code of Civil Procedure section 953a. They cannot therefore be considered here. Supreme Court rule 29 (119 Pac. xiv); Herrlich v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472, 22 Pac. 299; Von Glahn v. Brennan, 81 Cal. 261, 22 Pac. 596; Melde v. Reynolds, 120 Cal. 234, 52 Pac. 491; San Diego Savgs. Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 70 Pac. 299.

[2, 3] The further point is made that the decision was against law, in that the court failed to find upon certain issues raised by the pleadings. The findings actually made were such as to require a judgment in plaintiff's favor, and this result could not have been changed by a disposition, either way, of other issues. The want of further findings was therefore immaterial. Fogg v. Perris Irr. Dist., 154 Cal. 209, 97 Pac. 316. Besides, the issues which, as appellant claims, were not answered by findings were raised by its own affirmative allegations. The evidence not having been brought up, we must assume that the defendant offered no proof in support of these averments. The want of findings thereon is accordingly no ground for reversal. Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098; Winslow v. Gohransen, 88 Cal. 450, 26 Pac. 504; Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 82 Pac. 66; Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 118 Pac. 441, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

RIVERSIDE PORTLAND CEMENT CO. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=993(2) — ACTION AGAINST—ULTRA VIRES.

A taxpayer may maintain an action to restrain a city from carrying out an ultra vires contract between the city and county, wherein the county unlawfully agreed to furnish cement to the city.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the Riverside Portland Cement Company against the City of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin and Walter K. Tuller, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Albert Lee Stephens, Chas. S. Burnell, W. B. Mathews, Wm. B. Himrod, A. J. Hill, and Robert B. Murphey, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff brings this action as a taxpayer to restrain the city of Los Angeles from carrying out a contract entered into between the city of Los Angeles and the county of Los Angeles for the furnishing by the county of 750,000 barrels of cement from the Monolith cement plant, which had been purchased by the city. The county sought to purchase and operate this plant under and by virtue of the provisions of section 4041, subd. 9a, added to the Political Code in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 667). The invalidity of this section was determined by this court in City of Los Angeles v. Lewis, 167 Pac. 390. It was therein held that the attempt to authorize the county of Los Angeles to engage in the manufacture of cement as a private enterprise was violative of the Constitution and that the law enacted in pursuance thereof was unconstitutional and void. It follows, therefore, that the contract between the city of Los Angeles and the county of Los Angeles, wherein the county agreed to furnish cement to the city, was ultra vires and void so far as the county of Los Angeles is concerned, and it is unnecessary to inquire whether or not the various steps required by the charter of the city of Los Angeles in the purchase of supplies were followed. The contract being void, the demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded to the superior court, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

1. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂=54 — APPLICATION — REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY.

Application for writ of habeas corpus, to secure release from prison, which failed to show that the board of prison directors unlawfully deprived applicant of credits for good conduct, under Pen. Code, § 1588, without which credits his term would not have expired, was insufficient.

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂=54 — APPLICATION — REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY.

It is incumbent on one seeking his discharge on habeas corpus from the state prison to specifically show by proper allegation of facts his right to a discharge, in view of Pen. Code, § 1474, requiring statement on such application of "in what the illegality consists."

In Bank. Application by James T. Shelton for writ of habeas corpus. Application denied without prejudice.

James T. Shelton, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The petition for a writ of habeas corpus does not sufficiently show the existence of facts entitling the petitioner to be discharged. It is not made to appear therein that the petitioner was not lawfully deprived by the board of prison directors of the credits to which he would be entitled for good conduct under section 1588 of the Penal Code, and if he has been so deprived his term has not expired. It is incumbent on one seeking his discharge on habeas corpus from the state prison to specifically show by proper allegation of facts his right to a discharge. The law governing the matter expressly provides that, if the imprisonment is alleged to be illegal, the petitioner for a writ must state "in what the alleged illegality consists." Section 1474, Pen. Code. This, in our judgment, the petitioner has not sufficiently done.

The application for a writ is denied, without prejudice to the making of a further application.

BRYANT et al. v. WHITNEY. (L. A. 4601.)

1. PLEADING ⟸253 — AMENDMENT AFTER TRIAL—NECESSITY OF ANSWER.

When the amendment to the complaint has been added after trial, apparently to conform to the proof, a formal answer thereto is unnecessary, for the amendment is deemed denied.

2. INJUNCTION ⟸62(3)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—VIOLATIONS.

Where building restrictions on 28 lots, comprising part of a general improvement scheme, were violated by the owners of 7 of the lots, and the enforcement of restrictions against defendant will not tend materially to restore the district, and the infraction complained of does not diminish the value of the other estates, being merely the erection of a house with one side and a projecting chimney too close to the side line, the restriction will not be enforced by injunction.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Suit by Addie D. Bryant and others against Edwin P. Whitney. From judgments for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Stewart & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Tanner, Odell, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment denying them relief by injunction from an alleged violation of a building restriction by defendant, by the erection of two houses on one lot (13), each alleged to be of a cost of less than $1,500, the restricted amount, and alleged to be "nearer than 4 feet from the side lines of said lot." The court found that the houses were to cost more than $1,500 each, but that one was within 3 feet and 8 inches of the south side line of the lot, with a chimney projecting 1 foot further, 4 feet in width. There was no privity between the plaintiffs and the defendant, who were lot owners within the same tract, but all derived their title to their lots from one Mary King Elliott, who purchased 28 lots in the Dos Robles Park Tract, Alhambra, already subdivided, fronting on Dos Robles place, and thereafter at various times from January 15, 1908, to January 7, 1911, sold said lots, including those of the parties hereto, to various purchasers; each lot by its deed of conveyance from said grantor being subject to the same building restriction, which, so far as involved in this case, reads as follows:

"This deed is made and accepted upon the following express conditions, to wit: First. That said property shall be used for residence purposes only, and such residence shall cost not less than $1,500, and shall be located not nearer than 20 feet from the front line of said lot or nearer than 4 feet from either side line there."

[1, 2] Plaintiff relies upon the rule that where, under a general plan of improvement for a particular tract, such restrictions are imposed, equity will enjoin the violation of such conditions or covenants, if any, by the grantees of such lots. The original complaint, however, failed to allege a general plan of improvement, but after answer and trial it appears that an amended complaint was filed, alleging:

"That, pursuant to a general plan of improvement for the benefit of all lots of said tract, each lot of said tract was, by one grantor, sold and conveyed by recorded deed, each lot, except lot 1, subject to uniform building restrictions inserted in the deed thereof in words and figures following," etc.

This allegation was not denied, and the court made no finding on the issue so presented, if any, nor was the failure to so find specified as an error on motion for a new trial. When the amendment to the complaint has been added after trial, apparently to conform to the proof, a formal answer thereto is unnecessary, for the amendment is deemed denied. McDougald v. Argonaut Land, etc., Co., 117 Cal. 87-95, 48 Pac. 1021; Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 516, 143 Pac. 729.

Assuming, without deciding, however, that plaintiff sufficiently alleged a general plan of improvement, and that the findings of court as to the method by which said restrictions were imposed upon the land of the parties amounted in legal effect to a finding that there was a general plan of improvement, an assumption most favorable to plaintiffs, respondent, nevertheless, claims that there have been such violations of the restrictions by plaintiffs and others, acquiesced in by plaintiffs, as preclude them from enforcing such restriction against the defendant. The violation of the restriction by the defendant, which is found by the court, consisted in placing the building, with a projecting chimney, too close to the side line of the lot. In April, 1912, on lot 5 two apartment houses were erected, each within 1 foot of the respective side lines. In 1913, on lot 23, apartment houses were erected, two less than 4 feet from the northerly line, and one within less than 4 feet of the southerly line. Plaintiffs Addie D. Bryant and Annie J. East occupy and maintain four houses on three lots. On lot 21 a house has been erected, the body of which is within 4 feet of the south line, and the roof of which projects over the north line of said lot. The building of plaintiff East is erected immediately upon one of the side lines of one of the originally restricted lots; that is to say, by reason of her ownership of the north 25 feet of lot 17 and the south 25 feet of lot 18, her building, erected in the center of this space, covers the whole 8-foot strip along the boundary between lots

17 and 18, required by the restriction to be clear of buildings. The same condition obtains with reference to the three lots occupied by four houses. The owner of the adjoining lot nearest the buildings of defendant is not a party to this action, and plaintiffs neither alleged nor proved any special or other pecuniary damage. As was said by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts:

"Where there has been no uniform observance of the restrictions, and substantially all the landowners have so conducted themselves as to indicate an abandonment of the right, which is in the nature of an easement, to have the neighborhood kept to the standard established by the original plan, and where the enforcement * * * will not tend materially to restore to the district the character impressed upon it by the scheme, and the infraction complained of does not diminish the value of other estates, then it would be inequitable and oppressive to compel at great loss a compliance with the restrictions." Loud v. Pendergast, 206 Mass. 122, 125, 92 N. E. 40, 41.

See, also, Zelman v. Kaufherr, 76 N. J. Eq. 52, 73 Atl. 1048.

There was no miscarriage of justice in the decision appealed from.

The judgment is affirmed.

Proc. § 953c, or to try to correct deficiency on attention being called thereto, transcript being 120 pages, and insufficiency of evidence the contention, there will be an affirmance.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by the Frankfort General Insurance Company and another against A. Cramer. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. T. Roark, of San Diego, for appellant. Clarence Harden, of San Diego, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. The record upon this appeal justifies a strict application of the rule laid down in section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal is by the alternative method. The typewritten transcript embraces 120 pages. The appellant relies solely upon the point that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings and judgment of the court. His opening brief contains no supplement such as is required by the rule, nor does it disclose any attempt at compliance with the rule by quotation, reference, or otherwise, directing the court to the portions of the record upon which appellant relies to sustain his point. Although appellant's attention was expressly directed by respondent's brief to his utter disregard of the rule, no effort has been made to correct the deficiencies in his brief, either by way of a reply brief or by application for relief to the court. Instead appellant has filed a stipulation submitting the cause upon the briefs on file. Upon the authority of Marcucci v. Vowinckel, 164 Cal. 693, 130 Pac. 430, O'Rourke v. Skellenger, 169 Cal. 270, 146 Pac. 633, and Williams v. Hawkins, 20 Cal. App. 161, 128 Pac. 754, the judgment is affirmed.

LIEMAN v. GOLLY. (L. A. 4498.)

1. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⊜53 — FINDINGS OF FACT—SUFFICIENCY.

In suit to annul deeds as having been secured by fraud and undue influence, without consideration, finding that they were executed for a good consideration passing from defendant to the grantor was sufficient as a finding as to consideration.

2. DEEDS ⊜15 — CONSIDERATION — VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE.

In suit to annul deeds as having been secured by fraud and undue influence, without consideration, finding that they were executed voluntarily, with knowledge of their contents and with intent to convey, obviated necessity of consideration, in view of Civ. Code, § 1040, making consideration unnecessary to validity of executed voluntary deed.

3. COSTS ⊜260(1)—APPEAL FOR DELAY.

Where appeal from a judgment was wholly without merit and evidently taken for delay, damages should be imposed against appellant.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by J. H. Lieman against Joseph Charles Golly. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll alone. Affirmed.

Henry G. Bodkin and Irwin, White & Rosecrans, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. G. Harold Janeway and Hunsaker & Britt, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. The plaintiff by his complaint sought to annul two deeds executed by his daughter, Annie M. Golly, to the defendant, at different dates, one on July 1, 1912, and the other on December 3, 1912, for the same parcel of land, and for a judgment declaring that the title to the parcel of land covered by said deeds, vested in the heirs of said Annie M. Golly; the plaintiff being one of such heirs. The grounds for the claim that the deeds are void or voidable are that Annie M. Golly at the time of the execution of said deeds was of unsound mind, that no consideration passed from said defendant for the execution thereof, and that the execution of each deed was procured from her by defendant by means of undue influence and fraud. Issue was taken upon these allegations and the cause was tried by the court. The findings of the court on the material issues are that said Annie M. Golly was sane at the time of the execution of the deeds, that they were not obtained from her by any undue influence or fraud, and that they were executed for a good consideration.

[1, 2] The appeal is wholly without merit. The findings cover all the issues and are in favor of the defendant on all of them. In his brief the appellant claims that the finding of the consideration is insufficient. The ninth finding states that each of said deeds "was executed for a good consideration passing from defendant to said Annie M. Golly." No further finding was necessary. On the contrary, since the findings also show that the deeds were executed voluntarily and with knowledge of their contents and the intent to convey, no consideration was necessary to support the deeds as valid conveyances of the land. Civ. Code, § 1040. There is some discussion of the question whether the deed of July 1, 1912, was executed properly. As the deed of December 3d was properly executed, the point is wholly immaterial, for the last deed would convey the property, even if the first was void.

[3] There is no reason whatever for the claim that the judgment is not supported by the findings, and the record presents no other grounds for review of the appeal. The only conclusion we can reach is that it was taken simply for delay and that it is a proper case for the imposition of damages, which we hereby fix at the sum of $50.

Judgment is affirmed, and it is considered by the court that the defendant recover of the plaintiff the sum of $50 as damages.

WELCH v. ALCOTT. (L. A. 4618.)

1. Costs ⊂=154—Depositions—Necessity — Failure to Use—Trial.

Expenses of taking a deposition before trial are proper disbursements to put into a cost bill, unless it is shown that it was unnecessary, or that for some special reason should not have been allowed, though such deposition was not in fact offered in evidence.

2. Costs ⊂=154—Depositions—Necessity — Question for Court.

In ascertaining whether expenses of taking depositions before trial should be taxed as costs, it was for court to decide whether the taking of the depositions was reasonably necessary for the protection of the party taking them.

3. Costs ⊂=189 — Stenographer's Fees — Transcribing Testimony.

Where court ordered reporter to transcribe testimony, and ordered plaintiff to pay therefor, and the trial being a protracted one, plaintiff, after paying $220.60, directed reporter to cease further transcription, it was within court's discretion, upon judgment for plaintiff, to tax such expenses as costs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 274, authorizing fees for transcripts ordered by court to be taxed as costs; the fact that entire testimony was not transcribed in no way injuring defendant.

4. Costs ⊂=189 — Taxation — Transcript — Failure to Follow.

Where court ordered transcript of testimony to be taken, paid for by plaintiff, and filed, plaintiff's failure to file transcript is not fatal to his right to have expense of transcripts taxed as costs, where he filed it when objection was made on hearing of motion to tax.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Edmund Welch against Edward H. Alcott. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from the court's order of taxation of costs. Affirmed.

James P. Clark and F. W. Gail, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Frank C. Prescott, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. By the judgment in this action the plaintiff recovered costs. He served and filed his memorandum in due time, whereupon the defendant moved to tax costs by striking out a number of items claimed. The court sustained the defendant's objections to some of the items, but disallowed them as to others. From the order so made, in so far as it is unfavorable to him, the defendant appeals.

Whether or not plaintiff should have been allowed costs at all is a question that is discussed to some extent in the briefs. It does not arise on this appeal, but may be presented for consideration on the appeal from the judgment itself. All that we are here concerned with is the propriety of the various items of costs charged against the defendant over his objection. They are as follows:

[1, 2] 1. The memorandum included a charge of $87.40 for taking the deposition of the defendant, Alcott. The deposition was taken by the plaintiff before the trial, and was not, in fact, offered in evidence. But it does not follow that the expense of taking it could not properly be charged as an item of costs. Such expenses "are proper disbursements to put into a cost bill, unless it be shown that they were unnecessary, or that for some special reason they should not have been allowed. * * * It is frequently proper and necessary for a party to have depositions taken, although afterwards the case may take such a course as to make it unnecessary to use them." Lindy v. McChesney, 141 Cal. 351, 74 Pac. 1034. It is for the trial court to determine whether, under all the circumstances, the taking of the deposition was reasonably necessary to the protection of the rights of the party taking it. Lomita L. & W. Co. v. Robinson, 154 Cal.

36, 52, 97 Pac. 10, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1106. We cannot say that the court abused its discretion in deciding that question in plaintiff's favor on the facts before it.

[3] 2. The appellant objects to the allowance of an item of $220.60 paid the reporter for transcribing testimony. It appears that after the beginning of the trial the court made an order that the testimony be transcribed by the reporter, that the "transcript of all the testimony be paid for by plaintiff," and that the charges therefor be taxed as costs in the action, if plaintiff should recover judgment. The order further provided that the transcript be filed. The grounds of objection to the item were that only a part of the testimony had been transcribed, and that the transcript had not been filed. The Code authorizes fees for transcripts "ordered by the court to be made" to be taxed as costs. Code Civ. Proc. § 274. The disputed charge falls within this description. The statute does not require that the transcript cover all the testimony. The appellant's claim is that this condition was imposed by the court's order. But we do not so read the order. Under section 274, fees for transcripts ordered by the court are to be paid by the parties in equal proportions, or either may pay "the whole thereof." When the court ordered that plaintiff pay for the "transcript of all the testimony," it was prescribing that the whole cost should, in the first instance, be met by one of the parties, instead of being divided. Apart from any limitation in the order, it was within the discretion of the trial court to say whether plaintiff should recover costs for a transcript of only a part of the testimony. The evidence indicates that the trial was a protracted one, and that, after plaintiff had paid the sum in question for so much of the transcript as had then been furnished, he was without funds to pay for more, and accordingly directed the reporter to cease further transcription. There may, no doubt, be cases in which it would be unjust to the losing party to charge him with the expense of transcribing isolated fragments. But on the record before us we think the court was justified in concluding that the plaintiff had reasonable grounds for stopping the transcription when he did, and that the defendant was in no way injured by the act of the adverse party in having only a part of the proceedings written up. In one aspect he was, indeed, benefited, since the charge would necessarily have been greater, if the entire testimony had been transcribed.

[4] So far as the want of filing is concerned, it appears that, when the objection was made at the hearing of the motion to tax, the plaintiff did file the transcript. It was then available for the defendant's use in further proceedings looking to a new trial, or the preparation of a record on appeal, and we cannot say that the court erred in holding that the failure to file it earlier was not fatal to plaintiff's right.

3. The final objection is to the charge made for witness fees in the case of several witnesses, who, as appellant claims, were not in attendance for the number of days covered by the charge. The court reduced the items in some particulars. Where it declined to interfere with the charge, we think the conclusion that the charges allowed were proper was not without support in the evidence.

No other points are made.

The order is affirmed.

In re KELLEY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5432.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 13, 1918.)

1. WILLS ⊂⊃475—CONSTRUCTION—CODICILS.
Two codicils, made within a few days of each other, are to be read together.

2. WILLS ⊂⊃614(5)—ESTATE GIVEN—ESTATE FOR LIFE.
Under a will and the sixth, seventh, and ninth of nine codicils thereto, held, that testator's widow took a life estate in all his property, real and personal, excepting minor bequests, and including a particular residence property claimed by her in fee.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of John G. Kelley, deceased. From a decree of distribution, Edith S. Kelley appeals. Affirmed.

Fred H. Schauer, of Santa Barbara, B. Rey Schauer, of Los Angeles, and A. Mitchell Palmer, of Stroudsburg, Pa., for appellant. Richards & Heaney, of Santa Barbara (A. C. Postel, of Santa Barbara, Charles L. Benoist, of Los Angeles, and Francis Price, of Santa Barbara, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from that portion of a decree of distribution which purports to distribute certain real estate in Santa Barbara to the appellant for life. The contention of the appellant is that under the will and codicils of the testator she was entitled to have the said property distributed to her in fee simple.

The testator, John G. Kelley, was a resident of Pennsylvania, but maintained a home in Santa Barbara upon the property here in question, and where he died on May 29, 1911. He left a will and nine codicils, which were admitted to probate in Monroe county, Pa., on June 28, 1911. Ancillary administration was had in Santa Barbara county for the purpose of disposing of the property there. The decedent left surviving him his widow, Edith S. Kelley, who was his second wife, and a daughter, whose name was Anna K. Hornbrook. He also left certain nephews and nieces, who were under certain eventualities to become his residuary legatees. In his will, dated January 31, 1905, after certain specific bequests, he used the following words:

"All the rest of my estate I give and bequeath to my dear wife, Edith S. Kelley, for life or so long as she remains my widow (except in the case of my Santa Barbara property corner Garden and Mission Street, which I give to her absolutely)."

The first, second, third, fourth, and fifth codicils to this will, executed at intervals within the period of about four years after its date, do not purport to make any change in the disposition of his property in so far as Edith S. Kelley is concerned. The codicil of June 21, 1909, does, however, purport to make a number of changes in his will, amounting practically to the making of a new will, in which he gives all of his real estate and one-third of his personal property to his wife, Edith S. Kelley, leaving the balance of his personal property, aside from specific bequests, to his daughter, Anna K. Hornbrook, or in trust for her benefit. Four days after the making of this important codicil the testator added thereto the following brief olographic codicil, viz.:

"It is my intention that my wife shall have all I am possessed of during her life, except in case of remarriage, when I wish it placed in trust for her free from interference of any one."

On May 26, 1910, he added another codicil, which is not material, but on September 2, 1910, he framed his final codicil, which was also olographic, and made, as he states, "to clear up any possible misunderstanding."

[1, 2] While it is true that in this codicil the testator had apparently the ultimate disposition of his money uppermost in his mind, he makes use of the following words:

"I have made my will providing for a share of my estate to go to Anna K. Hornbrook, but if she has no heirs and should predecease my wife Edith S. Kelley, I do not want a dollar of my money to go to any Hornbrook, but first I expect my wife to have and to hold during her life and then Anna K. Hornbrook, and failing her or her heirs of her body, Edward W. Kelley and his heirs, subject to all the provisions of my will."

We are unable to escape the conclusion that it was the intent of the testator by the sixth and seventh codicils of his will to radically change his former disposition of his estate as expressed in his first will. These two codicils, made within a few days of each other, are to be read together, and when so read are susceptible of no other construction, without doing violence to their plain language, than that it was the testator's intention, as therein expressed, that his wife should have a life estate in all of his property, real and personal (excepting minor bequests), but including the Santa Barbara home. The testator's final codicil, while less clear as to its scope, is entirely consistent with this interpretation, which is itself in entire harmony with the letter and spirit of sections 1317 to 1327 of the Civil Code governing the interpretation of wills.

This being our conclusion, it follows that the decree of distribution appealed from must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

WALDECKER v. WALDECKER.

1. DIVORCE ⟹150(2)—TRIAL—FINDINGS.
Under Civ. Code, § 131, and Code Civ. Proc. § 634, findings of fact are not required to be filed by the court on the denial of a divorce on evidence presented in a default case.

2. DIVORCE ⟹184(5) — REVIEW — DISCRETION.
Where the record does not present a case of such clear and satisfactory proof as to take away the discretion of the trial court, the denial of a divorce on the evidence presented will not be disturbed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Gertrude Waldecker against Carl R. Waldecker. From a judgment denying a divorce, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Georgia P. Bullock, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment denying the plaintiff a divorce. The complaint in the action was in three counts, setting up, respectively, willful neglect, extreme cruelty, and desertion on the part of the defendant as grounds for a divorce. The defendant was served with process by publication and defaulted. After entry of such default, the plaintiff proffered her proofs to the court, which, after hearing them, denied the divorce. In so doing the court simply made and entered its decree to that effect, but filed no findings of fact. The plaintiff appeals, urging two points as grounds for a reversal.

Her first point is that the failure of the court to make or file findings of fact was an error of procedure requiring a reversal under section 131 of the Civil Code and upon the authority of the cases of Perkins v. Perkins, 29 Cal. App. 68, 154 Pac. 483, and Nelson v. Nelson, 18 Cal. App. 602, 123 Pac. 1099. Section 131 of the Civil Code reads, in part, as follows:

"In actions for divorce, the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases, and if it determines that no divorce shall be granted, final judgment must thereupon be entered accordingly. If it determines that the divorce ought to be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered, declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce."

The question here involved turns upon the meaning to be given to the phrase "as in other cases" in the above-quoted section of the Code. In the consideration of this question it is to be noted that the section above quoted is to be found in the Civil Code, which Code is not ordinarily to be construed as regulating procedure in civil actions, but rather as declaring substantive law. The Code of Civil Procedure is the place wherein the procedure to be followed in such actions is to be found. Turning to the Code of Civil Procedure, we discover that findings of fact and conclusions of law in civil actions are only required to be filed in cases where issues of fact have been raised by the pleas and denials of the respective parties. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 588–590. In the case of Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 52 Pac. 122, 65 Am. St. Rep. 147, it was held that in an action for divorce the hearing required by law to be had before the court after entry of a default was not a trial of issues of fact within the meaning of these sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the case of Waller v. Weston, 125 Cal. 201, 57 Pac. 892, it was decided that, in an action to foreclose a mortgage where the defendant had defaulted, findings of fact were not required to be filed. By the terms of section 634, courts are not required to make findings in cases where, though an issue has been joined by the pleadings of the parties, either of them fails to appear at the trial, or where by written consent filed with the clerk or oral consent in open court findings are waived. Reading section 131 of the Civil Code in the light of these sections of the Code of Civil Procedure with the construction placed upon them, we are constrained to regard the language of the section of the Civil Code as constituting rather a recital of the rule of procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure than the declaration of a different rule applicable to divorce cases. The phrase "as in other cases" can thus be construed to mean that, in all actions for divorces where issues have been raised by the pleadings of the parties so as to require a trial thereon, findings must be filed unless waived by the parties as provided in section 634 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] We do not give our assent to the meaning ascribed to that phrase in the case of Perkins v. Perkins, 29 Cal. App. 68, 154 Pac. 483, nor to the reasoning or conclusions either of that case or of the case of Nelson v. Nelson, 18 Cal. App. 602, 123 Pac. 1099, as to the proper construction to be placed upon section 131 of the Civil Code. On the contrary, our conclusion is that in divorce cases, as in other cases, findings are required only upon a trial of fact issues raised by the pleadings of the respective parties, and only then in cases where findings have not been waived by the parties as provided in section 634 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It follows that in the instant case findings were not required to be filed by the court upon a denial of the divorce.

[2] The next question presented by the appellant is that the court erred in denying the plaintiff a divorce upon the evidence presented before it. We have carefully read the reporter's transcript of that evidence, and, without attempting to recite or review it, we are of the opinion that the record does not present a case of such clear and satisfactory proof as to take away the discretion of the trial court to determine whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to an interlocutory decree of divorce. This being so, this court cannot interfere with the action of the trial court in refusing to award her such a decree.

In re ROBINETT'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8578.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1170(12)—REVERSIBLE ERROR—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION.
A decree, proportionately distributing the cash on hand, and any proceeds of the estate's cause of action, without continuing the administration, pending suit thereon by the administratrix, did substantial justice, and was not reversible error, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

2. PARTIES ⊂⊃59(3) — SUBSTITUTION — ACTION ON ESTATE'S CAUSE OF ACTION.
The distributees of the proceeds of an estate's cause of action might be substituted as plaintiffs in an action thereon by the administratrix with the will annexed, and might prosecute such action to final judgment.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

From a decree of distribution in the estate of Margretta Milner Robinett, deceased, made on petition of the legatees filed after the settlement of the final account, the administratrix with the will annexed, as administratrix and residuary legatee, appeals. Affirmed.

Lucius L. Solomons, of San Francisco, for appellant. Helen L. Kaufman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal by the administratrix of the estate of Robinett from a decree of distribution made in said estate on petition of the legatees, filed after settlement of appellant's final account. Appellant is the residuary legatee, and takes this appeal both in her capacity as residuary legatee and as administratrix with the will annexed. The cash on hand was insufficient to pay the legacies of the petitioners. They waived claim upon any of the assets of the estate other than the cash on hand, and requested distribution to them of the money on hand, proportionately to the amount of the legacies bequeathed to them, and requested that the balance of the estate be distributed to the appellant, thus waiving all claim thereto. After the filing of this petition for distribution appellant filed an answer and a petition for partial distribution. In her answer she alleged that the estate was not ready for distribution for the reason that subsequently to the filing of her final account and of the filing of respondents' petition for distribution she had brought a suit "individually and as administratrix" against one of the respondents, R. H. Hazleton, for $500 in money and 500 shares of the National Well Drilling Company, an Arizona corporation, and claiming the right to retain a small amount for notary fees, county clerk's fees, and premium on bond, aggregating $28.25, and also claiming that there is an outstanding bill for music furnished at the funeral. Appellant's petition for partial distribution prayed that $3.20 less be given to each of the three legatees and $2 less to each of three legatees, making a total of $18.60 less than they had petitioned for.

[1, 2] It will be observed, then, that the controversy between the parties concerns the question as to whether or not it was the duty of the court to continue the administration of the estate during the period of the pending litigation. The court found "that the real and personal property (other than cash and the property specifically devised by said will) is of little, if any, value, and cannot be disposed of to the benefit or advantage of said pecuniary legatees." Instead, however, of distributing this lawsuit to the appellant, as had been requested by the petitioners, the court found that the action was for the sum of $1,135, and provided that if there was a recovery therein the first $848.45 should be distributed as follows: Two twenty-sixths to Anna Robinett; two twenty-sixths to Vera Robinett; two twenty-sixths to Edna Robinett Miners; five twenty-sixths to Idella C. Emmons; five twenty-sixths to Adele Harrigan; five twenty-sixths to R. H. Hazleton; five twenty-sixths to Clarence Herrington, and that all in excess of said sum of $848.45 be distributed to Minna Robinett Herrington. It was further provided that, inasmuch as the decree provided for the distribution of $336.80 to the defendant in that litigation, R. H. Hazleton, such sum should be withheld by the administratrix until the termination of that litigation, to be applied to the judgment in the event that the suit was successful. It is difficult to see in what manner the administratrix, either in her official or individual capacity, was injured by the decree of distribution. The estate has been in process of administration for four years, and this litigation was commenced after appellant's final account had been settled. The effect of the decree was to distribute to those entitled thereto in the proportion to which they were entitled, the cause of action, if any, belonging to the estate. The distributees can be substituted as plaintiffs in the action, and can prosecute that action to final judgment. The trial court did substantial justice, and, that being the case, we are prohibited by the Constitution from reversing the decree. Article 6, § 4½.

Judgment affirmed.

DIAMOND v. WEYERHAEUSER.

1. TRIAL ⟸169—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.
It is proper to direct a verdict for defendant where a verdict in favor of plaintiff would have been so contrary to the evidence that trial court would have been bound to set it aside.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(6)—COLLISION ON STREET—JURY QUESTION.
In an action for injuries to plaintiff riding on wagon, injured in collision with defendant's automobile, evidence held insufficient to take case to the jury.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(3)—COLLISION ON STREET—BURDEN OF PROOF.
In an action for injuries sustained in collision with automobile, burden of proof is on plaintiff to show negligence.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(3)—COLLISION ON STREET—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.
Where a collision occurred between the wagon plaintiff was riding on and defendant's automobile, causing injury to plaintiff, negligence of defendant is not to be inferred from mere fact of injury.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(5)—INJURY ON STREET—EVIDENCE—SPEED OF AUTOMOBILE.
In an action for injuries to plaintiff in collision with automobile, expressions of witnesses that defendant was going "very fast," "pretty fast," "good speed," would not be sufficient evidence that speed was beyond the 20 miles an hour prohibited by ordinance, or in excess of rate demanded by ordinary prudence.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸995 — REVIEW — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.
The appellate court cannot weigh the evidence or resolve conflicts in it.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Ada Diamond against Charles A. Weyerhaeuser. From a judgment on a verdict directed in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. Lieberman and Barstow, Beach & Rohe, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Gurney E. Newlin, of Los Angeles (Stephens & Stephens and W. W. Hyams, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the collision of defendant's automobile with a milk wagon on which plaintiff was riding. The trial court directed a verdict in favor of the defendant, and plaintiff appeals from the ensuing judgment.

The sole question raised on the appeal is whether there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant's driver to warrant the submission of the case to the jury.

The accident occurred at the intersection of North Broadway and Griffin avenue, in the city of Los Angeles. North Broadway runs east and west, Griffin avenue north and south. Plaintiff was in the employ of the owner of the milk wagon, which was being driven by a coemployé. The wagon, drawn by two horses, was going easterly on North Broadway, and turned at the intersection of Griffin avenue to go northerly into that avenue. As it reached the northerly side of North Broadway, it collided with defendant's automobile, which was being driven by a chauffeur in a westerly direction along the northerly side of North Broadway. The horses ran away, and plaintiff was thrown from the wagon.

The complaint made a general charge of negligent operation of the automobile, and alleged further that the machine was being driven at a speed in excess of the rate, i. e., 20 miles per hour, permitted by a municipal ordinance. The answer denied the allegations of the complaint.

[1] If there was any substantial evidence tending to show that the collision was caused by negligence on the part of defendant's driver, the action of the court in directing a verdict was, of course, erroneous. The existence or nonexistence of negligence is ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by a jury. On the other hand, the court may withdraw the case from the jury and direct a verdict where the evidence is undisputed, "or is of such conclusive character that the court, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, would be compelled to set aside a verdict returned in opposition to it." Davis v. Cal. St. C. R. R. Co., 105 Cal. 131, 38 Pac. 647; Est. of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 123 Pac. 267.

[2-6] We think the evidence in this case was such as to justify the court in taking the action complained of. The burden of proving negligence was upon the plaintiff. In a case of this kind negligence is not to be inferred from the mere fact of injury. Tower v. Humboldt Transit Co., 169 Pac. 227. The testimony on behalf of plaintiff was very indefinite, and, giving it all the weight which it could fairly bear, it went no further than to show that there had been a collision between the wagon and the automobile. There was a total lack of proof of any circumstances from which it might reasonably be inferred that the collision was caused by any want of care on the part of the driver of the automobile, rather than by the negligence of the driver of the wagon, or by accident without fault on the part of any one. Plaintiff herself testified, in effect, that after the wagon had turned to go into Griffin avenue the horses were struck by the automobile, which was coming on North Broadway. She also stated that the wagon had stopped before the left headlight of the automobile caught on the bridle of the right-hand horse. With the exception of a statement regarding the speed of the automobile (to which we shall refer hereafter), this was the extent of her testimony. Another witness testified that he saw the milk wagon as it was crossing North Broadway. The auto came down North Broadway, and the chauffeur endeavored to swing around ahead of the horses, but was unable to do so without running into the curb, and hit the heads of the horses. A third witness did not see the vehicles at the moment of collision, and his testimony, which related to conditions after the impact, throws no light upon the ultimate question of the cause of the accident. Plaintiff's fourth and last witness saw the automobile swing in, "and it took the wagon over near the curbing." So far as the general allegation of negligence is concerned, none of these witnesses testified to any fact or condition which would justify a conclusion that the collision was due to the fault of the driver of the automobile. Nor, looking to the specific averment of violation of the ordinance, did the evidence sustain the charge that the automobile was being propelled at an unlawful or otherwise excessive rate of speed. The plaintiff testified that the machine was coming "very fast"; another witness, that its speed was decreasing before it reached the milk wagon, but that it was still going "at a good speed." The only other witness who testified for plaintiff on the subject said that it looked to him as if the automobile "was going pretty fast." These statements are entirely too uncertain to serve as a basis for a finding that the speed was over 20 miles an hour, or that it was in excess of the maximum rate which would be dictated by the demands of ordinary prudence. Such expressions as "very fast," "pretty fast," and the like are merely relative, and their meaning and effect must depend upon the unknown factor of the witness' personal views regarding standards of speed.

There were five occupants of the automobile. Four of them testified for the defendant, and their versions of the transaction were in substantial accord. They said, in effect, that the machine and the wagon both came to a complete stop, and that as the chauffeur was proceeding to drive his automobile past the wagon, and at a safe distance from it the horses started up and ran into the machine. We cannot of course undertake to weigh the testimony, and resolve conflicts in it. But the clear account of the occurrence given by five witnesses for the defendant serves to emphasize the defects in plaintiff's attempt to prove her case. The testimony offered by her, whether taken by itself or in conjunction with the showing made by the defendant, is entirely lacking in elements tending to establish that the collision was caused by the negligence of the defendant's driver. A verdict in favor of the plaintiff would have been so manifestly contrary to the evidence that the trial court would have been bound to set it aside. It was therefore proper to direct a verdict.

OPITZ v. SCHENCK. (L. A. 4466.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 2, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(1)—NEGLIGENCE IN USE OF STREET—PLEADING.
Complaint alleging that defendant drove his automobile with great force and violence against plaintiff and thereby hurled him to the ground, and that this was "done by him carelessly and negligently," sufficiently alleges negligence without specifying the particular acts of negligence which caused the injury.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(2)—USE OF STREETS — COLLISION — NEGLIGENCE — PLEADING ORDINANCE.
In action for injuries sustained in collision at street intersection, plaintiff, having made general allegation of negligence, can prove violation of an ordinance without pleading it.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸122(1)—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE — DAMAGES — PLEADING ORDINANCE.
In action for damages for violation of city ordinance, the ordinance claimed to have been violated must be pleaded.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸122(1) — ACTION TO ENFORCE PENALTY IMPOSED BY ORDINANCE—PLEADING ORDINANCE.
In action to enforce a liability or penalty imposed by an ordinance, the ordinance relied on must be pleaded.

5. PLEADING ⟸11—ALLEGATIONS—MATTERS OF EVIDENCE.
In action for injuries caused by collision at street intersection, alleged due to defendant's negligence, where negligence complained of included violation of city ordinance, it would have been improper to plead the existence and violation of the ordinance; such matter being evidence admissible under a general allegation of negligence.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(9)—COLLISION—CONSISTENCY OF JURY FINDINGS.
In action for injuries sustained in collision at street intersection, jury findings that the cutting of the corner by defendant automobile driver without passing to right of center of intersection in passing from one street to the other was the proximate cause of injury, and that driving at greater speed than 15 miles an hour in turning from one street to another was the proximate cause, were not inconsistent.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸705(5)—USE OF STREETS—RATE OF SPEED—NEGLIGENCE.
Driver of vehicle may be negligent in driving at certain rate of speed, although not exceeding speed limit fixed by statute or ordinance.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸705(4)—USE OF STREETS—RATE OF SPEED—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE—"NEGLIGENCE PER SE."
Violation of speed limit fixed by city ordinance is "negligence per se."
[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Negligence Per Se.]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(3) — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS.
On an appeal on the judgment roll alone, it must be assumed that there was evidence to sustain the allegations of the complaint.

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(5) — COLLISION IN STREET—CUTTING STREET CORNER—EVIDENCE.
Where defendant automobile driver cut the corner in turning from one street to another at a speed exceeding 15 miles an hour after dark, jury was justified in finding that he was negligent, although he was not driving in excess of speed limit fixed by ordinance.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Frederick E. Opitz against Paul W. Schenck. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck, of Los Angeles, for appellant. James P. Clark, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action is to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in a collision between the motorcycle on which he was riding and an automobile which defendant was driving. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff on a verdict of the jury for $2,000.

The accident happened at the intersection of Washington street and Crenshaw boulevard in the city of Los Angeles, and occurred through the negligent operation by defendant of his automobile over and across the intersection of said streets.

The first point urged for a reversal is that the complaint does not state a cause of action in its allegations of negligence. The complaint charged that about the intersection of said streets above mentioned "defendant negligently and carelessly drove and ran an automobile with great force and violence against the plaintiff, and thereby hurled the plaintiff with great force and violence against the ground, and that plaintiff was by reason of the premises greatly bruised and injured. * * *" It was further alleged that defendant, in driving and operating his automobile over and across the intersection of said streets, did not pass to the right of the center of the intersection of said streets before turning northeasterly on said Crenshaw boulevard, but drove and operated said automobile over and across said intersection in a northeasterly direction to the left and westerly of the center of said streets in violation of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles prohibiting it, in other words, that defendant "cut the corner" at said intersection of said streets, and that by reason of the violation of said ordinance in doing so, and the negligent and careless manner in which defendant operated and drove said automobile, the same ran into and against the plaintiff as aforesaid, to his permanent injury.

[2-5] It is insisted, as to the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles mentioned in the complaint, that it was not properly pleaded in this that it was not alleged to have been in force at the time of the accident. The complaint, however, was good without any allegations as to the ordinance at all. It alleged negligence in general terms which, as we have just shown, was all that was necessary. If under such an allegation the plaintiff wished to prove the violation of the ordinance, he could do so whether it was pleaded or not. This was not an action for damages for the violation of a city ordinance or to enforce a liability or penalty imposed by one where, of course, it would be necessary to plead the ordinance relied on as the foundation of the action, but was an ordinary suit for damages for negligence pleaded in general terms. Under these circumstances the defective pleading of an ordinance relied on as additional evidence in proof of negligence, or a failure to allege its existence at the time of the accident, or at all is immaterial; its existence and its violation are given in evidence in aid of the general negligence alleged; it is simply evidentiary matter, and as such under our system of pleading it would be improper to plead it. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., 154 Cal. 663, 98 Pac. 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 1061.

[6-10] The last point made is that the findings of the jury are inconsistent with each other. This is predicated on the fact that several special questions were submitted to the jury for their answer, and to one of these they replied that the "cutting" of the defendant across the intersection of Washington street to Crenshaw boulevard was the proximate cause of the accident, and to another that the proximate cause of the injury was that defendant was traveling at a speed of more than 15 miles an hour in turning from one street into another. There was no inconsistency in these findings. Both acts of defendant might have been contributing proximate causes of the accident. It is true that the ordinance of the city did not prohibit passing from one street to another at a greater rate of speed than 15 miles an hour, but whether a party is negligent or not is not determined solely by the fact whether at the rate of speed he was making he was violating a city ordinance or not. If he was violating it, it was negligence per se, but he might not be violating it and still be negligent. The rule—speed limitation by ordinance or no speed limitation—is the general and well-established one applying to motor vehicles as to all other vehicles, and is that their operators must use all the care and caution in operating them which careful and prudent men should exercise, having due regard for the safety of the public and the rights of others to the use of the streets. The operator of a vehicle may not escape liability for a collision by simply saying that he was not exceeding the speed limit established by statute or ordinance when it happened. It may appear (the other party being without fault) that though a defendant was not exceeding the limit of speed prescribed by the ordinance, yet that he was operating his vehicle without such control as to speed under the particular circumstances as a careful and prudent man in the exercise of due care and caution would have had. We have not the ordinance before us, and as this is an appeal on the judgment roll alone, we must assume that there was evidence to sustain the allegations of the complaint. It appears therefrom that the collision occurred after dark at the intersection of two streets through the defendant "cutting the corner" at a speed exceeding 15 miles an hour, and the jury may very properly have determined that "cutting a corner" in the dark at that rate of speed was carelessness and negligence on the part of the defendant independent of any ordinance relative to a speed limit at all.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

VANCE et al. v. GILBERT et al.

(Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1918.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⊂=204 — PROCESS — SERVICE UPON COMPANY.
A company being a partnership and its members parties defendant, service of summons on the members would be good against the company.

2. JURY ⊂=13(1)—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—EQUITABLE ACTION.
An action being equitable in character, there was no error in denying demand for jury trial.

3. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL ⊂=47—ASSIGNMENT OF CAUSE OF ACTION.
Where a transfer of a cause of action is made while an action thereon is pending, the action may be continued in the name of the original party, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 385.

4. MORTGAGES ⊂=461 — EQUITABLE MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—FICTITIOUS GRANTEE.
In action to foreclose an equitable mortgage, it being alleged that grantor held title in trust for all parties, it was not error to admit in evidence deed of said grantor to a fictitious grantee, where both grantor and such grantee were made parties defendant and defaulted.

5. PARTNERSHIP ⊂=64—FICTITIOUS NAME—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.
Partnerships having a fictitious name may do business and may be made defendants, although there has been no compliance with Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468; the only penalty being that such partnerships may not maintain an action without such compliance.

6. MORTGAGES ⊂=492 — FORECLOSURE — PROTECTING SECURITY.
In action to foreclose equitable mortgage, payment of interest on a prior mortgage to protect the security and prevent foreclosure was recoverable, whether plaintiffs or their predecessor paid the interest.

7. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂=216—ACTION—PARTIES.
Transfer of note in sale of assets of payee company to plaintiff was sufficient to carry title to note and enable plaintiff to sue thereon, although indorsement of payee, a party defendant, was not placed on note until after beginning of action.

8. MORTGAGES ⊂=559(3)—FORECLOSURE OF EQUITABLE MORTGAGE—DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT.
Civ. Code, § 2924, authorizes a deficiency judgment on foreclosure of an equitable as well as an ordinary mortgage, where the property does not sell for a sum sufficient to pay the debt for which it is security.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1047(3)—STRIKING OUT REPETITIONS IN ANSWER—HARMLESS ERROR.
Striking out a number of repetitions in defendant's answer alleging fraud was harmless, where enough remained to make out the charge of fraud.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1078(1)—REVIEW—POINTS NOT ARGUED.
The court on appeal will not discuss or consider points which are not argued by the appellants.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Warren Vance and another against Clara M. Gilbert and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, order denying motion for new trial and order denying motion to retax costs, Clara M. Gilbert, Rosina Holmes, and Lawrence Holmes appeal. Affirmed.

Skinner & Skinner, of Los Angeles, for appellants. William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The above-named appellants appeal from the judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, from an order denying their motion for a new trial, and from an order denying their motion to retax costs.

The complaint states a cause of action upon a promissory note dated October 26, 1910, for $700 executed by the above-named appellants, payable to said Halladay Motorcar Company, four months after date, and to foreclose an alleged equitable mortgage upon a tract of land, for the security of said note. It is alleged that the note was indorsed by the Halladay Motorcar Company to the plaintiffs, and that it is unpaid. With respect to the lien on the real estate, it is alleged that prior to the execution of the note the defendants C. M. Gilbert and Rosina Holmes agreed to exchange an automobile for the said real property, which at that time belonged to said Helen B. Mortimer; that at the request of said Gilbert and Holmes, said Helen B. Mortimer executed a deed purporting to convey said real property to the "Halladay Motorcar Company"; that the said conveyance was executed to enable the said Halladay Company to hold the property as security for the note sued on; and that it was agreed between the parties that the said conveyance should operate as a mortgage upon said property to secure the payment of the said note. It was further alleged that said company was a partnership, that the deed was inoperative because it did not contain the names of the persons composing the same, and that said Helen B. Mortimer holds the title thereto for the benefit of the said appellants and of the holder of the said note, and as security for the payment thereof. Helen B. Mortimer was made a party defendant in the action, as also was the Halladay Motorcar Company and the members thereof, and they suffered default. The answer is extremely voluminous and contains a large amount of irrelevant and rather incoherent matter, a large part of which was stricken out on motion of the plaintiffs and which need not be further referred to. It alleges that the note was given without consideration, and that it was procured by fraud and misrepresentation by said Halladay Motorcar Company. The court made findings that all the allegations of the complaint were true, that the note was given for a valuable consideration, and was not obtained by fraud as alleged. Judgment followed in accordance with the findings.

[1] It was no concern of these appellants whether the summons was properly served on the Halladay Motorcar Company or not. It was a partnership, its members were parties defendant to the action, and a service on them would be good against the company. The motion to quash the service on the company was therefore properly overruled.

[2] The action was equitable in character. Therefore the court did not err in denying the demand for a trial by jury. Downing v. Le Du, 82 Cal. 471, 23 Pac. 202.

[3] A large portion of the record and of the appellants' brief is occupied with objections growing out of a transaction in writing which appellants claim amounted to an assignment of the note by the plaintiffs to William E. Lady, the attorney for the plaintiffs. The action was begun in 1912 and the alleged assignment to Lady was not made until April 1, 1914. Where a transfer of a cause of action is made while an action thereon is pending, it may be continued in the name of the original party. Code Civ. Proc. § 385. The appellants do not show that they would be in any wise benefited if Lady were substituted as plaintiff. The entire controversy upon that subject was and is fruitless and immaterial. It is proper to say, however, that the instrument in question does not assign the note itself to Lady, but merely assigns to him all the plaintiffs' right, title, and interest to any money that may be collected thereon, and it authorized him to prosecute an action therefor in the name of the plaintiffs and to receive any and all moneys obtained by means of such action.

The parties and the judge of the court below appear to have understood so well the transaction in which the note was given and the lien created that little evidence in proof of it was offered. We gather its terms from the briefs and the evidence which appears on the subject. The appellants purchased from the Halladay Motorcar Company a "Halladay" automobile, and paid a small part of the price in cash. At that time they owned a Peerless automobile, which they delivered to the Halladay Company to be sold for their account, the proceeds to be applied on the purchase price of the "Halladay" machine. The Halladay Company sold the Peerless machine to Helen B. Mortimer in exchange for a lot of land which she owned. It was unwilling to take the lot as payment for the "Halladay" machine, and it asked the appellants to execute a note for the price, with the understanding that the lot obtained from Mortimer would be held by it as security for the note. This was agreed to, and thereupon Mortimer executed a deed purporting to convey the land to the "Halladay Motorcar Company," the appellants executed the note sued on, and the company and the appellants executed an agreement to the effect that if the lot should be sold before the note matured, the proceeds should be applied on the note, "but if not sold before that time, then it shall be deeded to the payors upon the payment by them of said note." Afterwards the Halladay Company sold all its business and assets including this note and its interest in the lot, to the plaintiff Vance-Canavan Motor Company. The theory of the plaintiffs' action is, as stated in the complaint, that the deed of Mortimer was ineffectual because of the fictitious name of the grantee, and that in equity she holds the title in trust for all of the parties for the purposes for which the deal was made. This much it is necessary to say to explain what follows.

[4] The court did not err in admitting in evidence the deed executed by Mortimer to the Halladay Company over the objection that it was void because the grantee was a fictitious person. It was duly executed and acknowledged and it was pertinent as evidence to prove the allegations of the complaint and to show that Helen B. Mortimer held the title in trust, if the theory of the complaint that she did was correct. The question whether or not the deed was void for the reason stated is of no importance in the case. Both the Halladay Motorcar Company and Helen B. Mortimer were made defendants to the action, the title was vested in either one or the other, and the allegation is that the title was held in trust as security for the payment of this note. They have each suffered default, and thereby admitted the facts alleged in the complaint. The foreclosure decree will be effectual regardless of the situation concerning the title, inasmuch as all the parties interested are parties to the action, and a sale under the decree against them all will dispose of the whole title.

[5] It was not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove that the defendant Halladay Motorcar Company had complied with the requirements of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code. Partnerships having a fictitious name may do business without such compliance. The only penalty of a failure is that such a partnership cannot maintain an action until it has complied with those sections. But there is nothing in the sections to prevent such partnership being made defendant to an action.

[6] It is alleged in the complaint that the Mortimer lot was incumbered by a prior mortgage for $600, that after the deed from Mortimer the interest was paid thereon by the plaintiffs in order to protect the security and prevent the foreclosure of said prior mortgage, and that said interest has not been repaid by the appellants. Evidence of these payments was offered, to which the appellants objected on the ground that it was not shown whether they were made by the plaintiffs or by its predecessor, the Halladay Company. So far as these appellants are concerned it is immaterial which party paid the interest, provided it was paid to protect the security and prevent foreclosure, which does not seem to be disputed. The objection was properly overruled.

[7] The appellants claimed at the trial that the indorsement on the note made by the Halladay Motorcar Company was placed there after the beginning of the action, and the court made some rulings excluding evidence to show that fact. There was evidence as above indicated that this note was transferred to the plaintiff prior to the beginning of the action, in the sale of the assets of the Halladay Company to the plaintiff company. This transfer was sufficient to carry the title to the note and enable the plaintiff company to sue thereon. The payee of the note was a party defendant, and could answer as to any interest it had in the note. It was therefore of no importance whether its indorsement was placed on the note before or after the action was begun.

[8] There was no error in inserting in the decree a provision for the recovery of the deficiency in case the lot did not sell for a sufficient sum to pay the debts for which it was security. There is no distinction in this respect between a transaction which constitutes an equitable mortgage under section 2924 of the Civil Code and an ordinary mortgage. A deficiency judgment is authorized in either. Jones v. Gardner, 57 Cal. 642.

[9] The appellants in their answer alleged that the note and the agreement to accept the lot as security were procured by false representations on the part of the Halladay Motorcar Company to the effect that the lot was clear of all incumbrances and was worth more than the amount of the note. This part of the answer is extremely voluminous, and nearly every allegation was repeated more than once, and upon motion of the plaintiff the court struck out a number of the repetitions. Enough remains, however, to make out the charge of fraud as above stated. The error in striking out the repetitions of the charge was therefore harmless.

The appellants insist in their brief that the note was given without any consideration. The statement we have made heretofore concerning the nature of the transaction in which the note was given was supported by the evidence. The essential facts are really not disputed. The contentions of the appellants relate altogether to the conclusions of law which they claim are to be deduced from the facts. The transaction shows that the note was in fact given for the Halladay automobile purchased by the appellants from the payee of the note. There is no merit in the claim that the note was without consideration.

[10] We have discussed all the points which the appellants have argued in their briefs. A number of rulings are mentioned, and the brief declares that they are erroneous, but no argument whatever is made thereon. There is no argument in support of the appeal from an order denying appellants' motion to retax costs. It is the uniform practice of this court not to discuss or consider points which are not argued by the appellants. Gavin v. Gavin, 92 Cal. 292, 28 Pac. 567; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 689, 76 Pac. 661; People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 163, 72 Pac. 965; People v. Wo, 120 Cal. 297, 52 Pac. 833. For that reason we decline to discuss the questions above mentioned.

The judgment and the orders appealed from are affirmed.

BANDLE v. COMMERCIAL NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 4526.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 19, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜931(1) — PRESUMPTIONS—FINDINGS.
In reviewing a finding of fact, all the inferences reasonably possible from the evidence favorable to the prevailing party must be indulged by the Appellate Court.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⊜168 — INTENT OF GRANTEE.
Where there is evidence tending to show that the wife gave full value for conveyance to her by her husband, the husband's fraudulent intent is of no avail to his creditors, unless it is also shown that she participated therein.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1010(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.
A finding that a wife was not guilty of fraudulent intent in accepting deeds by her husband in payment of his debts to her must be upheld on appeal, where the trial court might have found either way on the evidence.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Mary Louisa Bandle against the Commercial National Bank of Los Angeles. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley, of Los Angeles, for appellant. G. C. De Garmo, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff sued to quiet her title to two lots of land situated in Los Angeles county against the claims of the defendant. The plaintiff derived her title to the land by deeds from her husband, Charles W. Bandle, executed on January 24, 1911. The claim of the defendant to the land is based on a sheriff's deed under an execution sale upon a judgment in favor of the defendant against said Charles W. Bandle, the husband, entered in the superior court of the county on January 16, 1912, and on the contention that the deed by him to the plaintiff on January 24, 1911, was fraudulent and void as to his creditors. The defendant set up this claim in its answer and also in a cross-complaint in which Charles W. Bandle is made a party to the action as a cross-defendant. The allegations of fraud and of fraudulent intent were denied, the court made its findings in favor of plaintiff and gave judgment accordingly. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

[1] The evidence is set forth in a bill of exceptions. The sole point urged in support of the appeal is that the findings to the effect that the deeds from Charles W. Bandle to his wife, the plaintiff, were for a valuable consideration, and were not made with the intent to defraud the defendant or other creditors of Charles W. Bandle, is contrary to the evidence. In reviewing a question of this kind, all the inferences reasonably possible from the evidence favorable to the plaintiff must be indulged by this court.

[2, 3] There was testimony to the effect that Mrs. Bandle had from time to time loaned money to her husband out of her separate estate, that on January 24, 1911, when the deeds were made, he owed her about $3,000, that she then requested him to give her something for what he owed her, that he said to her that he could give her these lots, and that thereupon the deeds conveying the lots to her were executed by him as a payment upon his debts to her. This, if true, would sustain a finding that the conveyance to her was for a valuable consideration and without fraudulent intent, unless there was some evidence of intent to defraud creditors, aside from the transaction itself. The conveyance of the lots to the wife occurred about six months prior to the time when the husband became indebted to the Commercial National Bank for the debt upon which its cross-complaint is founded and upon which its claim against the property is based. There was persuasive evidence to the effect that the husband when he incurred the debt had a fraudulent intent toward the bank with respect to this property, that he represented that he was the owner thereof and concealed the fact that it belonged to his wife, and that the loan was made on the faith of that representation. But as there was evidence tending to show that the wife gave full value for the conveyance of the lots by her husband to her, a fraudulent intent on his part is of no avail to his creditors unless it is also shown that the wife participated therein. While there are many equivocal circumstances in the evidence which might give rise to suspicion that the wife had some cause to believe that he had obtained credit from the bank by representing that he owned this property, she herself denied that she had this knowledge, and upon the whole evidence we cannot say that it is of such a character that the court was bound to believe that she was guilty of fraudulent intent in accepting the deeds from her husband and in claiming the property as her own. The finding must be upheld upon the theory that the evidence as a whole was of such a character that the question of fraudulent intent was one which the court might have found either way in its discretion, but one in which its finding cannot be overturned by this court upon appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

WOLFSKILL v. CITY COUNCIL OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 5483.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃33(5)—ANNEXING TERRITORY — PROCEEDINGS — CHARACTER OF ACTS.

In a proceeding to annex territory to a city wherein the council was required to determine whether the requisite number of electors in the territory to be annexed had petitioned for the annexation, the council in making such determination acted in a ministerial capacity.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃33(5)—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY — PROCEEDINGS — VALIDITY.

In a proceeding to annex contiguous territory to a city, it is competent for the city council to direct the city clerk to compare the petition for the annexation with the register of electors of the county and to report to the council whether the requisite number have signed the petition, and the council's determination thereupon that the requisite number had signed was valid.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Proceedings by the City Council of City of Los Angeles for the annexation of certain territory to the city, wherein Matt A. Wolfskill filed petition for certiorari to review the determination of the council to annex the territory. From a judgment for defendants, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Hartley Shaw, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Albert Lee Stephens, Charles S. Burnell, and C. B. Penn, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in defendants' favor in a proceeding wherein the plaintiff seeks to review a certain determination of the city council of the city of Los Angeles taken in the course of proceedings for the annexation of certain territory to said city. The proceedings for annexation were instituted under the provisions of the statute of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 587), as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 305), relating to the annexation of inhabited outside territory to an incorporated city. The act contemplates the following steps in the course of such proceedings: Five electors of the territory to be annexed may file with the city council a notice of their intention to petition for annexation, upon receipt of which the city council may pass a resolution approving the same, and for 30 days thereafter no proceedings shall be taken for annexing the same territory to any other city. Upon receiving such petition, signed by not less than one-fourth in number of the qualified electors residing within said territory, asking for the annexation thereof to the city, the city council must call an election and submit to the electors residing in such territory the question of annexation. If the vote in this territory is favorable the city council must then call an election and submit the proposition to the electors of the city, and if they also vote in favor of the annexation, the result must be certified to the secretary of state and the annexation is then complete.

The proceedings in this matter were properly instituted on March 11, 1916, by the filing of the above notice of intention and by its approval by the city council through the passage of the appropriate resolution on March 14, 1916. On March 23, 1916, a petition for annexation, admittedly in proper form and signed by 120 persons who described themselves therein as being qualified electors of the territory to be annexed and stating their respective places of residence therein was duly filed with the clerk of the city council, and on March 24, 1916, said petition was presented by said clerk to the council in session. Whereupon, on motion of one of its members, duly seconded, a motion was passed instructing the city clerk, who was also the clerk of that body, "to examine said petition and ascertain whether said petition is signed by one-fourth in number of the qualified electors residing within the territory described in said petition as shown by the registration of voters of Los Angeles county." The clerk made such examination and rendered his report in writing to the city council in the following words:

"I beg to report as follows: In accordance with your instructions, I have carefully examined petition No. 973 signed by G. A. Baber and others, filed in my office and presented to the council on March 24, 1916, asking for the annexation to the city of Los Angeles of certain outside territory contiguous to the city on its western boundary, and comprising Westgate and other precincts in Los Angeles county.

"I find and report that said petition is signed by 94 qualified electors residing in the territory described in said petition, and thereby asked to be annexed to the city of Los Angeles, and that said petition is signed by one-fourth (¼) and more of the qualified electors residing in said territory."

Thereupon the city council adopted a resolution as follows:

"That the council of the city of Los Angeles hereby finds and determines that that certain petition asking for annexation of the territory therein and hereinafter described, to the city of Los Angeles, is signed by 94 qualified electors residing in the territory described in said petition, and that said petition is signed by one-fourth (¼) and more in number of the qualified electors residing within the territory described in said petition as shown by the registration of voters of Los Angeles county, within which county said territory is situated, and said petition is sufficient. Said territory is described as follows. * * *"

Here followed the description of the territory sought to be annexed, whereupon the proper ordinance calling a special election and fixing the date thereof was adopted; and the election in accordance therewith was later held, and resulted in a vote favoring the annexation of the proposed territory. The petitioner herein directs his attack upon these proceedings at that portion thereof wherein the city council undertook to determine that a petition signed by the requisite number of the qualified electors of the territory seeking annexation which the statute requires had been duly presented.

It is in the first place contended by the petitioner herein that in the determination of that question the city council acted judicially, and hence that their action thereon is the proper subject of review in this proceeding upon the authority of Imperial Water Co. v. Bd. of Sup., 162 Cal. 14, 120 Pac. 394; Stumpf v. Bd. of Sup., 131 Cal. 364, 63 Pac. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 350; Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 8 Pac. 852; Bryant v. Bd. of Sup., 32 Cal. App. 495, 163 Pac. 341; and Capuchino Ld. Co. v. San Bruno, 34 Cal. App. 239, 167 Pac. 178.

[1] The appellant's next contention is that the city council had no sufficient evidence before them upon which to base a finding that a sufficient petition for the calling of an election had been presented, and hence its action in making such finding and ordering the election based thereon was in excess of its jurisdiction and hence reviewable in this proceeding. In making this contention the petitioner strongly relies upon the case of Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, 131 Cal. 364, 63 Pac. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 350, to support it. That was a proceeding to review the action of the board of supervisors of San Luis Obispo county in the matter of the attempted creation of a sanitary district under the provisions of the statute of 1891, providing for the formation of such districts. Under that act proceedings were to be initiated by the presentation to the board of supervisors of a petition signed by 25 persons, residents and freeholders within the proposed district. The only showing before the board as to whether the signers of the petition were "residents and freeholders" within the proposed district was the unsworn statement of one of the signers of the petition. This court held that this was an insufficient showing upon which to base its finding and issue the call for an election. There are two essential differences, however, to be noted between the facts of the Stumpf Case and those of the case at bar. In the Stumpf Case the statute required that those signing the petition should be "residents and freeholders" within the district. In the case at bar all that the statute requires is that those signing the petition shall constitute a certain proportion of the qualified electors of the district sought to be annexed, "as shown by the registration of voters of the county in which such territory is situated." It will be seen at a glance that the quality and extent of proof that the signers of a petition are "residents and freeholders" of a certain district is much greater and requires a much more extended research to ascertain the facts than would be that required to ascertain that the signers of a petition are "residents and qualified electors" within a certain district, especially since the source from which the information in the latter case is to be drawn is specifically pointed out to be the records of the last registration. The second important difference between the Stumpf Case and the case at bar consists in the fact that the only showing made before the board in the former case as to the sufficiency of the petition in the respect indicated was the mere statement of one of the petitioners; while in the latter case the showing made before the city council as to the fact that the signers to the petition were residents and qualified electors of the district was to be found in the written report of the chief ministerial officer of the city council after making the investigation of the registration records prescribed by the statute under the express direction of that body. But aside from these divergencies there are certain expressions in the Stumpf Case upon which the petitioner has laid emphasis which we do not regard as having been essential to the conclusions reached in that case and to which we are not disposed at this time to accord our full approval. It is stated in that case that where the determination of those questions upon which the jurisdiction of the board depended required the exercise of judicial power, and where the statute did not prescribe the character of the proof by which they should be determined, "they must be established in accordance with the rules of evidence recognized by the courts and the common law." We are of the opinion that the trend of both recent legislation and decision has been toward a relaxation of this rigid rule in respect to the procedure before official bodies chiefly political in their character and powers and only occasionally exercising judicial functions, with a view to upholding the action of such bodies, which, though informal in some respect, is taken with a view to advancing the public interest and welfare of the community within the limited range of their jurisdiction. The instant case would seem to furnish an apt illustration of the class of tribunals and of cases to which the more modern and relaxed rule should be applied. The statute under which the proceedings before the city council were taken does not prescribe any procedure to be followed upon the presentation of the resident electors' petition in the way of prescribing a hearing thereon upon notice or in allowing time or opportunity for opposition or contest. The civic body is in no wise limited as to the method to be pursued in informing its members with respect to the sufficiency of the petition, but the statute does expressly limit them to the source of their information and the extent of their inquiry. All that they are required to do is to compare the petition with the last registration of voters of the county in which the designated territory is situated. The county register of electors under the law regulating its contents would contain every fact required to be investigated in order to test the sufficiency of the petition. It would seem apparent therefore that the making of this comparison was the doing of a merely ministerial act. Had this act been done by all of the members of the city council acting individually and even going separately to the place where the register was kept and each reporting to his fellow members the result of his comparisons, it could hardly be contended that this would not have furnished a sufficient basis for a finding as to the facts and for the order calling the election, nor could the insistence upon a rigid rule of procedure go so far as to contend that each member of the civic body having so informed himself must be sworn as a witness in order to properly impart his knowledge to his associates.

[2] The same reasoning would seem to apply to the case where the city council instructs its clerk to perform this ministerial act and report the result to it. Having done this, to insist that this ministerial officer of the board, who has already been sworn as such to the proper performance of his official duties, must go through the formality of being again sworn as a witness before imparting the result of his comparison of the public official records would be to carry a rule of procedure to a ridiculous extreme. We are entirely satisfied that the statute contemplates no such consequence, and that in the case at bar the city council was sufficiently advised by the report of its clerk to make its finding that the petition before that body was sufficient as to the number and required qualifications of its signers and to justify a finding to that effect and to order the special election.

The other points made by petitioner do not merit separate consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (concurring). I concur. If we concede purely for the purposes of a decision, as does the opinion, that certiorari will lie in such a case as this (as to which I have great doubt) it is perfectly clear that we are not concerned with any question as to the manner in which the council ascertained the facts upon the existence of which its power to order the election depended. A petition sufficient in form being filed, it was the duty of the council to ascertain in such manner as it found best whether it was sufficiently signed to empower and require it to call the election. If the petition was in fact sufficiently signed, which does not appear to be disputed, the power existed. As said in People v. Ontario, 148 Cal. 635, 84 Pac. 209:

"The duty of a board of trustees to determine whether or not a petition for an annexation election is signed by a sufficient number of electors is entirely implied from the fact that it has no power to order the election except upon a petition signed by that number. The statute nowhere in terms prescribes the necessity of such a determination, or requires any record thereof to be made."

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1918.)

1. FERRIES ⟸3—"PUBLIC HIGHWAY."
A ferryboat is not a public highway, though the place in which the boat is used is a "public highway" in the sense that it is a continuation of the highways with which it connects.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Highway.]

2. FERRIES ⟸3 — WAIVER OF FRANCHISE — FREE PUBLIC HIGHWAY—STATUTE.
Where ferryman sold boat, relinquishing franchise, county accepting release and granting new franchise to purchaser in single order of supervisors, waiver of franchise by ferryman was not surrender to county of all his rights and his ferryboat, cable, and appurtenances, and did not make ferry free public highway, even if ferries are "public highways" within Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 36.

3. FERRIES ⟸15 — GRANT OF FRANCHISE — FINDING OF COST OF MAINTENANCE—STATUTE—"HIGHWAY."
A ferry not being a "highway" within Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 36, supervisors of county were empowered to grant ferry franchise without preliminary finding that cost of maintaining free ferry was too great for county to assume.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Highway.]

4. FERRIES ⟸18—TRANSFER OF FRANCHISE.
A ferry franchise is transferable.

5. FERRIES ⟸15 — GRANT OF FRANCHISE — COLLATERAL ATTACK.
Franchise for ferry over Sacramento river having been granted by competent authority, supervisors of county of Shasta, collateral attacks, as for failure to advertise franchise for sale, sought to be made in action to enjoin construction of bridge by public authorities, will not be considered by court, though one terminus of ferry was in city of Redding.

6. BRIDGES ⟸10—DISCRETIONARY POWER OF PUBLIC CORPORATION.
A public corporation, as a city, exercises discretionary power in deciding to erect a bridge, which discretion may not be imposed upon an adjoining county or municipality to which the bridge is to run.

7. FERRIES ⟸19 — FRANCHISES — DIVISIBLE ENTITY.
A ferry franchise, made valueless by a free bridge constructed by a city across the river without participation of the county authorities on the other side, was not a divisible entity, and the owners could recover their entire damages from the city.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; James G. Estep, Judge.

Action by the Menzel Estate Company, a corporation, and another, against the City of Redding, a municipal corporation, and J. D. Wright and others, trustees of the City, and the Chico Construction Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. H. Braynard, City Atty., and Braynard & Kimball, all of Redding, for appellants. McCoy & Gans, of Red Bluff (A. E. Bolton, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment for $3,750 for the detriment caused to the property of plaintiffs in a ferry franchise and equipment by the construction of a free bridge over the Sacramento river connecting a street in the city of Redding with a county road of the county of Shasta. As originally commenced the action was one by which the plaintiffs sought to enjoin the city from completing the bridge. At the time of the trial it was all constructed except the north approach, and the court, believing that all the detriment caused by the erection of the bridge might be compensated by damages, injunctive relief was denied.

There seems to be no serious disagreement between the contending parties regarding the facts, and there is no attack upon the title of plaintiffs to such property as may exist in the franchise issued to their predecessor, C. C. Bush. Appellants contend, however, that the supposed franchise under which Bush operated the ferry was void.

It appears that for many years a ferry has been maintained between the city of Redding and a point opposite on the Sacramento river where that stream runs east and west. The ferryboat was operated on a cable stretching from bank to bank, and the landings were respectively at the place where a street of Redding reached the river bank and a public road of the county of Shasta extended to the opposite bank. Originally the ferry was called "Reid's Ferry." On January 9, 1890, the board of supervisors of Shasta county granted to J. W. Conant, for a term of 20 years, a franchise to operate a ferry for toll at that place. Conant conducted the ferry until 1897, when he sold the franchise and equipment to C. C. Bush. He then filed a writing with the board of supervisors, setting forth the fact of the sale and Bush's purchase, and asking for a cancellation of his franchise. At the same time Bush made written application for a franchise, and on May 8, 1897, the time noticed for the hearing of the application, the board made an order, declaring Conant's franchise no longer of any effect and granting to Bush a franchise to operate the ferry for the term of 20 years. He conducted the business until 1907 when he conveyed the franchise to Baker, and it has come to plaintiffs by various transfers since that time, and they, like their predecessors, have been operating under a claim of franchise from the county of Shasta at the place where defendants constructed the bridge. It appears that in 1913 the trustees of the city of Redding declared that the public convenience demanded the erection of a free public bridge over the Sacramento river at Reid's Ferry; that after a bond election money was raised for the building of the bridge; and that the defendant Chico Construction Company, having secured the contract, proceeded with the work. During the progress of the building of the bridge the cable was moved, and in 1915, while this action was pending, the boat broke loose during high water and floated down stream, thereby sustaining some damage. The court found that the breaking loose of the boat and cable was proximately caused by the acts of defendants.

The principal attack of defendants is upon the Bush franchise which they insist was void. Their position is that, when Conant filed a relinquishment of the franchise and the supervisors made the order in accordance therewith, the ferry became immediately a free public highway, and that therefore it was necessary before the board could grant a franchise to Bush, that there should be a formal determination by the supervisors that the cost of erecting and the expense of maintaining a ferry was too great for the county to bear. In brief, the appellants contend that: (1) A franchise may expire by nonuser (Sears v. Tuolumne Co., 132 Cal. 167, 64 Pac. 270) and a fortiori by solemn relinquishment of the grantee; (2) when a franchise to collect tolls on a public highway expires by limitation, nonuser, or abandonment, the highway becomes at once a free public highway (Pol. Code, §§ 2618, 2619); (3) a ferry is a public highway, being a continuation of the highway with which it connects (citing authorities, including 19 Cyc. 493; People v. San Francisco & Alameda Railroad Co., 35 Cal. 606–619); (4) when the board of supervisors sought to grant a franchise to Bush that body could only do so effectively by complying with the provisions of section 4041, subd. 36, of the Political Code (formerly subdivision 33 of that section and prior to that esignation in the County Government Act, Statutes of 1893, § 41, p. 359); (5) that statute requires as a jurisdictional prerequisite to action by the board of supervisors a finding that the cost of maintaining the highway was too great to justify its maintenance as a free public highway (Gardella v. County of Amador & County of Calaveras, 164 Cal. 555–560, 129 Pac. 993); (6) no such formal finding on the record of the board of supervisors was proven (Bedell v. Scott, 126 Cal. 675, 59 Pac. 210); (7) therefore, the purported franchise awarded to Bush was void, and he and his successors never acquired any right to operate a ferry.

In analyzing these contentions we will first examine the contention that a ferry is a part of a highway. Undoubtedly a ferry franchise has been so called, as, for example, in the opinion of this court, prepared by Mr. Justice Henshaw, in Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club, 165 Cal. 255, where, at page 271, 131 Pac. 864, at page 871 (Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1197), the following language is used:

"A ferry franchise, emanating from the supreme power of the state or its authorized mandatories, is a grant to a named person, empowering him to continue an interrupted land highway over the interrupting waters."

[1] In 19 Cyc. 493, cited by appellants, a ferry is called "a public highway," but with an important limitation. The definition there given (beginning on page 492) so far as of value to this discussion is as follows:

"A ferry is a liberty to have a boat upon a river for the transportation of men, horses, and carriages with their contents, for a reasonable toll. The term is also used to designate the place where such liberty is exercised. In the latter sense a ferry is a public highway, being a continuation of the highway with which it connects." (The italics are ours.)

It has been held in this state that a ferryboat, operated upon a river as a connecting link between parts of a public road and used to convey the United States mails across the stream, is nevertheless private property subject to execution. Lathrop v. Middleton, 23 Cal. 257, 83 Am. Dec. 112. Such property is in the same category as the rolling stock of a street railroad operating under a franchise. Risdon Iron & Locomotive Works v. Citizens' Traction Co., 122 Cal. 94, 54 Pac. 529, 68 Am. St. Rep. 25.

[2] It is clear that the waiver of his franchise by Conant was not a surrender to the county of all of his rights and of his ferryboat, cable, and other appurtenances. The transaction of transferring the property and that of granting the new franchise to the purchaser were intermingled in such a manner that it may not justly be said that the ferry ever became a free public highway. Conant and his wife, it is true, filed with the supervisors a relinquishment of their franchise, but neither the county nor the public ever acquired the ferryboat and operated it. The essential part of the instrument filed by the Conants was as follows:

"Whereas we have sold and conveyed to C. C. Bush, the said ferry franchise, boat, cable and all appliances, etc., thereto belonging: Now therefore, we do hereby relinquish and abandon the said franchise granted and ask and request that the same shall be canceled and the sureties on the bond given, upon the granting of said franchise be relinquished from all further liabilities in the premises."

This was dated April 8, 1897, but was not filed until May 8th, the day upon which the new franchise was granted to Bush. The acceptance of the release of the Conant franchise, its formal cancellation by the board of supervisors, and the granting of the new franchise to Bush were all contained in a single order. To say that the instant of time elapsing between the cancellation of the one franchise and the granting of the other made the ferry a free public highway would be unduly to exalt a legal fiction. The elimination of the Conant franchise merely left the river for an instant without the formal easement of a right to collect tolls. It did not confer upon the public the right freely to use the boat which Conant had sold to Bush. In short, there was no proper analogy between that transaction and the abandonment of a toll road. Therefore, if it should be conceded that ferries come under the designation of "public highways" as that expression is used in section 4041, subd. 36, of the Political Code, this ferry was never made by abandonment a free public highway. That subdivision, which has been in substantially the same form a part of the law of this state since 1893 (Gardella v. County of Amador, supra), gives to boards of supervisors power—

"to grant, on such terms, conditions and restrictions as in their judgment may be necessary and proper, licenses and franchises for taking tolls on public roads or highways, whenever in their judgment the expense necessary to operate or maintain such public roads or highways as free public highways is too great to justify the county in so operating or maintaining them."

But a ferry is not in a strict technical sense under our law a highway. The learned judge of the superior court who presided at the trial of this case covered this point in his very able written opinion as follows:

"And there is no authority in this state that I have been able to find where a ferry and ferry franchise becomes or could become a public highway, and the weight of authority in other states holds only that a ferry is a connecting link between two public highways, and this is borne out especially by the law of this state by section 2618 of our Political Code which defines public highways as 'roads, streets, alleys, lanes, courts, places, trails, and bridges,' but does not cover or include a ferry. Also section 2619 of the Political Code, and one that is relied upon by the defendants as including a toll ferry, reads as follows: 'Whenever the franchise for any tollbridge, trail, turnpike, plank, or common wagon road has expired by limitation or nonuser, such bridge, trail, turnpike, plank or common wagon road becomes a free public highway.' And in this section toll ferries or ferries are not included, and it will be noted that no mention is made in this section of the matter of ferry, and it cannot therefore be successfully claimed that this section has application to the matter of the ferry or to the case in hand, and all of the cases cited by the defendants' counsel to the effect that this ferry became a free, public highway upon the filing of the instrument in writing by Conant and wife were based upon the assumption that a ferry was a public highway."

[3] We conclude, therefore, that the board of supervisors was empowered to grant the franchise to Bush without the preliminary finding that the cost of maintaining a free ferry was too great for the county to assume.

[4] The appellants also contend that a ferry franchise is not transferable, citing in this behalf certain early Californian decisions which seem in a measure to support this contention. All force which those decisions may have had originally has been lost by subsequent legislation and decision. Upon this branch of the case it is sufficient to cite the able and exhaustive opinion of Mr. Justice Hart in People v. Lawley, 17 Cal. App. 331, 119 Pac. 1089, in which the very decisions cited by counsel for appellants in this case are reviewed and a conclusion reached which adversely disposes of a contention identical with that made in the case at bar. This court denied a petition to transfer People v. Lawley.

[5] The franchise for the ferry having been granted by competent authority, namely, the board of supervisors of the county of Shasta, the various collateral attacks sought to be made upon it upon such grounds, for example, as failure to advertise the franchise for sale, and those based upon other objections, will not be considered by the court. Norris v. Farmers' & Teamsters' Co., 6 Cal. 590, 65 Am. Dec. 535; Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Lang & McPherson, 161 Cal. 672, 120 Pac. 421. And this rule is not changed by the fact that one terminus of the ferry is and always has been in the city of Redding. Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club, 165 Cal. 255–265, 131 Pac. 864, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1197.

[6, 7] Defendants further assert that the city of Redding as a municipal corporation, had power to order the construction of the free bridge as a matter of public convenience; that the city, as one of the state's mandatories, had authority to make a finding to the effect that a free bridge was necessary for public convenience; and that therefore any loss to respondents is damnum absque injuria, at least so far as the detriment to the value of their franchise is involved, because (so runs the argument) every franchise for a toll ferry is taken with the knowledge that the state has authority at any time, in case of necessity, to provide for competing means of travel, that knowledge becoming, in effect, a part of every contract between the state and the grantee of the privilege to operate a ferry. It will not be necessary here to discuss the exact extent of the state's power through one of its mandatories to violate the franchise of an existing ferry by authorizing the building of a free bridge either entirely within the territory of the governmental agency directing the construction or connecting its territory with that of another agent of the state joining in the declaration of public necessity for the improvement. In this case we have a state of facts involving the construction of a bridge by the city of Redding without authority of the county of Shasta to extend the structure into its road district on the opposite side of the Sacramento river from the city. We can find no statute which confers upon the city of Redding power to declare for another part of the county the necessity for the bridge. It has been held by the District Court of Appeal in respect to this very bridge that the city could not force the county to pay for the part of the structure which is without the city limits, the board of supervisors of Shasta county having declined to participate in the declaration of necessity for the improvement or to appropriate any money to pay for it. See City of Redding v. Shasta County, 171 Pac. 806, a case in which a petition for hearing in this court was denied. A public corporation exercises discretionary power in deciding to erect a bridge (Coffey v. City of Berkeley, 170 Cal. 258, 149 Pac. 559), and that discretion may not be imposed upon an adjoining county or municipality. Therefore the city of Redding may not take whatever benefit might have been derived from a finding of public necessity for a bridge if the river at the place to be spanned had been wholly within the corporate limits; and the city may not escape liability because it had jurisdiction and power to build the part of the bridge within its territory as a declared public necessity. The franchise was not a divisible entity. It was made valueless by the finished bridge. The tangible property also was injured by the bridge, which was virtually then in a completed state. The city of Redding therefore is in essentially the same position which a private individual would occupy, if without warrant of law he had constructed the bridge and injured the property of the respondents.

No other matters discussed in the briefs require discussion or analysis.

The judgment is affirmed.

MERCANTILE TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR KERN COUNTY et al. (L. A. 5681.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 11, 1918. On Petition for Rehearing, Aug. 9, 1918.)

1. NEW TRIAL ⊜163(2)—ORDER—CONSTRUCTION—LIMITED BY SCOPE OF MOTION.
A general order granting a new trial cannot be construed to be any broader than the motion which forms its predicate, nor than the issues which such motion urged had been erroneously determined.

2. PROHIBITION ⊜27—PROCEEDINGS—APPEAL AND ERROR—RETRIAL—PRESUMPTIONS.
In a proceeding on an application for a writ of prohibition, it must be assumed, in the absence of a positive showing to the contrary, that the trial court will be guided in the retrial of a remanded case by the appellate decision.

3. PROHIBITION ⊜20—PROCEEDINGS—PETITION.
In an application for prohibition, held, that it is not made to appear, either in petitioner's application or upon the whole record, that the trial court intended to retry the remanded cause, contrary to the clear direction of the appellate decision, or to retry other issues than those actually existing in the case.

4. PROHIBITION ⊜9 — GROUNDS — COURTS — DELAY.
The delay occasioned by the retrial of issues joined by cross-pleadings or the provisions of a trust deed for foreclosure sale in a remanded case are beyond control of an appellate court and cannot be made the subject of a preventive writ.

In Bank. Petition by the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco against the Superior Court of California in and for Kern County and Howard A. Peairs, Judge thereof, for a writ of prohibition. Application denied, and writ dismissed.

A. E. Shaw, and Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, all of San Francisco, for petitioner. A. A. De Ligne, Donzel Stoney, and Denman & Arnold, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the superior court of the county of Kern and Hon. Howard A. Peairs, judge of said court commanding said court and judge to refrain and desist from taking any further proceedings in the matter of retrying certain issues in the case of Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, plaintiff, against Sunset Road Oil Company, Union Oil Company, Citizens' National Bank, Union Lumber Company, King Lumber Company, Kern Valley Bank, M. E. Webster, W. H. Coon, and Stephen Price, defendants, now pending in said court and before said judge. The facts upon which this application is predicated are the following:

The above-named action is one instituted for the foreclosure of a mortgage or trust deed executed to the plaintiff by the defendant Sunset Road Oil Company on July 15, 1905, covering all of its real and personal properties situate in the county of Kern, which said properties were, by the terms of said instrument, transferred to the said Mercantile Trust Company in trust and as security for a bonded indebtedness of the said Sunset Road Oil Company, to be evidenced by certain bonds issued or to be issued by said last-named company, and which bonds were issued and sold to various persons. Thereafter, and on May 10, 1911, the said plaintiff filed an amended complaint in said action, wherein, after repeating the averments of its original complaint as to the execution of the mortgage or trust deed and the amount due and unpaid thereon by the Sunset Road Oil Company, the plaintiff alleged that, under and pursuant to the provisions of said mortgage or deed of trust providing for a bond issue, the defendant Sunset Road Oil Company had from time to time issued to divers persons bonds aggregating in face value the sum of $1,500,000, which said bonds were outstanding and unpaid. The plaintiff also averred that certain of the defendants other than the Sunset Road Oil Company claimed certain rights or interests in or liens upon the mortgaged properties, which plaintiff alleged to be subsequent, subordinate and subject to the rights of the plaintiff in and to said properties. The plaintiff prayed for a foreclosure of its said mortgage or deed of trust and "that the court fix and determine the number and amount of the bonds of said Sunset Road Oil Company now outstanding and the amount due on each thereof."

The only defendants who appeared in the first instance to set up any interest in the mortgaged premises adverse to that of the plaintiff, existing by virtue of its said mortgage or deed of trust, were the defendant Union Oil Company of California and the defendants Coon and Price. These claimed to have acquired some interest in said mortgaged premises superior to the plaintiff's said mortgage. At some time subsequent to the filing of plaintiff's amended complaint W. R. Williams, state superintendent of banks, appeared for and on behalf of the defendant Kern Valley Bank and filed what purported to be an answer, cross-complaint, and complaint in intervention, from the averments of which it appeared that the Kern Valley Bank had become insolvent, and had been taken possession of by the said W. R. Williams as state superintendent of banks, and was in process of liquidation by him; that the said Kern Valley Bank was the owner or holder of the bonds of the Sunset Road Oil Company to the extent of $459,400, the face value thereof, together with unpaid interest thereon since January 1, 1908, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. The answer of the said superintendent of banks, acting on behalf of the Kern Valley Bank, admitted the averment of the plaintiff's amended complaint to the effect that there were $1,500,000 of issued, outstanding, and unpaid bonds of the Sunset Road Oil Company, but denied that any of said bonds other than those owned by Kern Valley Bank, aggregating the sum of $459,400, were issued for any consideration whatever, and affirmatively alleged that each and every one of the said bonds of the Sunset Road Oil Company other than those so held by the Kern Valley Bank were wrongfully and improperly issued, and without any consideration therefor moving to said Sunset Road Oil Company. Whatever other averments the said answer contains upon this subject are mere conclusions of law, based upon its averment that all of such bonds other than those held by the Kern Valley Bank were issued without consideration. By the said cross-complaint and so-called complaint in intervention of the superintendent of banks certain other persons in addition to those already defendants in the action, to wit, W. S. Tevis, C. N. Beal, H. H. Blodgett, Canadian Bank of Commerce, and Western Metropolis National Bank, were brought into the action as defendants; the said cross-complainant alleging as to them a state of facts which it averred rendered the issue of a large block of the bonds of the Sunset Road Oil Company to said later named defendants void.

The cause went to trial upon the issues as thus made up. The only issue which was presented requiring other than merely formal proof on the part of the plaintiff was that joined by the defendants Union Oil Company and Coon and Price, through the claim of these defendants that they held certain leases upon the mortgaged premises which were superior to the plaintiff's mortgage. There was also the question as to the amount in value of bonds actually or properly issued by the Sunset Road Oil Company which the plaintiff's mortgages secured; but this was an issue which arose out of the averments of the so-called cross-complaint and complaint in intervention of the superintendent of banks, representing the Kern Valley Bank, and the answers thereto presented by the defendants which it had caused to be brought in. Upon the trial of the cause the plaintiff presented its formal proofs as to the making and execution of the mortgage or deed of trust to it, and also made its showing as to the superiority of its lien over the alleged rights and interest of the Union Oil Company, Coon and Price. The main battle was between the cross-complainant, W. R. Williams, representing, as superintendent of banks, the Kern Valley Bank, and the defendants it had caused to be brought in. Upon the trial and submission of the cause the court made its findings and rendered its judgment in the plaintiff's favor upon the matter of the making, execution and delivery of the mortgage or deed of trust to it. The court also found and rendered judgment in the plaintiff's favor upon the issue of the priority of its lien over the claims or interest of Union Oil Company, Coon, and Price, who had answered, claiming that their said rights and interests were superior to the plaintiff's lien. The court also adjudged that the alleged claims or interests of those other defendants who had not appeared were to be subordinated to the lien of plaintiff's mortgage and deed of trust. Upon the issue presented by the cross-complaint as to the amount of outstanding bonds of the Sunset Road Oil Company, which the plaintiff's mortgage or deed of trust secured, the court found that the Sunset Road Oil Company was indebted in the sum of $1,459,000 principal and $368,749.80 interest, $50,000 trustees' and attorney's fees, and $4,082.56 costs and disbursements, all of which was secured by the plaintiff's lien, the foreclosure of which was decreed.

As to this issue, and the finding and decree of the trial court thereon, it is plain that the plaintiff as the mere trustee for the bondholders was not materially affected, but that, on the other hand, the Kern Valley Bank and its representative, W. R. Williams, as superintendent of banks, in charge of its affairs, were the parties actually aggrieved. While it is true that the plaintiff, as a predicate to its asserted right to the foreclosure of its mortgage or deed of trust, stated in its complaint the amount of the outstanding indebtedness of the Sunset Road Oil Company, as the same appeared upon the face of its issued bonds, the fact is that the real issue upon this subject was the one arising upon the cross-complaint, or so-called complaint in intervention, of the Kern Valley Bank and its representative, and the answers thereto filed on behalf of the defendants which it had caused to be brought into the case, and whose holdings of certain of the bonds of the Sunset Road Oil Company it had assailed. Upon the issues thus framed the court found against the Kern Valley Bank and its representative, and decreed that it take nothing by its cross-complaint in intervention. After the entry of the decree of the trial court disposing of these several matters, two separate motions for a new trial were made—one by the Union Oil Company, addressed to that portion of the finding and decree of the court which subordinated its interests in portions of the mortgaged property to the plaintiff's lien; the other by and on behalf of the Kern Valley Bank, wherein the findings and decree of the trial court upon the issues specially tendered by the cross-complaint in intervention were assailed. Both of said motions for a new trial were granted by the trial court on June 16, 1914, its order in each instance being in general terms.

Several appeals were taken from each of the orders by the plaintiff and others, and upon separate hearings upon each of these appeals the order granting a new trial upon the motion of the Union Oil Company was reversed, while the order granting the motion for a new trial made on behalf of the Kern Valley Bank was affirmed; the decision of this court upon each of these appeals being found reported in Mercantile Trust Co., etc., v. Sunset Road Oil Co. et al. (L. A. No. 4128) 168 Pac. 1037, and Mercantile Trust Co., etc., v. Sunset Road Oil Co. et al. (L. A. Nos. 3396 and 4027) 168 Pac. 1033, 1036. The decision of this court upon these several appeals having become final, the cause is again before the superior court of the county of Kern, and Hon. Howard A. B. Peairs, the judge thereof, for a new trial. It is alleged in the petition herein:

> That the said superior court and the judge thereof has "proceeded to and did set the said cause for retrial upon the issues in plaintiff's amended complaint set forth as to each and all of the defendants therein named, and that said superior court and the said judge thereof will, unless restrained by the order of this honorable court, proceed to retry all the issues arising in said cause under plaintiff's said amended complaint as against each and all of the defendants therein named as aforesaid, and that your petitioner as said plaintiff will be compelled to incur large expense in the retrial of said cause."

[1, 2] It is quite clear to this court that upon the facts set forth in its petition herein, which preceded the above-quoted averment, and upon such averment, the petitioner is not entitled to the writ which it seeks to have the court issue in this proceeding. As to the defendants in the case who did not appear, and as to whom defaults were duly entered, followed by the findings and decree of the trial court in conformity with the averments and prayer of the plaintiff's amended complaint, which findings and decree have long since become final, there need be and can be no retrial of the case, for as to these there are no issues which remain to be tried. As to the defendants Union Oil Company, Coon, and Price the same precise condition exists, for the reversal of the order granting the motion for a new trial as to these defendants having become final, and the original judgment as to each of them having thus been restored and having also become a finality, there are no issues as to these defendants to be retried. As to both of the above sets of defendants, the judgment is itself conclusive evidence of every fact which either upon their default or answer or upon appeal has been determined adversely to them.

The only other parties defendants in the action as to whom there exist issues to be tried are the defendants Kern Valley Bank and its representative, the superintendent of banks, and the parties whom it has made cross-defendants by the averments of its cross-complaint or complaint in intervention. The Kern Valley Bank and its representative, the superintendent of banks, have no place in this case, except that which springs from the fact that the former is the holder of bonds of the Sunset Road Oil Company of the face value of $459,400, which bonds are secured by the mortgage or deed of trust by the plaintiff as trustee and sought to be foreclosed in this action. As between the Kern Valley

Bank and its representative, on the one hand, and the plaintiff, on the other, no issue could arise as to the integrity of the latter's lien or as to its right to the foreclosure thereof. The formal allegations of the plaintiff that the sum of $1,500,000 in value of these bonds has been issued and is outstanding and unpaid has not been denied. These bonds, having been thus admittedly issued, import a consideration without further proof, and hence no proofs were or are required on the part of the plaintiff upon this subject. The plaintiff's averment that the proper steps had been taken to declare the whole amount due upon these bonds was also not denied. It was therefore not required, either at the outset or at any other stage of the trial, to sustain these averments with proofs as against these particular defendants. Whatever issues upon these subjects existed or now exist arose out of the dispute between the bondholders themselves as to the integrity, amount, and value of their respective holdings of these bonds. This issue was brought into the case by the filing of the cross-complaint and complaint in intervention of the Kern Valley Bank and its representative, the superintendent of banks, and was joined by the respective answers of the defendants named in these cross-pleadings to them. As to the proofs upon these issues the plaintiff has no interest, and has never had the burden, either upon the original trial or upon any retrial of the cause; and while it is true that the trial court upon the original trial of the cause decided these issues against the contention of the cross-complainant, and that its motion for a new trial as to these issues was granted, and that in granting said motion the trial court made a general order granting a new trial, which general order this court upon appeal has affirmed, still, according to well-settled principles, as well as under the express rulings of this court in these particular appeals, such general order of the trial court granting such new trial is not to be construed or held to be any broader than the motion which forms its predicate, nor than the issues which in said motion it was urged the court had erroneously determined. In the case of Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset Road Oil Co. et al. (L. A. No. 4152) supra, this court said:

"No appeal was taken from the decree of foreclosure by the Sunset Road Oil Company, the mortgagor and owner of the property, and the judgment has become final as to it."

In the case of Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset Road Oil Co. et al. (L. A. No. 4027) supra, this court said:

"The issues tendered by the Kern Valley Bank and Williams in the cross-complaint do not affect the right of the plaintiff to foreclose the trust deed set forth in its complaint. The question raised related solely to the rights of different holders of bonds purporting to be secured by the trust deed to participate in the proceeds of the foreclosure sale."

[3, 4] To the views expressed in both of the foregoing cases we still adhere, and we must assume, in the absence of a positive showing to the contrary, that the trial court will be guided and governed by them upon a retrial of the cause. The question, therefore, presented by the foregoing state of the record, is as to whether the petitioner herein has either sufficiently shown that the trial court upon a present retrial of the cause is intending to proceed contrary to the clear direction given it by the language of these decisions, or that upon the whole record in the instant proceeding such appears to be the case. Recurring to the language of petitioner's application herein quoted in the earlier part of this opinion, we do not think that it sufficiently appears therefrom that the trial court is proposing to try any other issues than those actually existing in the cases in its present state. It may be stated in this connection that issues in a case do not arise or exist, so as to require trial upon the mere filing of a complaint, but only upon joinder through appropriate denials of the averments of the complaint, or through affirmative defenses or pleas deemed or required to be denied by the plaintiff, or by other defendants, as the case may be. The statement of the petitioner herein that the trial court proposes "to retry all the issues arising in said cause under plaintiff's said amended complaint as against each and all of the defendants therein named" states a condition which could not possibly exist, since no issues thus arose or now exist, with the single exception of the issues which the bondholders have created as between themselves by the cross-pleadings in the case, and with which the trial court was dealing in its order granting a new trial, and which are the only issues before it in the present state of the case. This is made the more apparent by the answer to the petition herein filed on behalf of the trial court and the judge thereof, from which we think it sufficiently appears that the only matters which that court is intending or proceeding to retry are those presented by the cross-pleadings of the defendants in the case. As to these issues the plaintiff herein has not the laboring oar, and has little, if any, concern; nor is it possible to conceive how the plaintiff in that action and the petitioner herein can be put to any appreciable trouble or expense in the presentation of its affirmative case in the present state of the record. That some delay will be occasioned by the retrial of the issues joined by the cross-pleadings in the case is probable, in view of the provisions of the trust deed governing a foreclosure sale. These matters were discussed by this court in the case of Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset Road Oil Co. (L. A. No. 4027) supra, and our views therein expressed are instructive to the parties and the court upon the retrial of the cause. Such delay as may occur, however, is beyond our control and could not be made the subject of a preventive writ.

It follows from the foregoing discussion that the application of the petitioner herein should be denied, and the writ dismissed; and it is so ordered.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied, but in denying the same we deem it proper to add that the question as to the proper amount to be allowed as counsel fees upon the foreclosure of the mortgage or deed of trust in the case of Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset Road Oil Co. et al., out of which this proceeding arose, is involved in the retrial of that cause. Said instrument provides for the allowance of reasonable counsel fees in the event of a foreclosure thereof. The complaint in the foreclosure suit merely asked for the allowance of reasonable counsel fees, without specifying any particular sum as the amount demanded. The answers of the several defendants were silent upon the subject of counsel fees. The trial court allowed counsel fees in the sum of $50,000, basing such allowance evidently upon its finding that the outstanding indebtedness of the Sunset Road Oil Company represented in bonds and secured by said mortgage or deed of trust amounted to the sum approximately of $1,500,000. The Kern Valley Bank, through its representative, the bank commission, assailed this finding upon motion for a new trial, and also upon said motion attacked the reasonableness of the court's finding as to counsel fees, which was predicated upon the foregoing finding as to the amount of outstanding valid bonds. The court granted said motion for a new trial by a general order, which embraced only a retrial of those issues arising between the contesting bondholders as presented in the motion for a new trial made on behalf of the Kern Valley Bank. The most vital of these issues relates to the amount of the actual indebtedness and of the valid outstanding bonds of the Sunset Road Oil Company, and as a necessary incident to this issue the question of what is a reasonable sum to be allowed as counsel fees in the action brought for the foreclosure of the mortgage or deed of trust securing said indebtedness and such bonds. Both of these questions have, therefore, been reopened for examination and decision upon a retrial of the case.

BRANDT v. BRANDT. (L. A. 4464.)

1. PLEADING ⊜204(3)—DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT IN TWO COUNTS.

A demurrer interposed to a complaint in two counts, based upon grounds of want of sufficient facts and lack of jurisdiction, should not have been sustained if either count be good; such demurrer having been directed to complaint as a whole, not to causes of action severally.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊜296—SUPPORT—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

A count in a complaint held sufficient to entitle wife to maintain an action for support and maintenance without divorce, under Civ. Code, § 137.

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊜283(1)—ACTION FOR MAINTENANCE—PLEADING.

Where wife sues for maintenance for herself and daughter, the fact that the daughter appeared to have been of age when complaint was filed cannot affect the right of the wife to obtain support for herself.

4. DIVORCE ⊜27(9) — CRUELTY — ACCUSATION OF ADULTERY.

Under Civ. Code, § 94, defining extreme cruelty, an unfounded and unjustified accusation of adultery in wife's pleadings must inflict grievous mental suffering to constitute extreme cruelty.

5. DIVORCE ⊜27(9) — CRUELTY — ACCUSATION OF ADULTERY—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether wife's charges of adultery were unjustified or whether they inflicted grievous or any suffering upon the husband are matters of fact to be determined in a proceeding in which these issues are raised.

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊜296—ACTION FOR MAINTENANCE—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATION TO SHOW DESERTION JUSTIFIED.

An allegation in a wife's complaint support that plaintiff brought divorce action on ground of adultery, but failed to establish the truth of the charge to the court's satisfaction, is insufficient to show that plaintiff was guilty of cruelty justifying defendant in leaving her.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Clara Brandt against Ferdinand M. Brandt. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ralph Woods Pontious and D. M. McDonald, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. W. H. Dehm, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The court below sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint, without leave to amend, and entered judgment in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The complaint in question is in two counts. The first alleges that the parties intermarried on the 27th day of July, 1895, and ever since have been husband and wife. On the 20th day of March, 1901, the defendant without any cause left and abandoned the plaintiff against her will and consent and has ever since refused to return to her and live with her. Since June, 1903, the defendant has not contributed in any way to the support or maintenance of the plaintiff or of their child, a daughter, born in May, 1896. Said daughter has at all times resided with and been supported by, the plaintiff. Plaintiff has no means of support, nor has her daughter any such means, other than the earnings of the plaintiff. The defendant owns considerable property, and earns from $150 to $200 per month. It is also alleged that $75 per month are necessary for the support and maintenance of the plaintiff and the said child.

[1-3] Before passing to the second count it is to be noted that the demurrer, which is based upon the grounds of want of sufficient facts and lack of jurisdiction in the court, is directed to the complaint as a whole, not to the causes of action severally. If either count be good, the demurrer should not therefore have been sustained. Whiting v. Heslep, 4 Cal. 327; Hand v. Scodeletti, 128 Cal. 674, 61 Pac. 373. The respondent suggests no reason why the first count should be held subject to the grounds of demurrer specified, and we see none. This count sets forth the facts necessary to entitle a wife to maintain an action for support and maintenance without divorce. Civ. Code, § 137. The circumstance that the child appears to have been of age when the complaint was filed cannot affect the right of the wife to obtain support for herself.

These considerations suffice to indicate the necessity for a reversal of the judgment. As a guide to further proceedings, it may be well to add a few words regarding the second cause of action. In that part of her pleading, the plaintiff repeats, in substance, everything contained in the first count, and, in addition, seeks to be relieved from the effect of a decree of divorce obtained against her by the defendant in the circuit court of Cook county, Ill. By her allegations the plaintiff attacks this judgment upon the ground of fraud, it being alleged, in effect, that she had no personal knowledge of the pendency of said action, in which there had been only a constructive service of summons. The fraud relied upon consisted in the defendant's sworn declaration to the Illinois court that the plaintiff herein, his wife, was a resident of the state of New York, she then being, as he well knew, a resident of New Jersey. In consequence of this false statement, process was sent to her by mail to New York, instead of to her true address in New Jersey. The sufficiency of these allegations to make out a case for relief against a judgment on the ground of fraud is not disputed by the respondent. His sole claim is that by reason of further allegations in the second count it appears affirmatively that the plaintiff herself, rather than the defendant, was guilty of desertion. This contention is based upon an averment in the pleading that in 1901, some years prior to the divorce proceedings in Illinois, the plaintiff had brought an action against defendant in a New Jersey court, "alleging adultery and asking for separate maintenance." Said cause was tried, and a final decree was entered by the chancellor of the state of New Jersey, "wherein the court found that the petitioner, Clara Brandt, was not entitled to the relief sought and prayed for in the petition on the proof introduced."

[4-6] The argument is that the making of unfounded charges of adultery by either spouse against the other constitutes extreme cruelty justifying the accused in leaving the accuser, and that therefore the husband was not guilty of desertion. But it is not the law that an accusation of adultery, even though it be not proven, necessarily constitutes extreme cruelty. The most that can be said is that the accusation, if unfounded and unjustified, may amount to such cruelty. To have this effect the conduct complained of must meet the requirements of our statutory definition of extreme cruelty, viz., "the wrongful infliction of grievous bodily injury, or grievous mental suffering." Civ. Code § 94; 9 R. C. L. 345. Whether the charges made by the wife were unjustified, or whether they inflicted grievous or any suffering upon the husband, are matters of fact to be determined in a proceeding in which these issues are raised. MacDonald v. MacDonald, 155 Cal. 665, 102 Pac. 927, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 45. The complaint before us merely alleges that the wife did not succeed in establishing the truth of her charge to the satisfaction of the New Jersey court. This falls far short of an affirmative showing that she was guilty of cruelty justifying him in leaving her. We think, therefore, that the second count, equally with the first was good as against the demurrer interposed.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

BINFORD v. BOYD et al. (L. A. 5559.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 29, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇐81 — POLICE POWER IN GENERAL.

The exercise of police power is available only for purpose of promoting general welfare of public, and cannot be used for private gain or advantage except so far as such use may also promote public interest and welfare.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇐89(1)—LIBERTY OF CONTRACT—POLICE POWER.

Right of contract is subject to such reasonable police power as Legislature may enact to promote public good.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇐89(1)—LIBERTY TO CONTRACT—POLICE POWER—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

A statute invoking police power in restraint of freedom of contract will be construed to effect only such change in the right of contract as is necessarily implied from language of the statute and which is reasonably calculated to secure the legitimate objects for which the police power is exercised.

4. LICENSES ⇐11(4) — ARCHITECTS — CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—CORPORATIONS.

St. 1901, p. 641, § 5, making it a misdemeanor to practice architecture without a certificate, applies to persons only, and not to corporations, and does not preclude a corporation from doing an architectural business and engaging in the selling of plans and specifications where plans so sold are prepared by certificated architects.

5. LICENSES ⟸11(4) — ARCHITECTS — CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

St. 1901, p. 641, § 5, making it a misdemeanor to practice architecture without a certificate and providing that a person who is not a certificated architect may furnish people with plans and building data provided he informs them that he is not a certificated architect, does not preclude sale of plans by a person to whom such plans have been sold by the certificated architect preparing them.

6. LICENSES ⟸11(4) — ARCHITECTS — STATUTES.

St. 1901, p. 641, § 5, making it a misdemeanor to practice architecture without a certificate but providing that a person who is not a certificated architect may furnish other persons with plans provided such persons are told that he, having drawn the plans, is not a certificated architect, permits a person to freely contract to furnish other persons with plans provided he inform them that he is not a certificated architect.

7. ASSIGNMENTS ⟸73—ACTIONS BY ASSIGNOR—DESCRIPTION OF DEBT.

An assignment of a claim for plans furnished "between July, 1912, and September, 1912," held to give assignee a good right of action on a debt arising by sale of plans between May, 1913, and September, 1913; the description in the assignment being sufficient where assignor had furnished but one set of plans to debtor.

8. CORPORATIONS ⟸619 — DISSOLUTION — ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIM BY DIRECTORS AS TRUSTEES.

An assignment of a claim of a dissolved corporation executed by its directors as trustees is sufficient to give assignee right of action thereon.

9. PLEADING ⟸406(9) — DEFECTS — WAIVER.

In action by assignee of a claim of a dissolved corporation where assignment was executed by directors as trustees, an objection to petition because of failure to plead manner in which persons making assignment on behalf of corporation became trustees is waived, where proclamation of forfeiture of charter and assignment are received in evidence without objection; the assignment showing persons executing same to be directors, and the statute making directors the trustees to wind up affairs of dissolved corporation.

10. JUDGMENT ⟸143(17) — VACATION — ABSENCE OF PARTY.

Failure of defendant to personally appear at the trial was not due to excusable neglect justifying vacation of judgment, where the reason for failure to appear was that plaintiff's attorney told defendant's attorney about two months before the trial that he intended to amend his complaint.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Joseph R. Binford against Lucile Boyd and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying motion to set aside judgment, named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred H. McAdoo, of Los Angeles (A. C. Lawson, at the trial), for appellant. Earl Curtis Peck, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant has appealed from the judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying her motion to set aside said judgment on the ground that it was taken against her by surprise, inadvertence, and excusable neglect.

The action is maintained by Binford, as assignee of the Dutro-Wren Construction Company, a corporation. The object of the action was to recover $775 claimed to have been owing to the plaintiff's assignor for the preparation of certain plans and specifications for the construction of a building to be erected for the defendant and certain other parties who were made defendants, but who have not appealed. The answer denies the assignment of the claim to the plaintiff. It also denies that the defendants are, or were, indebted to the plaintiff's assignor, and denies that they ever requested said assignor to furnish any plans and specifications for them, or that they agreed to pay the value thereof to said assignor, and pleads the bar of the statute of limitations as prescribed in section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It appears from the evidence that the Dutro-Wren Construction Company offered to make plans and specifications for the building to be erected by the defendants; that in accordance with such offer it prepared such plans and specifications; that the same were accepted by Lucile Boyd on behalf of herself and the other parties interested; and that, owing to their inability to obtain sufficient money wherewith to erect the building, they did not go on with the enterprise, and did not use the plans and specifications.

The main defense is based on the proposition that the contract was unlawful because it violates provisions of the act of 1901 entitled "An act to regulate the practice of architecture." Stats. 1901, p. 641. The act establishes a state board of architecture, and empowers said board to examine persons who desire to follow the profession of an architect, and to issue to them licenses for that purpose. Section 5 makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine, "for any person to practice architecture without a certificate in this state," and further provides:

"That nothing in this act shall prevent any person from * * * furnishing plans or other data for buildings for other persons, provided the person so furnishing such plans or data shall fully inform the person for whom such plans or data are furnished, that he, the person furnishing such plans, is not a certificated architect."

The evidence shows that the officers of the Dutro-Wren Construction Company who made the contract with Lucile Boyd for the plans in question, did not inform her that said company or the persons whom they had employed to prepare such plans and specifications were not certificated architects; that they said nothing at all to her on that subject. The company did in fact employ one Teepel, a duly certificated architect, to prepare said plans and specifications for the said building. He prepared for said company the plans and specifications which the defendant accepted. The claim of respondent is that the statute of 1901 does not apply to the facts of this case.

[1-3] The exercise of the police power is available only for the purpose of promoting the general welfare, the interests of the public as distinguished from those of individuals or persons. It cannot be used to promote private gain or advantage, except so far as the same may also promote the public interest and welfare, and it is the latter, and not the former, effect which forms the basis of the power and warrants its exercise. The Constitution declares that all men are by nature free and independent and have certain inalienable rights among which are those of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness. Article 1, § 1. These rights are invaded if the individual "is not at liberty to contract with others respecting the use to which he may subject his property, or the manner in which he may enjoy it. The Legislature may prescribe the form in which contracts shall be executed in order that they may be valid or binding, but it cannot limit the right of parties to incorporate into their contracts respecting property, otherwise valid, such terms as may be mutually satisfactory to them. * * * The right of the owner of land to contract with a builder for its improvement and to compensate him therefor * * * is the same, and as inalienable, as the right of the owner of any other property to contract respecting the payment for any improvement thereof." Stinson Mill Co. v. Braun, 136 Cal. 125, 68 Pac. 481, 57 L. R. A. 726, 89 Am. St. Rep. 116. This right of contract, however, is subject to such reasonable police regulations as the Legislature may enact tending to promote the public good. In determining the effect of a statute having such object, and which purports to change or limit the right of contract for that purpose, the rule is that the changes which it effects in such right are those only which it expressly declares or which are necessarily implied from the language used. The invasions it makes on constitutional rights are not to be carried farther than is necessary to protect the public from the evils intended to be removed, unless the language compels such meaning and such effect is reasonably calculated to secure the legitimate objects for which the power is exercised. Prior to this statute there was no restriction upon the right of any person to contract for or to furnish plans and specifications for another, or to follow the profession of architecture. All persons were at liberty to form corporations for any lawful purpose, and such corporations, when formed, had full capacity and power to make all contracts necessary or convenient for the carrying out of their lawful powers. The statute cannot be upheld as a police measure on the ground that it tended to promote the prosperity of those following the profession of architecture by giving such persons, who could obtain a license, an advantage over others.

[4-6] It can only be upheld upon the theory that the Legislature believed that it was injurious to the public interest to allow unskilled and unqualified persons to prepare plans and specifications for the erection of buildings, owing to the dangers which might arise from defects in plans or construction. The terms of the act show clearly that it was directed only to individuals as distinguished from corporations. It requires an examination of the person who applies for license, and its language shows that a license can be given only to human beings and not to artificial creations such as corporations. As a corporation could not obtain a license to engage in the profession of architecture, and as it must act wholly by human agency, it could engage in that art or business only by employing individuals who would carry on that business as its officers, agents, or employés. The act is effective upon corporations only to this extent that, if it undertakes to do business of that character, either the persons whom it engages therein must be certificated architects under this statute, or, when contracting for plans and specifications for the erection of buildings for other persons, such persons must be informed that the plans and specifications will be prepared by some one who is not a certificated architect. The act does not prohibit a corporation from contracting to furnish to another person plans and specifications which are to be prepared by a third person who is a certificated architect. Nor is there anything in the object of the act, or the evils to be removed thereby, which would raise the necessary implication that it was intended to prevent such practice. The main object of the act, so far as furnishing plans and specifications alone is involved, was to secure the erection of buildings from plans prepared by those who were sufficiently schooled in the profession to secure a license from the state board and who had complied with the state law by securing such license. But it was deemed best to qualify the absolute prohibition of the law by allowing the owners of property and persons who were not certificated architects, to contract freely with each other for furnishing such plans and specifications, provided the person furnishing the same informed the owner that he was not a certificated architect. It is obvious that, if such plans and specifications have been prepared by certificated architects, there could be no object in which the public are concerned which should prevent the sale thereof by the person who prepared them, or by some one to whom he has sold them. The act as a whole shows that it was not intended to prevent the sale of plans prepared by a qualified person, but to prevent their preparation by an unqualified person, unless the purchaser was informed of that fact. The act does not forbid a corporation to employ certificated architects, have them prepare plans and specifications, and then furnish such plans and specifications to other persons. Either a corporation or an individual could do this without transgressing the terms of the act when interpreted in the light of its object and purpose. The corporation was therefore acting lawfully in the matter.

We are therefore of the opinion that the objections to the validity of this contract are not well taken, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the plans and specifications so furnished.

[7, 8] It is claimed that the evidence does not show an assignment to the plaintiff of the claim of the Dutro-Wren contract sued on. The assignment was offered in evidence and describes the assignment as the claim of said corporation, naming it, against the defendants, naming them, "arising out of certain plans and specifications furnished to them by the said Dutro-Wren Construction Company between July, 1912, and September, 1912." The defect in the proof, as claimed, arises from the fact that the plans and specifications were not furnished in 1912, but were furnished in 1913, some time between May and September, and it is argued that the assignment must therefore cover some other claim and not that which constitutes the cause of action sued on. There is no pretense that the said company ever furnished any other plans and specifications to the defendants. From this fact it is plain that the description in the assignment could only be interpreted to refer to those which were furnished, and the description would be sufficient, but for the dates given, which are erroneous. The dates should therefore be deemed a false call in the description. The other parts of the description sufficiently identify the demand. It further appears that the corporation had ceased to exist at the time the assignment was made by reason of the fact that it had failed to pay the corporation tax and that its corporate franchise had therefore been forfeited, but that its affairs were carried on by its directors as trustees under the statute providing for the forfeiture, and that this assignment was made by such directors as trustees. This was sufficient to carry to the assignee all the property of the said corporation in the said demand.

It is further contended that the action is barred by the two-year statute of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 339. The action was begun on August 20, 1915. The finding of the court is that the defendant Lucile Boyd became indebted to said corporation for the plans and specifications in question, on September 30, 1913. This was within the two years prescribed by the statute of limitations. There is no specification that this finding is not sustained by the evidence. Hence the claim that the evidence shows that the action is barred cannot be considered.

[9] The further claim is made that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; the particular defect assigned being that, although the complaint alleges that the corporation had forfeited its charter prior to the making of the assignment to the plaintiff, and that the third persons who made the assignment on behalf of the corporation were at that time trustees of the property of the corporation, and that as such trustees they made the assignment of the demand, there is no allegation respecting the manner in which they became or were the trustees. The defendants demurred to the complaint upon general grounds, but did not specify any ambiguity or uncertainty in this respect. The answer denied that said persons were the trustees of the corporation. At the trial evidence of the Governor's proclamation, declaring the forfeiture of the company's charter, was received without objection, and the assignment introduced in evidence declares that the persons named were the directors of such corporation. The statute makes such directors the trustees for the purpose of closing its affairs. The court finds that the said persons were such trustees. Under these circumstances, we think that the defect in the complaint, if any there be, was waived, and the defendants cannot now take advantage thereof.

[10] There was no error in refusing to vacate the judgment on the ground that it was taken through surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect of the defendant. The defendants filed their answer in the case and were represented by their attorney at the time of the trial. The failure of the defendant Lucile Boyd to be personally present was due to her neglect, it is true; but the neglect was not excusable. The main point in support of this claim is that some two months before the trial the plaintiff's attorney stated to the defendants' attorney that he intended to amend his complaint, and that for some unexplained reason the defendants' attorney, because of this statement, did not expect the trial to take place at the time set and did no prepare therefor. The excuse is wholly insufficient to justify any neglect to prepare for the trial.

These comprise all the points made in support of the appeal. We find no error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEZZONI v. GREENWELL et al.

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸525—ASSIGNMENTS—CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to warrant finding that a note was assigned without any valuable consideration.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸358—ASSIGNMENTS AS SECURITY—EFFECT.

An assignment of negotiable instruments before maturity as collateral security for a preexisting debt is an indorsement for valuable consideration, sufficient to protect the purchaser under the law merchant against defenses of which he has no notice at the time of the indorsement.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸358—ASSIGNMENTS AS SECURITY—EFFECT.

Where the purchaser of an automobile on installments, with title retained pending payment in full, secured another's note by fraud, and on default in payment of one installment the sellers accepted the note as security for the debt already due, having no notice of any defense against the note, were entitled to judgment against the maker thereof for at least the amount of the one installment.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. R. Parker, Judge.

Suit by Emma Pezzoni against Henry Greenwell and others, wherein defendants Smith filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and cross-complainants appeal. Reversed.

Leo V. Youngworth, of Los Angeles, for appellants. John L. Fleming and Robert J. Gardner, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendants C. F. Smith and S. W. Smith appeal from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff. They are partners doing business under the firm name of Smith Bros.

The plaintiff sued the defendants to obtain a decree canceling a certain promissory note signed by her, dated August 18, 1914, for $625, due 60 days after date, payable to the order of Henry Greenwell, and by him indorsed to the defendants C. F. Smith and S. W. Smith. The basis of her action was that her signature to the note was obtained without consideration and by the device of leading her to believe that she was signing a different instrument, and not a promise to pay money. The appellants filed a cross-complaint, alleging the execution of the note, its indorsement to them in due course of business and for a valuable consideration before maturity, and asking judgment for the amount thereof. The plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, denying that the indorsement of the note by Greenwell to the appellants was in due course of business or for a valuable consideration.

On the subject of the indorsement the court found:

"That the said note was not received by the said defendants Smith Bros. in due course of business and for a valuable consideration, in that the court finds that the said defendants and cross-complainants, Smith Bros., did not, at the time of receiving the said note or otherwise, part with anything of value on account thereof, and that they gave no credit on account thereof, nor did they otherwise change their legal status in any particular by reason thereof."

The appellants claim that this finding is contrary to the law and the evidence. The evidence on this subject consists of the testimony of S. W. Smith and Henry Greenwell. It appears that about the time of the execution of this note Smith Bros. and the defendant Greenwell executed an agreement whereby Greenwell promised to pay Smith Bros. the sum of $1,250 in installments of $100, payable on the 18th of each month thereafter, and Smith Bros. agreed that they would immediately give to Greenwell the possession and use of a certain automobile, and that if each of the said payments was promptly made when due, until the whole was paid, they would then sell to Greenwell the said automobile, but that title thereto should remain in Smith Bros. until after they should make the sale referred to, upon payment of the principal and interest of the sum to be paid by Greenwell. The next payment upon this contract became due on September 18, 1914. S. W. Smith testified that in September, immediately after this payment became due, he demanded of Greenwell the possession of the automobile, or some additional security for the payment of the sum agreed to be paid by the contract; that Greenwell desired to keep the car, and offered to indorse this note to Smith Bros. as collateral security for moneys owing on the contract; that Smith accepted this offer, and Greenwell thereupon indorsed said note to Smith Bros. Greenwell, on the other hand, testified that he was unable to make the $100 payment of September 18th; that Smith demanded payment thereof; that he told Smith that he was unable to pay it then, and that he would rather Smith would take back the car, and offered to let him do so; that Smith refused the car, and thereupon Greenwell offered him this note as collateral for the monthly payment of $100 then due; and that Smith agreed to this and accepted the note for that purpose, whereupon he indorsed it as above stated and delivered it to Smith. The evidence shows that the $100 was never paid. The automobile was wrecked within a few days after the transfer of the note, and it was taken by Smith Bros. some five or six months thereafter, and sold for the sum of $300, which was credited on the money due under the contract of lease for the automobile. Smith testified further that he gave credit on that contract for the whole amount of the note, namely, $625, and that this $300 was credited as an additional payment on the contract. There was no other testimony on the subject of these credits.

[1, 2] The court was warranted upon the evidence of Greenwell in finding that the note was indorsed to Smith Bros. as collateral security for the payment of the installment of $100 and for no other claim, but it was not warranted in finding that it was assigned without any valuable consideration. Under the rule established in this state, an assignment of a negotiable instrument before maturity as collateral security for a pre-existing debt constitutes an indorsement for a valuable consideration sufficient to protect the purchaser thereof under the law merchant against defenses to the note of which he has no notice at the time of the indorsement. Sackett v. Johnson, 54 Cal. 109; Russ, etc., Co. v. Muscupiabe, etc., Co., 120 Cal. 532, 52 Pac. 995, 65 Am. St. Rep. 186; Robinson v. Smith, 14 Cal. 94; Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 450; Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 260, 68 Am. Dec. 318.

[3] The note signed by the plaintiff, payable to Geenwell, was negotiable in form, and the evidence shows without conflict that Smith Bros. had no notice of any fraud in procuring the signature, or any other defense to the validity of the note. Even if the court gave full credit to the statements of Greenwell regarding the consideration for the indorsement, the appellants would be entitled to recover at least the sum of $100, with interest, costs, and attorney's fees on their cross-complaint. The finding is therefore contrary to the evidence, and the judgment should have been in favor of the cross-complainants for the amount we have stated, if no more.

HANTON v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.

1. CARRIERS ⟸320(1)—JURY QUESTION—INJURIES TO PASSENGER.
In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while attempting to board defendant's street car, it was for the jury to judge the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of their testimony.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1002 — REVIEW — QUESTIONS OF FACT.
The court on appeal will not review verdict based on conflicting evidence.

3. WITNESSES ⟸379(3) — IMPEACHMENT — INCONSISTENT STATEMENT — EXPRESSION OF OPINION.
In an action for personal injuries sustained by a passenger while attempting to board defendant's street car, where a witness had testified that the car started 15 seconds after plaintiff had disappeared from her sight behind the car, a written statement, made by the witness immediately after the accident, that she was sure the car was moving before plaintiff could have gotten to it, was inadmissible as an expression of opinion.

4. WITNESSES ⟸386 — IMPEACHMENT — CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS.
To render a statement of a witness admissible in contradiction, it is not necessary that there should be contrariety in terms, but only that the statement should have a tendency to contradict or disprove the testimony, or any inference to be deduced from it.

5. WITNESSES ⟸379(4) — IMPEACHMENT — INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.
In an action for personal injuries sustained by a passenger while attempting to board a street car, where a witness had testified that the car started 15 seconds after plaintiff disappeared from her view behind it, a written statement, made by her immediately after the accident, that she was sure the car was moving before plaintiff could have gotten to it, was admissible in contradiction.

6. TRIAL ⟸62(1)—EVIDENCE—REBUTTAL.
In action for injuries to street car passenger, evidence that a witness had been called on a former trial for defendant was properly excluded, where permission to introduce it in rebuttal was not asked until after all the testimony was in; it not being in rebuttal to anything.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1047(4)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.
In an action for injuries to street car passenger refusal to allow evidence in rebuttal that a certain witness had been called by defendant on a prior trial, if error, held harmless.

8. TRIAL ⟸237(5) — INSTRUCTIONS — "PREPONDERANCE OF PROOF."
Instruction that the jury was to bear in mind the number of witnesses in determining the preponderance of proof, and that by preponderance was not necessarily meant the greater number of witnesses, was not erroneous as instructing the jury to determine disputed facts by a consideration of the greater number of witnesses.
[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Preponderance.]

9. TRIAL ⟸251(8) — INSTRUCTIONS — PLEADING.
In an action for injuries to street car passenger, an instruction that if plaintiff attempted to board a moving car and was injured he was guilty of contributory negligence was not erroneous for failing to insert the word "negligently" before the word "attempted," plaintiff not alleging that with due care he attempted to board a moving car.

10. TRIAL ⟸191(9)—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMPTION AS TO FACTS.
In an action for injuries to street car passenger, an instruction that if plaintiff attempted to board a moving car he was guilty of contributory negligence was erroneous as importing some degree of negligence on defendant's part.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1064(2)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.
In an action for injuries to street car passenger, an instruction that, if he attempted to board a moving car he was guilty of contributory negligence, held harmless error, though negligence was thereby imputed to defendant.

12. NEW TRIAL ⟸105 — GROUNDS — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.
Newly discovered evidence, offered solely to impeach a witness, is not ground for new trial.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by N. P. Hanton against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, and a denial of a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action for personal injuries. The case was twice tried before a jury; the first trial resulting in a mistrial, the second, in a verdict and judgment in favor of the defendant; and plaintiff appeals from both this judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial. The accident in which plaintiff was permanently injured by being run over by one of the cars of the defendant which he was endeavoring to board occurred in the city of Venice, Los Angeles county.

The grounds urged for a reversal are that the evidence was insufficient to justify a verdict for defendant, that the court erred in its rulings on the admissibility of evidence and respecting certain instructions, and further erred in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

Upon the first point of alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, it appears that plaintiff desired to take a car from Venice to Los Angeles, and started towards a train of the defendant, which had just come in and was about to return. It was at rest when plaintiff, who walked with a defective leg, rapidly approached it. He testified that the train was at rest when he reached it, and he had partially ascended the lower step of one of the cars, having one foot on it, and was about to pull the other foot up, when the train started suddenly, throwing him off and under the train, which passed over his foot, permanently injuring it. On the part of defendant it was insisted that the injury to plaintiff was occasioned through an attempt on his part to board the train while it was in motion. The jury evidently accepted this defense as sustained by the evidence, and returned a verdict in favor of defendant. It is unnecessary to spend much time on the point of the appellant that the evidence did not justify this conclusion of the jury. There was the testimony of the plaintiff and of another party, a disinterested witness, who corroborated him, that the plaintiff was trying to get on the car while it was at rest in the manner as stated above, and that while so attempting to board it, the train was started up, throwing plaintiff under it and injuring him. On the part of defendant a disinterested witness testified that as the plaintiff approached close to the car steps, proceeding hurriedly and as rapidly as his lamed condition would permit, the car started and was in movement when the plaintiff reached it, and that while it was in motion plaintiff endeavored to board it and was thrown under it and injured. These were the only eyewitnesses to the accident, but there were minor facts and circumstances produced on either side which supported the claim of one party or the other. It is quite apparent that this testimony raised a substantial conflict of fact which it was exclusively the province of the jury to determine.

[1, 2] It was for them to judge the credibility of the witnesses and the weight and effect to be given to the testimony on one side and the other, and in this condition of substantially conflicting evidence, the jury having determined that the truth of the matter was in favor of the defendant, this court is precluded from reinvestigating the subject.

[3-7] It is claimed that the court erred in a ruling on the admission of testimony. One Mrs. C. A. Brown was called by plaintiff. She testified that she was standing near the rear end of the train of cars and on the opposite side of it when the plaintiff approached; that at the time the cars moved up or started she could not see the plaintiff; that she saw him going towards the car till the "view of the car shut him off, and I could not see him any more after he got there behind the car"; that from the time the plaintiff went out of her sight, in her judgment, "the car started up in something like fifteen seconds"; that while in her view plaintiff was going just like a person who is crippled; he was walking a good gait, quite fast. On cross-examination counsel for defendant produced a written statement which the witness had signed immediately after the accident containing the following:

"The car had started, and I am sure it was moving before he could have gotten to it"

—which latter portion of the statement the court, over the objection of plaintiff, admitted, and its admission is assigned as error on the ground that it was no contradiction of anything the witness had testified to on direct examination, and, being solely an expression of opinion of the witness, was inadmissible on any theory. Certainly, the statement objected to, under the circumstances, was but an expression of opinion, and as a general rule witnesses must testify to facts and not to opinions or inferences. But even opinions expressed by a witness may sometimes be given in evidence if their tendency be to impeach the testimony of the witness given on the stand. It is not necessary that there should be contrariety in terms between the testimony given and the asserted impeaching statement. It is only necessary in order to render it admissible that the statement should have a tendency to contradict or disprove the testimony or any inference to be deduced from it. The obvious purpose of counsel for plaintiff in producing the testimony of the witness to the effect that 15 seconds after she had seen the plaintiff within 30 or 35 feet of the steps and moving rapidly towards them the train started was to have the jury draw the inference that the plaintiff had time enough, at the rapid gait he was moving, to go that distance and proceed to board the train before it started. This is the only conceivable purpose for which it could have been offered. Now, it was perfectly proper that defendant should be permitted to show a statement made by the witness that she was sure plaintiff did not have time to reach the steps and get on the car before it started. It was in direct opposition and contradiction to the inference which counsel for plaintiff desired drawn by the jury from the testimony offered by him, and was therefore admissible. In this connection appellant claims that it was error to have denied him permission to show that this same witness was on the first trial called as a witness for defendant. This permission was not asked until after all the testimony in the case was in, and its admission was asked as rebuttal. It was not rebuttal to anything, and was properly denied for that reason. It may be observed, too, that if it were error it was harmless. Such testimony would neither add to nor detract from anything which the witness testified to in the case.

[8] Complaint is made of some instructions given by the court. The first complaint is of one relative to the preponderance of the evidence. After instructing the jury that the direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact in the case, the court proceeded to state by instruction No. 6 that:

"While one witness is sufficient to establish a fact in a civil case, as I have said to you, you are nevertheless to bear in mind the number of witnesses testifying for or against any issue of fact in determining where the preponderance of proof lies."

The court also in this connection gave the following instruction:

"By a preponderance of the evidence is not necessarily meant a greater number of witnesses, and if the plaintiff has proven his case by such evidence as constitutes and produces conviction in the mind of the jury, then he has proven his case by a preponderance of the evidence."

The complaint of the appellant as to instruction No. 6 is that it practically instructed the jury that they should determine disputed propositions of facts in the case by a consideration of the greater number of witnesses on one side than on the other. But there is no warrant in the language of the instruction for any such construction. Taking the two instructions together, they inform the jury that a preponderance of the evidence in establishing any contested fact does not necessarily mean a greater number of witnesses on one side than on the other, but that, as an element in determining the matter of preponderating evidence, they might take into consideration the number of witnesses testifying on one side or the other. We preceive nothing improper in this instruction. All the cases cited by appellant, taking Wastl v. M. U. Ry. Co., 17 Mont. 215, 42 Pac. 772, Bierbach v. Goodyear Rubber Co., 54 Wis. 213, 11 N. W. 514, 41 Am. Rep. 19, and Christman v. Ray, 42 Ill. App. 111, as a sample, condemn instructions which told the jury that greater weight was to be given to the greater number of witnesses on one side or another in a contested question of fact. The instruction here is not open to any such criticism. In fact, the only criticism it is subject to is that it is idle for a court to give a jury such an instruction. It is a mere commonplace and common sense proposition. In everyday life disputed facts are determined by taking into consideration various elements which go to determining the weight to be given statements of parties on one side or on the other of a controversy—their opportunities for observation, mental capacity, standing, credibility, and numbers—and to instruct a jury that they may take into consideration the numerical element with the other elements in determining the weight of testimony on one side or another of a controversy is simply telling them they may do as jurors what they properly and logically would do as men without the instruction.

[9] The court further instructed the jury that:

"If plaintiff attempted to board a moving car and was injured as a direct or proximate consequence thereof, then he was guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover herein."

It is contended that the instruction is erroneous because the court failed to insert before the word "attempted" the word "negligently," the reasoning of appellant being that the attempt to board a moving car is not as matter of law contributory negligence per se; that an ordinarily prudent person might attempt to board a slowly moving train, and it would be for the jury to determine from all the circumstances whether it was contributory negligence or not. Finkeldey v. Omnibus Cable Co., 114 Cal. 28, 45 Pac. 996. We have no fault to find with the contention of appellant as a proposition of law, but the instruction as appellant claims it should have been given was not warranted either under his complaint or the case as made. Instructions are properly addressed to the theory of the case as pleaded and made. Plaintiff did not allege in his complaint that with due care and caution he attempted to board a moving train and for some alleged reason was injured through the negligence of defendant. Plaintiff specifically alleged as his cause of action that he attempted, as a passenger, to board a standing car of defendant, and that when he had partially done so the car was negligently started forward, and he thrown from it and injured. The defense of the defendant was that plaintiff attempted to board a moving car and fell while making the attempt. The entire evidence in the case was addressed to this issue, and the instruction complained of was properly addressed to this issue. Plaintiff, having alleged that the car was standing still and that defendant negligently started it up while he was boarding it, would not have been permitted to prove that in fact the car was moving when he attempted to board it, because to do this would be to permit him to sue on one theory and recover on another. Necessarily, if the car was moving when he tried to board it, this disproved the allegation of the complaint that it was standing still, and swept away the only alleged negligence upon which the cause of action of plaintiff was predicated. Neither the pleading nor the evidence warranted instructing the jury as plaintiff contends it should have been, but on the contrary, the instruction that was given was entirely proper under both. Chicago City R. R. v. Gates, 135 Ill. App. 180; Peterson v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 211 Mo. 498, 111 S. W. 37; Patterson v. Westchester Electric Ry. Co., 26 App. Div. 366, 49 N. Y. Supp. 796; Haralson v. San Antonio Traction Co., 53 Tex. Civ. App. 253, 115 S. W. 876.

[10, 11] In this connection it may be said, although the error was harmless, that the court should not have instructed the jury in the instruction complained of that if they found that plaintiff had attempted to board a moving train, "then he was guilty of contributory negligence." The court should have instructed the jury that if they so found, then it was negligence on the part of plaintiff, and that he could not recover. But to say that plaintiff by such an act was guilty of contributory negligence necessarily imported that the defendant was in some way also negligent. This, of course, was not true, because the defendant had a legal right to have its cars moving when plaintiff tried to get on, and so could not be negligent.

[12] As to the motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the asserted newly discovered evidence was all to be offered to impeach one of the witnesses for defendant. A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is not granted where the only value of the newly discovered testimony is as impeaching evidence. Chalmers v. Sheehy, 132 Cal. 459, 64 Pac. 709, 84 Am. St. Rep. 62.

It is not proper procedure for the appellant, having failed in his opening brief to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, as to printing the evidence and the record, to discuss the evidence in the reply brief.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟹109—"EXECUTED CONTRACT"—DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

Where the purchaser, having paid part consideration, went into possession, title being reserved until full payment, and the building was destroyed by fire, he could rescind and recover the money paid, the contract not being executed, since an "executed contract," under Civ. Code, § 1661, is one the object of which is fully performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Executed Contract.]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟹109—EXECUTED CONTRACT.

Where defendant by oral contract purchased land and a building on installments and went into possession, the contract, though taken out of the statute of frauds by the delivery of possession, was nevertheless not executed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by Wong Ah Sure against Ty Fook. Judgment for plaintiff in part and for defendant in part, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Fulweiler, of Auburn, for appellant. Meredith, Landis & Chester, of Sacramento, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to quiet title to certain land, being a portion of section 19, township 12 north, range 8 east, near the town of Newcastle, and for other relief. Defendant filed an answer and cross-complaint; denied that plaintiff was at the commencement of the action or is now the owner of the land, "except as hereinafter set forth"; denied that defendant claims an interest in the whole of said premises, but avers that he claims an interest in a certain portion hereof (describing it); denied that defendant's claim is without right. By way of cross-complaint, alleged: That about the ——— day of March, 1914, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement whereby "defendant agreed to buy and plaintiff agreed to sell the following described land and premises [description]," the consideration being $950, payable $400 May 20, 1914, and the balance within six months from said last-mentioned date; that defendant went into possession, and has ever since been and now is in possession; that about June 22, 1914, a store building situated on said premises was partially destroyed by fire; that immediately thereafter it was agreed by plaintiff and defendant that defendant should cause said store building to be repaired "at the sole expense and cost of plaintiff and the amount of the said cost to be charged against and deducted from said purchase price of said land"; that defendant has paid to plaintiff the entire consideration, to wit, May 20, 1914, paid cash $400; July 17, 1914, paid out for cost of repairing said store building $505; sold and delivered to plaintiff merchandise of the reasonable value of $40, and paid plaintiff the sum of $50 in cash, making in all $995; that defendant has demanded of plaintiff "that he execute and deliver to defendant the said deed, conveying said land and premises to defendant in accordance with said agreement," but plaintiff has refused, and still refuses, to comply with said demand. The prayer is that plaintiff take no relief; that plaintiff be required to specifically perform said contract; that it be decreed that plaintiff has no estate or interest in said premises; and that he be debarred from asserting any claim in or to said land.

Plaintiff, answering the cross-complaint denied that plaintiff agreed to sell to defendant the strip of land described in said cross-complaint, except a strip described as follows (description) on which "there was a building and porch of the dimensions heretofore stated of 19x70"; that said agreement "was not in writing, but oral and the price to be paid was $950, payable $400 cash and the balance within a reasonable time thereafter, and not to exceed one year, and at said final payment a deed was to be made to defendant." Plaintiff admits that he surrendered possession to defendant, and that, while defendant was in possession "the upper or wooden portion of said building was destroyed by fire, but for which plaintiff was in no respect responsible or liable"; denied that it was agreed that said building should be repaired at plaintiff's cost; admitted the payment of $400 cash, but alleged that plaintiff let defendant "have back" from said $400 the sum of $175, leaving due $625; denied that defendant sold plaintiff merchandise of the value of $40, or any other sum or at all, and denied that defendant paid plaintiff $50 in cash or any sum in excess of $40; denied that defendant has demanded of plaintiff a deed, and alleged that plaintiff has tendered to defendant a sufficient deed on payment of the unpaid balance of said purchase price. Plaintiff prays that it be adjudged that defendant has no interest in said land, and that plaintiff have a vendor's lien on said premises as security for the payment of said balance due plaintiff.

The cause was tried by the court without a jury and findings of fact were made by the court substantially in accordance with defendant's answer and cross-complaint; and as conclusions of law the court found that plaintiff is entitled to a decree quieting his title to the strip of land claimed by him except that portion particularly described as claimed by defendant and as to such portion that defendant is the owner and entitled to possession; that defendant is entitled to the decree that plaintiff convey the said strip of land to defendant. Judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and brings the record here under the alternative method.

It is stated in appellant's brief that, pending the appeal plaintiff, Wong Ah Sure, conveyed his interest in the premises to Sing Kee Jan, and later died, and Sing Kee Jan has, upon suggestion of counsel, been substituted as appellant.

[1, 2] Respondent invites attention to the failure of appellant in his opening brief to comply with the provisions of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, and asks that the rule be enforced, which is to affirm the judgment without examining the typewritten transcript in search for error upon which to base a reversal. In the present instance, there was an entire disregard of the requirements of the Code section. Appellant, however, has made a fairly successful effort to comply with the statute in his reply brief. The statute reads:

"In filing briefs on said appeal the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court" —and appellant makes the point that the statute does not require compliance therewith in the opening brief, and that he has sufficiently complied with the statute by calling attention to the portion of the record on which he relies in his reply brief.

It is due to the respondent that the appellant should state fully his points and authorities in his opening brief; and, if he challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings he should, in his opening brief, point out the evidence which he claims should have demanded a different finding. Of course, if the claim is made in good faith that there is no evidence whatever in support of a particular finding, a statement of such fact would be sufficient, and the duty would then devolve upon the respondent to point out the evidence. The respondent is entitled to know on what points appellant relies, and they should be stated in the opening brief in order that he may meet them in his answering brief. The practice of allowing appellant to reserve his discussion of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings to his reply is illogical, and devolves upon the respondent the necessity of filing an additional brief which would be unnecessary where appellant complies with the statute in his opening brief. Orderly procedure precludes appellant from making new points in his reply, and to defer compliance with the statute until he files his reply brief is in effect introducing an entirely new point which respondent could not anticipate and answer in his answering brief. For these, among other reasons, we think appellant has not complied with what we believe to be the intention of the statute. As the question has not hitherto arisen, we have treated the reply brief of appellant as sufficient compliance with the statute.

Appellant states in his opening brief, and reiterates it in his reply brief, that:

"There is really but one issue to be determined in the case, and that is the 'agreement or contract to pay for the rebuilding of the store.' "

The finding of the court is that:

"Immediately upon said fire occurring and said damage and detriment resulting to said structure, building, and improvement, as in these findings heretofore found, plaintiff agreed with defendant to alone stand and bear said loss, and agreed with defendant that, if defendant should restore said structure, building, and improvement and pay the cost therefor, the amount paid therefor should be deducted from the final payment to be paid by defendant to plaintiff, as in these findings elsewhere found, for said land, premises, structure, building, and improvement in these findings elsewhere described." Also, "the court finds that the risk or loss and destruction of said structure, building, and improvement on said land and premises agreed to be sold and conveyed by plaintiff to defendant was on the plaintiff, and that the damage and injury to said structure * * * by reason of fire occurred * * * without the fault, omission, or negligence of the defendant."

[3] It appeared that defendant went into possession of the premises under an oral contract of sale. Part payment was made, the balance to be paid at a future date, and when and not until paid, plaintiff was to convey the premises to defendant by a good and sufficient deed of bargain and sale. Before the time had arrived for payment of deferred installments, the building was partly destroyed by fire. As we understand the cases of Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 334, 104 Pac. 432, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, and Conlin v. Osborn, 161 Cal. 659, 666, 120 Pac. 755, defendant could have rescinded and recovered the money paid on account of the purchase price. The principle applicable to the situation is stated in the Potts Drug Co. Case:

"Where there is a mere agreement to sell, and title therefore has not passed, the loss falls on the vendor."

Appellant answers that the sale was not an executory contract, but was an executed agreement. "An executed contract is one, the object of which is fully performed. All others are executory." Civ. Code, § 1661.

[4] The contract was taken out of the statute of frauds by part payments of the purchase price and delivery of possession. The agreement was partly executed, but title had not passed to defendant. There was evidence that the value of the building was about $800 or $850 and the value of the lot $150. It is obvious that the property for which defendant was to pay $950 consisted principally of the building. The fact that he went into possession does not make the rule any the less applicable. It became impossible, through no fault of defendant, for plaintiff to convey the property he had agreed to convey. "Where the contract relates to the use or possession or any dealing with specific things in which the performance necessarily depends on the existence of the particular thing, the condition is implied by the law that the impossibility arising from the perishing or destruction of the thing, without default in the party, shall excuse the performance, because, from the nature of the contract, it is apparent that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the subject of the contract." 9 Cyc. 631.

But if this be not the law, the parties were certainly competent to agree as to which of them should bear the loss; and there was evidence that, immediately after the fire occurred, plaintiff told defendant to go ahead and repair the building, and to deduct the cost from the unpaid purchase price for the property. We find no prejudicial error in any of the rulings of the court.

HEITMAN v. BRUNS et al. (Civ. 2397.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 8, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 5, 1918.)

1. DEEDS ⊂=56(3)—DELIVERY.
Where a grantor did not relinquish all control over a deed, but specifically reserved the right to recall it at any time, there was no delivery of the deed.

2. EVIDENCE ⊂=584(1) — REJECTION — POWER OF JUDGE OR JURY.
A judge or jury has no right to arbitrarily reject testimony, though that may be done when the testimony does not produce conviction.

3. EVIDENCE ⊂=584(3) — REJECTION — POWER OF JUDGE OR JURY—NUMBER OF WITNESSES.
The rule prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2, that jurors are not to decide in conformity to declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in their minds applies alike to judge and jury.

4. EVIDENCE ⊂=313 — WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY—CONVERSATION WITH DECEDENT.
No weaker kind of testimony can be produced than that of a person as to a conversation between himself and a deceased person.

5. WITNESSES ⊂=311—CONTRADICTION.
A witness may be contradicted by the facts he states as completely as by direct adverse testimony.

6. DEEDS ⊂=208(1)—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE.
In an action by the administrator of his deceased wife to set aside her deed to defendants, evidence held to sustain the trial court's finding that the deed had never been delivered.

7. DEEDS ⊂=210—CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE.
In an action by the administrator of his deceased wife to set aside her deed to defendants, evidence held to sustain the trial court's finding that there was no consideration for the deed.

8. DEEDS ⊂=211(1)—VALIDITY—EVIDENCE.
In an action by an administrator to set aside his deceased wife's deed alleged by the grantees to have been made upon their contract to provide and care for the grantor, evidence held to sustain the trial court's finding that the deed was void.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Action by Ernest H. Heitman, as administrator of the estate of Martha Lena Heitman, deceased, against Henry C. Bruns and others, with cross-complaint by defendants. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Mastick & Partridge, of San Francisco (Alan C. Van Fleet, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants. J. E. Rodgers, of Martinez, and M. R. Jones, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought by plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of his deceased wife, to set aside a deed made by her in her lifetime to defendants. The complaint is in two counts. It is alleged in the first that the deed was procured by the undue influence of defendants, that there was no consideration therefor, and that it lacked delivery. The second count alleged that the grantor at the time of the execution of the deed was of unsound mind, and that there was no consideration and no delivery. The answer denied these allegations, and set forth a cross-complaint praying that defendants' title to the land be quieted against plaintiff. The case was tried with an advisory jury. Special issues were submitted upon the questions of undue influence, unsoundness of mind, and delivery. The jury found against the defendants on all of these issues. The trial court, however, adopted only the finding that the deed in question had never been delivered. It further found that no consideration was paid by defendants, or any of them, for the property, and that its value was in excess of the sum of $20,000, and that the deed made by the grantor was null and void. Judgment was thereupon entered canceling said deed, and quieting the title of plaintiff and the estate of decedent to the property. The appeal is from such judgment.

The question here presented is whether or not the evidence sustains the findings of the trial court

Appellants claim on the question of delivery that the evidence is clear, uncontradicted, and unequivocal; and that therefore this question has resolved itself into one of law; and accordingly they contend that the conclusions of law and the judgment thereon are "against law." A discussion of the evidence, therefore, becomes necessary.

From the facts surrounding the execution of the deed in question it appears that in the latter part of November, 1912, Martha L. Heitman was living on her farm, near Byron, in Contra Costa county, the property which is the subject-matter of this litigation. She was a woman advanced in life, being over 80 years of age. She had, in 1907, married a man much younger than herself, with whom she lived intermittently and who was her third husband. In November, 1912, she left her farm and went to the home of Henry Bruns, one of the defendants herein; and she thereafter lived with the Bruns family until her death, which occurred on December 30, 1913, some 13 months after her advent into this household. During her stay, Mrs. Bruns, aided by her daughters, two of the defendants herein, performed some service for Mrs. Heitman contributing to her comfort. The Bruns family were neighbors and in no manner related to Mrs. Heitman. Within a week after her arrival, according to the testimony of Mrs. Bruns, Mrs. Heitman expressed a desire to convey her property to the defendants herein. Thereupon, Henry Bruns, the father, and William Bruns, his son, went to Brentwood, a town close by, to get Robert Wallace, a justice of the peace and notary, to make a deed of Mrs. Heitman's property. Mr. Wallace did not come as soon as he was sent for, and thereafter, on December 4, 1912, William Bruns, one of the grantees named in the deed, again went after and brought him and one Shafer to the Bruns home. On that day Mr. Wallace drew two deeds, one conveying from Mrs. Heitman to the Bruns children, all of whom were adults, her real property in Contra Costa county, valued at more than $20,000, which is the deed in controversy; and the other purporting to convey to the same persons her real property in Alameda county, consisting of 160 acres. After these deeds were executed, Mrs. Heitman told Mr. Wallace to keep them until she called for them or until she died, and in that event to hand them to Bruns, Sr. Wallace at this time stated to Mrs. Heitman that whenever she wanted the deeds back she could get them. Wallace then took these deeds away with him and continued to hold them until after the death of Mrs. Heitman, when, according to her instructions, he gave them to Bruns, who thereupon requested Wallace to record them, which he did.

[1] It is conceded, as indeed it must be, that up to the time Wallace took the deeds away there was no delivery of them, for the grantor did not then relinquish all control over them, but, on the contrary, she specifically reserved the right to recall them at any time. Appellants, however, seek to show a delivery some two or three months thereafter, based on the testimony of Henry Bruns, Sr., and his son, William, to the effect that Mrs. Heitman requested that the deeds be recorded. It is in evidence that Bruns, Sr., attempted about this time to have Wallace record them, but this he refused to do as being contrary to his instructions. No further attempt was made during Mrs. Heitman's lifetime to have the deeds recorded. This testimony of Bruns and his son was uncontradicted, and it is by reason of this fact that the claim is made that under these circumstances the question of delivery is one of law and not of fact.

[2, 3] While it is true that a judge or jury have no right to arbitrarily reject testimony, this may be done when it does not produce conviction. By section 2061, subd. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, jurors are to be instructed that they are not to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in their minds, as against a presumption or other evidence satisfying their minds. This rule applies alike to judge and jury.

[4] It has been said that no weaker kind of testimony can be produced than the testimony of a person or persons as to a conversation between themselves and a deceased person. Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87; Byrne v. Byrne, 113 Cal. 294, 45 Pac. 536. Here, too, the alleged oral direction of Mrs. Heitman to have the deeds recorded rests solely upon the evidence of Bruns and his son, who are interested parties.

[5] A witness may be contradicted by the facts he states as completely as by direct adverse testimony. Bellus v. Peters, 165 Cal. 112, 130 Pac. 1186; Prewett v. Dyer, 107 Cal. 154, 40 Pac. 105; Clark v. Tulare Dredging Co., 14 Cal. App. 432, 112 Pac. 564; Phillips v. Huffaker, 170 Pac. 431.

[6-8] The circumstances connected with the transaction were certainly such as justified the court in rejecting and disregarding the testimony of Bruns and his son. After the alleged instructions, Mrs. Heitman lived some nine months, and no attempt was made by her thereafter to have these instructions carried out. In addition thereto, there is no evidence that any of the grantees named in the deed ever exercised any right whatever over this land, or ever claimed to own it, or had it assessed to them, or did anything whatever which would indicate any claim of title in them. On the contrary, the testimony shows that there was no intention on the part of Mrs. Heitman to vest title in the grantees until after her death. A reading of the testimony of Bruns, Sr., and especially that portion relating to the claim that he attempted to collect rents from the property, does not carry conviction.

The claim that the transfer was made in consideration of an oral agreement by the grantees to support the grantor during her life in no manner strengthens the case of appellants. It is in evidence that, shortly after the execution of the deeds, Mrs. Heitman transferred to these same grantees all of her stock, farming implements, and other personal property in consideration for this very support. From all the circumstances and from a consideration of the entire evidence in the case, it is difficult to imagine how the jury or the court could have reached a different conclusion than they did. Within two weeks after the arrival of this aged and infirm woman in their midst—a woman found by the advisory verdict of the jury to be of unsound mind, upon evidence that would have supported a finding based thereon—the Bruns family dispossessed her of all her real and personal property amounting to a very substantial sum, and they seek to retain the same upon an alleged oral contract to provide and care for her, where the evidence shows that no such contract was ever entered into.

The findings of the trial court that the deed in question had never been delivered, that there was no consideration for the same, and that it was null and void, that Mrs. Heitman was the owner and in the possession of the lands in question at the time of her death, were all questions of fact, and the findings thereon find full and complete support in the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

HAMMOND v. JUSTICES' COURT OF LOS ANGELES TP. et al. (Civ. 2706.)

COSTS ⊜128—PROSECUTION IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

Township justices' courts are vested with power to, and should upon a proper showing, admit parties to sue in forma pauperis; the statutory provisions as to costs not being applicable to the exceptional cases of indigent suitors who at common law were entitled to sue without payment of such costs.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Application by Alletha P. Hammond for writ of mandate directed against the Justices' Court of Los Angeles Township, County of Los Angeles, State of California, and others. From an order granting the writ, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. J. Hill, County Counsel, and David R. Faries and E. T. Bishop, Deputies County Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Walton J. Wood, Public Defender, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The sole question involved herein is petitioner's right, upon a conceded showing, made in the justices' court of Los Angeles township, that she was destitute and unable to pay the cost, to prosecute in forma pauperis an action brought by her in said court. The trial court held that she was so entitled to sue and made its order granting a peremptory writ of mandate directed to the justices' court, requiring it to proceed with the trial without the payment of such cost. The appeal is from this order.

In our opinion, the decision in Martin v. Superior Court, 168 Pac. 135, L. R. A. 1918B, 313, must be regarded as conclusive in support of the order made by the trial court. In that case the right to prosecute the action in forma pauperis was upheld upon the ground that such right existed at common law, which, in the absence of any statutory modification thereof, must be deemed the rule of decision in the courts of this state. The only distinction between that case and this is that in the former the action was pending in the superior court, while in the instant case it is pending in the court of a township justice. The essential facts are identically the same, since in each case an indigent plaintiff, unable to pay the cost, and upon a sufficient showing thereof, sought a civil remedy in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. Upon the authority of what is said in the opinion in the Martin Case, we are constrained to hold that the township justices' courts of this state are, as were courts at common law, vested with power to, and should upon a proper showing, admit parties to sue in forma pauperis, unless such power is restricted by statute. As to this, the statutory provisions with reference to prepayment of costs in justices' courts are, in substance, the same as those applicable to payment of costs in the superior courts, and as to which it was said in the opinion to which we have referred that such statutes, being general in their nature, are not applicable to cases where the court has, in the exercise of its power, remitted the payment of the fees on behalf of a poor suitor; that "in every instance the court's order to this effect is sufficient warrant to every officer charged with the collection of fees to omit the performance of that duty in the specified case." In other words, the statutory provisions as to costs were not intended to, and do not, apply to the exceptional cases of indigent suitors who at common law were entitled to sue without payment of such costs.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROSE v. CRAWFORD et al. (Civ. 2430.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 26, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 22, 1918.)

Defendant's motion to set aside judgment being supported by her affidavit, to effect that her former attorney had no authority to stipulate that judgment should be entered against her, affidavit of such attorney, to effect that defendant admitted her default, that she was satisfied with the judgment, etc., was properly read at the hearing.

2. WITNESSES ⊜219(3)—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—WAIVER.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by J. Leonard Rose against Mayflower Crawford and others. From an order denying a motion to vacate two judgments, one interlocutory and the other final, defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

C. W. Eastin, of San Francisco, for appellant. A. F. St. Sure, of Oakland, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to vacate two judgments, one interlocutory and the other final, in an action by which the plaintiff sought to foreclose all the rights of the defendants under a written agreement to purchase an improved parcel of land situated in Alameda county.

On the 3d day of June, 1914, plaintiff's assignor, L. D. MacDonald, and the appellant entered into a written contract whereby MacDonald agreed to sell to the appellant the real property described in the complaint for the sum of $12,500, subject to a mortgage of $5,000. $2,000 was to be paid at the time the contract was executed, and upon the balance of the contract the appellant was to pay the sum of $100 per month until the whole contract price should be paid. There was a provision in the agreement to the effect that if the appellant failed to comply with its terms she should forfeit all rights thereunder.

Upon the execution of the contract the appellant went into possession of the premises, and when this action was commenced about 18 months later she was, according to the plaintiff's testimony, about $600 behind in her payments. The action was commenced in November, 1915, and the summons and complaint served upon the appellant and her husband. Thereafter no answer having been made by the defendants, a judgment by default was taken against them. Forty-eight days later, by virtue of a stipulation entered into between the parties, the default was set aside. The defendants thereupon filed an answer, denying only that portion of the complaint which gave to the appellant credit on account of the monthly payments under her contract of $1,002.20, and averring that she had paid on account thereof the sum of $1,102.20; also praying that the court would fix a reasonable time within which she might pay the balance due. On January 21, 1916, a judgment by stipulation was rendered against the appellant, in which it was declared that she owed the defendant on account of the contract a specified sum, and decreed that all her rights in the property under the agreement be canceled and forfeited unless within 30 days from the entry of such decree she should pay to the plaintiff the amount then specified to be due.

On February 19, 1916, appellant changed her attorney, and two days later her new representative served and filed a notice of a motion to vacate the interlocutory judgment, and for permission to file a demurrer, answer, and cross-complaint. On February 23d, it appearing to the court from evidence taken at the hearing of said motion that the appellant had not complied with the condition of the interlocutory judgment, a final decree was entered against her in conformity to the prayer of plaintiff's complaint. Thereafter, and on March 2, 1916, appellant served and filed a notice of motion to set aside this final judgment. This motion, as in the case of that previously made, was based upon section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. According to the affidavit filed by appellant in support of her motions, she was not in arrears in her payments when this action was commenced, and she claimed that, had she been credited with all amounts paid by her, the account between the parties would have disclosed that all payments due at that time had been made, that she desired to defend the action, and that her former attorney was wholly without authority to stipulate that judgment should be entered against her. In opposition to her motion there was offered an affidavit by this attorney, from which it appeared that the appellant had freely admitted to him that she was in default under her contract, and that the allegations of the complaint were substantially true; that he thereupon told her, in the presence of her husband, and on other occasions, that the best he could do for her was to get as much time as possible within which she might endeavor to find a purchaser for the property; that upon the rendition of the interlocutory decree he informed her of what had been done; that she declared herself satisfied, and stated that she would be able to dispose of the property within the 30 days allowed her in the decree within which to pay the amount in default.

Other affidavits and oral evidence introduced by the plaintiff, together with the weak explanation of the defendant and the attendant circumstances, tend strongly to show that she was in fact in default in her payments on the contract as recited in the judgment, and that she was aware that an interlocutory decree had been entered against her, and of its purposes and terms, and that she was, in accordance with the advice of her attorney, doing her utmost to find a purchaser for the property as before mentioned. It thus appears that the appellant had no substantial defense to the action, and that the attorney who was at that time advising her took the course which to him seemed best calculated to conserve her interests in the property.

[1, 2] We are also of the opinion that the court committed no error in permitting to be read at the hearing upon the motions the affidavit of appellant's former attorney. The conversations between client and attorney therein related were not privileged, for where, as here, a client voluntarily testifies as a witness to confidential communications made by him to his attorney, he thereby waives the privileged character of such communications, and both he and his attorney may then be fully examined in relation thereto. Continental B., etc., Ass'n v. Woolf, 12 Cal. App. 726, 108 Pac. 729.

In the case of Security Loan & T. Co. v. Estudillo, 134 Cal. 166, 66 Pac. 257, the facts are quite similar to those in this case. There it appeared that an attorney, employed for the defendant in an action to foreclose a mortgage, secured all the time he could for the defendant, having done which he waived further right to answer, and stipulated that a default judgment might be entered. It was there held, upon an appeal from an order refusing to set aside the judgment thereupon entered that all presumptions are in favor of the order of the trial court, and that, where the evidence is conflicting as to the authority of the attorney to stipulate for the judgment, the order must be affirmed. The court also held in the same case that no error was committed in allowing the defendant's attorney to testify as to his authority to enter into the stipulation, the court upon this point saying:

"Defendant denies that any such authority was ever given. The attorney was the principal witness as to his authority and the purposes for which he was employed. The employment was not a privileged communication within the meaning of the statute."

The order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. EANTOSCA. (Cr. 419.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 14, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 12, 1918.)

1. HOMICIDE ⟸257(1)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.
Evidence held to sustain conviction of assault with deadly weapon with intent to commit murder.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1170(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.
In prosecution for assault with intent to kill where prosecuting witness positively identified accused and stated that he was absolutely certain about it, accused was not prejudiced by excluding answer to the question whether witness would be as sure about identification if the trial were one for murder.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸404(3)—DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.
Where the sheriff identified a broken shovel and a club as having been found at the place of the assault and the prosecuting witness stated that he thought he was struck with such weapons, which bore blood stains, such weapons were admissible as exhibits.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1169(1) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR.
In prosecution for an assault committed by two men, the one on trial was not prejudiced by admission of testimony of his brother, not shown to have been the other assailant, in answer to question why he had left one job and come to the place of the assault, to the effect that he could get better pay at the new job, the question having been asked in an effort to show that he changed jobs for the purpose of committing the assault, the matter being immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Amador County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Nick Eantosca was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, and, from the judgment and an order overruling motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, of Jackson, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. He moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he was thereupon sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of 14 years. Upon the facts, the defense was an alibi. The proof of the alibi consisted of the testimony of the defendant and his brother, both of whom testified that they were at their cabin not far from the scene of the assault the entire evening and until after 10 o'clock of the 26th day of April, 1917. The assault was made about 15 minutes before 10 o'clock. If the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict, it necessarily disposes of the alibi adversely to defendant. The evidence, we think, justified the verdict.

[1] The prosecuting witness, August Chiesa, was a minor and was working on the night shift, from 10:30 p. m. until 6:30 in the morning, at the Bunker Hill mine, Amador county. He testified that he left his lodging place about 15 minutes to 10 on the night of the assault and reached a point about 100 feet from the mine:

"Q. Just tell the jury what happened then. A. When I was there by the mine, Nick Eantosca was in front of me and I recognized him well. As soon as I raised my head up, I looked at him and I saw it was him, and he hit me right away. The first hit that he gave me, I did not fall. I raised my hand up and hit him in the face, but I don't know what point I got him in the face. At the same time I hit him with my hand in the face, I had my lunch basket. The lunch bucket go out of my hand and it go on the ground. When I left my bucket fall on the ground, I turned and saw somebody behind me, and at the same time they hit me with something; I thought it was— Mr. Spagnoli: We ask that that be stricken out, a conclusion of the witness. Mr. Snyder: It was the witness' best judgment. The Court: Do you know what he hit you with? A. I was not sure; it was only I heard something fall on the ground and I thought it was the sound of— The Court: That may go out as to what he thought it was. Mr. Snyder: Then what happened? A. Then I fell on the ground, and then I saw that both of them was there, and both of them hit me. I did not holler or I did not talk. When I was down on the ground, I had my face looking at the ground, on the ground, and my arm like this (indicating), and then they used something, maybe a ——— and they hit me on the back four or five times. Mr. Spagnoli: I ask that answer stricken out, a conclusion of the witness. A. I think they hit me with a ———, because I felt the hit right on my back. Mr. Spagnoli: I think the witness should be instructed not to give his conclusions. The Court: What he thought may go out. A. When I remained there about a minute like a dead man, I saw the partner of Nick Eantosca going away, and Nick Eantosca, when I had my arm like this (indicating), I was not unconscious, I saw Nick Eantosca take the razor out of his pocket and cut me right here (indicating neck). When I was there and I know what I was doing, I raised my arm up so he could not cut me down lower. Q. Did he cut you with the razor? A. Yes, he did. Q. Where? Show the jury where you were cut with the razor. A. (Indicates.) The Court: Q. You say the defendant here is the one that cut you? A. Yes, I am sure it was Nick Eantosca. Q. You say there were two men there; did each of them hit you with something? A. Yes, both of them hit me, but who used the razor was Nick Eantosca. Q. The defendant in this case is the one who used the razor? A. Yes, this fellow (indicating Nick Eantosca)."

Dr. G. L. Lynch was called to treat Chiesa that night:

"Q. State what you found in the way of wounds? A. I found a long cut on the left side of the neck and a number of bruises on his back and his right arm, and one or two on the top of his head."

Witness Cassassa testified that he saw defendant and another man going towards the Bunker Hill mine and in the vicinity of the place of the assault, after 9 o'clock. The witness was cross-examined at considerable length, the purpose being to discredit his testimony that he was where he testified he was and recognized Eantosca:

"Q. Now, you are absolutely sure that this is the man you saw? A. Sure, he is him. Q. You are absolutely certain about it; no possibility about it being some one else? A. I no make a mistake. Q. Is there any possibility of your making any mistake? The Court: He can't make it any more definite. A. If this man was on trial for murder, would you be just as sure? Mr. Snyder: I object. This is arguing with the witness and going into speculation. The Court: Objection sustained."

[2] The ruling is assigned as error. The defendant was on trial for assault with intent to commit murder. It is not at all likely that the witness could have been less certain of identifying defendant had the trial been for murder. It seems to us that the learned counsel subjected the witness to all reasonable tests to discover whether or not he was sure he was not mistaken. We do not think defendant was prejudiced by not having the benefit of an answer to the question.

[3] Sheriff Lucot went to the scene of the crime about 20 minutes after 10 o'clock. He found there "a broken shovel and a club about 2½ or 3 feet long." He found on both the shovel and club what he described as "blood on them dried up," the blood stains plainly visible. The club was broken in three pieces. The witness put the pieces together "and tied them to keep them together." Over defendant's objection, the court admitted in evidence the shovel and pieces of the club. The place where the assault was committed was first pointed out to the sheriff by a witness who was not present at the time the assault was made, but was there shortly after, and Chiesa the next morning took the sheriff to the spot. The evidence was sufficient to show that the pieces of the club and the shovel were found at the place where the assault occurred. The character of the wounds inflicted and the admitted testimony of Chiesa as to the circumstances and as to what he observed and heard sufficiently justified making these articles exhibits in the case.

[4] On the cross-examination of defendant's brother, who testified for defendant, the district attorney was permitted, over defendant's objection, to inquire of the witness why he had quit work at the Kennedy mine at Jackson (six miles from Amador City) to come to the Bunker Hill mine where his brother, the defendant, was working. The inference which the district attorney claimed might be drawn from the circumstance was that defendant's brother changed his place of work to be where he could aid defendant in making the assault. The witness, however, testified that he made the change because he could get better pay at the Bunker Hill mine than at the Kennedy. As there was no evidence that the witness was the "other man" in making the assault, the testimony was immaterial; but we cannot see that defendant was prejudiced by the ruling.

The judgment and order denying motion for a new trial are affirmed.

BURTON AUTO TRANSFER CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2521.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃375(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS—ACCIDENT "ARISING OUT OF AND IN THE COURSE OF THE EMPLOYMENT."

A transfer truck driver, whose hours were uncertain and who had no regular lunch hour, who had loaded his truck and left it, as customary, in the street adjacent to the office during the noon hour, while waiting for the freight depot to open, and who in obeying instructions to go get the truck and go to the depot, and while crossing the street, was struck and killed by an automobile, received an injury "arising out of and in the course of his employment."

Original application for a writ of review by the Burton Auto Transfer Company, employer, and the Employers' Liability Insurance Corporation, Limited, of London, England, insurer, to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission for workmen's compensation in favor of Mrs. Hattie Fickett, mother of George Fickett, deceased employé. Award affirmed.

George H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for petitioners. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, and Warren H. Pillsbury, of Oakland, for respondents.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This proceeding was instituted for the purpose of annulling an award allowing the mother of George Fickett a certain sum of money because of his death, said to have been caused by an accident occurring in the course of as well as arising out of his employment by the petitioner, Burton Auto Transfer Company. The employer was engaged in the transfer business, and Fickett was a driver of one of its automobile trucks. The business was operated from an office, in Los Angeles, where orders were received from patrons who required the service of the company, and the drivers of its vehicles were accustomed to remain about the office awaiting orders, at all times during working hours when they were not engaged in the operation of their trucks in the performance of their actual work. The owner of the company testified that Fickett's working hours were "any time from half past 6 until he got through at night. Sometimes it was four; sometimes it was 10; sometimes it was morning." No luncheon time was provided by the employer for the drivers. The owner said on this subject:

"We leave that to the men. If they are in a hurry, or out in the country, it ain't no object to them to sit around for an hour. They eat their lunch and go on, and lots of times they take it with them and eat it on the truck going along."

He was then asked if that condition of affairs was changed to any degree when the men were in town and he said it was not. In response to a question as to whether the men could take longer than an hour for lunch if they desired, he said:

"If they wished, if they weren't busy; no rules about that at all."

On the day that the accident occurred which cost Fickett his life he had been ordered, at about 11 in the morning, to haul a load of pipe from a certain establishment to the Southern Pacific depot. He procured his load and trucked it as far as the employer's office, where he arrived at 12 o'clock noon; the place being directly on his way to the depot. The depot was closed from noon until 1 o'clock, and Fickett stopped at the office on that account, instead of proceeding to his destination and being compelled to await the opening of the depot for the delivery of his load. He went into the office, leaving his truck on the opposite side of the street, where it was headed toward the depot and stood on the right side of the way. Moreover, the owner of the transfer company testified that, during the day, it was the custom of the drivers to park their trucks on either side of the street, in front of the office, and that space was reserved for that purpose on both sides. Trucks were run into the employer's yard at night only. Fickett remained in the office at least a part of the time from 12 to 12:45; but the record does not show whether he ate luncheon there, or at his home, which was near at hand, or whether he went to a restaurant for it, or, in fact, whether he partook of lunch that day at all. At any rate, he was at the office at 12:45. At that time, the owner of the company said to him:

"Georgie, you better start along, and you will be at the S. P. at the time they open the doors, and get away a little quicker."

Fickett then left the office, started to cross the street toward his truck, and was run down by a passing automobile.

The petitioner relies upon the many cases to the effect that one is not entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, if he is injured while on the way toward or from his employment. These cases are not in point, for the reason that, at the time he was stricken, Fickett was not on the way to his employment. He had never left it. Under the facts above stated, he was within the hours of his employment, he was in a place where he had a right to be, and he had left his truck in a place where he had a right to leave it, in the regular and usual discharge of the duties he owed his employer. We are satisfied, and we need not cite authority in support of our view, that Fickett's death was occasioned by an accident that happened in the course of his employment, and that it arose out of the employment.

The award is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. CLINE, Sheriff.

(Civ. 2717.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 22, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1918.)

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES ⊂⊃71—SALARY AND FEES—ACCOUNTING TO COUNTY.

An ordinance of board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, operating under a freeholders' charter adopted under Const. art. 11, § 7½, fixing the sheriff's salary required him to account to county for moneys received from the state, under Pol. Code, §§ 4175, 4176, for delivering prisoners and insane persons to state institutions.

Petition for writ of mandate by the County of Los Angeles against John C. Cline, Sheriff of the County of Los Angeles. Alternative writ of mandate made peremptory.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and David R. Faries, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner Frank Dominguez, Geo. Sanders, and Milton M. Cohen, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In mandate. Respondent is sheriff of Los Angeles county, having been elected to said office at the general election in 1914. At the time of his election, and ever since, Los Angeles county has operated under a freeholders' charter, which provides that the board of supervisors shall by ordinance fix the compensation of all elective officers, which includes the sheriff. On June 2, 1913, said board, by an ordinance duly passed pursuant to the power so granted, fixed the salary of the sheriff of said county at the sum of $4,000 per year, which, as therein declared, was in full compensation for the performance of all official services required by law. The charter provided:

"That all fees collected by any county officer, board or commission shall be paid into the county treasury on the first Monday of each calendar month, together with a detailed statement of the same in writing, a duplicate copy of which shall be filed with the auditor at the same time."

In the month of February, 1918, for services rendered by respondent as such sheriff, covering the time necessarily consumed in delivering prisoners and insane persons to state institutions, he received from the state the sum of $496. The question involved is whether or not respondent is, as he claims, entitled to retain said sum so received for his own use, or required to turn the same into the county treasury and file therewith a detailed statement of the same in writing, and also file a duplicate copy thereof with the auditor. Respondent's refusal to comply with said provision of the charter is based upon sections 4175 and 4176 of the Political Code, which provide that there shall be allowed to the sheriff by the state, to be retained by him for his own use, a per diem of $5 for the time necessarily consumed in delivering prisoners and insane persons to state institutions to which they have been legally committed. On the other hand, petitioner insists that the ordinance is the measure of respondent's right to compensation, and that, since the ordinance fixes his salary at $4,000 per year in full compensation for his services, and the charter requires all fees earned or collected by him for official services rendered to be turned into the county treasury, such fees so earned and received belong to the county.

In our opinion, petitioner's contention must be sustained. The charter, adopted under and pursuant to the provisions of section 7½, article 11, of the Constitution, in express terms authorizes the board of supervisors by ordinance to fix the compensation of such sheriff, and under the power so granted the board did fix such salary, declaring it to be in full compensation for all services which the sheriff was required by law to perform, and, as declared by the charter, all fees received by him from any source for services which he was required to perform should be paid into the county treasury. Under the provisions of the Constitution, charter, and ordinance, there would seem to be no question as to the county being entitled to the fees so received by the sheriff for the services rendered. Hence, while the sheriff is still entitled, under said sections 4175 and 4176, to collect from the state the per diem therein provided for his time consumed on behalf of the state in performing the duty imposed, the moneys so received belong to the county. Under the ordinance passed pursuant to charter provisions, the time of the sheriff consumed in the performance of his official duties belongs to the county, and his earnings in the performance thereof, like those of any other employé, belong to the employer. This conclusion finds ample support in cases decided by the courts of this state, among which are those of Adams v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 117, County of Santa Clara v. Branham, 77 Cal. 592, 20 Pac. 75, In the Matter of Dodge, 135 Cal. 512, 67 Pac. 973, and County of San Diego v. Schwartz, 145 Cal. 49, 78 Pac. 231, all of which involved like questions, and which were decided in accordance with the views herein expressed.

The alternative writ of mandate heretofore issued is made peremptory.

ERSKINE v. MARCHANT et al. (Civ. 2399.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸76(1) — COMPENSATION—FORFEITURE—ESTOPPEL.
In an agent's action on a contract of employment for the sale of calculating machines, providing for forfeiture if he did not sell 50 machines the first year, where defendants repudiated the contract 2½ months after it had been executed, they were estopped to claim forfeiture for nonsale of the requisite number of machines.

2. DAMAGES ⟸184 — MITIGATION — EMPLOYMENT CONTRACTS.
In an action by an agent under a contract of employment to sell calculating machines, profits made by plaintiff on sales of machines purchased by him from another firm are not available in mitigation of damages, in the absence of evidence as to the capital invested by plaintiff or how many he sold.

3. DAMAGES ⟸120(7)—SPECULATIVE DAMAGES—AGENT'S COMPENSATION.
While contracts between commercial agents and their principals embody many elements of uncertainty, damages for breach thereof are not speculative or remote, and such compensation will be awarded as the evidence shows with reasonable certainty that plaintiff is entitled to.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸931(1)—REVIEW—DAMAGES.
Courts may find damages in a lump sum and any uncertainty in the findings will be construed to support the judgment, rather than to defeat it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by W. W. Erskine against R. H. Marchant and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry C. McPike, of Oakland, for appellants. Alexander D. Keyes and Herbert W. Erskine, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment awarding plaintiff $7,839.46 for breach of contract. The contract, which was in writing and attached to and made a part of the complaint, was made on the 17th day of May, 1913, and appointed plaintiff the defendants' agent for the sale of its calculating machines, called the "Marchant," for a period of 5 years, with the privilege of renewing the contract for 5 years, and with the exclusive right of sale on commission in the state of California, save to certain designated firms to which the defendants reserved the right to sell its machines. The contract contained a clause that the plaintiff would forfeit all rights under the contract if 50 sales were not made in the state of California during the first year of the agreement. On the 3d day of August, 1913, defendants notified plaintiff that they had sold their business to a corporation, and that the corporation would not accept the agreement between them and the plaintiff. On receipt of a letter from the corporation a few days later, the plaintiff with his attorney called at the office of the corporation, where he was told by some of the officers of the corporation that they would not proceed under the written contract, but that they would permit him to go on selling the Marchant machine, and would pay him a commission on such sales as he made. Plaintiff accepted that arrangement upon the express understanding that by so doing he was not waiving his rights under the original contract. Before the repudiation of the written contract plaintiff had sold 7 machines, for which he had received his commission in full from defendants. After the repudiation he continued to sell machines for the corporation until April, 1914, selling in all 11 machines, for which he was paid his commissions by the corporation. The evidence showed that between May 17, 1913, and May 17, 1914, 18 machines were sold by plaintiff and 20 by the Marchant Company.

[1] Appellants claim that as the contract provided that it should be forfeited if 50 machines were not sold within the first year, and as the combined sales of the plaintiff and the other agents of the corporation did not total 50 machines, the plaintiff's damages should have been limited to the loss of his commission for the first year of the contract. Inasmuch as the defendants repudiated their contract 2½ months after it had been executed, they are estopped to claim the benefit of the forfeiture clause for the non-sale of 50 machines. Schiffman v. Peerless, etc., Co., 13 Cal. App. 600, 110 Pac. 460. Moreover, the fact that plaintiff continued to sell the Marchant machine after the repudiation of the contract by defendants, and that he did not sell the amount required in the forfeiture clause, is not proof that he would not have sold the requisite number, had he been acting under the original contract as the exclusive agent, actively interested in the sale of that machine.

[2, 3] The contention that an allowance should have been made in mitigation of damages of profits made by plaintiff, after the breach of the contract, in the purchase and sale of a similar machine, known as the "Dactyle," is without merit. There was evidence to the effect that plaintiff purchased some Dactyle machines in Paris; that he was not the agent for the sale of the Dactyle machine, but merely purchased and sold them. But how much available capital he had to invest in the purchase of these machines, how many he purchased, or how many he sold, was not shown. In order to mitigate damages, it was incumbent upon the defendants to introduce evidence from which plaintiff's profits in the sale of Dactyles could be estimated with some degree of certainty. While contracts between commercial agents and their principals embody many elements of uncertainty, the damages for breach thereof are not speculative or remote, and courts award such compensation as the evidence shows with reasonable certainty the wronged party is entitled to. Sutherland on Damages, § 69; Wakeman v. Wheeler & W., etc., Co., 101 N. Y. 205, 4 N. E. 264, 54 Am. Rep. 676.

[4] It is further contended that in awarding damages the court did not take into consideration the difference between the entire commission for each sale and what it would cost the plaintiff to make the sale. While it does not appear what elements the court considered in ascertaining the amount of damages, there was nothing in the court's finding to show that these costs and expenses were not taken into consideration. The court found that by reason of defendants' breach of the contract plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $7,839.46. It has been held that courts may find damages in a lump sum, and that any uncertainty in the findings is to be construed so as to support the judgment rather than to defeat it. Murphy v. Stelling, 8 Cal. App. 702, 705, 97 Pac. 672; Foley v. Martin, 142 Cal. 256, 261, 71 Pac. 165, 75 Pac. 842, 100 Am. St. Rep. 123. The trial court had before it evidence of the sales made by the plaintiff and the defendants prior and subsequent to the breach of the contract from which it could form a judgment as to the amount of plaintiff's loss, and from the record before us we cannot say that the trial court erred in estimating the damages.

Judgment affirmed.

GRANGE v. AMERICAN NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 2427.)

1. REPLEVIN ⊂⊃100(1)—CLAIM AND DELIVERY —JUDGMENT.

In action in claim and delivery, judgment for plaintiff for delivery of securities sued for, or for their value if delivery could not be had, held not reversible, for failure to specify clearly, what was to be done, on account of recitals as to proceeds of certain bonds which it was stipulated might be sold pending litigation.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1013 — REVIEW — FINDING.

In action in claim and delivery, appellate court is concluded by finding that value of securities sued for is as alleged, no segregation of different securities being made, and defendant appellant cannot take advantage of clerical error in recital of value of a portion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Clarence Grange against the American National Bank of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. Heynemann, of San Francisco, for appellant. R. P. Henshall, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action in claim and delivery, brought for the recovery of certain securities. Plaintiff had judgment for the delivery of the same, and, in the event that such could not be had, then for the sum of $3,155, the alleged total value thereof. The appeal is taken on the judgment roll alone.

[1] Appellant claims that the judgment should be reversed, for the reason that it does not clearly specify what is to be done. There is no merit in the appeal. The claimed uncertainty is based upon recitals with reference to the proceeds had from the sale of certain bonds which it was stipulated might be sold pending the litigation. With this change the findings follow the complaint, and judgment is given for the return of the unsold specific personal property described therein, together with the sum of $1,764.33, the amount received from the sale of the bonds. In case delivery of the specific personal property cannot be had, then the alternative portion of the judgment provides for an amount which constitutes the full value of the property sued for, included in which is the sum derived from the sale. There is no uncertainty in the judgment.

[2] Appellant further seeks to take advantage of a clerical error in the recital of the value of a portion of the securities sued for. The complaint recited that all of the securities were of the value of $3,155. The answer alleged their value to be not greater than the sum of $2,000. The findings and judgment determine that the value of the personal property sued for is as alleged; no segregation of the different securities being made. On the question of value we are concluded by the finding.

NAVE v. GRAHAM et ux. (Civ. 2274.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 22, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜757(1)—BRIEFS.
On an appeal by the alternative method, the appellate courts will not examine typewritten matter, and parties must print in their briefs portions of record to which they desire to call the court's attention.

2. PLEADING ⊜122—DENIAL ON INFORMATION AND BELIEF.
In an action for slander, defendant cannot deny using the words alleged upon information and belief, as positive knowledge of that matter is presumed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 437.

3. PLEADING ⊜121(1)—ANSWER—DENIAL.
An answer containing denials of the allegations of the complaint, based upon lack of information of defendants "sufficient to form a belief," is insufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. § 437.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1042(4) — HARMLESS ERROR.
In a slander case, where answer contained denial of use of words alleged, and also allegations that statements were true, it was harmless, if error, to refuse to strike out the denial, where court instructed that defendant admitted using the words, and the only issue was that arising upon the defense as to the truth of the matter.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜981—MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.
Adverse ruling on motion for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence will not be disturbed on appeal, in absence of plain showing of abuse of power of court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Katie Nave against David Graham and wife. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. M. Barnes, of Los Angeles, for appellant. F. W. Allender, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Action for damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of slanderous statements made by the defendant Mary Graham. Judgment was for the defendants. The appeal purports to be taken both from the judgment and from an order denying to plaintiff a new trial.

The appeal from the order is unauthorized by the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 963), although all the questions sought to be presented thereunder are proper to be considered on the appeal from the judgment. It is stated in the brief of appellant that the action was brought to recover damages because of false and malicious statements made by defendant Mary Graham concerning the condition of a dwelling house owned by the plaintiff, by reason of which statements plaintiff was prevented from finding a tenant for the house.

[1] Appellant first complains that the court erred in refusing to strike out portions of the answer; also in refusing to sustain a demurrer interposed to the answer. The appeal is presented under the alternative scheme, a choice of method which requires the parties to print in their briefs the portions of the record to which they desire to call the court's attention. Many members of the bar, in presenting typewritten transcripts allowed on appeal by the alternative method, evidently assume, and erroneously, that the appellate courts will examine the typewritten matter. The Code provision is plain and imposes no such burden upon these courts, as has been repeatedly held in recent decisions. Barker Bros. v. Joos, 171 Pac. 1085, with collection of cases. In so far as the text of the answer of defendants, which appellant prints in her brief, can be considered as sufficiently illustrating the points, it may be examined.

[2, 3] The answer first contained denials of the allegations of the complaint based upon lack of information of defendants "sufficient to form a belief." Examining the order of the court as counsel has set it forth in his brief, we cannot tell just what parts of the motion to strike out were granted, and which denied. However, appellant does state that two paragraphs containing denials in the qualified form above noted were stricken out. They embrace allegations denying the use of the words said to have been employed by defendants, the using of which could not be denied upon information and belief, as positive knowledge of that matter would be presumed against defendants.

The particular objection urged against other denials couched in similar form is that it is insufficient to state that a party "has not information or knowledge sufficient to form a belief" and so deny assertions of the opposite pleader. The Code provides that:

"If the defendant has no information or belief upon the subject sufficient to enable him to answer an allegation of the complaint, he may so state in his answer, and place his denial on that ground." Section 437, Code Civ. Proc.

We are prepared to agree with appellant that the denials of the answer in the form in which they were phrased were not those authorized by the Code; but, for reasons which will be stated hereinafter, no prejudice could have come to the plaintiff because of the refusal of the court to strike them out. In a separate count of the answer defendants set up facts showing that the alleged false statements were true, and we think, as to this defense, the demurrer for uncertainty was properly overruled.

[4] When we examine the instructions given by the court, we find that the trial judge directly advised the jury that the speaking of the alleged slanderous words was admitted by the defendant charged with having uttered them, and that the only issue remaining for determination was that arising upon the defense as to the truth of the matter, which the jury was told the defendants were required to show by a preponderance of the evidence. The instruction, therefore, took from the jury any question as to issue being raised by the denials objected to by the motion to strike out and assumed the facts in favor of the plaintiff. It is made plain, then, that the court's ruling on the motion to strike out portions of the answer, if erroneous, was without possible prejudice to the appellant.

[5] On the motion for a new trial affidavits of various persons were presented as showing alleged newly discovered evidence. An adverse ruling on such a motion and on such grounds will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of a plain showing of abuse of the power of the court. The question as to whether diligence had been used, which might have enabled the moving party to have furnished the evidence at the trial, and whether a different result would be probable had such evidence been produced, were matters which the court had discretion to determine either way under the statements made in the affidavits. Oberlander v. Fixen Co., 129 Cal. 690, 62 Pac. 254; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 392, 77 Pac. 169.

We find no error pointed to in the brief of appellant involving rulings of the court on the admission of testimony or refusal to give pertinent instructions offered.

The judgment is affirmed.

MACKNIGHT v. DAVITT. (Civ. 2412.)

1. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃460(3) — PAROL EVIDENCE — BROKER'S CONTRACT — CURING DEFECTIVE DESCRIPTION.

Parol evidence is admissible to cure a defective description in a contract to employ a broker to sell or exchange real estate.

2. BROKERS ⊂⊃43(3)—CONTRACTS TO SELL OR EXCHANGE—DEFECTIVE DESCRIPTION.

Much greater liberality is allowed in construing and curing defective descriptions in a broker's contracts than in a deed of land, and such contracts will not be declared void merely because of a defect, uncertainty, or ambiguity in describing property to be sold or exchanged, where the defect can be cured by allegation and proof of extrinsic facts and circumstances.

3. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃460(7) — PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITING—CURING DEFECTIVE DESCRIPTION.

Where, in an action to recover a commission for securing an exchange of real property, it appears that defendant represented himself in the contract as owner of a "lot on the N. line of E. street, feet west from W. street," etc., and that his wife then owned a lot on E. street corresponding to dimensions given, and that both parties understood and intended to designate a lot on that street 100 feet west of W. street, inadvertently omitting the figures, such facts warrant resort to parol proof to cure the defective description.

4. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃432(4)—EXECUTION OF CONTRACT—AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS—PRESUMPTION.

A written acceptance and offer to a corporation to exchange real property being signed by the vice president and secretary and sealed with the corporate seal, the officers are presumed not to have exceeded their authority; the seal being prima facie evidence that it was affixed by proper authority.

Action by J. Macknight, administrator of the estate of J. P. H. Wentworth, deceased, against J. B. Davitt. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tum Suden & Tum Suden, of San Francisco, for appellant. Pringle & Robbins, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this action to recover a commission claimed to have been earned for securing the acceptance of an offer to exchange real property, the trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff, from which judgment defendant appeals.

On the 27th day of February, 1917, plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement in which defendant represented himself as the owner of certain property on Eddy street in San Francisco and appointed plaintiff his agent to act in negotiating an exchange of that property for certain other property on Oak street, both properties being described in the agreement, and defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $375 as commission when he secured an acceptance of the proposition to exchange the said property. The trial court found that plaintiff had secured an acceptance in accordance with the terms of the contract and that defendant had failed to perform his part of the agreement, and accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff.

[1-3] It is contended that the trial court erred in permitting the plaintiff to remedy by oral testimony a defective description of the property in the contract. In a contract to employ a broker to sell or exchange real estate a defective description of land can be cured by parol evidence. Proulx v. Sac., Valley, etc., Co., 19 Cal. App. 529, 534, 126 Pac. 509. Much greater liberality is allowed in construing and curing defective descriptions in brokers' contracts than in a deed of grant of land, for, so far as the statute of frauds is concerned, the terms of the employment are the essential part, and such contracts will not be declared void merely because of a defect, uncertainty, or ambiguity in the description of the property to be sold or exchanged when such defect can be cured by the allegation or proof of extrinsic facts and circumstances. Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61, 30 Pac. 962; Proulx v. Sac. Val., etc., Co., supra. The circumstances disclosed here were that Davitt represented himself in the contract in question as the owner of a "lot on the N. line of Eddy street, feet west from Webster street, thence running west 53 feet and 6 inches"; that Davitt's wife then owned a lot on Eddy street corresponding to those dimensions; that both parties to the contract understood, and intended to designate, by the description, a lot on Eddy street beginning 100 feet west of Webster street; and that the figures "100" were inadvertently omitted from the description. These facts suffice, we think, to warrant a resort to parol proof to cure the defect in the description contained in the contract. See Anderson v. Wilstrup, 34 Cal. App. 771, 168 Pac. 1150.

[4] It is further contended that it was not shown that the acceptance of the Matilda Long Estate, a corporation, was made under the authority of its board of directors, and that the trial court erred in refusing to make an order for the production of the corporation's books. The written acceptance contained the signatures of the vice president and the secretary and the corporate seal. It is therefore to be presumed that the officers did not exceed their authority, the seal itself being prima facie evidence that it was affixed by proper authority. So. Cal., etc., Ass'n v. Bustamente, 52 Cal. 192; McKee v. Cunningham, 2 Cal. App. 684, 84 Pac. 260. Moreover, the court ultimately admitted the written acceptance in evidence pending the production of authorities and subject to a further ruling. This in effect was a ruling subject to a motion to strike out. The record discloses that the objection to the written acceptance was not renewed and that no motion to strike out was made.

PRINGLE v. ASTON. (Civ. 2353.)

1. TRIAL ⟸395(9)—FINDINGS—EFFECT OF IMMATERIAL FINDINGS.

That, after finding against the defense of no consideration and the cross-complaint for services in action on note by payee against maker, the court found true the immaterial allegation of answer to cross-complaint that loan was made on defendant's representation that it would be paid when he recovered on a cause of action, and that he had not recovered, will not prevent judgment for plaintiff as having sued prematurely, since to so hold would permit variance of note by parol.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸420(7)—NOTES—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Where a note was payable on a certain date, it cannot be shown by parol that payment was not to be made until a certain action was won.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by J. R. Pringle against Taggart Aston. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Vincent Surr, of San Francisco, for appellant. J. R. Pringle, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. Pringle sued Aston on a promissory note for $300, dated July 17, 1913, and payable 30 days after date. Aston defended, alleging in his answer that he had been employed by Pringle and Richard Hart Keatinge as an engineer, and authorized to secure the services of certain help in his work, whom Pringle and Keatinge were to pay; that he secured the $300 from Pringle for this purpose, and paid the same to the employés accordingly; that a bank, of which Pringle was the attorney, was a creditor of this partnership between Pringle and Keatinge, but that the bank did not know of Pringle's connection therewith; that to cover this up, and hide Pringle's connection with this partnership from the bank, Aston gave Pringle the note in suit. Aston also filed a cross-complaint, in which he averred that he had performed services for the partnership of the value of about $3,000 upon a contingent fee, to be derived from the sale of the properties upon which he had performed the engineering services, and that Pringle had without cause thwarted the sale, and thus prevented Aston from securing pay for his services. Pringle answered this cross-complaint, and, after denying its allegations, averred, among other things, that:

"Cross-complainant appealed to plaintiff for financial assistance, alleging actual want and suffering on the part of cross-complainant and of the family of cross-complainant, and cross-complainant did then advise and state to plaintiff that the cross-complainant had a certain cause of action against the Sacramento Valley Electric Railway, and he promised and agreed with plaintiff that, in the event that plaintiff rendered to cross-complainant financial assistance, he, cross-complainant, would pay the moneys so advanced as and when he recovered on his cause of action against said Sacramento Valley Electric Railway; and thereupon, and for no other reason, plaintiff made the advance set forth in the complaint on file herein."

The court found against Aston on all the allegations of his answer and cross-complaint, but also found this last quoted and entirely immaterial allegation of Pringle's answer to be true, and that the defendant never recovered any money from the Sacramento Valley Electric Railway prior to the commencement of this action. Defendant's counsel, pursuant thereto, now asks this court to say that this action was therefore prematurely brought.

[1, 2] We cannot see it so. Pringle's allegation as to the promise of Aston to pay when he recovered upon the judgment was nothing more than a statement of the representations of Aston which induced Pringle to lend him the money, and was not, taken in connection with the other findings in the case, a condition precedent to a right of action upon the promissory note. Indeed, to hold that it was so would be to permit this verbal representation to vary the terms of the note as to the date of payment thereof, which we are not prepared to do, in order to save Mr. Aston from paying what is evidently a just debt.

HUBERMANN v. NATIONAL SURETY CO.

(Civ. 2265.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟸704 — CONCLUSIVENESS—CO-PARTIES.

The finding of nonperformance of the contract in a mechanics' lien foreclosure against the owner and the contractor's surety, wherein neither defendant prayed for or was granted relief against the other, is not conclusive as between them in the owner's suit against the surety.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(2)—PRESUMPTIONS—FINDINGS.

In the absence of showing in the briefs to the contrary, it must be assumed that the trial court had before it evidence to support its finding of fact.

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟸159—BURDEN OF PROOF.

An owner suing the surety on the contractor's bonds has the burden of showing nonperformance of the building contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Max L. Hubermann against the National Surety Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Forgy, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Bennett, Turnbull & Thompson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This is an action to recover on two bonds, given concurrently with a contract for the construction of a building for the appellant. One of the bonds was executed pursuant to the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to mechanics' liens, and the other was a common-law bond, given to secure a faithful performance of the building contract. There had been prosecuted to final judgment, before the trial of the present action, certain consolidated actions for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens on the building agreed to be constructed under the contract. Both the appellant and the respondent were parties defendant in those actions, and neither prayed for or was granted any relief against the other. In those cases the trial court found that there was not a substantial performance of the building contract. The appellant, at the trial of the present action, offered in evidence the judgment roll in the mechanics' lien cases; but the evidence was excluded. The trial court found that an allegation of the complaint to the effect that the building contract had not been performed was not true, and rendered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

[1] The appellant contends that the court ruled erroneously in excluding the judgment roll in the lien cases and asserts that the finding of nonperformance in those actions is conclusive upon the parties in this. The respondent takes the attitude that the judgment in the lien cases is not res adjudicata as between the present parties for the reason that they were aligned together as defendants in that litigation. The position of the respondent is correct. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1908, 1910; Robson v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 588, 593, 159 Pac. 8.

[2, 3] The appellant also contends that there is no evidence to support the finding of the trial court that the allegation of the complaint that there was no performance of the building contract was not true. Certain testimony which is quoted by the appellant in his brief is to the effect that there were certain departures from the strict terms of the contract in the performance of the work under it; but the trial court, having before it the evidence as to the cost and character of the building—as we must assume it did, there being no showing in the briefs to the contrary (Paine v. San Bernardino V. T. Co., 143 Cal. 654, 77 Pac. 659)—might very well have held that these departures were trivial and that they did not affect the question of substantial performance of the contract. The burden was upon the appellant to show that the contract was not performed, and we cannot say, from the very meager reproduction of the evidence in the briefs, that the burden was sustained.

This appeal comes to us under the alternative method. It is provided by section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure that, in presenting appeals under that method, the parties shall print in their briefs "such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." We have been in much doubt whether the appellant has presented to us, under the terms of that section, enough of the record of the trial court to enable us to consider the point first discussed in this opinion (Barker Bros. v. Joos, 171 Pac. 1085); and whether we ought not to affirm the judgment on that ground. As, however, the question is a close one and as an affirmance results in any event, we have determined to concede, as a basis for the discussion of the point first considered in the opinion, that the compliance with the terms of section 953c is sufficient.

The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. MACDONALD. (Civ. 2400.)

CONTRACTS ⇐127(1) — COVENANT NOT TO SUE.

Where, in an instrument in which one party acknowledged and agreed to pay an indebtedness to the other, it was recited as part of the consideration that the instrument should be void should legal steps of any kind be taken to force payment, the latter provision was a valid and enforceable covenant not to sue, and the promise to pay constituted merely a moral obligation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Ernest N. Smith against W. G. MacDonald. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Denson, Cooley & Denson, of San Francisco, for appellant. Louis Ferrari, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, without leave to amend. The action was based upon a written instrument which the trial court held to constitute only a moral obligation. The instrument reads as follows:

"May first, 1912.

"I, W. G. MacDonald, hereby acknowledge my indebtedness to Ernest N. Smith in the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000).

"I agree to pay Ernest N. Smith interest at the rate 7 per cent. per annum on this amount ($5,000) with the understanding that the indebtedness may be retired in installments; in the event that installments are paid interest is to be computed only on balance due.

"In view of the fact that W. G. MacDonald and Ernest N. Smith were equal partners in the MacDonald Sales Company up to the signing of this acknowledgment and attached agreement, and that W. G. MacDonald voluntarily agreed to release Ernest N. Smith from his partnership with attending possibilities of considerable financial loss, and agrees to pay Ernest N. Smith ultimately a sum considerably greater than his actual partnership interest, it is part and parcel of this acknowledgment of indebtedness that it shall be void should legal steps of any kind be taken to force payment, or should the indebtedness be transferred without the permission of W. G. MacDonald.

"[Signed] W. G. MacDonald.

"Accepted: [Signed] Ernest N. Smith."

We think the clause in this unusual document, that if suit should be brought to enforce collection the obligation shall be void, is a valid and enforceable covenant not to sue, and that the promise to pay the sum agreed constituted merely a moral obligation.

The parties to this agreement were of age and of competent understanding; and as the contract appears to have been freely and voluntarily entered into, and is one that is not against public policy in any respect, it should be upheld. It would be a grave injustice to defendant to hold that an action would lie to enforce the payment of the amount mentioned in this instrument, when it appears that a part of the consideration for the promise to pay was the stipulation on the part of the payee that the obligation should be void if suit should be brought thereon. The right to enforce any obligation which the plaintiff may have had against the defendant was his, and he could do with it as he saw fit—could agree to relinquish it, or insist on preserving it. Whichever course plaintiff deemed proper to adopt was no matter of public concern, and affects no question of public policy. Gitler et al. v. Russian Co. et al., 124 App. Div. 273, 108 N. Y. Supp. 793; 9 Cyc. 335; Richardson v. Thomas et al., 28 Ark. 387.

In the case of Barnard v. Cushing, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 230, 38 Am. Dec. 362, the payee of a note, at the time it was signed by the maker, indorsed thereon a promise not to compel payment thereof, but to receive payment when convenient for the maker to pay. At page 235 of 4 Metc. (Mass.) (38 Am. Dec. 362) of the opinion the court used the following language:

"The result is that no action can be maintained upon this promise. Taking it with all its stipulations, it is only an honorary engagement —a memorandum by which the promisees may remind the promisors * * * of an honorary obligation outstanding against them."

In Greenhood on Public Policy and the Law of Contracts, p. 469, it is said:

"An agreement by which a creditor deprives himself of the power to enforce a debt, but confides the question of payment to the discretion of the debtor, is not void."

In Nelson v. Van Bonnhorst, 29 Pa. 352, the court, in passing upon a similar case, said:

"If it is reasonable for a man to release a debt altogether, surely it is reasonable to release the remedies of a debt, not itself released, as is done in covenants not to sue; and, even if it be not reasonable, we cannot set up our reasons or the public reasons for that of the contracting parties, and make a contract for them that is contrary to their plain intention, without violating the first principles of freedom and the very nature of contract relations. We cannot read this contract at all as a legal obligation, as the right to enforce the obligation is by mutual consent expressly withheld; thus the obligation is merely a moral one."

MORNEAULT v. NATIONAL SURETY CO.

(Civ. 2194.)

1. ATTACHMENT ⟹347—SUIT ON BOND.
Suit will lie upon attachment bond given by attaching plaintiff when judgment for defendant for costs has been satisfied by such plaintiff in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, as to when an action is pending.

2. ATTACHMENT ⟹351—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.
Where attachment defendant kept automobile for sale only, depreciation in value during time it was held under attachment would be a proper basis for damages, in suit on attachment bond, and rental value should have been eliminated.

3. ATTACHMENT ⟹350—SUIT ON BONDS—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.
In suit on attachment bond for damages for detention of automobile which plaintiff, attachment defendant, kept for sale only, it was incumbent upon plaintiff to show the market value of the automobile both when taken and when returned to him.

4. ATTACHMENT ⟹350—SUIT ON BOND—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.
In suit on attachment bond for damages for detention of automobile, judgment, as to depreciation in value $500, held to lack support in evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Felix R. Morneault against the National Surety Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Benjamin E. Page and Arthur C. Hurt, both of Los Angeles (Arthur F. Coe, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. Eugene A. Holmes, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the principal sum of $500. The alleged liability of the defendant to the plaintiff arose by reason of the following facts: On about the 15th of April, 1915, one Dennis commenced an action against respondent herein, seeking to recover the sum of $1,000. Dennis took out a writ of attachment in the action, giving a bond in the sum of $500 to indemnify the plaintiff for any damages which he might suffer by reason of the issuance of the writ. The undertaking on attachment was in the usual form and was conditioned that:

"The said plaintiff will pay all costs that may be awarded to the said defendant and all damages which the said defendant may sustain by reason of the said attachment, not exceeding the sum of five hundred and no/100 ($500.00) dollars. * * *"

Upon receiving the writ of attachment the sheriff proceeded to levy upon an automobile owned by respondent here, who was the defendant in the case mentioned, and the automobile was held under attachment from April 16, 1915, to August 2d of the same year. On the latter date judgment was entered in favor of this respondent in the attachment suit, which judgment was that the plaintiff should take nothing and that defendant recover costs in the sum of $20.75. The costs were paid and the judgment was thereby satisfied. This action, brought to recover from the surety on the attachment bond damages alleged to have been sustained by the defendant in the attachment suit by reason of the attachment, was commenced on October 25, 1915.

[1] Appellant's first point is that this action cannot be maintained because the time allowed within which an appeal might be taken from the judgment in the attachment suit had not expired when the complaint of this plaintiff was filed. We have already noted that the judgment in the attachment suit was in favor of the defendant for costs and that the costs were paid and the judgment satisfied. We do not think that after voluntarily satisfying the judgment the plaintiff in the attachment suit could have maintained an appeal from that judgment. If he could not, then the judgment was final upon satisfaction being entered. Section 1049, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that an action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, "or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied."

The main contention urged on the part of the appellant goes to the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings made by the court. The trial judge found that plaintiff had been deprived of the use of the automobile from April 16 to August 2, 1915, and that said use during said period was reasonably worth the sum of $545. He found that plaintiff was damaged further by reason of the attachment in the amount of $500, that sum representing the depreciation in value of the automobile during the period just mentioned. The total amount of damages found to have been sustained was the sum of these two items, to wit, $1,045. As the maximum of the undertaking was $500, judgment was entered for that sum.

[2] It seems very clear to us that plaintiff could not be allowed compensation for being deprived of the use of his automobile and also for the amount of depreciation in value of the machine. We think that the damages to be recovered in an action of this kind depend upon the use to which the owner of the property would put the same had his possession of it been undisturbed. If the evidence in this case shows that the plaintiff was using his automobile for his convenience or in his business, then the rental value of the same would seem to be a proper basis upon which to estimate the damages for its detention. On the other hand, if the evidence shows that the plaintiff held the automobile for sale, making no such use of it as has been described, then any depreciation in its value might properly furnish a like basis for the estimation of damages. Under conditions first instanced, it would not appear that the attachment defendant would have sold his machine had he had it in his possession, with liberty so to do; hence he would have lost nothing by reason of depreciation, because he would have continued to retain the machine. We think the evidence in this case negatives any claim for the value of the use of the automobile and that the evidence shows that defendant at the time the vehicle was taken from his possession was holding it for purposes of sale only. On this point he said:

"I did not drive the car much during the first part of the year 1915, you know, because I wanted to sell it, but I left it in the garage a while for sale. I left it there two or three weeks, I guess. I took it out one time, I got an opportunity and took it out. I went down to see a piece of real estate at Monrovia. I was trying to exchange some property I had north and went down there to see about an exchange of the property for the autuomobile. * * * I always borrowed a license when I was using the car. I think three times was all that I used it while I had it in the garage. When I took it from the garage I used their number. I had different parties looking at it and I put it on sale. I was not using it the first part of the year otherwise than demonstrating it and showing it to customers. I did not use it otherwise prior to April, 1915. I was offering it for sale; I wanted to sell it as I was getting short of money. The Court: What was the value of the car when the sheriff took it? A. I refused $850 for it just a few days before they took it, they offered me in the garage for the car. I wouldn't take it; I wanted a thousand dollars and all they offered me was $850, and I didn't take it. I sold it for $450 cash and a lot in Santa Monica. I was figuring the lot was worth $200. * * *"

Plaintiff nowhere testified that had he remained in possession of the car he would have made use of it in any way at all except to offer it for sale. That he had no such other use for it is corroborated by the fact that upon regaining possession of it he proceeded to sell it. The result of this testimony, we think, must be to eliminate from consideration altogether the finding of the court as to what the rental value of the machine was during the period from April 16th to August 2d. The fact, of course, is to be noted that as the maximum liability on the bond was $500, if either item of damage as found by the court is sustained by the evidence, the judgment will be supported, for the value of the use is fixed at $545 and the depreciation in value at $500 in the court's findings. We then turn to a consideration of the evidence touching the value of the property.

[3, 4] It was necessary for the plaintiff to show both the value of the automobile when taken under the writ and its value when returned to him. As to that matter the court made this finding:

"That the said automobile belonging to said Morneault and so attached was upon the 16th day of April 1915, worth $1,150. That upon the 2d day of August, 1915, the date when said automobile was returned to the possession of the plaintiff herein, it was worth $650 and no more."

It must be said that there is some evidence to sustain the finding as to the value of the automobile as fixed by the court as of the date when the attachment was made as being $1,150. Plaintiff's witnesses were contradictory upon that point. A witness, who had long experience in handling the particular kind and manufacture of machine as that of the plaintiff, testified that the machine when he saw it before the attachment was levied was worth $850. A witness who had never seen the machine stated that, basing his opinion upon a description of the car as given by the first witness, he would say it was worth about $1,150. Considerable testimony was given as to the rate of depreciation of the machine, but an examination of that testimony will show that it all had reference to a machine in use, a large element of depreciation being "wear and tear." There was no testimony fixing the value of the automobile at the time it was received back by the plaintiff, except that given by the plaintiff himself and which we have already quoted. That testimony referred to the amount received by the plaintiff when he finally traded the car for $450 cash and a lot. There is nothing in that testimony which indicates what the market value of the machine was at the time the attachment was released. What the plaintiff actually received for it may have been more or less than its market value. And so, we think, that the finding as to depreciation in value of the car being $500 lacks support in the evidence.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

1. EVIDENCE ⊜448 — PAROL EVIDENCE AS TO CONTRACT—ADMISSIBILITY.
Where evidence indicated that letters constituted the contract, parol testimony as to oral negotiations prior to the written contract was admissible, for the purpose of showing the circumstances and situation of the parties under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1856, 1860.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜204(3)—SCOPE—PRESERVATION OF EXCEPTIONS.
Where defendants raised no objection to the admission of oral testimony as to oral negotiations preliminary to written contracts, for the purpose of showing the circumstances of the parties, they could not complain on appeal of such admission.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜995—REVERSAL—GROUNDS.
That plaintiff's case was not made out by a preponderance of the evidence is not sufficient reason for disturbing the judgment for plaintiff, since it must be upheld, if supported by any substantial evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Benj. K. Knight, Judge.

Action by J. & H. Goodwin, Limited, against John Franich, Martin Franich, and Peter Scurich, copartners doing business as Scurich Bros. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Smith, of Santa Cruz, for appellants. Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this action plaintiff sought and recovered judgment in the sum of $959.85, claimed and found by the lower court to be due plaintiff for a balance of $4,000 loaned to defendants on the 17th day of October, 1912, pursuant to the terms of a contract previously entered into by said plaintiff and defendants.

[1, 2] The contract and the negotiations between the plaintiff and the defendants were evidenced by letters. The court permitted, over plaintiff's objection, testimony as to oral negotiations relative to the transaction prior to the date of the letters which contained the terms of the contract, limiting its admission, however, to the purpose of enabling the court to determine whether or not the contract was contained in the letters. The defendants made no objection to the court's ruling at that time, but urge for the first time upon appeal that the testimony should have been admitted generally. Inasmuch as the evidence showed that the letters dated October 12 and October 16, 1912, constituted the contract between the parties, it was not error, we think, to admit the testimony as to oral negotiations prior to the written contract for the limited purpose of showing the circumstances and situation of the parties. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1856, 1860. But, however this may be, since the defendants raised no objection to the limited purpose for which the testimony in question was admitted, they cannot now be heard to complain. Morgan v. Hugg, 5 Cal. 409; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 534.

[3] The only other point attempted to be made by appellant is that plaintiff's case has not been made out by a preponderance of the evidence. Were this true, it would not be a sufficient reason for disturbance of the judgment. If the judgment is supported by any substantial evidence—and in the instant case there is abundant evidence—the judgment must be upheld.

UHTE v. ROSENTHAL et al. (Civ. 2428.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜184(5)—POLICEMEN—PROMOTION—"MERITORIOUS ACTS"—"ASCERTAINED MERIT."
Where police commissioners under St. 1913, p. 1613, art. 13, § 8, providing for promotion under civil service based on ascertained merit, gave notice of examination wherein rating would be "upon meritorious acts," there was no distinction between the terms "ascertained merit" and "meritorious acts," and the commission did not by omission indicate intent not to promote on basis of ascertained merit.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜184(5)—POLICEMEN—PROMOTION.
In arranging for promotion of policemen under St. 1913, p. 1602, a member of the department could not complain that the commissioners required, as prerequisite to promotion, that a claim of meritorious acts in writing be filed and verified by the chief of police, since it was proper for the board to investigate acts of policemen seeking promotion, since State Civil Service Act, directing the state civil service commission to keep record of the efficiency of employés, does not apply to municipal police departments.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜184(5)—POLICEMEN—PROMOTIONS.
Under San Francisco Charter, art. 13, § 10, permitting commissioners to strike names of candidates for promotion from the register after they have remained thereon more than two years, one whose name had remained on the register for six years could not complain that his name was unlawfully stricken therefrom.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸184(5)—POLICEMEN—PROMOTIONS.

San Francisco Charter, art. 13, § 10, permitting the civil service commission to strike names from the lists for promotion after they have remained thereon for two years, is not in conflict with the other charter provisions as to civil service.

5. STATUTES ⟸206—CONSTRUCTION.

The rule that all parts of a statute must be so construed as to be effective applies in construction of a municipal charter relating to civil service and promotions thereunder.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Suit by Charles Uhte against B. B. Rosenthal and others. Judgment for defendants on plaintiff's refusal to amend his complaint after demurrer thereto was sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward F. Moran, of San Francisco, for appellant. George Lull, City Atty., and M. T. Dooling, Jr., Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff is a policeman of the city and county of San Francisco. Pursuant to a civil service examination which he passed on January 22, 1910, his name was placed on the eligible list for promotion from policeman to corporal of the police force. He participated in another examination conducted by the respondents, who are members of the civil service commission of the city and county, on January 8, 1916, and he brings this suit to enjoin the commission from removing his name and that of seven other policemen in whose interest he prosecutes this action, from the existing eligible list for corporals, without notice and hearing, and to restrain the commission from examining and rating the papers of the applicants who participated in the examination of January 8, 1916, and from adopting an eligible list based on that examination.

It must be conceded that by the charter of San Francisco the civil service commissioners must provide for promotion in the classified service on the basis of ascertained merit and standing upon examination. Charter, § 8, art. 13, Stats. 1913, p. 1602. It is contended by plaintiff, who is the appellant here, that the commission threatens to ignore the element of ascertained merit in placing names on the new eligible list for promotion. "The plan of promotion," says appellant, "is fully outlined in the notice of examination, and nothing is said therein of an allowance in any way for ascertained merit of applicants, and the commission do not propose to make any such allowance."

[1, 2] In this notice, under the head of "Meritorious Public Service," it is provided that credits not exceeding 20 will be allowed for acts of merit as in the judgment of the commission may seem just and proper; 80 credits will be allowed for a clean record as a member of the department, subject to deductions, according to a carefully prepared and elaborate schedule, for exceeding authority, insubordination, neglect of duty, assault, cowardice, intoxication, and other minor offenses. The appellant seems to contend that meritorious acts, as used in connection with this notice of examination, are not equivalent to "ascertained merit" as used in the charter. But we can see no distinction between the meaning of those terms as used in the two instruments; and undoubtedly the purpose of those statements in the notice was to provide a method for ascertaining the merit of the candidate for a place upon the eligible list for promotion. It is also provided in this notice that the applicants claiming credits for meritorious acts must present their claims before 1:30 p. m. of the day of the examination, namely, on January 8, 1916, in writing, so that they may be verified by the chief of police. Of this the petitioner complains. We can see no merit in his objection to this method of checking up his statement as to his merits. It is argued that a fund is provided by the city for the commission to use in determining "ascertained merit," presumably by some sort of surveillance of members of the police force who may become or are applicants for positions upon the eligible list. Even so, this does not preclude the verification of the statement of the applicant as to his merits by the chief of police for the benefit of the commission.

Appellant also contends that "ascertained merit" is fully defined in the fifth subdivision of the State Civil Service Act (Stats. 1913, p. 1035; Deering's General Laws, p. 182), and that, in the absence of a better definition, this is binding upon, or at least should be adopted by, the civil service commission in the premises. "That subdivision," says appellant, "directs the state commission to establish in all offices and places of employment, records of individual efficiency of holders of positions in performing their duties." This section of the Civil Service Act is not binding upon the civil service commission of the city and county of San Francisco; but, even assuming that this would be a proper method of procedure, the records of the chief of police of San Francisco, and of the police department thereof open to him, will undoubtedly furnish material for a report by the chief upon any claim of merit made by any police officer seeking promotion to the position of corporal, or that his name be placed upon the eligible list for such promotion; and, as we have said, there is no reason why the commission may not use the chief of police, his knowledge, and his acquaintance with the records of his department, to assist it in ascertaining, in connection with the statement of the applicant himself, his merit to a place upon the eligible list. Of course, we do not mean to hold that the chief's report would be necessarily and absolutely binding on the commission.

In view of what we have said, there is no merit whatever in the contention of petitioner that the civil service commission have announced negatively by omission that no consideration will be given to ascertained merit, and that an eligible list will be adopted without that important factor as a basis. The published conditions of the examination show that the commission intends to give full weight to ascertained merit, the same to be learned by the commission under a system and to be marked according to a schedule of credits which seem to be perfectly fair and just.

[3] Another contention of appellant is that the civil service commission have no right to strike names from the eligible register arbitrarily. The present eligible list, upon which appellant's name appears and from which he alleges that the commission threatens to remove it, was made up in the year 1910 upon an examination by the commission conducted in that year. This appears from plaintiff's complaint herein. Article 13, § 10, of the charter, contains the following provision:

"The commissioners may strike off names of candidates from the register after they have remained thereon more than two years."

[4, 5] This eligible list being more than two years old, the commission had authority, under this provision of the charter, to strike appellant's name therefrom.

It is contended that this provision of section 10 is in conflict with the provisions of other sections of the charter. We have examined these other provisions, and see no necessary conflict between the power given to the commission by the words quoted from section 10 and the limitations upon the authority of the commission contained in other sections of the charter. The well-recognized rule of statutory construction that all parts of a statute must be construed so as to be effective applies here; and the case of Bannerman v. Boyle, 160 Cal. 197, 116 Pac. 732, relied upon by appellant in this behalf, has no application to the authority of the commission in the case at bar.

Finally, we see no abuse of discretion in the proceedings of the board of commissioners as indicated by the allegation of the complaint in this action. A general demurrer to this complaint, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, was correctly sustained; and the judgment against appellant following his refusal to amend his complaint after the order sustaining this demurrer was therefore correct, and is affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜757(1)—ALTERNATIVE METHOD—PRINTING RECORD IN BRIEF—STATUTE.
Under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, on an appeal under the alternative method, the parties must print in their brief such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court.

2. INTEREST ⊜39(5) — OPEN ACCOUNT FOR GOODS—ASCERTAINMENT OF BALANCE.
In an action for the reasonable value of goods on an open account, interest is allowable only from the date upon which the balance is ascertained.

3. INTEREST ⊜39(2)—DATE OF JUDGMENT—STATUTE.
Plaintiff is allowed interest by operation of law (Civ. Code, § 1920; Code Civ. Proc. § 1035) from the date of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by William Sea, Jr., against J. P. Lorden. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

H. L. Welch, of El Centro, and B. S. Gregory, of San Francisco, for appellant. William Sea, Jr., of Calexico, pro se.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. [1] This is an appeal prosecuted under what is known as the alternative method, a method characterized by Mr. Justice Shaw, in Estate of Gamble, 166 Cal. 253, 135 Pac. 970, as "a pitfall for the unwary." Such it has been, and such it continues to be; but the virtue of continually calling the attention of the profession to the repeated departures from proper procedure under the method has had little more reward than that which is said to be virtue's own. These remarks are prompted by the fact that the present case exhibits another instance of a failure to observe the provisions of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect that, on an appeal under the alternative method, the parties must print in their briefs "such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." In a recent opinion we have cited many cases to the proposition that:

"Appellate courts will not look to the typewritten transcripts filed under the alternative method of appeal for the purpose of determining whether ground exists for the reversal of the judgment appealed from." Barker Bros. v. Joos, 171 Pac. 1085.

In the present case there has been some effort to comply with the rule requiring a printing in the briefs of the necessary parts of the record; but enough does not appear to enable us to pass upon the questions which the appellant seeks to present upon the appeal, with the exception of the one which we discuss below.

[2, 3] The statements of facts in the briefs of the respective parties agree in showing, and extracts from the findings of fact indicate, that the action is one to recover the reasonable value of goods sold and delivered. The statements of fact made in the brief of the respondent, and the direction for judgment as stated in the findings, printed in appellant's brief, show that the trial court in its judgment allowed interest upon the claim sued on from the date of the last delivery of goods; but in an action for the reasonable value of goods on an open account interest is allowable only from the day upon which a balance is ascertained. Erickson v. Stockton & T. C. R. Co., 148 Cal. 206, 82 Pac. 961; Merchants' Coll. Agency v. Gopcevic, 23 Cal. App. 216, 137 Pac. 609. The judgment itself is not before us in the printed briefs, but we may safely direct a modification of it by striking out any language it contains making an allowance of interest from any date. Under the decisions above cited, the respondent is entitled to interest only from the date of the judgment, and he is allowed that by operation of law. Civ. Code, § 1920; Code Civ. Proc. § 1035.

The judgment is modified, by striking therefrom such part thereof as allows interest on the principal sum for which judgment is awarded the respondent, and, as so modified, it is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

In re THOMPSON. (Cr. 430.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸48 — DISBARMENT OF ATTORNEY—NOTICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 287, providing that an attorney may be suspended upon his conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude, "in which case the record of conviction shall be conclusive evidence," an attorney may be suspended, without notice or hearing, upon production of the record of conviction of a foreign court.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸39—DISBARMENT OF ATTORNEY—CONVICTION OF CRIME.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 287, providing that an attorney may be suspended on the ground that he has been convicted "of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude," it is immaterial whether the crime is a felony or misdemeanor as defined by Pen. Code, § 17.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸39—DISBARMENT OF ATTORNEY—CONVICTION OF CRIME—"MORAL TURPITUDE."

An attorney convicted under U. S. Rev. St. § 5470 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 10364), of receiving and concealing $15,000 stolen from the mails, and sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment in a United States penitentiary for four years at hard labor, was convicted of a crime involving "moral turpitude," and hence was properly suspended under Code Civ. Proc. § 287.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Moral Turpitude.]

4. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸61—DISBARMENT OF ATTORNEY—REINSTATEMENT.

Evidence held insufficient to warrant reinstatement of an attorney disbarred under Code Civ. Proc. § 287, after conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude.

Original application by Fred H. Thompson for reinstatement as a member of the Bar of the State of California. Application denied.

Ingle Carpenter, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. James A. Gibson, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Bar Ass'n.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. On January 6, 1911, the petitioner, together with another, was indicted by the United States grand jury for a violation of the terms of section 5470 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 10364), which provides, in effect, that "Any person who shall buy, receive, or conceal, or aid in buying, receiving, or concealing" any of various documents, contracts, evidences of indebtedness, or articles, all of which are specifically mentioned in the statute, "knowing any such article or thing to have been stolen or embezzled from the mail, or out of any post office, branch post office or other authorized depository for mail matter, or from any person having custody thereof, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than two thousand dollars, and by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than five years." The indictment was in four counts. The first count charged that the petitioner and his associate "did willfully, knowingly, unlawfully and feloniously receive from one Orlando F. Altorre * * * and conceal and aid him * * * in concealing certain articles and things of value, to wit, divers notes of the national bank currency, * * * and divers United States notes, treasury notes, legal tender notes, gold certificates, and silver certificates, * * * in the whole amounting to and representing * * * the sum of * * * $5,000, and of the value of * * * $5,000, * * * which * * * had theretofore been willfully, knowingly, unlawfully, and feloniously stolen, taken and carried away from the mails of the United States, in the post office * * * at the city of Los Angeles * * * by the said Orlando F. Altorre, * * * the said Fred H. Thompson * * * then and there * * * well knowing the same * * * to have been so willfully, knowingly, unlawfully and feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away from the said mails of the United States, as aforesaid, and well knowing said 'articles' to be then and there articles and things of value feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away from said mails of the United States, as aforesaid." The remaining three counts, although differently worded, were in effect the same as the first count, so far as any of the questions involved in the present proceeding are concerned, one of them being related to currency of the value of $5,000, and the two others to currency of the value of $10,000. Upon a trial in the United States District Court in and for the Southern District of California, the petitioner was found guilty as charged in the indictment. On the first count he was sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 and to be imprisoned in the United States penitentiary at McNeil Island, Wash., for a term of four years, at hard labor. The sentence was the same upon the third count, the imprisonment under that count to commence at the conclusion of the term for which sentence was pronounced under the first count. The sentence was imposed on January 3, 1912. The petitioner prosecuted a writ of error to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, but the judgment was affirmed on February 3, 1913. Thompson v. United States, 202 Fed. 401, 120 C. C. A. 575, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206. On July 16, 1915, the Los Angeles Bar Association filed with the Supreme Court of the state an accusation against the petitioner, alleging his conviction of the crimes above mentioned. A certified copy of the record of conviction was filed with the accusation. On August 10, 1915, the Supreme Court made its order transferring to this court the proceeding instituted by the filing of the accusation and record of conviction, and on August 12, 1915, this court, without notice to the petitioner, entered its order disbarring him and striking his name from the roll of attorneys. On November 9, 1916, the petitioner filed with this court his application for reinstatement as a member of the bar upon the ground of a reformation of his character. The application was never insisted upon until February 15, 1918, when he filed a paper in the nature of a supplemental application for reinstatement, in which the position is also taken that the order of disbarment is void.

[1] The order was made pursuant to the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect that "an attorney and counselor may be removed or suspended" upon "his conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, in which case the record of conviction shall be conclusive evidence." At the beginning of his brief the petitioner propounds the following question, as a basis for his argument:

"Can an attorney at law, upon the record of a foreign court, without notice and without an opportunity to be heard or to answer to the sufficiency of the record or deny the allegations therein contained, be removed or suspended?"

To the question thus broadly and generally stated an affirmative answer must be returned upon the authority of a case recently decided by this court, in which the record of conviction came from the same tribunal which passed sentence upon the petitioner (In re Shepard, 170 Pac. 442); and the opinion in that case answers, as well, practically all the specific points now presented for our consideration by the petitioner in support of the general question above stated. The questions which it does answer will receive no mention in this opinion beyond the statement just made.

Petitioner contends that "resort must be had to the laws of the United States to determine the grade of the offense" of which he was convicted. He insists that the Congress of the United States has not provided, in its penal legislation, a division of crimes into the two classes, felonies and misdemeanors, a division which is general under the laws of the various states. But the petitioner does not mean that, for according to section 335 of the federal Penal Code of 1910 (Act Cong. March 4, 1909, c. 321, 35 Stat. 1152 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 10509]), generally so-called, "all offenses which may be punished by death, or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, shall be deemed felonies. All other offenses shall be deemed misdemeanors." On March 4, 1909, and by the terms of the section quoted, the Congress appears for the first time to have marshaled all crimes against the laws of the United States under such an arrangement. The section, along with the general provisions of the Code mentioned, went into effect on January 1, 1910. The petitioner does not argue that section 335 of the federal Penal Code has no application in this proceeding, because of its having taken effect after the commission of the petitioner's offense; but he apparently assumes it, and the question at once suggests itself. It is not, however, necessary to decide it in this proceeding and we may go forward as if the Congress of the United States never had enacted such a measure.

"A felony is a crime which is punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison. Every other crime is a misdemeanor."

Manifestly, then, under California law, all crimes are either felonies or misdemeanors. Manifestly, also, section 17 was enacted for the purpose of providing a convenient division of crimes into the lesser and the greater, to the end that, in other legislation, the terminology and segregation provided by that section might be taken advantage of whenever, in such legislation, it became necessary to draw a distinction or to allow a difference between crimes of the greater and crimes of the lesser magnitude. But in section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure no distinction is made between the two grades of offense. It is true that the terminology of section 17 is there adopted, but not for the purpose of making use of the segregation there devised. Section 287 is as all-inclusive of crimes as is section 17 itself. The former is to be read as if, in terms, it provided for the removal of an attorney for the "conviction of any crime involving moral turpitude," for such is its legal effect. Therefore the crimes denounced by section 5470 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are within the terms of section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure whenever they involve moral turpitude.

[3] The petitioner takes the position that the crime of which he was convicted does not involve moral turpitude, and that the order of disbarment should be set aside for that reason. Many of the courts of the land have approved the definition given in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, to the effect that "everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals is done with turpitude." The offense committed by the petitioner comes within that definition. To receive $15,000 in currency from one who has stolen it from the mails, and to conceal and aid in the concealment of it, the receiver taking the money with knowledge of the theft, is surely not consonant with the principles of natural justice. Such a course of conduct is as surely dishonest and immoral. In addition to the definition of Bouvier, we may refer to the opinion in the Matter of Coffey, 123 Cal. 522, 56 Pac. 448, in which one convicted of attempted extortion is held to be guilty of an offense involving moral turpitude, and in which the definition is approved and adopted.

[4] These considerations cover all the points made by way of assault upon the integrity of the order of disbarment. There yet remains the question whether the petitioner is entitled to a reinstatement because of a reformation of his character. No satisfactory evidence is furnished us, showing either that the petitioner has reformed or that he has not. Several letters bearing upon the question of his conduct and character are now before us. None of them is verified, and the names of all the signers of them, except three, are appended in typewriting. A proceeding of this character presents serious questions for the consideration of a court. As we said, in effect, in the opinion in Re Shepard, supra, such a proceeding is one in which the public has a large interest. Whenever a lawyer has suffered disbarment, the order has been made principally with a view to the protection of the public from the possibility of harm being wrought by one who, having once been licensed to practice law, has been found unworthy the confidence of those who may need the services of lawyers. When a reinstatement is asked by one resting under such a judgment, his request cannot be granted except upon some formal showing of a reformation of character. It has been the usual practice in California to receive, in support of such applications, evidence in the form of affidavits (In re Treadwell, 114 Cal. 24, 45 Pac. 993; In re Shepard, 170 Pac. 442), although, in the Shepard Case, an unverified petition was presented as coming from a considerable number of judges and lawyers, in addition to the affidavits there considered. An opinion in another case refers to the evidence of reformation as having been in the form of "testimonials" signed by judges of the superior court and prominent attorneys. In re Burris, 147 Cal. 370, 81 Pac. 1077. These testimonials and the above-mentioned petition in the Shepard Case came from judges and lawyers of California, all of whom were probably known to the courts which passed upon the cases, and all of whom were morally bound by their oaths as attorneys at law not to recommend a disbarred attorney for reinstatement in the courts of their state unless they were satisfied of the rehabilitation of his character. Code Civ. Proc. § 282, subds. 1, 2. In the present proceeding there are nine signers of letters asking the reinstatement, including those whose names appear in typewriting, one or two of the communications being signed jointly by several. Of the nine, seven are lawyers, but they all reside in the state of Washington, where the petitioner also has had his residence. One of the remaining two signers is presumably a resident of California, as his letter was written from a place within the state. There is no evidence upon which to consider the petitioner's application for reinstatement.

The application is denied.

KYDD v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 2409.)

1. STATUTES ⟸206—CONSTRUCTION.
Statutes must be so construed that the whole, if possible, may stand.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸216(1) — ACQUISITION OF UTILITY—RIGHT OF FORMER EMPLOYÉS.
San Francisco Charter, art. 13, § 11, subd. B(2), as to employés of a public utility acquired by city continuing in their positions gives a preference only to such employés as secure standings in examinations.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸218(11)—ACQUISITION OF RAILWAY—RIGHT OF FORMER EMPLOYÉS.
In proceeding for writ of mandate to compel board of public works of San Francisco to restore petitioner to employment on municipal railway acquired by city while petitioner was an employé of former owner, petition was demurrable, where it failed to state that petitioner had secured standing in examinations.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸218(2)—DISCHARGE OF EMPLOYÉS—TRIAL.
San Francisco Charter, art. 13, § 12, providing that no employé in classified service shall be removed except for cause upon written charges, etc., would not apply to petitioner employed on municipal railroad, and he would be subject to discharge or suspension at any time without trial, in view of section 11, subd. a.

5. OFFICERS ⊜71 — RIGHT OF REMOVAL IN GENERAL.

In the absence of restraint imposed by statute, the power of appointment implies the power of removal.

6. PLEADING ⊜225(1)—DEMURRER—RIGHT TO AMEND.

That order sustaining demurrer to complaint was silent as to any amendment did not prevent judgment from being entered, the complaint having been amended three times and plaintiff having taken no steps to further amend up to the time of entry of judgment four months later.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Proceedings for a writ of mandate by Isaac F. Kydd against the City and County of San Francisco and Timothy J. Riordan and others, Commissioners constituting the Board of Public Works, etc. Judgment for defendants, and petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for appellant. George Lull, City Atty., of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a proceeding for a writ of mandate to compel the board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco to restore petitioner to a place of employment on the municipal railway. A demurrer to the third amended petition was sustained by the court below, before whom the proceeding was had, and, appellant having failed to further amend, judgment was entered in favor of defendants and against petitioner, and from this judgment this appeal is taken.

The substance of the facts as alleged in the third amended petition may be stated as follows: That on December 10, 1913, and for 20 years prior thereto petitioner was employed in the operating service of the "Presidio & Ferries Railroad Company" in San Francisco, and that under such employment he "had absolute charge and control of the operation of said street railroad"; that on the 10th day of December the franchise of said railroad expired, and it was acquired by the city and county of San Francisco; that petitioner was continued in said position from that date until June 1, 1914, at the same salary he was paid while in the employ of the Presidio & Ferries Railroad Company, at which time he was notified that he had been granted a leave of absence and need not report for work any longer, and has not been allowed to continue his duty and employment ever since; that he has demanded reinstatement, which has been refused. Appellant bases his action on section 11, art. 13, of the San Francisco Charter. That subdivision provides as follows:

"Subdivision B. The following persons securing standing on the eligible lists in examinations shall be preferred for appointment:

"1. Persons employed in the operating service of the Geary Street, Park & Ocean Railroad Company on May 5, 1912, such preference to be solely for employment in the municipal railroad service;

"2. Persons employed in the operating service of any public utility acquired by the city who have been so employed for not less than one year; and such persons so employed at the time a public utility is acquired by the city shall continue in their positions."

It is the contention of plaintiff that under this subdivision, it being in force and effect on the 10th day of December, 1913, when the defendant acquired the Presidio & Ferries Railway as a public utility, he is entitled to employment by defendant of a like nature and at the same salary he was receiving at the time when the said public utility was so acquired. This contention is predicated upon the provisions of subsection 2 of subdivision B, it being argued that the examinations provided for in subdivision B have no reference to persons who may have been in the operating service for more than one year of a public utility acquired by the city, and that such persons unqualifiedly continue in their positions without the necessity of any examination.

[1-3] Statutes must be so construed that the whole, if possible, may stand. So construed, the plain meaning of the statute is that the preference provided for was intended for those securing standing in examinations and to those alone. The petition not containing an averment of this precedent condition the demurrer was properly sustained.

[4] Irrespective of this conclusion, however, petitioner was subject to discharge or suspension at any time without trial.

Section 12, article 13, of the San Francisco Charter, providing for tenure of office by civil service employés, states that "no person employed in the classified civil service shall be removed or discharged except for cause upon written charges and after an opportunity to be heard in his own defense." It further provides that:

"The appointing officer or officers of a department may, for disciplinary or penal purposes, suspend a subordinate for a period not exceeding thirty days, and such suspension shall carry with it the loss of salary for the period of suspension."

The section, however, concludes with the following language:

"The provisions of this section shall not apply to persons employed in the operating department of any public utility."

[5] Petitioner being within that class, the limitation upon the powers of dismissal and suspension thus provided for do not apply to him. Moreover, the manager or superintending head of a public utility is excepted from article 13 of the charter dealing with civil service (subdivision "a," § 11). In the absence of restraint imposed by statute the power of appointment implies the power of removal.

[6] Appellant further complains of the action of the court in entering judgment after the order sustaining the demurrer, such order being silent as to any amendment. This omission did not prevent judgment from being entered. Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 533, 541, 23 Pac. 217; Aalwyn v. Cobe, 168 Cal. 165, 172, 142 Pac. 79. Appellant had already amended his complaint three times. The last demurrer was sustained May 31, 1917, and no steps were taken by him to further amend up to the time of the entry of judgment some four months later. From the facts as presented it is manifest that further amendment would have availed him nothing.

Judgment affirmed.

DORAN, BROUSE & PRICE v. HENRY COWELL LIME & CEMENT CO.

(Civ. 2169.)

1. SALES ⟸72(5)—QUALITY OF GOODS—APPROVAL OF ENGINEER.
Where a letter ordering cement recited that the cement should comply with specifications of a highway commission and be acceptable to their engineer, and the seller in reply stated that the cement "will easily meet the specifications of the" commission, after which communications passed between the parties relating to the price alone, the contract called for cement acceptable to the engineer.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸441(9) — PAROL EVIDENCE — PRELIMINARY NEGOTIATIONS.
Where a contract for the sale of cement consisted of letters and telegrams, it was error to admit oral evidence as to the terms of the agreement and negotiations leading up to the making of the contract.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1051(4)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.
Where the interpretation to be placed on letters and telegrams constituting a contract of sale was clear, the admission of oral evidence as to the terms of the agreement and the preliminary negotiations was harmless error.

4. SALES ⟸168(3)—QUALITY OF GOODS—DETERMINATION.
Where a contract for the sale of cement provided that the cement should meet the specifications of a highway commission and be acceptable to its engineer, the mere rejection of the cement by the commission, apart from the question of its quality, was not a compliance with the contract by the buyer, and, while a rejection by the engineer would be prima facie conclusive, such rejection could be impeached for gross mistake amounting to fraud.

5. SALES ⟸355(4)—ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—PLEADING AND PROOF.
In an action by a buyer for breach of a contract to deliver cement conforming to the specifications of a highway commission and acceptable to its engineer, plaintiff could not recover on the theory of a rejection of the cement by the engineer, where the only allegation in the complaint was that the cement had been rejected by the highway commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Doran, Brouse & Price against the Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. F. Chadbourne, of San Francisco, and Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Jones & Weller and John T. Jones, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover damages for breach of contract. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

By means of letters and telegrams passing between the plaintiff and the defendant, the terms of the contract were settled in writing. In a letter sent by the plaintiff to the defendant under date of August 11, 1909, the plaintiff said:

"As the result of the irresistible persuasive powers of your Mr. Guthrie, kindly ship us as promptly as possible eight hundred (800) barrels of Mt. Diablo cement. * * * This cement is to comply with the enclosed specification of the Los Angeles County Highway Commission, and to be acceptable to their engineer."

Then followed a statement concerning prices and payments. In the reply of defendant, the defendant said:

"Yours of the 11th at hand and in reply beg to say that our cement will easily meet the specifications of the Los Angeles County Highway Commission."

Then followed a statement somewhat different from that of the plaintiff in its letter concerning prices and freight payments. To the defendant's letter the plaintiff replied by telegram under date August 17, 1909, as follows:

"If you desire order fill according to our letter; if not cancel same. Wire reply."

The defendant replied by telegram as follows:

"Can fill order as per ours fourteenth and will prepay."

The defendant at the same time sent to the plaintiff a letter concerning said telegram, by quoting it and saying as follows:

"We now confirm same. The only difference between us is that there is a delivered price Ivy instead of a Los Angeles price plus a local out and so we thought best to wire you as above."

The plaintiff had a contract with the Los Angeles County Highway Commission for certain paving and concrete work on a road in that county, and purchased the cement for the purpose of using it in the performance of that contract. The specifications referred to in the plaintiff's first letter to the defendant were the specifications of the plaintiff's contract with the Los Angeles County Highway Commission. Those specifications, among other things, provided that:

"No material of any kind shall be used until it has been examined and approved by the engineer, and the decision of such engineer shall be final."

The specifications further provided for the quality of the cement to be used by fixing a standard and percentage which the cement must pass as compared with such standard.

[1] Appellant admits that under the contract the quality of cement furnished was to be such as would meet the specifications of the highway commission, but contends that there was no agreement that it should be "acceptable to their engineer." It is our opinion that under the terms of the contract the cement was to be acceptable to the engineer. Defendant's first letter to the plaintiff evaded that question, but its letter in reply to the plaintiff's telegram covered the point by asserting that there was no difference between the two parties on the contract, except as to another matter. This is shown by the quotations given above.

[2, 3] Appellant contends that the court erred in admitting oral evidence of the terms of the agreement, and in admitting oral evidence of the negotiations that led up to the making of the agreement for the purchase of the cement. We think that the evidence in question should not have been admitted, but our interpretation of the written contract makes that error harmless, since upon the writings alone the point in question must have been decided against appellant.

Appellant next contends that the evidence is insufficient to support finding No. V of the court, wherein the court found "that the said cement so shipped to plaintiff as aforesaid did not comply with the specifications of the said Los Angeles County Highway Commission, in this, that the cement was not of the grade of fineness as required by said specifications, and the said cement and all thereof was rejected by the Los Angeles County Highway Commission, and plaintiff was not allowed to use the same on said work." The only testimony offered at the trial concerning the quality of the cement furnished by the defendant was testimony given by experts introduced as witnesses by the defendant. That testimony showed positively and without conflict that the cement was of the grade of fineness as required by said specifications. Therefore in that respect the evidence is not sufficient to support such finding.

[4] Appellant's next contention is stated as follows:

"The mere rejection of the cement by the Los Angeles County Highway Commission, or its engineer, is not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover without a showing that the cement was in good faith tested according to the contract and found to be below the specifications."

We agree that a rejection of the cement by the highway commission, considered apart from any rejection by the engineer, would not be sufficient without such showing of the facts concerning the quality of the cement. On the other hand, the terms of the specifications are such that a decision of the engineer rejecting the cement would have been prima facie sufficient. Such decision would have been final, unless impeached by facts showing fraud or gross mistake amounting to fraud. American-Hawaiian Eng., etc., Co. v. Butler, 165 Cal. 497, 513, 133 Pac. 616, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 44.

[5] But there is no allegation in the complaint that the cement contracted for was ever rejected by the engineer for the Los Angeles County Highway Commission. The only allegation on this point is contained in paragraph IV of the complaint, and is to the effect "that said cement and all thereof was rejected by the said Los Angeles County Highway Commission, and the plaintiff was not allowed to use the same on said work." Neither is there any finding to the effect that the cement was rejected by the engineer. So far as appears from the findings, the engineer may have certified that the cement furnished by the defendant was fit to be accepted and the highway commission may have, wrongfully perhaps, refused to accept his decision. At all events, when the plaintiff in this action seeks to base its right of recovery upon a rejection of the cement by the highway commission, without any allegation or finding of its rejection by the engineer, the plaintiff cannot prevail without first showing that in fact the cement did not comply with said specifications.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. MARTIN. (Cr. 710.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 13, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1131(4)—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL.

In a criminal case, where appellant fails to file a brief or to appear, the appeal might properly be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabannis, Judge.

Proceeding by the People against Edward Martin. From judgment for the People, Edward Martin appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Cochrane, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. In this case the appellant failed to file a brief in support of his appeal, or to appear before the court on the date set for the argument thereof, and the appeal might properly have been dismissed upon that ground. We have, however, carefully examined the record, and find that there was sufficient evidence to support the judgment, that the court fairly instructed the jury, and that there were no errors in the admission or rejection of evidence.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

MOORE v. GUAJARDO. (Civ. 2284.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹757(1) — ALTERNATIVE METHOD—PRINTING RECORD—STATUTE.
On an appeal presented by the alternative method, Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, presumes that without examining the written transcript the court will rely solely upon those portions of the record which the parties print in their briefs.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹757(1)—ALTERNATIVE METHOD—FINDINGS NOT REVIEWABLE.
Where appellant by the alternative method has not printed with his brief a copy of his notice of appeal and has printed no part of the judgment roll, the appellate court has not before it any of the findings which he says the evidence is insufficient to sustain.

Action by William H. Moore, Jr., as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of H. J. Edwards, bankrupt, substituted as plaintiff in the place of Harry J. Edwards, against Arturo Guajardo. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

D. L. Ault, of Calexico, and W. F. Frazier, of Oakland, for appellant. Wm. P. Butcher, of Santa Barbara, and W. T. Craig, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. [1] In their brief, counsel for appellant inform us that this is an appeal by defendant from an adverse judgment rendered upon the second cause of action set out in plaintiff's complaint, and that "the solitary ground of appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings." The record on appeal has been prepared under the alternative method, without a printed transcript. Upon an appeal presented in this manner the law presumes that, without examining the typewritten transcript, the court will rely solely upon those portions of the record, which the parties print in their briefs. Code Civ. Proc. § 953c; Barker Bros. v. Joos, 171 Pac. 1085.

[2] Appellant has not printed with his brief a copy of his notice of appeal, nor has he printed any part of the judgment roll. Therefore we have not before us any of the findings which he says the evidence is insufficient to sustain. Counsel tell us in their brief that said second cause of action is one in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of lumber alleged to have been furnished to the defendant at his request, used in the erection of a certain building. They say that the evidence is insufficient to show that the lumber was furnished at the request of the defendant. They have printed some extracts from the evidence, but do not even assert it to be a fact that these extracts constitute the whole of the evidence relating to the supposed issue. That there was other evidence on that subject is shown by additional extracts from the evidence as printed in the brief for respondent. These additional extracts as produced by the respondent do tend to show that the lumber was furnished at the request of the defendant.

From the record as presented to us for consideration, we are unable to ascertain what findings were made, and we are unable to ascertain that the evidence is insufficient to support any finding made.

MOOSIOS v. RUSCONI. (Civ. 2203.)

CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟹170(2) — LIABILITY OF ATTACHING LESSOR.
The lessor of land for one-half the crop and advances, who attached and took possession of the whole crop, and personally and through the sheriff refused, on demand, to deliver possession to the lessees' mortgagee, was guilty of conversion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by Sam Moosios against Louis Rusconi. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. Cosgrave and Miles Wallace, both of Fresno, for appellant. N. Lindsay South and C. K. Bonestell, both of Fresno, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for conversion of a lot of beans upon which plaintiff held a chattel mortgage. The trial court found against the defendant, and rendered judgment in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $700, the value of the beans found to have been converted.

The defendant leased a parcel of land in Fresno county to Harry Sidery, Y. Colivas, and Louis Fatseas, mortgagors of the plaintiff to be farmed on equal shares. In addition to receiving one-half of the crop, the defendant was to be reimbursed for any advances he might make to his lessees for the purpose of enabling them to produce and harvest the crop, this reimbursement to be made out of the lessees' share thereof at the time it was harvested, at which time, also, the defendant was to receive from the lessees his share thereof due as rent. Just prior to October 28, 1915, plaintiff and defendant apparently became apprehensive as to how the crop of beans would be divided, and on the forenoon of that day the plaintiff obtained from the lessees a promissory note for $750, payable one day after date, for supplies and advances furnished them; the note being secured by a chattel mortgage on the crop, and providing that, if not paid when due, the mortgagee should be entitled to possession of the mortgaged property. On the afternoon of that day the defendant began an action against his lessees for recovery of the amount of advances made by him under the provisions of the lease, and the sheriff, acting under a writ of attachment issued in that action, and while the beans were yet on the vines took possession of the same. Later he harvested the crop and delivered one-half thereof to the defendant. In the meantime, the note of the lessees to plaintiff being overdue and unpaid, the plaintiff demanded possession of one-half of the crop both of the defendant and of the sheriff. They refused to comply with this demand, and there is nothing in the record to show what became of the proportion of the crop to which, under the terms of his chattel mortgage, the plaintiff was clearly entitled. Prior to the trial defendant's attachment suit against the lessees was dismissed, upon the ground that it was prematurely brought; it appearing to have been instituted before the defendant was entitled either to his share of the crop or to repayment of advances claimed by him to have been made.

From a mere statement of the facts it appears too plain to require argument that, upon the failure of the lessees to pay to plaintiff the amount of their note, he, under the provisions of the mortgage already noticed, was entitled to the possession of one-half of the crop of beans, and that the defendant, making no claim to more than one-half the crop, having through the sheriff—who, in effect was his agent—taken possession of the whole thereof, and having both personally and through the sheriff refused upon demand to deliver to the plaintiff the part to which he was entitled, was guilty of conversion. It follows that the conclusion of the trial court to that effect was correct.

PEOPLE ex rel. LEMOORE LAND & FRUIT GROWING CO. et al. v. CITY OF LEMOORE et al. (Civ. 1810.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 27, 1918. Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Rehearing June 24, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜34 — ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—MULTIPLICITY OF PARCELS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

New territory held to constitute more than one body of land, some of the parcels being inhabited, and others uninhabited so that they should have been separately submitted, and as to the former the procedure indicated by St. 1913, p. 592, § 6, should have been followed, and as to the latter the procedure of St. 1899, p. 37, should have been followed.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜34 — ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—CONTIGUOUS BODY OF LAND—CONNECTION BY ROAD.

Two parcels of land sought to be annexed to a city were not made a continuous and contiguous body by an attempt to join them through the instrumentality of a portion of a public road 30 feet wide and 1,650 feet long.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜33(9) — ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—INTERFERENCE BY COURTS.

The courts have the right to interfere with the annexation of territory to a municipality when some substantial provision of the law has not been followed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Proceeding by the People of the State of California, by U. S. Webb, Attorney General, on the relation of the Lemoore Land & Fruit Growing Company, a corporation, and J. H. Fox, against the City of Lemoore, Frank Blakeley, and others. From judgment for the People, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. E. Kilpatrick and J. L. C. Irwin, both of Hanford, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Haven & Athearn, of San Francisco, and H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The purpose of the proceeding was to test the validity of an attempted annexation to the city of Lemoore of 308½ acres of land designated as "the 1916 addition to the city of Lemoore." A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and defendant declining to answer, judgment was rendered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint annulling such purported annexation. The question therefore is as to the sufficiency of the complaint to justify the decree.

It is not disputed that there are in force in California three separate statutes under which annexations of territory to municipalities may be made: Act of 1889 (Stats. of 1889, p. 358), of 1899 (Stats. of 1899, p. 37), and of 1913 (Stats. of 1913, p. 587).

The distinctive features of these acts, as far as germane to the present consideration, and pointed out by respondents, are as follows: (1) Act of 1889 for annexation of inhabited territory upon petition of electors of existing city; (2) act of 1899 for annexation of uninhabited territory; (3) act of 1913 for annexation of inhabited territory upon petition of electors in territory proposed to be annexed, which territory may be either (a) one body (sections 2 to 4), or (b) two or more bodies, which must be submitted as separate propositions (section 6).

In applying the law thus enunciated to the facts set out in the complaint these two inquiries are suggested by counsel: (1) Should the proposed annexation of the territory described in the complaint have been attempted as inhabited or uninhabited territory? (2) If the territory can "fairly be said to be inhabited," then should it have been regarded as one body of land or as "two or more bodies of outside territory," each one of which should have been submitted to the electors separately under the provisions of section 6 of the act of 1913?

It seems plain that the first of these questions cannot be answered so as to support the judgment of the court below. If the 308½ acres be regarded as one tract, it must be considered as inhabited for the simple reason that 99 people reside upon it.

There would be no difference in principle if the tract were composed of 10 acres or of 1 acre. If A. owns a farm of 308½ acres composed of one tract, and B. one of 10 acres, and each resides upon his land, it would be just as inapt to say that any part of A.'s land is uninhabited as to so affirm of B.'s land. The fact of occupancy is not limited, manifestly, to the space occupied by the building or buildings, but extends to every portion of the single tract of which that space is an undivided part. It may be difficult to formulate a description that can be applied with accuracy to every situation, but to say that any portion of a single and separate tract of land is uninhabited when people actually reside within the boundaries of that tract of land involves a contradiction in terms.

The real point of controversy here is whether such land was properly regarded as a single tract, and as to this we entertain no doubt that the court below was right in impliedly holding that it was composed of several parcels and under the law of 1913 should have been submitted to a separate vote.

Paragraph 9 of the complaint is as follows:

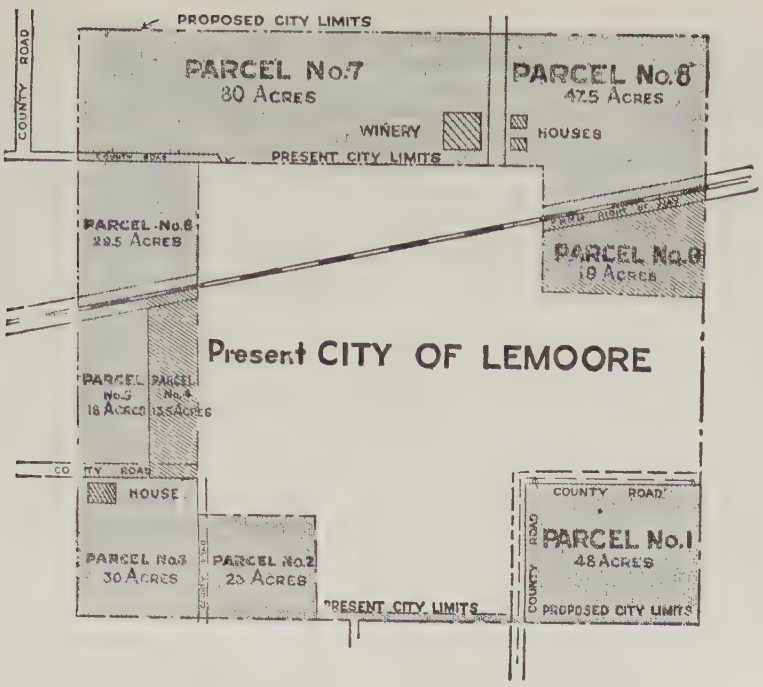
"The territory attempted to be annexed by the proceedings hereinabove set forth and designated as 'the 1916 addition to the city of Lemoore' is platted on a map hereunto annexed and marked Exhibit A and by this reference made a part hereof. Said territory is not a single body of territory lying contiguous to the city of Lemoore, but in fact, by reason of natural boundaries and diversity of uses, is constituted and composed of nine separate and distinct parcels of land, which said parcels of land are described as follows, to wit: Parcel No. 1 contains approximately 48 acres, is contiguous to said city of Lemoore, and adjoins portions of the southerly and easterly corporate limits of said city. Said parcel is, however, wholly disconnected with any of the other property proposed to be annexed to said city of Lemoore, except that it is connected with parcel No. 2, hereinafter described, by a strip of land 1,650 feet in length by 20 feet in width, and which strip of land is part of a public county road. This parcel constitutes a portion of a farm belonging to the relator, J. H. Fox, and is and was at all times herein mentioned entirely used for farming purposes. Said parcel is and at all times herein mentioned was entirely uninhabited, and no person resided or now resides thereon."

Parcel No. 2 is described as containing 23 acres and bounded on the north and east by the corporate limits and on the south and west by county roads, and it is alleged that, while subdivided for residential purposes, no person resides upon it.

Parcel No. 3 contains 30 acres, is separated from parcel No. 2 and parcels Nos. 4 and 5 by county roads, and is contiguous to the corporate limits only at the northeast corner of said parcel. It constitutes a part of a farm and has one dwelling house upon it occupied by three persons.

Parcel No. 4 contains 13½ acres. It has been subdivided for residence purposes and is inhabited by forty persons.

Parcel No. 5 contains 18 acres, separated from the corporate limits by parcel No. 4. It has been subdivided for residence purposes, and is known as the Sunset addition. No person resides upon any portion of it nor have any streets been constructed therein.



Parcel No. 6 contains 29½ acres, and is contiguous to the northern part of the western corporate limits, but is separated from parcels Nos. 4 and 5 by the right of way of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and from parcel No. 7 by a county road. It is used for farming purposes and is entirely uninhabited.

Parcel No. 7 contains 80 acres, is contiguous to the northern limits of the city and is separated from parcels Nos. 6 and 7 by county roads. Said parcel, with the exception of 4 acres in the southeast corner thereof, is a portion of a ranch belonging to the relator, Lemoore Land & Fruit Growing Company, and used for farm purposes. "Said parcel, with the exception of said four acres, is, and at all times" herein mentioned was, totally uninhabited, and no person resided or now resides thereon. The excepted parcel of 4 acres above referred to was occupied by a winery at the time of said annexation. Said winery was occupied by five persons, a night watchman, his wife, and two children, and an engineer. They were all transient, and none of them a voter.

Parcel No. 8 contains 47½ acres, and is separated from parcel No. 7 by a county road, and from parcel No. 9 by a right of way of the Southern Pacific Company. It is composed of portions of three ranches. There are two dwellings on the southwest corner of said parcel occupied by six persons who are not voters.

Parcel No. 9 contains 19 acres, and is separated from parcel No. 8 by a right of way of the Southern Pacific Company. This parcel has been subdivided for residence purposes and is occupied by 45 persons.

We herewith present a copy of said Exhibit A, which portrays the situation as thus described in the complaint:

Map Showing Territory Attempted to be Annexed to City of Lemoore.

Present corporate limits, City of Lemoore

Inhabited territory attempted to be annexed

Uninhabited territory attempted to be annexed

[1] We think it must fairly be said from the foregoing that the new territory constituted more than one body, and that some of the parcels were inhabited and others uninhabited.

As to the former, the procedure indicated by section 6 of the act of 1913 should have been taken as follows:

"The notice of such election shall state, as separate propositions to be submitted at such election the question of the annexation of each body of new territory, in the same manner as hereinbefore provided in the case of the notice of an election in such municipal corporation at which the question of the annexation of only one body of new territory thereto is submitted; and the question as to each such body of new territory, shall be printed upon the ballots to be used at such election and the same shall be voted upon, separately, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in the case of the submission of the question of the annexation of one body of such territory."

As to the portions or bodies not inhabited we are persuaded that the statute of 1899 should have been followed. Appellant in its brief admits that separate elections could be compelled "in the case of numerous parcels contiguous to the city, but separated from each other so that they could not be considered a contiguous body."

[2] If we confine our attention to parcels Nos. 1 and 2, it would be a strained construction to hold that they were made a continuous and contiguous body by the attempt to join them through the instrumentality of a portion of a public road 20 feet wide and 1,650 feet long. They remain two separate and distinct bodies. The continuity of other portions is prevented also, and they are divided into separate parcels by county roads and the right of way of the Southern Pacific Company.

We may notice some of the cases cited by respondent as involving a situation somewhat analogous to that presented here.

In Wild v. People, 227 Ill. 556, 81 N. E. 707, the proceeding was in quo warranto to test the validity of the incorporation of a village. The plat shows that to the original inhabited hamlet the incorporators proposed to annex several narrow strips of land running in several directions from the inhabited portion of the hamlet. Toward the southwest a long strip was run with three angles, and from the bottom of the last strip, along a section line, was run a narrow strip 50 feet in width and half a mile long which connected a square body of land with the rest of the proposed incorporation. Some of the other strips were not contiguous except that they cornered on each other. It was held that these strips which simply cornered were not contiguous, and as to the connecting 50-foot strip the court said:

"It is apparent that the 50-foot strip is merely included for the purpose of connecting the piece of ground at the west end thereof with other territory in the village. It is also apparent that the piece of ground at the west end of the strip is not in fact contiguous to grounds in the village other than that strip. The use of that strip to connect the tract at its western extremity with other territory in the village is a mere subterfuge, and not a compliance with the law. It is useless to discuss the plea further."

In Linn County Bank v. Hopkins, 47 Kan. 582, 28 Pac. 606, 27 Am. St. Rep. 310, the question was whether two cornering lots of land constituted one tract so as to be included in a homestead, and the court said:

"Does the Constitution exempt two tracts of land as a homestead which corner? It has been settled by the court that a homestead must consist of only one tract of land. Randall v. Elder, 12 Kan. 257, and authorities there cited. In the case of Kresin v. Mau, 15 Minn. 119 [Gil. 87] it was said: 'Two tracts of land mutually touching only at a common corner—a mere point—cannot, according to any ordinary or authorized use of language, be spoken of as constituting one body or tract of land.' The same construction has been placed upon acts of Congress in relation to the entry of public lands. 1 Leslie's Land Laws, Reg. and Dec. 360. See, also, Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477; Aldrich v. Thurston, 71 Ill. 324; Thompson on Homestead Exemption, §§ 120, 145, 147."

In Bolen Coal Co. v. Ryan, 48 Mo. App. 515, it was held that lots separated from each other by an alley were not contiguous so as to permit a single mechanic's lien to be enforced.

Anvil H. & D. Co. v. Code, 182 Fed. 205, 105 C. C. A. 45, involved a similar question as to assessment work on mining claims, and the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit said:

"The two claims last named are not made contiguous by the fact that Lucky Fraction corners with each. Two tracts of land which touch only at a common corner are not contiguous."

Another case more directly in point is Capuchino Land Co. v. Board of Trustees of the City of San Bruno, 167 Pac. 178, wherein the matter was clearly considered and cogently treated by the First District Court of Appeal. There is no appreciable difference in principle between that case and this, and the reason is just as persuasive here as there for sustaining the judgment of the lower court.

Of course, it is true, as stated in People v. City of Los Angeles, 154 Cal. 220, 97 Pac. 311, that:

The "question whether any particular territory of the shape, extent, and character fixed should be annexed to a municipality is purely political, for the exclusive determination of the voters of the municipality * * * sought to be annexed and with the wisdom of such determination the courts have no power to interfere."

[3] But it is equally true, as therein affirmed, that the courts have the right to interfere when some substantial provision of the law has been violated, and such we believe is this case.

We consider it manifestly unjust and inequitable under the circumstances described by the complaint for the electors residing in the two inhabited parcels Nos. 4 and 9 to determine the annexation of the other parcels against the will of their owners.

In conclusion we may say that possibly by answer an issue might have been tendered so that it could be shown that these various tracts were used and treated as one tract, and were therefore properly subject to the proceeding taken, but we are satisfied that their separate character is disclosed by their location, their different use, and the different conditions as to inhabitants, as set forth in the complaint.

We think the judgment is right, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The conclusion of the District Court of Appeal is fully sustained by what is correctly stated as to parcel No. 1, and the remaining parcel or parcels, and in denying a hearing in this court we are not called upon to express or indicate any opinion with regard to whether the parcels other than that numbered 1 together constitute a single body of land.

Our denial of the petition for a hearing in this court is not to be taken as an assent to what is said in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal on this point.

BEKINS v. SMITH. (Civ. 2514.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜290(1) — UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

Relation of landlord and tenant is necessary prerequisite to action for unlawful detainer under Code Civ. Proc. § 1159 et seq.

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⊜137—ORAL TRANSFERS—LIFE ESTATES.

Oral transfer of life estate in land may be made effectual by taking possession of and performance by grantee of acts in reliance upon grant.

3. LIFE ESTATES ⊜3 — TERMINATION PRIOR TO DEATH OF LIFE TENANT.

It is not essential to the creation of a valid life estate that there shall be no condition imposed which may terminate the estate in some contingency prior to the death of the grantee.

4. LIFE ESTATES ⊜3—TRANSFER.

An agreement of an owner of land to let another use land as long as she lived or conducted religious services created a life estate.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜118(2)—TENANCY AT WILL.

An agreement of an owner of land to let another use land as long as she conducted religious services did not create a tenancy at will.

6. GIFTS ⟸34 — CONTINGENCIES — TERMINATION.
Under agreement to allow another to use land as long as she should continue to conduct the same character of religious services as theretofore, question as to whether subsequent services were of character required was question of fact, and forfeiture could not be worked at the arbitrary whim of the grantor.

7. GIFTS ⟸48—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.
Where defendant claimed life estate under parol transfer, it was competent for defendant to show expenditure of money on improvements.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by R. M. Bekins against Ella Smith, also known as Ella Smith Trull, and C. S. Trull. Judgment for plaintiff, and the first-named defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. D. McLaughlin, J. B. McLaughlin, and Earl Rogers, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Winslow P. Hyatt and David G. Kling, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover possession of certain real property described in the complaint, alleging that the defendant unlawfully detained the same. In the complaint it was alleged that, under the lease or agreement made between the parties, the defendant occupied the relation of tenant at will toward the plaintiff. It was further alleged that the requisite notices required by the Code had been given to terminate the tenancy. The answer filed by the defendant put in issue all of the material matters alleged in the complaint. Findings and judgment were in favor of the plaintiff, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

[1-3] The principal question presented is as to whether, under the evidence submitted by the plaintiff, the relation of landlord and tenant was shown to have existed between the plaintiff and the appellant; or whether under such testimony it should necessarily be concluded that the appellant held a life interest in the real property, subject to be terminated only in certain contingencies. That the establishment of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties is a necessary prerequisite to the prosecution of an action for the unlawful detainer of real property under the provisions of section 1159 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, seems not to be disputed. Johnson v. Chely, 43 Cal. 299; Richmond v. Superior Court, 9 Cal. App. 62, 98 Pac. 57. The real property in question was purchased by Martin Bekins, the father of the plaintiff; title being taken in the name of the plaintiff, no consideration appearing to have been paid by her. For the purposes of this action, Martin Bekins appears to be the real party at interest on the plaintiff's side of the case. Martin Bekins testified that he first met the defendant Ella Smith Trull at her residence in the city of Los Angeles, in November, 1913; that defendant was engaged in preaching the Christian gospel at that time; that he became interested in the services conducted by the defendant and offered to help purchase another piece of property in the city of Los Angeles for her use; that he went with the said defendant and two or three others to look at the property finally purchased. We now quote from the text of the testimony of this witness, as shown in the bill of exceptions:

"A few days later I told the defendant I would purchase the property and give her the free use of it for so long as she conducted her services as she had been doing, and was doing at that time. I meant the religious meetings. I don't remember just what she said. She must have thanked me. A short time later I again stated my offer at Mr. Schultz's house. Later, at Mr. Preston's office, the defendant not being present, it was arranged that I pay, and I did pay, the sum of $3,500, and Mr. I. H. Preston put in a lot at $500 which was the full purchase price of the property. The defendant went into possession at or about the time the lot was deeded to the plaintiff. She has remained in possession ever since. The line of services conducted at her meetings at that time was much like other religious services. I did not attempt to establish an arbiter who should say that the religious services were or were not conducted as they had theretofore been. There was nothing further said than that as long as she conducted the services on the line that she had been conducting them and did not depart from it she could have the free use of it. In April or May, 1916, I attended some of the services where she said in public that she was going to give birth to a Christ on the 3d day of June at 5 o'clock. I think it was an immaculate conception, as she was long past the age she said."

Witness I. H. Preston testified for the plaintiff as follows:

"I met Martin Bekins on or about the 13th day of November, 1913, at my office. There were some people whose names I do not recall who were discussing the purchase of that property, or a property for her work, and it appears that they were going to form an organization to carry on the work. I said I would contribute a lot worth $500. It subsequently developed that they could not do anything. They found out that they could buy the lot for $4,000, make a small payment on it, and pay the balance in installments; but Mrs. Smith refused to have anything to do with it. There the matter ended until Mr. Bekins proposed to buy it and asked me if I would contribute if he bought it. Mr. Bekins told me that his purpose was to let her carry on her work there so long as she carried it on along the lines she was then, and, if that was for her lifetime, why then she would remain during that time, and, if she left a worthy successor, her successor might carry on the same work. Those were the circumstances under which I contributed."

It appears, then, that the property in question was purchased expressly for the use of the defendant Ella Smith Trull, and that Bekins was not the only person who contributed to make the purchase. Preston's lot, valued at $500, was a part of the donation. The defendant last named entered immediately into possession of the premises and continued to occupy the same up to the time of the commencement of the action and the trial. On her behalf an offer was made to show that she had expended considerable money in the making of improvements, such as buildings for use of the religious organization of which she was the head; but the trial court refused to allow the testimony.

It has been held in this state that an oral transfer of a life estate in land may be made effectual by the taking possession of and the performance by the grantee of acts in reliance upon the grant. Husheon v. Kelley, 162 Cal. 656, 124 Pac. 231. Other cases holding that a life estate may result from an oral agreement are: Manning v. Franklin, 81 Cal. 205, 22 Pac. 550; Norris v. Lilly, 147 Cal. 754, 82 Pac. 425, 109 Am. St. Rep. 188. The same holding also where the estate is conferred as a gift. Bakersfield T. H. Ass'n v. Chester, 55 Cal. 98. It is not essential to the creation of a valid life estate that there shall be no condition imposed which may terminate the estate in some contingency prior to the death of the grantee. Referring to estates for uncertain periods, which are not inheritable, or at will, but may last for life, Mr. Reeves, in his work on Real Property (volume 1, p. 633), says:

"It is to be reiterated and emphasized here that such interest as these are life estates. Indefinite duration that may be during a life, incapability of being inherited, and indeterminability merely at will usually place an ownership of realty within the category of life interests. Such are estates, to A. while he continues to live on the land, to a man and his wife during coverture, to a widow so long as she remains unmarried, to B. until he ceases to carry on a specified business, to X. while a designated tree stands, and to R. during his residence abroad. Though such an ownership may quickly terminate because of the happening of the specified event, it is a life estate, governed by all the rules and principles of life estates, as long as it continues."

Mr. Washburn, in his text on Real Property (volume 1, p. 102), adds:

"This is rather a class of estates, and embraces all freeholds which are not of inheritance, including estates held by the tenant for the term of his own life, or for the life or lives of one or more other persons, or for an indefinite period which may endure for the life or lives of persons in being, and not beyond the period of a life."

Section 1161, Code of Civil Procedure, in the first paragraph, provides that "a tenant of real property, for a term less than life, is guilty of unlawful detainer, when," etc.

[4-7] From what has been stated in the foregoing, it must appear plain that, conceding that the evidence of Martin Bekins and Preston was sufficient to show an intent that the defendant Ella Smith Trull should have the absolute possession of the real property so long as she should live, or so long as she should continue to conduct the same character of religious services as theretofore, then no other circumstances are shown which would render such agreement and transfer invalid. We think that the evidence clearly establishes that the character of interest held by the said defendant was more than that of a mere tenant holding at the will of the landlord Martin Bekins. It will be noted that Bekins in this testimony did not claim that he was to be the sole judge as to whether the services conducted by the said defendant at the new location were of the same character as those which had theretofore been conducted by her. The question as to whether the subsequent services were of the character required depended upon the establishment of the fact itself, and a forfeiture of the interests of the defendant could not be worked at the arbitrary whim of Martin Bekins. In our opinion, the undisputed evidence of Bekins, and of Preston his witness, showed the intent of Bekins and Preston to have vested in the defendant Ella Smith Trull a life estate in the real property described in the complaint, defeasible only upon breach of the condition named. As the transfer rested in parol, we think it was competent for the defendant to show all of the things which she did in compliance with the conditions imposed upon her and by way of acceptance of the donation. The offered testimony to show the expenditure of money in erecting buildings or improvements having to do with affording facilities for the holding of religious services was relevant and proper to be considered. It may be that the condition upon which defendant's right to the possession of the property depends has been broken, and that the plaintiff is entitled to have the estate of the defendant declared forfeited. If so, it must be done in some proceeding other than that brought to secure the summary remedy afforded by the Code to a landlord whose tenant has breached some condition of his lease.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

MOLLOY v. PIERSON. (Civ. 2401.)

1. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃447(1)—EQUITABLE RELIEF—MERITORIOUS CAUSE OF ACTION.
A judgment valid on its face will not be overturned by equity, unless it is against conscience, and it appears that a like judgment would not follow in the same action, or upon the same cause of action.

2. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃447(1)—ACTION TO SET ASIDE DEFAULT—NECESSITY OF GOOD DEFENSE.
In action to set aside a default judgment, plaintiff must establish a good defense, upon the merits, to the complaint upon which the judgment is based.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂⊃493(1)—CONSIDERATION—PRESUMPTION.
A note is presumed to have been based on a good consideration.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂⊃156—WIFE'S NOTE TO HUSBAND'S CREDITOR.
Where husband, immediately before death, conveyed all his property to his wife, and requested wife to sign note to creditor for sum of his debt to such creditor, the advantage wife gained by deed in not having to probate estate, and disadvantage to creditor of being unable to collect debt out of estate, was sufficient consideration for note.

5. BILLS AND NOTES ⊜492—DELIVERY—PRESUMPTION—POSSESSION BY PAYEE.

A note in possession of payee will be presumed to have been delivered to him upon its date.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Hannah Molloy against Catherine Pierson, as administratrix of the estate of John J. Ryan, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. W. Gillogley, of San Francisco, for appellant. James F. Brennan and J. J. West, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. William Molloy and John J. Ryan were friends. The former had brought Ryan to this country from their home in the old world, and Ryan had been for years an intimate of Molloy's family. During the years preceding April 1, 1910, Ryan had loaned Molloy several thousand dollars, which on that day were unpaid. These men trusted each other. There had never been any writing between them. On or about April 1, 1910, Molloy, being told that he was about to die, sent his wife to the family lawyer for advice about the settlement of his affairs. The lawyer suggested that Molloy deed his property, consisting of certain real estate, to his wife. This advice was followed, and with the aid of a notary Molloy executed a deed by which all his property was conveyed to his wife. At the same time Mrs. Molloy, at her husband's request, signed a note to Ryan, written by the same notary, for the sum of $3,287.50, which was the amount of his debt. Three years subsequently Mrs. Molloy gave Ryan $800, which the defendant in this action claims was, and Mrs. Molloy claims was not, a payment on the note. At the same time that she gave Ryan this sum, Mrs. Molloy executed a new note to him for $3,115.44, being the amount due on the first note less $800. Mr. Ryan died in January, 1914, and the defendant in this action was thereupon appointed administratrix of his estate. In June, 1914, the defendant here began an action against Mrs. Molloy to collect the second note given by her to Mr. Ryan. Mrs. Molloy was served with summons in the action by the attorney who began the action. She defaulted by not appearing, and judgment was taken against her on the note. One year later, in July, 1915, an execution was issued and levied on her real estate, whereupon Mrs. Molloy immediately began this action to set aside her default and the judgment against her in the action on the note.

In the present action Mrs. Molloy alleges that her default in the other action was procured by fraud practiced upon her by the attorney who began that action on the note, and that she has good defenses to that action on the merits; the defenses she asserts being that the note was without consideration, and that it was not delivered. These defenses deal necessarily with the execution and delivery of the first note given by her to Ryan at the time of her husband's illness.

[1-4] Equity will not overturn a judgment valid on its face, unless it is an unjust judgment. It must be against conscience, and it must appear that a like judgment would not follow in the same action or upon the same cause of action. Harnish v. Bramer, 71 Cal. 155, 11 Pac. 888. In order to support an action of this character, it is absolutely necessary that the party who attacks the judgment establish a good defense upon the merits to the complaint upon which the judgment is based. Reed v. Bank of Ukiah, 148 Cal. 96, 82 Pac. 845. The trial court found that the notes were without consideration. Mrs. Molloy testifies that she made the first note to Ryan solely because her husband asked her to do so, and because she wanted to pay, and thought it was a wife's duty to pay, her husband's debts. In face of the presumption that the note was based upon a good consideration, and the evident advantage which Mrs. Molloy gained by the deed in not being compelled to probate her husband's estate, and the disadvantage suffered by Ryan when Molloy conveyed all of his property to his wife, by being placed in a position where he could not collect his debt out of Molloy's estate in probate, and also where, by standing by and consenting to the transfer of the property to the wife, he could not attack that transfer as a fraudulent conveyance, it cannot be said, even upon this testimony of Mrs. Molloy, that this note was without consideration. Mrs. Molloy's testimony is not inconsistent with the fact that this note was based upon a good consideration.

[5] Upon the subject of the delivery of the note there is no evidence that it was actually delivered into the hands of Ryan, nor is there any evidence that it was not so delivered. Thereupon the presumption, from the fact that the note was found in Ryan's possession, that it was delivered to him upon its date, controls the finding, and it must be held in this state of the evidence that the note was delivered to Ryan.

These being the only defenses which Mrs. Molloy asserts, it must be held that she had no good defense upon the merits to her note, and therefore this action must fail.

The judgment is reversed.

Ex parte TURCK. (Cr. No. 609.)

1. BAIL ⊂=40—RELEASE WITHOUT BAIL.
Under the procedure generally applicable in criminal actions, a defendant is not entitled to be released without bail upon his mere promise to appear for trial; nor will such release ordinarily be permitted by an arresting officer, until it is so ordered by the court or magistrate.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=995(2)—JUDGMENT—SUFFICIENCY.
A judgment of conviction of exceeding speed limit, in violation of Vehicle Act, § 32, as amended by St. 1917, p. 410, is not void on its face, merely because it does not affirmatively declare that defendant, upon his appearance before the justice of the peace on the day of his arrest, waived his right to the five days' time provided by section 22, subd. (c), and does not set forth that the said justice was the most accessible magistrate.

3. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂=4—SCOPE OF PROCEEDING.
The right to five days' notice and right to be taken before the nearest justice, given by Vehicle Act, § 22, subd. (c), as amended by St. 1917, p. 404, to persons arrested for speeding, were rights which could be waived, which, if denied by justice's court, was mere error, correctible on appeal, but not reviewable under habeas corpus.

In the matter of the application of W. I. Turck for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner remanded.

Ray E. Nimmo, of San Francisco, for petitioner. W. F. Menton, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The petitioner, W. I. Turck, being in custody of the sheriff of the county of Orange and imprisoned in the county jail of that county, applied to this court for a writ of habeas corpus and the writ was issued. Attached to the sheriff's return to the writ is a copy of a commitment issued by John B. Cox, as justice of the peace of Santa Ana township, in the county of Orange. By that commitment it appears that on the 28th day of January, 1918, a complaint under oath was filed in said justice's court, charging that the petitioner on that day committed a misdemeanor, to wit, violation of the motor vehicle law; that a warrant of arrest having been issued on that day, and defendant having been arrested, thereafter on the same day he appeared before said court and was informed of all his legal rights; that, the complaint in the action having been read to him, the defendant pleaded guilty, and was by the court found guilty as charged in the complaint; thereupon, the defendant having waived time for the pronouncing of judgment, it was adjudged that for said offense defendant be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Orange for the term of 10 days.

The complaint upon which the defendant was prosecuted in the justice's court charged that at the time and place stated he did willfully and unlawfully operate an automobile upon a public highway in the county of Orange at a rate of speed in excess of 30 miles per hour. This was a violation of the provisions of section 22 of the Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 409, as amended by St. 1917, p. 404). Subdivision (c) of said section 22 reads as follows:

"In case of any person arrested for violation of the provisions of this section, unless such person shall demand that he be taken forthwith before the most accessible magistrate, the arresting officer shall take the name and address of such person and the number of his motor vehicle and notify him in writing to appear before a designated magistrate at a time and place to be specified in such writing at least five days subsequent to the date of such notice and upon the promise in writing of such person to appear at such time and place, such officer shall forthwith release him from custody. Any person willfully violating such promise shall be guilty of a misdemeanor regardless of the disposition of the charge upon which he was originally arrested."

The alleged illegality of the commitment on which Turck is held in custody is set forth in the petition for the writ, in substance, as follows: That it does not appear upon the face of the proceedings that the defendant waived his right to the five days' time provided by said statute, and that it does not appear that the said justice of the peace was the most accessible magistrate at the time of the arrest of the defendant; that, in fact, John B. Cox, the said justice of the peace, was not at the time and place of arrest of the defendant the most accessible magistrate, but that there was then and there a magistrate in the town or township of Tustin, in the county of Orange, who was then and there located at a point nearer and more accessible to the defendant and the officer arresting him at the time of his arrest; that upon the face of the complaint it appears that the defendant was required to appear before the said justice, and did so appear, on the day of his arrest; and that the five days required by the statute had not elapsed. By reason of the facts so alleged, petitioner claims that said Justice of the Peace Cox had no jurisdiction to entertain said complaint filed with him on the 28th day of January, 1918, and had no jurisdiction to issue the alleged commitment, and that therefore said commitment is void.

Petitioner's argument begins with the general proposition that a justice's court is an inferior court, whose powers are conferred and whose duties and mode of procedure are prescribed by statute, and to which the rule applies that the evidence of its proceedings must affirmatively show jurisdiction of the person of the defendant and of the subject-matter. The rule has been illustrated in a series of cases, among which petitioner especially relies upon Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 212. The particular application of the rule in that case was that the court determined that the alleged offense stated in the complaint in the police court where the petitioner was convicted did not constitute any crime against the law, and that therefore the petitioner was entitled to be discharged on habeas corpus. In Ex parte Greenall, 153 Cal. 767, 770, 96 Pac. 804, 806, the court said:

"It has been the uniform practice to consider on habeas corpus the question of the sufficiency of the complaint in such inferior courts, and to discharge the prisoner where such complaint failed to show a public offense under the laws of the state."

The courts have been careful, however, not to extend the principles above stated so far as to interfere with the use of the right of appeal as the ordinary remedy of a defendant in a criminal case.

"The writ of habeas corpus is not intended to review the regularity of the proceedings in any case, but rather to restore to his liberty the citizen who is imprisoned without color of law." In re Kowalsky, 73 Cal. 120, 122, 14 Pac. 399.

"A writ of habeas corpus cannot be made the vehicle of determining mere errors, where a conviction has been had and the commitment thereon is in due form. If the court below had no jurisdiction of the offense charged, or if it affirmatively appears by the record that the prisoner was tried and sentenced for the commission of an act which, under the law, constitutes no crime, the judgment is void, and the prisoner should be discharged." Ex parte Mirande, 73 Cal. 365, 371, 14 Pac. 888, 891.

In Ex parte Turner, 75 Cal. 226, 16 Pac. 898, it appeared that in a police court the petitioner had been convicted of a misdemeanor. The judgment did not recite the date of the offense or state the elements of the crime as fully as they were necessarily stated in the complaint. Nevertheless the petitioner was remanded, the court saying:

"The distinction between a void and a voidable judgment is sometimes very nice, and the judgment will fall under the one class or the other accordingly as it is regarded for different purposes. * * * After trial and conviction, the commitment is of a higher dignity than an ordinary commitment holding to answer. This is true with courts, both of special or limited jurisdiction and those of general jurisdiction. The judgment of a court of inferior jurisdiction is, to a great extent, as far beyond the reach of collateral attack by the writ of habeas corpus as the judgments of higher courts are. Church on Habeas Corpus, § 240. * * * The failure of the court to state the elements of the crime in the judgment as fully as they were necessarily stated in the complaint does not render the judgment void. The offense is sufficiently designated in the judgment. To entitle the petitioner to a discharge, we must necessarily assume that the record of conviction fails to show the commission of any offense. To reach this conclusion, we should have to resort to a hypercritical, overnice, and technical examination of the commitment, convert the writ of habeas corpus into a writ of error, and defeat the ends of justice."

Justices' courts have jurisdiction of certain public offenses committed within the several counties in which such courts are established, including "all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment." Pen. Code, § 1425. The offense charged against the defendant came within this description. Vehicle Act, § 32, as amended by Stats. 1917, p. 410. It follows that the justice's court of Santa Ana township had jurisdiction over the case here in question immediately upon the filing of the complaint, unless such jurisdiction was excluded by reason of the provisions of subdivision (c) hereinabove set forth.

[1, 2] Under the procedure generally applicable in criminal actions, a defendant is not entitled to be released without bail upon his mere promise to appear for trial, nor will such release ordinarily be permitted by an arresting officer until it is so ordered by the court or magistrate. It was for the purpose of modifying this rule in a particular class of cases that said subdivision (c) of section 22 was enacted. It requires that the officer give the stated notice, and that, if the defendant make a written promise to appear, "such officer shall forthwith release him from custody." This regulation has to do with the duties of an arresting officer and the right of the arrested person to immediate release upon compliance with the stated conditions. If that right be disregarded, and the defendant be compelled to submit to trial before five days have elapsed, he objecting thereto, then and then only does the procedure of the court conflict with the intent and purpose of the statute. But it would be straining the words of the statute, so as to cover a purpose not intended, if we should say in this proceeding that the judgment under which the petitioner stands committed is void on its face merely because that judgment does not affirmatively declare that the defendant, upon his appearance before the justice of the peace on the day of his arrest, waived his right to the five days' time provided by said statute, and does not affirmatively set forth that the said justice of the peace was the most accessible magistrate at the time of the arrest. The judgment does declare that after the arrest of the defendant and on the same day the defendant "appeared before this court, and having been informed of all his legal rights, and the complaint in this action having been read to him, defendant pleaded guilty." It further appears by the return herein that the defendant perfected an appeal from said judgment to the superior court of Orange county; that the superior court rendered judgment of affirmance of the judgment and order of the justice's court; and this proceeding was instituted to prevent the enforcement of the judgment as so affirmed.

[3] Attached to the sheriff's return in this proceeding there is an affidavit of John B. Cox, in response to which counter affidavits have been filed on behalf of petitioner. It is not necessary for us to enter into an extended discussion of these affidavits. Their use in this proceeding or their consideration by the court is of doubtful propriety, considering the nature of this proceeding. The statements contained in the affidavits refer to the fact that the township of Tustin was nearer to the place of defendant's arrest than the township of Santa Ana; that certain conversations by telephone and otherwise took place between the justice and the defendant and the arresting officer. Presumably these facts, so far as they were at all admissible, were included in the statement on appeal to the superior court. They are not such matters as may be retried by affidavits in a proceeding like that now before this court. It has been held in this state that the denial of a trial by jury is merely error to be corrected on appeal, and does not go to the jurisdiction of the court, so that it may be inquired into on habeas corpus, except in those cases where a jury cannot be waived, and therefore is a necessary constituent part of the court. In re Fife, 110 Cal. 8, 42 Pac. 299. On the same principle we may say that the right to the five days' notice insisted upon by the defendant in the present proceeding and the alleged right to be taken before another justice were rights which could be waived, and that their denial by the justice's court (if they were denied) was merely error to be corrected on appeal, and does not go to the jurisdiction of the court, which alone may be inquired into in this proceeding.

It is ordered that the petitioner be remanded.

PEOPLE ex rel. LINDAUER, Dist. Atty., v. O'DONNELL, Superior Court Judge.

(Civ. 1852.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 9, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸982—SENTENCE—SUSPENSION—REVOCATION.

Under Pen. Code, § 1203, subd. 4, giving court who has suspended sentence the power to revoke its order of suspension of imposition of sentence, a court can revoke such order whether the defendant be in court or absent therefrom, where it is shown that defendant has violated a condition upon which order was made.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸982—SENTENCE—SUSPENSION—REVOCATION.

Under Pen. Code, § 1203, subd. 4, suspended sentence cannot be revoked after term of probation has expired, although conditions of order were violated.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸982—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—VIOLATION OF CONDITIONS OF PROBATION.

Pen. Code, § 802, providing that if defendant is out of state when offense is committed the period within which he may be prosecuted does not start running until his return, does not suspend, while he is out of state, the running of the term of probation of a person who in violation of an order suspending sentence leaves state.

4. COURTS ⟸1—POWERS.

Although under Pen. Code, § 4, penal statutes are to be liberally construed, where certain powers are conferred upon a court, the nature and extent of such powers must be ascertained from language of statute itself, since in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1858, nothing can be added to or taken from a statute.

Mandamus by the People of the State of California, on the relation of Arthur Lindauer, District Attorney of Solano County, against W. T. O'Donnell, judge of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Solano. Alternative writ of mandate discharged, and proceedings dismissed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Arthur Lindauer, of Vallejo, for petitioner. Francis McInnis, of Fairfield, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to require the respondent to accept and exercise jurisdiction of a certain proceeding instituted by the petitioner, as district attorney of Solano county, in the court of which the respondent is the presiding judge.

The facts as gleaned from the petition are: That one Luther R. Perry, having previously to the 17th day of July, 1914, been by a magistrate of Solano county held for trial in the said superior court for failure to provide his minor children with the common necessaries of life (Pen. Code, § 270), was, on the day named, arraigned before said court upon an information charging him with that offense and thereupon pleaded guilty thereto; that thereupon the superior court, after due proceedings, made an order suspending the imposition of sentence and releasing the said Perry upon probation, upon certain specified conditions, for the period of three years; that thereafter the said Perry left the state of California and remained therefrom and beyond the jurisdiction of said court during the whole of the said period of probation; that he violated the order of suspension of sentence and probation by leaving the state and by failing to comply at any time with any of the conditions of said order of suspension of sentence and probation; that, upon and after the expiration of the said period of probation, said Perry returned to the said county of Solano, this state, and was thereupon, at the instigation of the district attorney of said county, taken into custody by the sheriff of said county for violating said order of suspension and probation and the conditions upon which said order was made; that thereafter the district attorney appeared before the said superior court and moved that the said order of suspension of sentence be set aside and sentence thereupon pronounced in said case; that the superior court refused to entertain the motion upon the ground that it was then without jurisdiction to take action in the premises and accordingly dismissed the motion.

Attached to the petition and constituting a part thereof are the minutes of the court in both the proceeding wherein the court suspended the pronouncement of sentence and the proceeding in which the district attorney moved and sought to have the order suspending sentence set aside and sentence pronounced. The court stenographer's transcription of his report of the two proceedings is also annexed to the petition and made a part thereof.

While the minutes of the court in the proceedings wherein the district attorney pressed his motion to set aside the order of suspension of sentence and to have sentence pronounced merely show that the court, without expressing any reason therefor, dismissed the motion, the reporter's notes disclose that the judge appeared to be of the opinion that, the probationary period having expired prior to the time at which the motion was instituted and made, the court had been divested of further jurisdiction of the case and was therefore without legal authority to take any further action therein.

It is contended here by the attorney for the respondent that the court had jurisdiction to dismiss the motion and that the ground of the order of dismissal is of no consequence; that, even if the reason for the dismissal was erroneous in a legal view, still the court's jurisdiction to dismiss the motion cannot be challenged through a writ of any kind. It is further contended that in no event will mandate lie to compel a court to accept jurisdiction of a proceeding or action.

Obviously, under the general rule, a court has jurisdiction to dismiss any proceeding before it, and whether its action in doing so is founded on a sound or an unsound reason, legally, would not be inquired into by a court of appeal except in a proceeding appropriate to the review and correction of error. Assuming, however, that the court, in this case, as the reporter's notes of the proceeding show, refused to entertain the motion for the sole reason that it had lost jurisdiction of the action and that that fact is in a proper way made to appear before us, and assuming further that as a legal proposition the court had not lost jurisdiction of the case, then the further question would arise whether the court may not be compelled, by mandate, to entertain and consider and determine the motion on its merits—that is, the question whether it should or should not be allowed—since there appears to be in such case no "plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law," there appearing to be no appeal from such an order of dismissal provided for. But this question we need not decide here, for we are of the opinion that, the motion having been instituted and pressed to the attention of the court after the period of probation had expired, the court therefore lost jurisdiction of the case and was without legal authority for granting the motion.

First, it is important to note that it is clear from the record before us that the court, in suspending sentence and admitting Perry to probation, acted under section 1203 of the Penal Code rather than under section 270b of said Code, although the latter section appears to have been intended to have special application to cases arising under either section 270 or 270a of the Penal Code. Section 270b provides for the suspension of sentence in such cases upon the filing by the defendant of an undertaking, valid and binding for the period of six months only, and conditioned for the payment of such monthly sum as the court may fix for the support of either the minor children or the wife, as the case may be, during the time that such undertaking shall run. The section further provides that, upon the failure of the defendant to comply with the undertaking, he may be ordered to appear before the court and show cause why further proceedings should not be had in the action, or why sentence should not be pronounced, and the court is then authorized to pronounce sentence or modify the order or take a new undertaking and further suspend proceedings on sentence "for a like period."

Section 1203 of the Penal Code clothes the court with the authority of admitting any person over the age of 18 years, who has pleaded guilty to or been convicted of any crime, to probation upon certain specified conditions. The court is by said section empowered to suspend the imposition or execution of sentence and may direct that such suspension may continue for a period of time not exceeding the maximum possible term of such sentence, except where the offense consists of a violation of section 270 or 270a of said Code, in either of which cases such suspension of imposition or execution of sentence may, in the discretion of the court, continue for not over five years. The court may also, when acting under said section, require the defendant to give a bond for his appearance before the court at any time such appearance may be required for the purpose of investigating any alleged violation of the terms and conditions of probation.

In this case, no undertaking, as required by section 270b, was taken, nor, so far as the record here discloses, was any bond given and filed by the defendant, as required by section 1203. So far as the record before us shows, the court merely suspended the imposition of sentence and admitted the defendant to probation for the term of three years upon certain prescribed conditions. It is therefore evident, as above stated, that the proceeding was the one authorized by section 1203 and not the one authorized by section 270b.

Returning now to the proposition that the court had lost jurisdiction of the action, and therefore was without legal authority for entertaining or acting upon the motion, except to dismiss it, attention should first be directed to the language of subdivision 4 of section 1203, which is as follows:

"The court shall have power at any time during the term of probation to revoke or modify its order of suspension of imposition or execution of sentence. It may, at any time, when the ends of justice will be subserved thereby, and when the good conduct and reform of the person so held shall warrant it, terminate the period of probation and discharge the person so held, and in all cases, if the court has not seen fit to revoke the order of probation and impose sentence or pronounce judgment, the defendant shall, at the end of the term of probation, be by the court discharged."

[1, 2] We think that these two propositions are clearly deducible from the language of said section 1203, viz.: (1) That the court may, whether the defendant be present in or absent from court at the time, revoke the order suspending the imposition of sentence or the execution thereof and admitting him to probation, upon a sufficient showing that he has violated any of the terms and conditions upon which such order was made; (2) that, under the provisions of subdivision 4 of said section, the court loses jurisdiction or power to make an order revoking or modifying the order suspending the imposition of sentence or the execution thereof and admitting the defendant to probation after the probationary period has expired.

As to the soundness of the last-stated proposition there can be no possible doubt. It is necessarily implied from the initial language of subdivision 4 of said section. The authority in a court to suspend a sentence or the execution thereof in a criminal case and liberating the defendant for a certain period is wholly statutory, and the statute itself furnishes the measure of the power which may thus be exercised. Nothing which cannot be found in the statute or which is not reasonably and fairly or necessarily within the reason or spirit or intent thereof can be imported into it by the courts. When therefore the Legislature says, as it has said, that the order of suspension and probation may be revoked or modified during the term of probation, without adding language so qualifying that provision as to justify the construction that the time when such revocation or modification may be made is extended beyond the term or period of probation, the necessary implication is that it was not the legislative intention to confer upon the court the right to exercise that power after the time at which the period of probation has expired. Indeed, this view of subdivision 4 of the statute in question follows from a consideration of its language by the light of the familiar statutory rule of construction, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius."

[3, 4] But the district attorney contends that, Perry having left the state and so placed himself beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and remained therefrom until after his term of probation had expired, the said term of probation, by analogy to the rule in this state with respect to the statute of limitations as applied to the finding of indictments and the filing of informations in criminal cases (Pen. Code, § 802), ceased to run while he was absent from the state. We cannot agree to that contention. While the rule in this state, unlike that of the common law, is that penal statutes are not to be strictly construed but are to be given such construction as will comport with the fair import of their terms, with a view to effect their objects and to promote justice (Pen. Code, § 4), yet, where certain powers are conferred upon a court or other tribunal wholly by statute, the nature and extent of such powers must be ascertained and determined from the language of the statute itself. As above stated and as our law declares (Code Civ. Proc. § 1858), nothing can be added to or taken from a statute in construing and applying it. The statute in question here itself fixes and limits the time within which an order suspending sentence or the execution of a sentence already imposed may be set aside or modified. It in no way qualifies the provision as to the time when such an order may be made. Neither in said statute nor in any other law of this state to which our attention has been called is there any provision that the term of probation shall cease to run during the absence of the defendant from the state while such order remains alive. In the absence of such a provision, it must be held that the term of probation continued unbroken until it reached the end of the time to which it was expressly limited. Clearly, section 802 of the Penal Code cannot be made to apply to a case of this character. It is plain that it does not directly apply, and we cannot perceive how it may reasonably be made to do so by analogy.

In this case, the terms and conditions upon which the court suspended the imposition of sentence and admitted the defendant to probation were these: (1) That he pay to the probation officer of the county a certain sum each month for the support of his two minor children; (2) that he, during the term of probation, refrain from using intoxicating liquors and from visiting saloons or other places where such liquors are kept for sale; (3) that he report in writing every two weeks to the probation officer his whereabouts, occupation, and earnings, "and shall not leave or absent himself from the state of California without first obtaining written permission from the district attorney of said county." It is further provided that violation of any of the terms and conditions of said order "shall be and is hereby made cause for the revocation hereof."

Thus it appears that the violation of any one or all of said terms of probation is expressly made a sufficient cause for the revocation of the order of probation, and the statute (subdivision 9, § 1203, supra) makes it the duty of the probation officer of the county to report to the court any such violation. The defendant in this case, when he left the state and failed to make the payments required for the support of his minor children, was guilty of a violation of at least two of the conditions upon which he was released on probation. Of such violation, the probation officer was fully cognizant, and, had he reported it to the court, the order admitting him to probation could have been nullified, or, whether set aside or not while Perry was out of the state, steps could have been taken to apprehend the prisoner, who in either case then would in law have been an escape and a fugitive from justice. But the record here does not show that any report of the default of the defendant in complying with the terms of his release on probation was ever, at any time, made to the court, nor that any further proceedings were taken in the case until after the term of probation had expired.

Our conclusion is, as above stated, that the court was without jurisdiction to entertain the motion to set aside the order suspending the imposition of sentence and admitting the defendant in the action to probation, and the alternative writ of mandate is accordingly discharged and the proceeding herein dismissed.

Ex parte PERRY. (Cr. 442.)

1. DIVORCE ⟸324 — EFFECT OF DECREE — CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN.

Where by divorce decree the custody of minor children is awarded to one of the parents without charging upon the other their support, the parent not entitled to their custody is by Civ. Code, § 196, relieved from liability for their support.

2. PARENT AND CHILD ⟸17(1)—SUPPORT OF CHILD—CRIMINAL LIABILITY.

When the wife by divorce decree was awarded the custody of the minor children with no provision for their support by him, the husband was not subject to prosecution under Pen. Code, § 270, for failure to provide for such children.

Original application by Luther R. Perry for a writ of habeas corpus to procure his discharge from custody under an order committing him for failure to support his minor child. Petition granted, and prisoner discharged.

Francis McInnis, of Fairfield, for petitioner. Arthur Lindauer, of Vallejo, for respondent.

HART, J. The petitioner alleges that he is illegally restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of Solano county and makes this application to this court for a writ of habeas corpus to the end that he may be released from such unlawful restraint. The petition for the writ alleges that, on or about the 4th day of February, 1918, the petitioner was arrested on a warrant issued by one S. A. Cripps, justice of the peace of Elmira township, in said county of Solano, upon a complaint charging petitioner with willfully omitting, without lawful excuse, to furnish his minor child, Henry Perry, with necessary food, clothing, shelter, etc. (Pen. Code, § 270); that upon said complaint the petitioner was given a preliminary hearing and thereupon held to trial in the superior court of said county upon said charge. It is further alleged that, on the 28th day of April, 1915, the superior court of the said county of Solano, in an action between the petitioner as defendant and his wife, Grace Perry, as plaintiff, made and entered an interlocutory decree of divorce, wherein and whereby said Grace Perry was adjudged to be entitled to a divorce from petitioner, upon the ground of desertion; that said decree provided, among other things, that the custody and control of the minor children of petitioner and said Grace Perry, to wit, Robert Winchell Perry and Henry Arthur Perry, be awarded to said Grace Perry; that said interlocutory decree of divorce so rendered and entered in said action made no provision whatever for any support of said children; that thereafter, to wit, on the 4th day of May, 1916, the said superior court of the county of Solano rendered and caused to be entered its final decree of divorce, wherein and whereby all the terms of said interlocutory decree "in regard to the custody and control of said minor children were confirmed and ratified"; that "said interlocutory decree of divorce and said final decree of divorce have never been altered or modified in any respect whatsoever, and still are in full force and effect as rendered and entered; that there have never been any proceedings brought under sections 138 and 139 of the Civil Code to require said Luther R. Perry to contribute to the children's support." Attached to and made a part of the petition is the judgment roll in the said divorce action.

The sheriff, in his return to the alternative writ, answers:

(1) That he holds the petitioner "under and by virtue of his violation of the 'order suspending the imposing of sentence and releasing the defendant (petitioner) on probation,' made by the superior court * * * in and for the county of Solano, on the 17th day of July, 1914." (2) That, further, he holds petitioner by "virtue of a commitment issued by the Hon. S. A. Cripps, justice of the peace of Elmira township, county of Solano, * * * on the 15th day of March, 1918, holding to answer upon a charge of failure to provide for his minor child, Henry Perry, the within named defendant (petitioner), Luther R. Perry."

The first of the above-stated grounds upon which the sheriff undertakes to justify the restraint of the petitioner constitutes the basis for the application to this court for the writ of mandate in the case of People, etc., ex rel. Arthur Lindauer, District Attorney of Solano County, v. Hon. W. T. O'Donnell, Judge of the Superior Court of said Solano County (Civil No. 1852) 174 Pac. 102, an opinion in which has this day been filed. In that case we have considered and determined, adversely to the position of the district attorney, the question which is involved in the first of the two grounds set forth in the return as the authority for the holding of the petitioner by the sheriff, whether the superior court exceeded its jurisdiction in dismissing the motion by the district attorney to set aside the order suspending the imposing of sentence. It follows therefore that there is left to us for determination herein the single question whether the restraint of the petitioner by the sheriff by virtue of the commitment issued by the justice of the peace on the 15th day of March, 1918, holding petitioner to trial for violating the provisions of section 270 of the Penal Code, is legally justifiable.

The reply to the question thus propounded is not, in view of the many adjudications of the proposition involved therein in California, fraught with serious difficulty.

[1] It has frequently been held that where, by a decree of divorce, the custody of the minor children of the parties is awarded to one of the parents, without charging upon the other parent the support of such children, the parent to whose custody the children are so awarded is, under the terms of section 196 of the Civil Code, alone liable for their support, and the parent not entitled to the custody of the minors is relieved of that duty. See Matter of McMullin, 164 Cal. 504, 129 Pac. 773; Lewis v. Lewis, 174 Cal. 336, 340, 163 Pac. 42. In Lewis v. Lewis, supra, the McMullin Case is stated as follows:

"The petitioner had been held for trial for an alleged violation of the same section (section 270) of the Penal Code. There the wife had obtained a divorce in the state of Nevada. The decree granted her the custody of the minor child and required the petitioner to pay for its support. But since there had been no personal service of summons, the Nevada court had no jurisdiction to impose upon him the liability to make such payment. The result, as this court viewed it, was that the custody and control of the child had been given to the mother, without charging upon the father its support. 'Under section 196 of the Civil Code,' says the opinion, 'this situation prima facie relieves the husband of the duty of support and casts it on the wife.' The petitioner was discharged from custody."

In People v. Schlott, 162 Cal. 347, 122 Pac. 846, the conviction of the defendant under section 270 of the Penal Code was sustained, but in that case it appeared that the decree of divorce required the defendant to pay to his wife the sum of $50 per month for the support of herself and child, and the defendant failed to make the payments so required.

[2] In the present case, as we have seen, the decree in the action for divorce between petitioner and his wife awarded the custody of the minor children to the latter, but made no provision whatsoever for the support of said children by the petitioner. From this state of the facts, and the cases above referred to, it necessarily results that the order of the magistrate of March 15, 1918, holding the petitioner for trial in the superior court for the alleged violation of section 270 of the Penal Code, and the commitment thereupon issued, are void and of no legal force, and that the sheriff is consequently without legal warrant for holding the petitioner, so far as said commitment is concerned.

From the foregoing and the conclusion arrived at and announced in the case of the People ex rel. Arthur Lindauer, District Attorney, v. Hon. W. T. O'Donnell, Judge, etc., supra, it follows that there is no legal justification for the holding of the petitioner by the respondent, sheriff, and the prisoner is therefore discharged from the custody of said respondent.

PEOPLE v. FROST. (Cr. 426.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 1, 1918.)

1. HOMICIDE ⇐=248—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—ACCIDENT.
Evidence held to warrant conclusion that defendant's infliction of wound was result of deliberately formed intention to take life of deceased, and that her contention as to accident was an afterthought, so that jury was justified in rejecting her explanation.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐=1166½(6)—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL—EXAMINATION OF JURORS—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.
That prosecutor in examination of prospective juror made following hypothetical statement: "You understand, do you not, * * * malice is presumed, and the burden of proof is on defendant to show * * * that she was justified"—which did not conform to Pen. Code, § 1105, held without prejudice, in view of evidence.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐=730(1)—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL—CURE BY INSTRUCTION.
Any error in permitting prosecutor to state in examination of prospective juror that malice is presumed, and that defendant has burden of showing justification for murder, was cured, where jury was fully and correctly instructed, and directed to follow only such instructions.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐=723(5)—ARGUMENT AND CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.
Remarks of prosecutor in closing address to effect that defendant was not justified because she had Indian blood in her and deceased was full of booze, and that she, if turned loose, would go back and kill another man, held at most somewhat intemperate.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐=1163(6)—COMMUNICATIONS TO JUROR—HARMLESS ERROR.
That, after jury retired, sheriff, in violation of Pen. Code, § 1128, transmitted a communication to one of jurors to effect that anthrax had appeared among juror's cattle, will not be assumed to have resulted in prejudice; it not affirmatively appearing from nature of error or other circumstances that defendant was harmed.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸759(2)—UNNECESSARY INSTRUCTIONS.

Instruction that a person "is supposed to mean to do that which he actually, intentionally, and willfully does in fact do," while probably unnecessary, as involving an evident proposition, did not take from jury question of accidental killing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Kate Frost was convicted of second degree murder, and appeals from the judgment and order denying new trial. Affirmed.

Shelley & Johnston, of Sacramento (John A. McGilvray, of counsel), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and she appeals from the judgment and order denying her motion for a new trial. It is admitted that she killed the deceased with a butcher knife, but it was and is the contention of defendant that his death was the result of an accident. Her account of it is as follows:

"Well, I was fixing potatoes for supper, boiled potatoes, and I was cutting the ends of them off, so salt would go through them when you cooked them, and as I was standing there it was kind of dark and it was—the shade from the levee—the levee is so high you can't see when the moon does shine. I was standing with my elbows on the scow this way. I heard some queer noise; I could not say what it was. I whirled around that way in the dark; I whirled so quickly he fell right over on me, and I had the knife in my hand, and my arm something like that—see—and he came right down on me and caught himself with his hand, and I says, 'Oh, my God!' and he pulled himself back and says, 'Oh, Kate; I'm hurt!' "

[1] But the jury was justified in utterly rejecting her explanation of the gruesome affair. Indeed, one cannot read the entire record carefully and dispassionately without having an abiding conviction that her infliction of the wound was the result of a deliberately formed intention to take the life of the deceased, and that her contention as to accident was an afterthought, a simulated defense, improbable, not worthy of credence, and justly repudiated by the jury. We shall not set out the evidence at length. It is sufficient to say that it was shown that she had made threats to kill the deceased; that they were heard talking in a loud tone of voice for some time before the killing; that her conduct after the discovery by others of the crime was that of a guilty person; that she did not immediately declare that it was an accident; on the contrary, expressed a willingness to suffer the extreme penalty of the law; and, when it did finally occur to her to claim that the killing was accidental, her repeated story varied in important particulars and was stamped as inherently improbable by the following testimony of the physician who performed the autopsy:

"There was only one wound on the body, except the wounds that had been made by the undertaker in preparing it. The wound was just above the left clavicle, or left collar bone. It was an incised and penetrating wound on the surface, about an inch and a half in the long diameter. The wound following down was almost directly downward and slightly inward, going in just back of the collar bone. During the course of the instrument that made the wound the superficial structures were severed; the nerves going to the left arm, the roots of the nerves, were cut. The left subclavian artery and vein were cut, the artery not quite in two; and then, coming further down, the apex or top of the left lung—there was a cut in that about an inch long. * * * The wound was almost parallel to the lung diameter—very slightly inward."

The doctor further testified that it would be impossible for such a wound to be inflicted by one falling on a knife, unless the injured person "was bent absolutely over, so his body was in a horizontal position; not if he was standing." Indeed, it is plain that the wound could not have been, and was not, inflicted as claimed by appellant. The only rational conclusion is that she plunged the knife intentionally into the body, and this is the basis upon which we must consider the alleged errors to which our attention is directed.

[2] 1. In examination of one of the jurors upon his voir dire the district attorney made the following hypothetical statement of the burden of proof:

"You understand, do you not, Mr. Armstrong, that if the prosecution has established the fact that the defendant killed the deceased, and unless the prosecution also shows in their proof facts which would excuse the defendant from the crime of murder, or some other fact which would excuse the defendant from the crime of murder, or some other fact which would discharge her of any crime, malice is presumed, and the burden of proof is upon the defendant to show by a preponderance of the evidence that she was justified in what she did?"

This seems to have been approved at the time by the trial judge. The foregoing is not in the exact language of section 1105 of the Penal Code, to which section it was plainly designed to conform, but, conceding a measure of inaccuracy to the statement, it is clear that it was without prejudice, in view of the evidence in the case.

Appellant, in support of her claim that it embodied a wrong interpretation of the law, quotes the following from Perkins v. State, 124 Ga. 6, 52 S. E. 17:

"Murder does not consist merely in killing a human being. The killing must be done with malice. When the fact of the killing is shown, and the evidence adduced to establish the killing shows neither circumstances of justification or alleviation, malice may be inferred. Likewise, if the statement of the defendant admits the homicide without explanation, malice may be inferred from such admission. But if at the time of the admission the homicide is justified, such qualification of the admission

* * * robs it of the vital element of murder."

Herein, however, there was evidence of murder without the admission of defendant. Besides, the jury had the right to believe that at first she made no explanation, nor attempt at justification, and it may be added that her asserted theory of accident is so inherently improbable as to be worthy of no consideration.

[3] Apart from the foregoing, we may say the jury were fully and correctly instructed at the close of the trial, and directed to follow only those instructions. Hence it is apparent that, if any such error as claimed was committed, it was cured by the subsequent action of the court.

[4] 2. At most, it could be said that the district attorney was somewhat intemperate in the following statement contained in his closing address to the jury:

"You know what she will do, gentlemen of the jury. They ask you to excuse her. Why? Because he was full of booze, and because she had Indian blood in her, and probably a little booze aboard, too, and she was full of fight. Now, gentlemen of the jury, is that any excuse —is that any reason why you should turn her loose, and let her go back and mix a little more booze with that Indian blood and kill a man? That is exactly what will happen if you turn her loose; she will go back and kill another man."

We must assume that the district attorney was acting in good faith, that his remarks were in response to the argument of appellant's counsel, and we cannot say that the inference that she would commit another murder was unjustifiable, as a person capable of committing one murder might be liable to commit another. We need not refer to the cases on this subject. Much more objectionable statements on the part of the prosecuting officers have been held to be insufficient to warrant a reversal of a conviction of murder.

[5] 3. After the jury retired, the sheriff, in violation of section 1128 of the Penal Code, transmitted a communication to one of the jurors from his wife. This was heard by all the jurors, and was to the effect that anthrax had appeared among the juror's cattle on his ranch at Madison, and it included also the juror's direction in reply for the sheriff to have Dr. Alexander go out to the ranch as soon as possible. The sheriff communicated with Dr. Alexander, and the latter said he would go out in the morning. This was reported to said juror, and he said that would be all right. The argument is that the juror was thereby induced to agree to a verdict by reason of the urgent necessity for his presence at home. It is thought, also, that the circumstance may have unduly influenced other jurors. The point is emphasized by reason of the fact that a short time before the jury had requested a statement from the court of the penalty for manslaughter, thus evincing a consideration of the possibility of finding such verdict.

It is unfortunate that such incident occurred, and the sheriff should have consulted with the judge of the court before communicating with the jury; but we think it would be an unwarranted aspersion on the character of any of the jurors to hold that he would permit a circumstance like that to influence him to consent to a verdict against the defendant. Is it not more likely that the jurors were thereby influenced to reach a more favorable conclusion than otherwise? They certainly would have been warranted in finding a verdict of murder in the first degree, but they agreed upon the lesser offense. At any rate, under the rule as now recognized, we cannot presume that the irregularity resulted in prejudice to the defendant. People v. Disperati, 11 Cal. App. 469, 105 Pac. 617; People v. Cord, 157 Cal. 562, 108 Pac. 511.

Some cases are cited by appellant wherein somewhat similar situations were held to involve error and to raise a presumption of injury; but now, from the nature of the error itself, or from other circumstances, it must appear affirmatively that harm was done to the defendant. It would have been safer practice for the district attorney to show that the jurors were not improperly influenced. Notwithstanding, we do not think the case should be reversed for a failure to do so. The case of Stocks v. State, 91 Ga. 831, 18 S. E. 847—as well as some others—cited by appellant, involved more serious and distressing news than herein, relating, as it did, to serious illness in the family of one of the jurors. Of course, it is important that all of the safeguards for the protection of the jury from extraneous influences be scrupulously maintained, and we do not approve of the course pursued in this matter; but we do not think it should be accorded the significance for which appellant contends.

[6] 4. In her criticism of the instructions of the court appellant claims that "No. 8" involves error, for the reason that "it took from the jury the question of accidental killing." Appellant is mistaken. It simply stated the presumption that a person "is supposed to mean to do that which he actually, intentionally, and willfully does in fact do." Of course, it would be a contradiction in terms to say that a person accidentally does what he intentionally and willfully does. The instruction was probably unnecessary, as involving a self-evident proposition; but it was not erroneous.

The same objection is made to instructions No. 9 and No. 13, and is equally without merit. These were all hypothetical instructions, entirely inconsistent with the theory of accidental killing; but they left it to the jury to determine whether the facts, upon which they were based, were shown by the evidence. Indeed, we may say that the jury were fully instructed as to every phase of the law—every instruction requested by the defendant having been given—and there seems to be no ground for criticism as to the action of the court in that respect.

The sum of the whole matter is that the record clearly reveals the guilt of the defendant, and she was fortunate in securing the verdict that was rendered, and any errors that may have been committed should be disregarded as without prejudice, if such are to be overlooked in any criminal case. People v. Henry Lee, 168 Pac. 694.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PASADENA RAPID TRANSIT CO. v. MUNSON. (Civ. 2168.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied June 25, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜907(3)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.
On appeal upon the judgment roll without a bill of exceptions, it must be presumed that there was evidence to support a finding of the trial court.

2. CORPORATIONS ⊜90(7)—SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—CONSTRUCTION OF FINDINGS.
In an action on a note given for the price of stock subscribed in plaintiff corporation, finding that the entire available stock of the corporation, which had been issued to another corporation for property transferred to plaintiff, had been returned to the treasury of plaintiff, to be issued to subscribers, imported a finding that the stock was "legally" returned, so that the same could be delivered to defendant without injury to his rights.

3. CORPORATIONS ⊜76—"SUBSCRIPTION" TO STOCK—NATURE OF CONTRACT.
A contract for an original issue of stock in exchange for property is in legal effect a "subscription" to stock, though not in the form of a subscription contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Subscription.]

4. CORPORATIONS ⊜83 — SUBSCRIPTION TO STOCK—CANCELLATION.
A corporation may as against all but existing creditors cancel a subscription to stock, especially where the cancellation relates to only a part of the shares subscribed for.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the Pasadena Rapid Transit Company against S. M. Munson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Porter & Sutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. The appellant subscribed for certain shares of the capital stock of the respondent, and the subscription contract was consummated prior to the organization of the respondent. A promissory note was given by the appellant to cover a part of the amount subscribed by him, and this action was commenced to recover on the note. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals.

After the respondent was organized, it issued all of its shares of stock; none of it, however, going to the appellant. A large block of the stock was issued to another corporation in payment for certain property which that corporation conveyed to the respondent; but on the same day that the shares were issued this second corporation transferred a considerable portion of its shares back to the respondent, "to be held," according to the findings of fact, "as treasury stock of plaintiff, and to be sold for the benefit of plaintiff, or issued to the subscribers for the capital stock of plaintiff." It is only out of this returned stock that the respondent is able to issue to the appellant any shares as and for the shares subscribed for by him. The appellant contends that this stock is not the stock for which the subscription was made, that he is entitled to an original issue from the treasury, that the consideration for the note has wholly failed, and that judgment should have been pronounced in his favor.

[3, 4] It is well settled that a contract for an original issue of shares of stock in exchange for property is in legal effect but a subscription to stock, even if it be not a subscription contract in form. Cook on Corporations, § 22. It is equally well settled that a corporation may, under certain circumstances, and certainly as against all but existing creditors, cancel a subscription to stock, especially if the cancellation relate to only a part of the shares subscribed for (Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 16 Cal. App. 403, 117 Pac. 1041, 1046; Silica Brick Co. v. Winsor, 171 Cal. 18, 151 Pac. 425); and there is nothing in the record before us to show that the respondent had creditors at the time the shares of stock in question were returned to the treasury.

The judgment is affirmed.

GREER-ROBBINS CO. v. PACIFIC SURETY CO. (Civ. 2276.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸757(1) — ALTERNATIVE METHOD — REVIEW — TYPEWRITTEN TRANSCRIPT.

Appellate courts will not look to typewritten transcripts, filed under the alternative method of appeal, to determine whether grounds exist for reversal, where no part of the record is printed in the brief, as expressly required by Code Civ. Proc. § 953c.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸768—ALTERNATIVE METHOD — REVIEW — TYPEWRITTEN TRANSCRIPT—PRESUMPTIONS.

Although Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, requiring portions of the record to be printed in the briefs, was not complied with, where statements concerning the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the judgment are made in appellant's brief, and are not challenged in respondent's brief, the court will assume that they are correct.

3. INSURANCE ⟸513 — INDEMNITY POLICY — INSTRUCTION.

Indemnity policy, binding insurer to defend any suit against the insured to enforce a claim for damages covered by the policy, whether groundless or not, required the insurer to defend every action in which the complaint showed a claim for damages covered by the policy, notwithstanding the suit was groundless and was defeated, and if the insurer failed to defend it was liable to the insured for the cost and expenses of defending.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸757(1) — ALTERNATIVE METHOD — REVIEW — TYPEWRITTEN TRANSCRIPT.

In the absence of compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, no statement of the respondent in his brief may take the place of the reproduction of the record as required by such section, unless assented to by the appellant.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸916(3)—PRESUMPTIONS.

In action on policy, by which defendant agreed to defend against actions based on liabilities covered by the policy, where insured sought to recover costs and expenses of defending suit, which insurer failed to defend, and the record on the insurer's appeal failed to show whether the insured's complaint disclosed that the complaint in the other action stated a cause of action, the court on appeal was bound to assume, in support of the judgment, that insured's complaint made such showing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by the Greer-Robbins Company against the Pacific Surety Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals by the alternative method. Affirmed.

Goodrich & Martinson, of Los Angeles, for appellant. James, Smith & McCarthy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. [1] This appeal comes to us under the alternative method. The constant lapses, on the part of the profession, from a proper observance of the rules of practice governing the prosecution of appeals under this method, have made it, to us and to the other appellate courts of the state a dreadful alternative indeed. Once again, at more than a risk of repetition, we call attention to the fact that, under the method and according to the provisions of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, the parties must print in their briefs "such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court," and that "appellate courts will not look to the typewritten transcript filed under the alternative method of appeal for the purpose of determining whether ground exists for the reversal of the judgment appealed from." Barker Bros. v. Joos, 171 Pac. 1085.

[2] In this case the reproduction of parts of the record in the briefs is so scant that we are enabled to pass upon the questions presented only upon an indulgence in certain assumptions which the law permits us to make. Not enough of the pleadings is printed in the briefs to enlighten us as to the character of the litigation; and we are not informed, in the manner contemplated by section 953c, of anything concerning the final action of the trial court in the suit, for no part of the findings of fact, conclusions of law, or judgment is reproduced in the briefs. As, however, certain statements concerning these matters are made in the brief of the appellant, as they are not challenged in the respondent's brief, and as the respondent argues the case upon the assumption of their correctness, we will, in turn, assume that they are correct. The action appears, then, to be one in which the plaintiff, which was engaged in the business of advertising and selling automobiles, sued the defendant to recover upon an automobile liability policy.

The policy, speaking now in general terms, had been given to insure the plaintiff against loss or expense resulting from claims against plaintiff for damages on account of bodily injuries or death to be suffered by any person through the operation of plaintiff's automobiles. One Hill had brought an action for such damages against the plaintiff, but had failed to procure judgment; and the present action was commenced to recover the costs and expenses incurred by the plaintiff in defending against that suit. One paragraph of the complaint in this action and one paragraph of the answer are printed in the appellant's brief, and by them it is shown that the plaintiff alleged, and the defendant admitted, that the person who was driving a certain car of plaintiff, at the time Hill claimed to have been injured by it, was doing so for his own pleasure, and that he was not then engaged in the business of the plaintiff. The parties concede that the policy was not broad enough to insure against damages recovered in such a case, but the present action, brought to recover the costs and expenses of defending the Hill suit, as already stated, was prosecuted under certain special provisions of the policy, under which the plaintiff claims the right to recover the amount of such costs and expenses, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant could not have been called upon to respond to any claim of plaintiff for damages which might have been recovered by Hill in his action. In this present action the plaintiff had judgment according to the statements of counsel in the briefs, and the defendant appeals.

The appellant contends that the complaint did not state a cause of action, that neither the findings nor the judgment is supported by the evidence, and that the findings do not sustain the judgment. In effect, the contention of the appellant principally hinges on the presence in the complaint of the allegation that the person in charge of the respondent's automobile at the time of the alleged injury to Hill was operating it for his own pleasure. The policy is printed in full in the appellant's brief, and it is conceded by counsel that this action was grounded upon two of its paragraphs which were as follows:

"In addition to the limits hereinafter specified, if any suit is brought against the assured to enforce a claim for damages covered by this policy, the company will defend such suit, whether groundless or not, in the name and on behalf of the assured. The expenses incurred by the company in defending such suit, including costs, if any, taxed against the assured, will be borne by the company, whether the judgment is for or against the assured.

"If any suit, even if groundless, is brought against the assured to recover damages on account of injuries or deaths covered by this policy, the assured shall immediately forward to the company, or to the office of its nearest authorized general agent, every summons or other process served, or copy thereof. Thereupon the company will, at its own cost and expense, defend such suit in the name and on behalf of the assured."

The company refused to defend against Hill's complaint, although it was requested to do so; the process which was served in the action having been delivered to it as required by the policy. It will be noted that, in each of the paragraphs quoted above, the suits which the appellant agrees to defend are stated to be those brought to recover damages upon claims "covered by this policy."

[3] The appellant contends, in effect, that whether a given claim against the respondent is covered by the policy is to depend, under the paragraphs quoted, upon the outcome of the action brought to enforce such claim; that, if the litigation upon a given demand develops a case in which the claim is not covered by the policy, then and in that event, and for that reason only, the appellant may assert that the action was not one which it was bound to defend; that, in short, whether there be an obligation to defend may be determined after the time for the performance of the obligation has entirely elapsed, instead of before it has commenced to run. If the position of the appellant were adhered to in all cases, it would work an alteration in the very language of the policy. It would change its terms from those imposing an obligation evidenced by the words "will defend" to terms laying a duty indicated by some such words as "should have defended." Moreover, it would altogether wipe out the obligation to defend, no matter how strong a case were made on the face of a complaint for damages against the assured, for under such a rule the appellant need never defend. Upon an independent investigation of the facts in each case, or without investigation, the appellant could decline to defend, thus imposing upon the assured, in every case, the obligation to defend itself, an obligation which certainly, under the policy, was intended to be discharged by the appellant in some cases. The result would be that the question whether the appellant "will defend," no matter what the form of the complaint in a given case—a question necessarily to be answered at the inception of a litigation—could be answered through the whim, caprice or judgment of the appellant itself. There is a more certain basis for a determination of the liability of the appellant to defend, and that basis is to be found in the allegations of the complaint in each action for damages against the respondent. We construe the policy to mean that it is the duty of the appellant, under its terms, to defend every action in which the complaint shows "a claim for damages covered by this policy." These views are in accord with those expressed in South Knoxville Brick Co. v. Empire State Surety Co., 126 Tenn. 402, 150 S. W. 92, 94, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 107, where a policy similar to the one now before us was construed.

[4, 5] We are forced, now, to return to the question of the failure of the parties to observe the provisions of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is not shown to us, by the reproduction of any part of the record in the briefs, whether the plaintiff's pleading did, or whether it did not, show that the complaint in the Hill case stated or attempted to state a cause of action covered by the policy complained on, or whether the evidence showed, under any appropriate issue, what were the allegations of Hill's complaint. The respondent asserts in its brief that the complaint in the Hill case stated such a cause of action, but is silent on the question as to whether the fact was pleaded in the complaint in this action, or as to whether the evidence in this action showed it; but no statement of the respondent could take the place of the reproduction of the record, as required by section 953c, unless it were assented to by the appellant, and the appellant has presented no brief since the respondent's brief was filed. We are bound to assume, however, in support of the judgment now appealed from, such a state of the record of the trial court, the contrary not appearing, as will support the findings. Paine v. San Bernardino V. T. Co., 143 Cal. 654, 77 Pac. 659. We will therefore assume, as the state of the pleadings in the Hill case was most material to a determination of this case, as we have already decided, that it appeared to the trial court, either from the pleadings or from satisfactory evidence under them, that the complaint in that action showed against the respondent a claim for damages which was covered by the policy now sued on.

Ex parte THURBER. (Cr. 612.)

1. EXTRADITION ⇐30—INTERSTATE—"FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE."
A "fugitive from justice," in the sense of Rev. St. U. S. § 5278 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 10126), is one who, having within the state committed a crime, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process, has left its jurisdiction and is found in another state.
[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fugitive from Justice.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⇐92(2)—EXTRADITION.
On habeas corpus by one arrested on an extradition warrant, the court cannot question the truth of the alleged facts constituting the offense and can inquire only as to whether accused was within the territory of the other state when the alleged offense was committed.

Petition by Seymour J. Thurber for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner remanded to custody.

Wm. M. Morse, Jr., and S. M. Johnstone, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Thomas Lee Woolwine, Dist. Atty., and J. W. Joos, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Petitioner, who is in custody under a warrant issued by the chief executive of this state on a requisition made by the Governor of Illinois, seeks his discharge therefrom upon the grounds: First, that he is not a fugitive from justice; and, second, alleged insufficiency of the information which charges him with the crime of abandoning his wife and minor child, who were in destitute circumstances, without providing them with means of support.

[1] In our opinion, there is no merit in either point. The first contention is supported by affidavits which, in effect, tend to show that, prior to his leaving the state of Illinois, petitioner had made provision for the support of his wife and child, from which facts, if true, petitioner argues that he is innocent of the offense charged against him, and therefore could not be a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state. The expression "fugitive from justice," as used in the Revised Statutes, § 5278 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 10126), regulating the extradition of fugitives from justice, has reference to a person who, having within the state committed that which by its law constitutes a crime, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense, has left its jurisdiction and is found in the territory of another state. Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 6 Sup. Ct. 291, 29 L. Ed. 544; Bailey on Habeas Corpus, § 129. The authorities go no further than to hold that inquiry may be made into the question of fact as to whether the accused was within the territory of the state when he is alleged to have committed the offense charged against him. If it be made to appear that he was not, then he could not have fled therefrom and could not be a fugitive from justice. Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 5 Sup. Ct. 1148, 29 L. Ed. 250; Bruce v. Rayner, 124 Fed. 481, 62 C. C. A. 501. Petitioner, however, concedes that he was in the state of Illinois at the date when the alleged offense was committed; hence such question of fact is not involved. He may, as claimed by counsel and as shown by the affidavits, be innocent of the offense charged against him; but neither the Governor upon whom demand is made for his requisition, nor the courts of this state, can inquire into the question of his guilt or innocence. Kingsbury's Case, 106 Mass. 223. Since no question is raised as to petitioner having been in the state at the time of the alleged commission of the offense with which he is charged, there can be no doubt as to his being a fugitive from justice when found in this state.

[2] As to the second point, petitioner does not attack the information upon the ground that it fails to allege the commission of an offense, but seeks by his affidavits to show that on the date when the offense is alleged to have been committed, as well as thereafter, he made provision for the support of his wife and child, with whose knowledge and consent he left Illinois. As above stated, the courts of this state are not empowered to inquire into the truth or falsity of the alleged facts constituting the offense. As shown by the record before us, petitioner is properly charged with the commission of a crime under the laws of the state of Illinois while within its jurisdiction, after which he departed from said state, and, having been found in this state, it was the duty of the Governor thereof, upon the documents presented, to honor the requisition made by the Governor of Illinois and issue the warrant under which he is held in the custody of Martin McCormick, an agent of the demanding state, for return thereto to answer the charge.

It is therefore ordered that petitioner be remanded to custody.

TRACY v. DONOVAN. (Civ. 2138.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 26, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸118(3)—TENANCY AT WILL—CREATION OF—OCCUPATION UNDER PAROL LEASE.

A person who took possession of farm land with consent of owner, under a parol agreement of a two-year term lease, became, on taking possession, a tenant at will.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸114(2)—TENANCY FROM YEAR TO YEAR—CREATION OF—OCCUPATION UNDER VOID LEASE.

A person who entered into possession of farm land under a parol agreement of a two-year term lease became a tenant from year to year, upon payment to and acceptance by owner of annual rent.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸120(2)—TENANCY AT WILL—NECESSITY OF NOTICE TO QUIT.

Where tenant took possession of farm land under a parol agreement for a two-year term lease, and occupied land for two years, paying owner annual rent, the tenancy is from year to year, and under Civ. Code, § 761, dividing estates into four classes, estates of inheritance, estates for life, estates for years, and estates at will, such tenancy is in nature of an estate at will, and under Civ. Code, § 789, cannot be terminated without notice to quit.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by Margaret Tracy, executrix (substituted for Brigid Shinners) against C. W. Donovan. Judgment of nonsuit and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Alex Webster, of Paso Robles, and Wm. Shipsey, of San Luis Obispo, for appellant. Carlton W. Greene, of Paso Robles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action of unlawful detainer, wherein the plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit.

On the 1st day of October, 1913, the defendant entered upon the farm of the plaintiff, under a parol agreement of lease for a term of two years from that date, and has ever since remained in possession and farmed the land. The plaintiff was to receive as rental one-fourth of the crops raised on the land. This rental for each of those two years was paid. On September 29, 1915, the plaintiff visited the premises in question and orally stated to the defendant that she wanted him to vacate and that she had promised the place to another party. The plaintiff never served any written notice or demand upon the defendant until the 27th day of October, 1915. On that day she did serve upon the defendant a written demand for immediate surrender to her of the possession of said premises. The defendant having failed to comply with this demand, the plaintiff commenced this action on the 9th day of November, 1915. All of the foregoing facts appear from the evidence produced by the plaintiff at the trial of the case.

Respondent contends that where a tenant enters agricultural land under oral agreement for lease for two years, and occupies the land for the two years, rendering an annual rent, which is accepted by the owner, the tenancy thus created must be terminated by the notice prescribed in section 789 of the Civil Code, before the tenant is liable to an action in unlawful detainer. This is the principal ground upon which the motion for nonsuit was made by the defendant and granted by the court. The rule at common law, as established by both English and American decisions, appears to be that, although a lease by parol may be void, as exceeding the period allowed by the statute of frauds, or the tenancy may, according to circumstances, be construed at will, or perhaps from year to year, it will nevertheless be governed, in respect to its termination, as well as to its other incidents, by the terms of the demise, and will expire at the time limited by those terms, without notice to quit. See Taylor's Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) §§ 80, 469, 471, with cases there cited. But in California this common-law rule has been changed by statute:

"A tenancy or other estate at will, however created, may be determined by the landlord's giving notice in writing to the tenant, in the manner prescribed by section 1162 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to remove from the premises within a period of not less than thirty days, to be specified in the notice." Civ. Code, § 789.

"After such notice has been served, and the period specified by such notice has expired, but not before, the landlord may re-enter, or proceed according to law to recover possession." Civ. Code, § 790.

[1-3] When the defendant entered into possession of plaintiff's land, the plaintiff consenting thereto, under the circumstances shown by the evidence, defendant became a tenant at will. Carteri v. Roberts, 140 Cal. 164, 73 Pac. 818. When thereafter the defendant paid and the plaintiff accepted an annual rent for the premises, the defendant became a tenant from year to year. Was this an "estate for years," or does it come within the definition of an estate at will? Civ. Code, § 761. If the latter, then section 789 of the Civil Code is applicable to the case, and the tenancy cannot to be terminated by the landlord without the notice thereby required. We are satisfied that it is a form of tenancy at will. Jones on Landlord and Tenant, §§ 192, 194; Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, p. 120.

"The tendency of the courts is to construe all general or doubtful tenancies into estates from year to year; and parol leases, which, under the statute of frauds, constitute estates at will, are turned into estates from year to year by the payment and acceptance of rent, or other circumstances indicating that that is the intention of the parties. * * * Such estates partake of the nature of an estate at will." Rosenblat v. Perkins, 18 Or. 156, 22 Pac. 598, 6 L. R. A. 257.

Therefore it was held that, under an Oregon statute similar to section 789 of our Civil Code, the tenancy would not be terminated without the notice required by the statute.

The judgment is affirmed.

The construction placed upon a description in a deed, as shown by the conduct of the grantor and grantee for a long period of time with relation to a boundary line, is entitled to the gravest consideration, unless the terms of the deed are clear and certain to the contrary.

3. EVIDENCE ⟸460(6) — PAROL EVIDENCE — DEEDS.
Where a deed gave a road as a boundary but it was not clear what road was intended, it was proper to show by parol evidence the identity of the road.

4. BOUNDARIES ⟸3(3) — CONSTRUCTION OF DEED.
When monuments mentioned in a deed are identified, they control both courses and distances given, whether they were seen by the parties to deed or not.

5. BOUNDARIES ⟸48(5) — ACQUIESCENCE IN LINE ESTABLISHED.
Where grantor and grantee, under an uncertain description in the deed, established a certain line as the boundary, built fences, and made improvements, a successor of either is estopped from maintaining that such line is not the true boundary.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Action by Hector Williamson against Henry C. Pratt. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Abe Darlington, of Placerville, for appellant. H. D. Jerrett, of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action is in ejectment; the land in dispute being situated in El Dorado county and consisting of a strip 71.8 feet wide at one end and running to a point 1,231.4 feet distant, containing 1.7 acres, of which plaintiff claims to be the owner.

Both parties to the action claim title from Catherine Stronach, who, on the 22d day of April, 1901, was the owner of all of a certain tract of land designated as lot 2. On said date she conveyed to her son Wallace C. McBeath a portion of said lot 2 described as follows:

"Commencing at the quarter section corner on the north boundary of section one in township 10 north of range 9 east, M. D. M.; thence south 18 chains and 41 links to a post on west side of road; thence north 22 degrees west 19 chains and 95 links to post on east side of road; thence west 7 chains and 50 links to place of beginning, containing 20.86 acres more or less."

On the 9th of April, 1902, said McBeath and his wife conveyed said land to one Schoenagle, and on the 27th of August, 1910, said Schoenagle conveyed it to plaintiff, Williamson.

On June 6, 1908, Catherine Stronach conveyed to Catherine A. and Bruce McBeath (another son) another portion of said lot 2, described as follows:

"Situate in section one, township 10 north of range 9 east, Mt. Diablo base and meridian, bounded west by Weber Creek road, east by the Coloma wagon road; north by the lands of Menardi and south by the lands of C. P. R. R. Co., containing 17 acres more or less."

Subsequently, Catherine A. McBeath conveyed her undivided one-half interest in said land to Bruce McBeath, who, on December 3, 1909, conveyed all his interest therein to defendant, Pratt. The action was commenced March 8, 1915.

The Weber Creek road, referred to in the last-mentioned deeds, was located through lot 2 in 1885, and there has been no change in its location since 1891 or 1892. Defendant has had possession of the disputed tract since acquiring title to it, has kept it fenced, and has cultivated portions of it for three or four years.

C. H. Wildman, county surveyor of El Dorado county, was called as a witness by plaintiff. He described the manner in which he made a survey of the property called for by the deed to plaintiff. He stated that there was on the ground nothing to indicate where the starting point mentioned in the deed was, so he established a quarter section corner according to the rules of the general land office. From there he ran the west line to the southwest corner. The second call in the deed is: "East 15 chains and 5 links to a post on west side of road." The surveyor stated that he ran this line to a point on the east side of the Weber Creek road, which constitutes the southeast corner of the property in controversy and which is 71.8 feet east of the fence of defendant; that if the stake was set on the west side of the road "the survey would not close or come anywhere near closing." It is argued by appellant that the insertion in the description of the word "west" was an error and that it should have been "east." Or, if it was intended as written, it is still west of a road which is approximately 450 feet east of the Weber Creek road. Respondent, on the other hand, claims that no error was committed and that it was the intention of Catherine Stronach, by the use of the word "road" twice in said description and by the use of the term "Weber Creek road" in the description in the second deed, to make said Weber Creek road the boundary line between the two properties.

The testimony of the tax collector showed that from 1911 onward the following property was assessed to defendant and the taxes thereon levied paid by him: "Lot 2 of northeast quarter, lot 3 of northwest quarter, less 20.86 acres of lot 1." It was stipulated that said 20.86 acres had been assessed to plaintiff and his grantors.

[1] While it may be conceded that the surveyor's testimony is strongly in favor of appellant's contention, and that, if we follow the courses and distances prescribed in the deed to plaintiff, we reach the conclusion that he has the legal title to the property in controversy, yet, from a review of the whole record, we are entirely satisfied that the evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the lower court, and that the decision is just and should be upheld.

In the first place, the parol evidence, which was admitted without objection, shows without any conflict that the intention of the original grantor, Mrs. Catherine Stronach, was to make the said Weber Creek road the eastern boundary line of the tract conveyed by her to her son Wallace C. McBeath. The latter testified:

"I owned the land back of the road a short distance, and my mother owned a strip along in front of my land, and I wanted a frontage out on the road, and I bought the piece lying between my piece and the county road to get a frontage out on the road, and that is what she described in the deed."

He further stated that a survey was made for the purpose of getting the description to put in the deed, and that the present county road (the Weber Creek road) was there at the time. Furthermore, that what is marked on the map "approximate course of old road" was not traveled at all in his day.

[2, 3] Again, it is perfectly plain that the parties understood and so interpreted the deed as conveying the land only to said Weber Creek road. This is shown by the fact that the grantee took possession of such tract and no more, and afterward the grantor conveyed the disputed tract to another son; and fences were built and the land was cultivated and improvements made thereon in accordance with the theory that the Weber road was the boundary line. Moreover, during all the years from 1901 to 1915 no claim was made by any one that the description in the deeds to plaintiff and to his predecessors in interest covered the land in controversy. Indeed, from the acts and declarations of the parties in interest, there can be no doubt whatever that they understood and intended the deed to convey to said road as was stated by said Wallace C. McBeath. It cannot be doubted that the construction placed upon a description in a deed, as shown by the acts and conduct of the grantor and his grantees, and the manner in which they have exercised their respective rights under their deeds for long periods of time with relation to a boundary line, is entitled to the gravest consideration in the determination by a court of the location of such line. Hamm v. City of San Francisco (C. C.) 17 Fed. 119; Truett v. Adams, 66 Cal. 218, 5 Pac. 96.

Of course, if the terms of the deed were clear and certain to the contrary, no such significance could be attached to the conduct of the parties. If the description be so definite and accurate as to exclude doubt, it must be applied as found, notwithstanding a different construction may be indicated by the acts and declarations of the parties. But such is not the case here. The deed contains a reference to a natural monument, that is, to a road, and the deed itself does not make it plain what road was intended. It was proper therefore to show by parol evidence the identity of this object. In Colton v. Seavey, 22 Cal. 497, it was held that:

"Parol evidence is admissible to explain the location of the objects mentioned in the description of a deed, and thus fix the boundary lines of the tract conveyed."

The proposition, though, is elemental and needs no further discussion. It is equally plain that the conduct and declarations of the parties, to which we have referred, leave no room for doubt that the Weber road was the monument referred to in the deed.

[4] But it is conceded that, if the call in the deed, "thence south 18 chains and 41 links to a post on west side of road," is to be construed as designating a post in the west side of the Weber road, then the deed does not include the land in controversy. The evidence being such that we have a right to read that call as though it read, "thence south 18 chains and 41 links to a post on west side of Weber road," the familiar question arises as to the relative importance of monuments and of courses and distances in the construction of a deed. The proposition needs only to be stated to suggest an answer. "When monuments mentioned in a deed are identified, they control both courses and distances given, whether they were seen by the parties to the deed or not." Anderson v. Richardson, 92 Cal. 623, 28 Pac. 679. This rule is adopted because it is most likely to lead to the discovery of the intent of the parties. Piercy v. Crandall, 34 Cal. 334. All authorities on the subject assign courses and distances the lowest scale in evidence as being least reliable. Galbraith v. Shasta Inn Co., 143 Cal. 94, 76 Pac. 901.

If we follow this well-established rule, we may find, as stated by the county surveyor, that the distances do not correspond with two of the calls in the deed, and that there is a variation in one of the courses; but this is not of commanding importance. We know that such mistakes are quite frequent, and it is no reflection upon the capacity of said witness to suggest the possibility of a mistake in his survey. At any rate, he admits that he found no monument marking the northwestern quarter section corner, which was the initial point of the survey, and that he had to locate it by means of the other corners which were definitely marked. But, assuming that his survey was substantially accurate, we do not know that said corner was similarly located in and by the survey upon which the deed was based.

The one who made the first survey was not called as a witness, but it must be said that there is substantial evidence that his delineation of the tract to be conveyed did not pass east of the Weber Creek road. Bruce McBeath testified that he was present at the time of the earlier survey, and in reply to the question, "Do you remember of this survey crossing the present county road?" he answered: "No, it did not cross it; it came to a stake west of the present county road." It is quite clear that the surveyor could not have located the land as claimed by appellant without going across said road, and the testimony furnishes strong confirmation of the theory that a mistake was made either by him in the earlier survey or by the county surveyor in the later one. However that may be, we ascertain the controlling monument, and we have no difficulty in shortening the lines and changing slightly one of the courses to make the actual location on the ground correspond with the unquestionable intention of the parties to the deed.

[5] Moreover, conceding for the sake of argument that, according to the terms of the deed, the location of the eastern boundary line was and is doubtful, we must assume that this uncertainty was known to Catherine Stronach and her sons, and that they all agreed upon the Weber road as the boundary line between the two tracts. While no one has testified definitely to an express agreement to that effect, such would be a fair inference from the conduct of the parties. They established the road as a boundary line, built the fences accordingly, and Pratt's predecessor made improvements upon the disputed tract. And it was not until some seven years after Bruce McBeath had entered into possession of the eastern tract that the established line was questioned by Wallace McBeath's successor in interest. Under such circumstances, it is clear that he is estopped from maintaining the claim that the Weber road is not the boundary line.

In Loustalot v. McKeel, 157 Cal. 640, 108 Pac. 710, it is said:

"The rule universally sustained by the authorities is that where the boundary line between the lands of contiguous owners is doubtful or uncertain, and they by parol agreement fix and determine a dividing line between their respective tracts, said line being marked by the erection or maintenance of a fence or other equivalent structure along it, and thereafter the parties hold and occupy their respective lands to the boundary as so agreed on, the accuracy of such boundary line cannot be subsequently questioned by the parties establishing it, or by those claiming under either of them"—citing cases.

Other circumstances might be mentioned in confirmation of the soundness of the lower court's conclusion, but we deem it unnecessary to go further.

Viewing the whole record, we see no substantial merit in appellant's claim, and the motive for his conduct in the matter was probably not inaptly expressed by the trial judge in the statement: "He wants to hector Pratt." Manifestly, some one has blundered in the survey of the land.

Judge Cooley, in Diehl v. Zanger, 39 Mich. 601, said:

"Nothing is better understood than that few of our early plats will stand the test of a careful and accurate survey, without disclosing errors. This is as true of the government surveys as of any others, and, if all the lines were now subject to correction on new surveys, the confusion of lines and titles that would follow would cause consternation in many communities. Indeed, the mischiefs that must follow would be simply incalculable, and the visitation of the surveyor might well be set down as a great public calamity."

He proceeds to point out the importance of recognizing the established landmarks in locating lot and boundary lines, and concludes that a good engineer will not overthrow boundaries that have been settled in accordance with the principles of law.

The county surveyor herein though may not have been censurable for trying to locate the boundaries in accordance with the courses and distances, as he was probably not in a position to give due consideration and significance to the important circumstances to which we have adverted.

At any rate, we feel satisfied that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

CHASE v. PETERS et al. (Civ. 2530.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 28, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃288—SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.
The summary proceeding for obtaining possession of real property is special, and must be restricted to the particular purposes expressed in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1159–1179.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃290(5) — SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS—CROSS-COMPLAINTS.
In summary proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1159–1179, no cross-complaint nor counterclaim is allowed.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(14) — UNLAWFUL DETAINER—DAMAGES—AMOUNT.
In unlawful detainer, the damages recoverable are those only which accrue during the actual period of the unlawful detention.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟹291(14)—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—EXTENT OF RECOVERY.
Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1174, as to unlawful detainer, no recovery is authorized of any money, the right to which accrued before the unlawful detention began, except arrears of rents.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟹291(5) — UNLAWFUL DETAINER — PERSONS AGAINST WHOM ACTION LIES.
Where the lease did not prohibit an assignment, but provided that the contract should bind the lessee and his assigns, and, prior to the accrual of any rents alleged to be due the lessee assigned the lease to a third person, the landlord in unlawful detainer could not recover the arrears of rents from the original lessee, since they are recoverable only from the person guilty of the wrongful detention.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟹291(5) — UNLAWFUL DETAINER—PARTIES.
Where the lease did not prohibit an assignment, but provided that the contract should bind the lessee and his assigns, and prior to the accrual of any rents alleged to be due the lessee assigned the lease to a third person, the original lessee was not a proper party in unlawful detainer by the landlord.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1036(2)—HARMLESS ERROR.
In action of unlawful detainer, where the landlord erroneously made the original lessee and his assignee parties, seeking to recover arrears of rent, which were recoverable only from the assignee, the assignee could not complain that the lessee was not a proper party, and that the complaint was defective for misjoinder, since in any event the action was maintainable as to the assignee.

8. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟹291(14)—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY—TAXES.
In unlawful detainer, tax charges paid by the lessor cannot be recovered either from the lessee or his assignee.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1170(12)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.
In unlawful detainer, the trial court's permitting recovery of tax charges, and further permitting recovery from the original lessee of arrears of rent, with which he was not chargeable, were more than mere errors of pleading or procedure under Const. art. 6, § 4½, and could not therefore be disregarded as harmless.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Chase against Homer H. Peters, Jr., and others and Jack & Gill, a copartnership and the Hawk Company, a corporation, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants Homer H. Peters, Jr., Peters Investment Company, and Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland appeal. Judgment as to defendant Peters Investment Company modified and affirmed, and as to defendant Homer H. Peters, Jr., reversed, with directions.

Riley & Heskett and Wright & McKee, all of San Diego, for appellants. James E. Wadham and Glen H. Munkelt, both of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. In this action defendants, Homer H. Peters, Jr., Peters Investment Company, a corporation, and Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, a corporation, have appealed from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff. The appeal of the last-named defendant was separately taken, and will be disposed of in the opinion filed in case Civil No. 2535, 174 Pac. 119.

In September, 1912, plaintiff made a written lease with defendant Homer H. Peters, Jr., leasing for a term of 99 years certain real property in the city of San Diego. Prior to October, 1916, Peters, Jr., assigned the lease and delivered possession of the premises to the defendant Peters Investment Company. The installments of rental for the months of November and December, 1916, and January, February, March, April and May, 1917, were not paid. A three-day notice in writing, requiring the payment of such rental to be made, was served upon the appellants. This notice contained the usual alternative demand for possession of the premises. Compliance was not made with the terms of the demand, and this suit in unlawful detainer followed. The terms of the lease required the lessee to pay all taxes assessed against the property. There was a failure on the part of those in possession of the premises under the lease to pay taxes in the year 1916 to the amount of $3,132.28. Plaintiff asked and was allowed judgment for the amount of the taxes, as well as for accrued rental, against both of these appellants. These taxes the lessor was obliged to pay to protect his property from liens. The action, as characterized by the plaintiff, was distinctly a suit to recover possession of leased premises because of conditions broken, brought under the provisions of sections 1159 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure. In his complaint the plaintiff set forth the facts concerning the lease transaction, showing the rent unpaid for the months named and also the amounts of the taxes which the lessor had been obliged to pay after default of the lessee in that particular. That the facts stated in the complaint, as we have briefly summarized them, were established by the evidence, is not disputed here. Homer H. Peters, Jr., and his successor under the lease, the Peters Investment Company, objected, both by demurrer and answer, to the complaint on the ground that there was a misjoinder of parties defendant, and that different causes of action were improperly united.

The first contention amplified is that as appellant Peters, Jr., was not in possession of the premises at the time of the alleged unlawful detention thereof, he was not a proper party to the suit, and no judgment could be legally rendered against him. The point of misjoinder of parties defendant is also urged as to Peters Investment Company, but the argument in support thereof is not of the same potency as that available to defendant Peters, Jr., as will be developed in the discussion to follow. The second point assumes that both of the defendants were proper parties, but raises question as to the propriety of allowing a recovery for taxes paid by the lessor, which payments should have been discharged by the lessee or his successor; that this cause of action was one distinctly upon contract, and could not be joined in a suit where the special relief authorized by the chapter dealing with the unlawful or forcible detention of real property is sought.

[1-3] The summary proceeding provided for the obtaining of possession of real property is special, and must be restricted in its use to the particular purposes expressed in the sections of the Code embraced within chapter 4, title 3, Code of Civil Procedure. The mode and measure of the plaintiff's recovery are therein limited. The law on this subject has been construed with strictness, for the relief authorized in some particulars is penal in its nature. The defendant is brought into court to answer within three days after issuance of summons (section 1167); amendments to the complaint are provided to be made without terms (section 1173); in the judgment the rents found to be due and damages may be trebled (section 1174). Other provisions designed to hasten the recovery of possession of the property as the main relief are included, which are all different from those affecting civil actions generally. A cross-complaint or counterclaim is not allowed. Arnold v. Krigbaum, 169 Cal. 143, 146 Pac. 423, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 370. Rents accrued at the time of the commencement of the action are allowed to be recovered only because the statute so provides (section 1174). These rents are added to the damages for the unlawful detention. Under the last-mentioned head only those damages accruing during the actual period of the unlawful detention are recoverable. Under the old Practice Act, the statute provided for recovery of "rents and profits during the detainer." In the case of Howard v. Valentine et al., 20 Cal. 282, decided while the old statute was in effect, the court reversed a judgment allowing recovery for rents accruing prior to the commencement of the period of unlawful detention, and said:

"* * * The case provided for in section 13, limits the recovery to rents accruing after the possession of the tenant has become unlawful, and rents prior to that time are not recoverable. * * * The error in this case is that rents are claimed which accrued anterior to the detention, and before the steps had been taken vesting in the plaintiff a right of action." Iburg v. Fitch et al., 57 Cal. 189.

We have presented, then, the view, illustrated, as we think, both by a consideration of the terms of the statute and the decisions, that the summary proceeding authorized by the Code and here adopted by the plaintiff is one which is, as to its prosecution and remedy, within the scope of its application, exclusive and limited.

[4, 5] The statute does not authorize the recovery of any money the right to which accrued before the unlawful detention began, except arrears of rents. And this recovery can only be had against the person guilty of such detention, for the main thing sought is the possession of the property. Arnold v. Krigbaum, supra. Defendant Peters, Jr., prior to the accrual of any of the rents alleged to be due plaintiff, had transferred the lease and possession thereunder to defendant Peters Investment Company (this was alleged affirmatively in the complaint and determined in the same way by the findings of fact). The lease in none of its terms prohibited the original lessee from assigning or transferring his rights, but did provide that the obligations of the contract should bind the lessee, his "grantees and assigns." In Ben Lomond Wine Co. v. Sladky, 141 Cal. 622, 75 Pac. 334, a proceeding similar to this, the court said:

"It would seem to require no argument to show that the summary proceedings provided, as the title to the chapter relating to them states, 'for obtaining possession of real property in certain cases,' will not lie against the mere assignee of a lease, who has again assigned and delivered possession to his assignee. * * * It is also entirely immaterial, so far as Sladky (the assignor) is concerned, whether or not he had been guilty of a violation of covenants of the lease. He was not guilty of unlawful detainer in retaining possession of the premises after breach of covenants, if there was a breach, so long as notice requiring the surrender of possession of the premises was not served upon him (Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656 [73 Pac. 449]), and, the lease not forbidding an assignment, he certainly had the legal right to assign it and deliver possession of the premises to the assignee, at any time before service of the notice to quit. * * * Not being guilty of an unlawful detainer, * * * he could not be liable for damages in the summary proceeding provided by statute therefor, for the only damages recoverable in such a proceeding are the damages caused by the unlawful detainer. * * * For such damages as may have been suffered by plaintiff by reason of any breach of the covenants of the lease by Sladky while he was a tenant under the lease and lawfully in possession of the premises thereunder, plaintiff must resort to the ordinary action, and cannot take advantage of the summary proceeding designed solely to enable him to speedily recover possession of the demised premises and put an end to the lease. * * * The statute is so plain and unambiguous that it is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the proposition that an assignee who has assigned the lease and delivered possession of the demised property to his assignee prior to the service of the notice to quit does not come within its terms."

[6, 7] Considering the first objection urged by the defendants named, in the light of what has been said, we find no difficulty at all in agreeing with appellant Peters, Jr., that he was not a proper party to the action; that as to him, by reason of the facts, a suit in unlawful detainer could not be maintained. The same objection, if considered tenable as a formal criticism of the complaint on the part of the Peters Investment Company, does not show that such defendant has suffered any prejudice by reason of the action of the court in overruling this objection. The investment company was the tenant in possession of the property, responsible for the payment of the charges under the lease agreement, and as to it the action could be maintained.

[8] The second objection, that as to the combining of the cause of action for recovery of taxes paid by the lessor with the cause of action for rent and possession, is available to both appellants, and should be sustained. The tax charges could not be recovered in an unlawful detainer suit. They could not be classed as damages, for damages could only arise after the retention of possession had become unlawful.

[9] Respondent urges us to apply the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution as a specific to cure these errors, and argues that no miscarriage of justice can be said to have accompanied the judgment. But, in our opinion, the cloak of the Constitution in the particular provision referred to cannot be made to cover the case. The forms of law provided in the establishment of the different character of actions are substantial, and a party is entitled to assist that he be compelled to answer and submit to judgment only when brought into court in an action properly framed in its particular class. A disregard of this right is more than a mere error "of pleading or procedure," such as is mentioned in the constitutional provision cited.

The findings of fact are quite full, and as to the defendant Peters Investment Company, the tenant holding unlawfully, a new trial will not be necessary, and obviously it will not be necessary to have a new trial in order to give appellant Peters, Jr., the relief to which he is entitled.

The judgment as entered against Peters Investment Company is modified by deducting therefrom the amount shown by the findings of fact to have been awarded on account of taxes paid by the plaintiff. As so modified, the judgment is affirmed, with costs to appellant.

The judgment as to appellant Homer H. Peters, Jr., is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment in favor of said defendant-appellant in accordance with the views herein expressed.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 28, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 26, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Chase against Homer H. Peters, Jr., and others and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of America. Judgment for plaintiff, and the Fidelity & Deposit Company appeals. Judgment as to appellant reversed with directions.

Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, and Doolittle & Morrison, of San Diego, for appellant. James E. Wadham and Glen H. Munkelt, both of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal taken from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff, the action being one to recover possession of real property because of its alleged unlawful detention. The facts in the case are in the main set out in the opinion filed this day, wherein the appeal of Homer H. Peters, Jr., and Peters Investment Company, codefendants with this appellant, is considered, that appeal being numbered Civil 2530, 174 Pac. 116.

The additional facts pertinent to be stated here are that, contemporaneously with the making of the lease, this appellant gave a bond or undertaking guaranteeing the faithful performance of the terms and conditions of the lease contract. In this unlawful detainer suit, by a second count in his complaint, the plaintiff showed the facts relative to the giving of the undertaking and the breach on the part of the persons holding under the lease to pay rental and to pay the taxes assessed against the real property. It was alleged that the plaintiff had been required to pay the taxes, and recovery was sought against this appellant for amounts of money so paid, also for rents which had accrued against the lessee. The contention of appellant is that the joining of the cause of action against it with a cause of action for the unlawful detention of the property, against the persons in possession, was improper. We have given full consideration to the point made in the opinion filed in case No. 2530. We refer to that opinion as expressing our conclusions in the matter of this appeal.

The judgment as against the appellant surety company is reversed, and the trial judge is directed, upon the findings of fact as made, to enter judgment for said appellant.

RIGGINS v. PATTERSON et al. (Civ. 2166.)

1. BROKERS ⟸67(2)—EXCHANGE OF LAND—DOUBLE AGENCY.

An agent in exchange of property may not collect compensation from both parties unless each party had full knowledge of agreement of other to pay compensation.

2. TRIAL ⟸397(2)—BY COURT—SUFFICIENCY OF FINDINGS.

In action by agent for commission on exchange of land where court found that plaintiff was acting as agent for both parties, judgment for plaintiff cannot stand where there was no finding that both parties knew of the double agency.

3. BROKERS ⟸82(4)—COMPENSATION—PLEADING.

In action by broker for commission on exchange of land, there could be no recovery where it appeared that broker, unknown to parties was agent for both, although answer contained merely a general denial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Leslie B. Riggins against Charles C. Patterson and Frank Reeves. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed as to Patterson and affirmed as to Reeves.

Robert H. Scott and Hutton & Williams, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Thos. C. Ridgway, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $500. It is presented on the judgment-roll alone. For cause of action plaintiff alleged in its complaint that on August 11, 1914, the defendant agreed in writing to pay the plaintiff the sum sued for as commission for services theretofore rendered by Leslie B. Riggins Company, a corporation, as real estate agent in procuring an agreement of exchange of properties belonging to the defendant Patterson for property belonging to one Denton and one Beggs. The answer made by the defendant first contained a denial of all the material allegations of fact embraced within the complaint. It was then set up as a further defense that the plaintiff, on the 8th day of August, 1914, was employed by Denton and Beggs to act as their agent and broker in procuring the alleged agreement for the exchange of real estate, and that Denton and Beggs agreed to pay the plaintiff as compensation for such services the sum of $600; that on or about the same date the plaintiff accepted the employment and did at all times subsequent thereto represent and act for said Denton and Beggs as their agent and broker, and while representing itself to be such agent procured from the defendant Frank Reeves an acceptance of said proposition to exchange the real property. As a third defense defendant alleged that, if any services had been rendered by the plaintiff, the same were voluntarily rendered and without any employment or authority or request from the defendant. The court made findings of fact determining: First, that prior to August 11, 1914, the plaintiff as real estate agent rendered services to the defendant in procuring an agreement of exchange of property belonging to the defendant Patterson for property belonging to Denton and Beggs; that defendant agreed on August 11, 1914, in writing, to pay the sum of $500 as commission for such services. There is a finding also that no part of the sum sued for had been paid. The court then further finds that on the 8th day of August, 1914, Denton and Beggs entered into an agreement with the plaintiff by which they employed the plaintiff as their agent in procuring the agreement of exchange and agreed to pay such agent the sum of $600 for such services. This finding follows:

"It is true that plaintiff's assignor accepted said employment and at all times subsequent to the 8th day of August, 1914, represented and acted for said Alice M. Denton and Hugh H. Beggs as their agent in procuring said agreement of exchange, and said plaintiff's assignor did on August 8, 1914, while representing itself to be the agent of said Denton and Beggs, procure from defendant Frank Reeves an acceptance of said agreement of exchange, and the court further finds that said acceptance was in writing indorsed upon and forming a part of said agreement of exchange signed by said Denton and Beggs, and that in said acceptance said defendant Reeves agreed to pay plaintiff's assignor the sum of $500 commission for services rendered."

The further finding made recites the depositing of deeds in escrow by the several parties to the transaction. It is contended on behalf of appellant that the findings do not support the judgment, in that it is not determined by the court that, at the time the agreement to pay commission was made, both parties to the exchange had knowledge of the fact of the agreement on the part of the other to pay commission to the agent.

[1] That the law is that an agent in acting in the matter of the sale or exchange of property may not collect compensation from both parties, unless it appears that each party had full knowledge of the facts concerning the agreement to pay such compensation, is not here in dispute. Respondent's answer to the contention advanced by the appellant is that the lack of knowledge on the part of either party is a matter of affirmative defense to an action brought to recover commission, and that such defense is not presented by the pleadings in this case. The second answer urged is that, conceding the pleadings were sufficient to present such an issue, in the absence of a finding upon the issue it will be presumed in support of the judgment that if such finding were made it would be adverse to the appellant. In so far as appellant Reeves is concerned, it does appear at least by inference from the finding that he had knowledge prior to the time of making his agreement to pay commission that Denton and Beggs had already agreed to pay the sum of $600 to the plaintiff on the same account. This appears from the fact that the court finds, first, that the agreement of exchange prepared by Denton and Beggs or offered by them contained the agreement on their part to pay commission, and that it was this agreement which was indorsed by Reeves or accepted by him in writing and by which acceptance he bound himself on his part to pay $500 as commission for the services of the plaintiff. It nowhere appears in the findings that appellant Patterson signed any acceptance of that agreement of exchange or had any knowledge of the agreement to pay commission as made by the other parties to it. The court finds merely, in substance, that Patterson deposited with a title or trust company a deed with instructions, which instructions were in accordance with the terms and agreements of the agreement of exchange. The facts as found by the court do not give to the plaintiff the character of a middleman from which it might be assumed that he was dealing as the agent of both parties with their knowledge; but the court particularly finds that plaintiff was employed as the agent of Denton and Beggs and that, representing himself to be such agent to Reeves, he procured an acceptance of the agreement of exchange. In Glenn v. Rice, 174 Cal. 269, 162 Pac. 1020, it is said:

"The authorities, with practical unanimity, declare that if an agent is engaged by both parties to effect a sale of property from one to the other, or an exchange between them, not as a mere middleman to bring them together, but actively in inducing each to make the trade, he cannot recover compensation from either party, unless both parties knew of the double agency at the time of the transaction. The reason for the rule is that he thereby puts himself in a position where his duty to one conflicts with his duty to the other, where his own interests tempt him to be unfaithful to both principals, a position which is against sound public policy and good morals. His contract for compensation being thus tainted, the law will not permit him to enforce it against either party. It is no answer to this objection to say that he did, in the particular case, act fairly and honorably to both. The infirmity of his contract does not arise from his actual conduct in the given case, but from the policy of the law, which will not allow a man to gain anything from a relation so conducive to bad faith and double dealing. And the fact that the party whom he sues was aware of the double agency and of the payment, or agreement to pay, compensation by the other party, and consented thereto, does not entitle him to recover. He must show knowledge by both parties. One party might willingly consent, believing that the advantage would accrue to him, to the detriment of the other. The law will not tolerate such an arrangement, except with the knowledge and consent of both, and will enter into no inquiry to determine whether or not the particular negotiation was fairly conducted by the agent. It leaves him as it finds him, affording him no relief."

[2, 3] As the findings of fact in this case disclose that the plaintiff was attempting to act as the agent of both parties to the transaction, and it does not appear that either Patterson or Denton and Beggs knew of the double agency, as between these parties sufficient facts are not found to support the judgment as made. We think that even had the answer contained merely a general denial when the facts disclose conditions as shown by the findings, the rule of public policy adverted to in the decision in Glenn v. Rice, supra, would interpose to prevent relief being granted to the plaintiff. In our opinion, the further finding was necessary to be made in order that the judgment have validity, showing the necessary facts to relieve the case from the rule. We do not think that such a finding can be supplied by inference or presumption.

After complaint filed the cause of action herein was assigned by the Leslie B. Riggins Company to Leslie B. Riggins, and proper substitution made by order of court. For convenience we have referred in the foregoing to the Leslie B. Riggins Company as the plaintiff.

The judgment as against appellant Patterson is reversed; as against appellant Reeves, it is affirmed.

WHEELER v. HOUSTON, GORE & LOY et al. (Civ. 2163.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⊂⊃166(2) — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In attorney's action against two corporations to recover for services, evidence held not to show two separate contracts of employment of plaintiff, nor to show agreement that plaintiff's compensation should be divided and paid for separately by two defendants.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃757(1)—PRINTING RECORD IN BRIEF—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, where counsel for appellant do not print in brief any part of record concerning order denying motion to strike out plaintiff appellee's bill of costs, or showing the motion or its grounds, subject is not properly presented to the appellate court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Frank W. Wheeler against Houston, Gore & Loy, a corporation, and the West Coast Engineering Company. From the judgment, defendant Houston, Gore & Loy appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Craig and Frank S. Adams, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hardy, Wheeler & Hardy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action against the appellant and West Coast Engineering Company, a corporation, to recover the sum of $500 alleged to be due the plaintiff for professional services rendered by plaintiff as an attorney at law. The complaint alleged that the services were reasonably worth $600, and admitted the payment of $100. Defendant Houston, Gore & Loy appeals from the judgment, which was for the sum demanded. Judgment by default was rendered against West Coast Engineering Company.

It is appellant's contention that only a small part of the services detailed by plaintiff were performed for appellant, and that the remaining services were performed by plaintiff for West Coast Engineering Company, and related to matters in which appellant could not and did not have any interest. Appellant further claims that there is no evidence by which the court could determine the value of the services actually rendered for appellant.

At the trial appellant conceded that the entire services rendered were worth $600, but not that all the services rendered were for appellant. From the testimony as printed in the briefs, it appears that at the time of plaintiff's employment there existed a controversy between defendant corporations and the Commonwealth Bonding & Casualty Company concerning contract obligations which the defendants were seeking to enforce against the bonding company. The plaintiff was called to the office of appellant, where he met certain officers of defendant corporations, including appellant's president, Mr. Houston. Thereupon those gentlemen submitted to plaintiff for his examination several documents relating to the matter in hand and stated their case. The plaintiff advised them concerning the matter, and thereafter conducted negotiations which resulted in a settlement of the controversy. At an early stage of those negotiations an agreement was reached as to the amount of money which would be paid by the bonding company to appellant. Further services were thereafter rendered by the plaintiff, by which settlement was made between the bonding company and the West Coast Engineering Company, and thus the entire transaction was completed.

[1] The evidence does not show two separate contracts of employment of plaintiff by the defendants. Neither does it show or tend to show any agreement that the compensation of plaintiff should be divided and paid for separately by the defendants in proportion to the services to be rendered to them separately. It was a joint employment for the purposes of the entire transaction. If one part of the services rendered by the plaintiff was more difficult than another, and required more labor than another, and if, therefore, the West Coast Engineering Company ought to pay the larger portion of the fee, that is a proper matter for adjustment between the defendants; but it is not a matter with which the plaintiff should be concerned.

[2] Counsel for appellant in their brief further state that the court erred in denying appellant's motion to strike out plaintiff's bill of costs. But they do not print in their brief any part of the record concerning the court's order, or showing the motion or the grounds thereof. The subject, therefore, is not properly presented for consideration here. Code Civ. Proc. § 953c; Barker Bros. v. Joos, 171 Pac. 1085.

DOOLITTLE v. McCONNELL. (Sac. 2605.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 8, 1918. Rehearing Denied Sept. 5, 1918.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸127(4)—AMENDED COMPLAINT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.
In a suit against an estate for personal services rendered deceased, held the first and second amended complaints did not state a new cause of action barred by the statute of limitations.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸127(2)—AMENDED COMPLAINT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.
Where there is no attempt to state a new cause of action in an amended complaint, but merely the addition of matters essential to make the original cause of action complete, the amendment, though made after the expiration of the period of limitations, relates back to the time of the commencement of the action.

3. PLEADING ⟸248(3)—AMENDED COMPLAINT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.
An amendment which changes the alleged date of a contract or the sum to be paid, or any particular of the matter to be performed, or the time or manner of performance, is permissible so long as the identity of the matter upon which the action is founded is preserved.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸431(2)—SUIT BY CREDITOR—IDENTITY OF CLAIM.
In suit against estate for personal services rendered deceased, the claim filed setting forth that services were rendered from 1902 to time of testatrix's death, and the amended complaints alleging a contract made in 1887, held there was no fatal difference between claim filed and the one upon which suit was brought, the date of the contract not being an essential in creditor's claim.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸227(1)—CREDITOR'S CLAIM—ESSENTIALS.
The purpose of a creditor's claim being to advise the representative of the estate of its nature, there is no requirement that it shall state the facts with all the detail necessary in a complaint, and its sufficiency is not to be tested by the rules of pleading.

6. PLEADING ⟸8(7)—CONCLUSIONS.
In suit against estate for personal services rendered deceased, parts of second amended complaint, alleging that certain things were done by plaintiff in pursuance of a certain agreement and statements of deceased, were not mere conclusions of law.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1170(3)—PLEADING—REDUNDANT MATTER—FAILURE TO STRIKE—REVERSIBLE ERROR.
Failure of court to strike out from complaint redundant and irrelevant matter is no ground for reversal, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 475, as to no error being regarded where it does not affect substantial rights.

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸221(5)—SUIT FOR SERVICES RENDERED DECEASED—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
In suit by plaintiff niece against estate of her deceased aunt for personal services rendered deceased under a specific oral contract, conflicting evidence held sufficient to sustain verdict for plaintiff.

9. WILLS ⟸58(1)—ORAL CONTRACT TO DISPOSE OF PROPERTY—ENFORCEMENT.
If made prior to 1905, an oral contract to dispose of property on death in a particular way may be enforced.

10. PAYMENT ⟸76(1) — RECEIPT — QUESTION FOR JURY.
In suit by plaintiff niece against estate of her deceased aunt for personal services rendered deceased, under a specific contract, whether receipt given by plaintiff was an admission of full payment held for jury.

11. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸227(4)—CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE—VERIFICATION.
Where verification by plaintiff's attorney of claim filed against estate was in substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, held objection that attorney did not have actual knowledge of facts supporting claim would not be sustained, vouchers and proofs not having been called for, and no objection made until rejection of claim and bringing of suit thereon.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Suit by E. Phœbe Doolittle against Thaddeus C. McConnell, as executor of the estate of Ellen M. Wilson, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. E. McLaughlin and White, Miller, Needham & Harber, all of Sacramento, for appellant. Grove L. Johnson, of Sacramento, Wm. M. Sims, of San Francisco, and Jay L. Henry (F. A. Plank, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant, as executor of the estate of Ellen M. Wilson, deceased, appeals from a judgment based upon a suit upon a creditor's claim. The amount of the judgment was $15,000.

Mrs. Wilson died in 1907. By her will all of her property was disposed of in a manner ignoring her niece, the plaintiff herein; her son, defendant herein, being the principal beneficiary under the testament.

The will was admitted to probate in 1908, and within the statutory time plaintiff presented a creditor's claim for $25,000 for personal services rendered her aunt, Mrs. Ellen M. Wilson, under a specific contract. It was set forth in the said claim that the services were rendered from August 6, 1902, to the time of Mrs. Wilson's death. This claim having been rejected by defendant, as executor of the estate of his mother, suit thereon was entered on June 10, 1908. The original complaint was amended in 1909, as appellant contends by abandoning the original contract as alleged in the creditor's claim and counting upon one entirely different—a contention which we shall presently examine in detail. Upon the amended complaint two trials were held before juries, each trial resulting in a substantial verdict in favor of plaintiff, but each judgment was on motion set aside and a new trial was granted. Upon the third trial, in 1916, at which another judge presided, plaintiff was permitted to file a new amended complaint and was again victorious before a jury. No motion for a new trial was made, but this appeal is prosecuted from the judgment.

[1] Appellant makes a number of specifications of alleged error based upon the supposed radical difference between the original cause of action set forth in the complaint and that upon which issue was finally joined and trial was had resulting in the last verdict. Among other assertions of appellant is one to the effect that the new cause of action pleaded in the last amended complaint was barred by the statute of limitations.

In the original complaint it was alleged, in substance, that in 1902 Mrs. Ellen M. Wilson repeatedly represented to plaintiff's parents and sisters, who resided in Iowa, and to plaintiff herself, who has farming land in North Dakota, that said Ellen M. Wilson was wealthy; that her health was becoming impaired, and that she was physically unable to manage her household affairs; that she was living alone; and that she desired plaintiff to accompany her to California. It was further alleged that Mrs. Wilson promised that if plaintiff would accompany her to California, would take care of her, and would manage her household affairs she would fully compensate plaintiff for such services, if not in Mrs. Wilson's lifetime, then by provision in her will. It is averred that plaintiff accepted the offer made by her aunt and that she came to this state. There are very extended allegations regarding the manner in which plaintiff complied with her agreement, and in respect to the details of the care and attention bestowed by her upon Mrs. Wilson up to the time of the latter's death.

In the amended complaint of 1909 were alleged the same sort of duties which were to be performed by plaintiff under the agreement, and which, according to the averments, were performed during the same period as that specified in the original complaint and in the claim upon which it was founded. But it was averred that the contract was made, not in 1902, but in 1887, by the plaintiff and Mrs. Wilson and the mother of plaintiff, and that by them it was agreed, not that the plaintiff would then and there accompany her aunt to California, but that whenever Mrs. Wilson should write to plaintiff's mother for plaintiff to come to this state and live with her the plaintiff would do so, relying upon the promise of the aunt to see that the niece would be well provided for. It was alleged that in 1902 plaintiff came, in response to a request in a letter written to her sister, and that she entered upon the discharge of her duties in accordance with the agreement of 1887.

The amended complaint of 1916 differs very little from that of 1909. In both the time of the original agreement is given as the year 1887. In the amended complaint of 1909 the agreement alleged was that if plaintiff would come to California when requested her aunt would see that she was well provided for. In the pleading of 1916, after the words "provided for" were added the words "during the life of said Ellen M. Wilson and that at the death of said Ellen M. Wilson she, the said plaintiff, would be, by said Ellen M. Wilson amply and fully provided for and compensated for her said services." In this complaint for the first time occurs the formal allegation that Mrs. Wilson did not, by will or otherwise, provide for plaintiff.

We are of the opinion that none of the minute and diversified specifications of alleged error, founded upon the supposedly vital differences between the contract set forth in the original complaint and the two described in the later pleadings, is of any force. The essence of the plaintiff's action against the estate was her claim for services rendered during certain years pursuant to a certain agreement. Even if we should concede that the first complaint failed to state a cause of action, we would not be forced to the conclusion that the statute of limitations barred all possibility of recovery because there was no complaint which should have withstood an attack by demurrer during the time between the filing of the original and the preparation of the amended pleading. Nor is there anything so essentially different between the various contracts alleged and that finally proven as to require us to decide that either the one in the second or that in the third complaint set forth was at variance with the creditor's claim against the estate. These phases of the pleadings are so well analyzed in the opinion filed by the learned judge of the superior court who presided at the last trial that we take this occasion to quote and adopt his language used in ruling upon the application to file the second amended complaint. He said:

"Counsel for the defendant contend that the complaint on file (first amended complaint) does not state a cause of action, and that the proposed amendment must therefore be treated as the commencement of the cause of action therein stated against which the statute of limitations has run.

[2] "'Where there is no attempt to state a new cause of action in an amended complaint, but merely the addition of matters essential to make the original cause of action complete, the amendment, though made after the expiration of the period of limitation, relates back to the time of the commencement of the action. This was expressly held by the District Court of Appeal for the First District in Rauer's Law, etc., Co. v. Leffingwell, 11 Cal. App. 494 [105 Pac. 427], in which a rehearing was denied by this court, where the original complaint on a promissory note did not contain an allegation of nonpayment, an allegation absolutely essential to the statement of a cause of action. The amended complaint was filed after the statute would have run, if it had not been for the original complaint.' Ruiz v. Santa Barbara Gas, etc., Co., 164 Cal. 194, 128 Pac. 330.

"It is further objected that, whether or not the complaint on file states a cause of action, the proposed amendment states a new and different cause of action barred by the statute. This presents a problem not easy of solution, and concerning which the decisions of our own state seem not altogether in harmony.

"On this point I find no general rule laid down by the decisions in this state. All that is said is that great liberality should be used by the courts in allowing amendments (Burns v. Scooffy, 98 Cal. 276, 33 Pac. 86, and cases cited); and that the allowance of amendments is a matter within the discretion of the courts (Coubrough v. Adams, 70 Cal. 378, 11 Pac. 634; Lestrade v. Barth, 17 Cal. 286). And in practice the courts have been extremely liberal, as e. g., in Heilbron v. Heinlen, 72 Cal. 376, 14 Pac. 24, where the complaint was amended so as to describe a different tract of land from that described in the original complaint; or in Walsh v. McKeen, 75 Cal. 519, 17 Pac. 673, where the case was changed from an action at law to a case in equity; or in Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164, where the change allowed was from an action on a special contract to an action on a quantum meruit; or, as in Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 256, 23 Pac. 127, where the change was from an action on a mechanic's lien to an action on the special contract or in assumpsit; or in Bogart v. Crosby, 80 Cal. 195, 22 Pac. 84, where the principal debtors, who had been omitted from the original complaint, were brought in by amendment. * * *

"It is obvious that the unqualified way in which the rule is sometimes stated—i. e., that a new or different cause of action cannot be introduced by amendment—cannot be accepted. For the most common kinds of amendments are those in which the complaints are amended that do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and in these, and often in the case of new parties, a new cause of action is in fact for the first time introduced. All that can be required, therefore (to use the language of Mr. Pomeroy), is that 'wholly different cause of action' shall not be introduced; or, as said by the court in Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. (U. S.) 130–143, 15 L. Ed. 158, that 'a complainant (is not) at liberty to abandon the entire case made by his bill, and make a new and different case by way of amendment,' or 'to strike out the entire substance and prayer of his bill, and insert a new cause by way of amendment'; or, as expressed by this court in an early case, the matter of the amendment must not be 'entirely foreign to the original complaint.' Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 424, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53.

"The following cases further illustrate the liberality of the rule:

"In Porter v. Fillebrown, 119 Cal. 238, 51 Pac. 322, the complaint in an action at law upon a creditor's claim for a sum less than $300, and hence not within the jurisdiction of the superior court, was amended so as to make it an equitable action for an accounting of a trust within the court's jurisdiction; in Union Lumber Co. v. Schouten, 25 Cal. App. 80, 142 Pac. 910, the complaint alleging an action for goods sold and delivered was amended to allege an account stated; in MacKroth v. Sladky, 148 Pac. 978, the complaint alleging a written contract to divide commissions was amended by alleging an oral contract instead of the written one; in Merchants' C. Agency v. Gopcevic, 23 Cal. App. 216, 137 Pac. 609, and in Turner & Dahnken v. Bauer, 28 Cal. App. 311, 152 Pac. 308, the complaints were amended to change the causes of action upon express contracts to causes upon a quantum meruit; and in Cowel et al. v. Snyder et al., 171 Cal. 291, 152 Pac. 920, the complaint in an action to recover for the rent of land and the price of rock quarried was amended to plead an account stated.

"In the latter case it is said, 171 Cal. at page 294, 152 Pac. 922: 'Undoubtedly an account stated and mutually accepted by the parties does give rise to a new cause of action, and the statute of limitations on that cause of action begins to run, not as of the date of the items of account, but from the time of the agreement that the statement is correct. * * * But the account stated arose out of the identical transactions pleaded in the original complaint, and it has repeatedly been decided that such an amendment as was here allowed is permissible, and is not subject to the bar of the statute of limitations.'

[3] "The Supreme Court of New Hampshire in 1839, stated the rule in language which answers some of the defendant's objections as follows: 'The difficulty which sometimes exists in the application of the rule arises from the fact that almost all amendments change, to some extent, the cause of action, as originally stated. An amendment which changes the alleged date of a contract, or the sum to be paid, or any particular of the matter to be performed, or the time or manner of performance, changes, in one sense, the cause of the action; but it is not in this sense that the rule is to be understood. Amendments of that character, so long as the identity of the matter upon which the action is founded is preserved, are admissible; the alteration being made, not to enable the plaintiff to recover for another matter than that for which he originally brought his action, but to cure an imperfect or erroneous statement of the subject-matter upon which the action was in fact founded. So long as the form of action is not changed, and the court can see that the identity of the cause of action is preserved, the particular allegations of the declaration may be changed, and others superadded, in order to cure imperfections and mistakes in the manner of stating the plaintiff's case.' Stevenson v. Mudgett, 10 N. H. 338–340 [34 Am. Dec. 155].

"Under the liberal interpretation of the rule as stated in the foregoing authorities, I conclude that the plaintiff is entitled to amend."

In addition to the authorities cited in the foregoing quotation, we might refer to San Joaquin Valley Bank v. Gate City Oil Co., 170 Cal. 250, 149 Pac. 557, and Glougie v. Glougie, 174 Cal. 126, 162 Pac. 118.

[4] The same rules announced by the court in overruling appellant's various attacks upon the complaint as amended apply with greater force to the refusal to hold that there was a fatal difference between the creditor's claim as filed and the one upon which suit was brought, because the courts go further in upholding such demands against estates than in sustaining pleadings. Indeed, it is usually necessary in such cases to go more into details in the complaint than in the claim. In the claim as in the complaint the essential element was a substantial assertion of the contract and its fulfillment on the claimant's part. While the date of making the agreement as set forth in the creditor's claim against the estate differed from that alleged in the complaint after amendment, the promise to be performed by Mrs. Wilson, as well as the nature of the services actually rendered and the time during which claimant performed those services, were all alleged in substantially the same form in the claim and in all the pleadings of the claimant. Plaintiff could recover for all of her services and could escape the bar of the statute of limitations only by showing that under her contract she was to be finally compensated upon the death of Mrs. Wilson. It was therefore necessary for her to put the essentials of the contract in the creditor's claim, but the date was not one of them. In Thompson v. Orena, 134 Cal. 26, 66 Pac. 24, the court was considering a suit based upon a claim for services performed for which payment was to be made upon the sale by decedent of certain land, which remained unsold at her death. In the creditor's claim the land was not described, and the omission of such description was not held fatal to the validity of the claim, the court holding that the only necessity for any reference to the land arose out of the fact that the claim should show that it was not barred by the statute of limitations. In Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185–196, 135 Pac. 496, it was held that such a claim need not be drawn with the precision which would render a complaint good against a special demurrer. The Code does not prescribe the exact form of such a claim.

[5] The purpose of presenting such a demand is to advise the representative of the estate of its nature, and there is no requirement that it shall state the facts with all the detail necessary in a complaint, nor is its sufficiency to be tested by the rules of pleading. Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 88 Pac. 911; Elizalde v. Murphy, 163 Cal. 681, 126 Pac. 978; Enscoe v. Fletcher, 1 Cal. App. 659, 82 Pac. 1075.

[6] Defendant moved to strike out as purely conclusions of law and redundancies certain parts of the second amended complaint —the one filed in 1916. Some of the parts at which the motion was directed were statements that certain things were done by plaintiff "in pursuance" of a certain agreement and statements of Mrs. Wilson. These were not mere conclusions of law, and were no more subject to just criticism, as respondent's counsel correctly argue, than the allegation, so frequently and properly used in pleadings, that a plaintiff "duly performed all conditions and terms" of a contract "on his part to be performed."

[8] The testimony was conflicting, but there was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict. It was the theory of the defendant's counsel that any agreement made in 1887 was, upon the view most favorable to respondent, merely an option which expired either by lapse of time or was revoked by other and later offers of employment. Even if it be conceded that the agreement was a mere option, there was substantial evidence in the case at bar to support a conclusion not only that the option had been exercised by Mrs. Wilson, but that she had stated to a number of her friends, after Miss Doolittle came to live with her, that the arrangement between them was one by which she was bound to provide in her will for her niece. The mere fact that fifteen years elapsed between the making of the original arrangement and a time when Mrs. Wilson's health was so impaired as to lead her to a conclusion that she wanted Miss Doolittle to come to California in fulfillment of the agreement does not destroy the validity of the option.

[9] It is well settled that, if made prior to 1905, an oral contract to dispose of property on death in a particular way may be enforced, and it sometimes occurs that many years elapse between the making of the agreement and an action such as this. In the recent case of Steinberger v. Young, 165 Pac. 432, the oral agreement which was enforced had been made almost half a century before the death of Mrs. Ross, of whose estate defendant Young was the administrator.

The contention is likewise made that the "option" was withdrawn by the offers made by Mrs. Wilson (of which there was some evidence) to pay plaintiff a certain wage if she would enter her aunt's employment. It is not contended that these offers were accepted, and they may be justly regarded as mere unsuccessful efforts to vary the terms of the original understanding. However, the agreement of 1887, as revealed by the testimony of members of plaintiff's family present when the alleged conversation took place between Mrs. Wilson and plaintiff's mother, was not a mere option simply because performance on the part of Miss Phœbe Doolittle was to be postponed. The oral agreement did not differ in essence from those alleged and proven in such cases as Steinberger v. Young, supra, and Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 35, 138 Pac. 728. The real issues of the case were admirably stated in an instruction offered by the defendant and given by the court, which was as follows:

"The claim of plaintiff, as set forth in the complaint, is as follows:

"That in the year 1887, the exact date plaintiff cannot state, Ellen M. Wilson said to plaintiff and the mother of plaintiff in Cresco, Iowa, that she wanted the mother of plaintiff to let plaintiff come to California and live with her, said Ellen M. Wilson, and to stay with her, to care for her, said Ellen M. Wilson, and that if she, said plaintiff, did so come to California, she, said Ellen M. Wilson, would see that plaintiff was well provided for during the life of said Ellen M. Wilson, and that at the death of said Ellen M. Wilson she, the said plaintiff, would be, by said Ellen M. Wilson, amply and fully provided for and compensated for her said services; and it was then and there stated to said Ellen M. Wilson by said mother of plaintiff, and agreed to by the said plaintiff, that whenever said Ellen M. Wilson should write to said mother of plaintiff for plaintiff to come to her in California, that said plaintiff would leave the Eastern states and her mother and her business and come to California to live with and care for said Ellen M. Wilson under said promise.

"That in pursuance of said proposition and agreement and statement the said Ellen M. Wilson did in July, 1902, write to the sister of the said plaintiff, and in and thereby did request the plaintiff to come to California to live with her according to said proposition, agreement, statement, and conversation, and plaintiff, in pursuance of said conversation and proposition and agreement and statement so made in 1887 as aforesaid, and of said letters from said Ellen M. Wilson to plaintiff's said sister, did, in August, 1902, leave her home and business interests in North Dakota and came to the home of the said Ellen M. Wilson near said Elk Grove, Sacramento county, Cal., and immediately entered upon the discharge of her duties in accordance with said agreement above set forth, and from that time until the death of said Ellen M. Wilson plaintiff gave and devoted all of her time and attention to her said aunt, and duly and properly cared for her, and in all and every respect fulfilled all of the conditions of said agreement by plaintiff to be done and performed and to the entire satisfaction of her said aunt; and unless you are satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence that the particular contract so alleged was made between plaintiff and Ellen M. Wilson, then your verdict must be for the defendant."

The testimony of the brother and one of the sisters of the plaintiff was sufficient, if believed by the jury, to establish the first requisites for a judgment for plaintiff as outlined by the quoted instruction. Mr. George Doolittle, speaking of a time in 1887 and an occasion at his mother's home in Iowa when his mother, his aunt, Mrs. Wilson, and several of his sisters were also present, testified in part as follows:

"My aunt made the remark that my mother had more girls than she was entitled to. She thought she ought to have one. My mother said that when she needed one she could have one. My aunt said she would take Phœbe home with her now. My mother said no, she could not let Phœbe go just now, but at any time when she thought she needed her, if she wrote she would have Phœbe come, she says. My aunt went on to say as long as she lived she would see Phœbe was well taken care of, and, if anything should happen to her, she would see she was provided for. Then my aunt went on to say she did not want any of her—she says: 'I don't want any of yours girls, Jane, to do what you and I did, worked in kitchens, somebody's kitchen.' She says: 'The way I look at it, the other girls have got good educations, they are able to, they are teaching school, able to take care of themselves, not be under anybody else; Phœbe is the one I will take.' * * * About what she said was that she wanted Phœbe to come out and live with her and be a companion for her, that she was all alone, did not have any one to stay with her."

He also testified that his sister Phœbe was about 17 years old at the time of that conversation. He also testified regarding a conversation with his aunt at her home in California after his sister had been living there and taking care of Mrs. Wilson for some time, as follows:

"My aunt said that she made Phœbe an allowance of $15 a month as pin money so she could send her mother some little things as she had been used to, to buy herself any little things; she said that in case anything happened to her, she intended to provide well for Phœbe."

Eva R. Huska, a sister of plaintiff, corroborated their brother with reference to the conversation in Iowa in 1887. She also said that Mrs. Wilson told the mother of the girls that if she should take one of them she would do well by the one who should come to her.

There was abundant testimony to the effect that Mrs. Wilson again and again declared her satisfaction with the manner in which Miss Doolittle ministered to her wants and managed her household affairs, and that she expressed her intention to pay for plaintiff's care and devotion of her by a substantial provision to be made by her will. It will not be necessary to set forth all of this testimony. Its trend will appear from the few quotations which we shall make below.

Dr. Briggs, physician and pharmacist, who for some years practiced and conducted a drug store at Elk Grove, Sacramento county, knew Mrs. Wilson well, and frequently talked with her when she was well enough to ride out, which, he said, was "a good part of the time." It was her custom to stop in front of the store, and, as it was difficult for her to get out the carriage, he would frequently go out and talk to her. Within six months after the arrival of Miss Doolittle at the home of Mrs. Wilson the latter had a conversation with Dr. Briggs, which he described as follows:

"She stated to me that she was very happy to have her niece with her; that the niece seemed to be the only one of the relatives that seemed to understand her—was willing to do the things that were necessary to make her comfortable. She stated that she was going to take care of her niece; that she did not know how long she would live. She had one stroke of apoplexy or cerebral hemorrhage, and she did not know how soon she might have another, and she stated that she was going to take care of her. * * * She said she was going to take care of her in her will, or make provision for her."

This witness also testified that upon one occasion Mrs. Wilson said she was contributing to her niece's expenses, but would take care of Miss Doolittle more liberally in her will. The witness also related the following substance of a conversation with Mrs. Wilson:

"She said she would make ample provision for her, she would not suffer in the world for comforts; she would make, she would provide well for her."

Mrs. Walther, an acquaintance of more than 30 years, testified that Mrs. Wilson, speaking of Miss Doolittle, said:

"Phœbe is a good girl. I told her, if she stayed with me as long as I lived, I would provide for her so she would never want," and that in the same conversation Mrs. Wilson, speaking of her niece, said:

"I am giving her a little monthly allowance now to buy her clothes and little articles with."

All of this testimony and more to the same effect tended to confirm the plaintiff's position with reference to the scope and meaning of the original agreement made in 1887.

It would unnecessarily prolong this opinion to quote at any length from the testimony of the many witnesses who told of the care and devotion bestowed by plaintiff upon her aunt. Suffice it to say that such testimony, if accepted as true, was amply sufficient to support that part of the case outlined in the latter part of the instruction quoted above.

[10] It is the theory of the appellant that the sum of $15 per month allowed to Miss Doolittle by her aunt was intended to be and was in full payment for her services. It is, of course, admitted that witnesses told of conversations in which Mrs. Wilson said this monthly payment was merely an allowance for "pin money"; but counsel insist that the acceptance by plaintiff from defendant of a sum of money, and the signing of a receipt, amounted to the final settlement of an account stated which precludes recovery in this action. The receipt was in the words and figures following:

"Elk Grove, April 17, 1907.

"Received of T. C. McConnell forty-six dollars & fifty cts. $46.50 in payment for labor in full for Estate of Mrs. E. M. Wilson,

"E. P. Doolittle."

It appears from Miss Doolittle's testimony that her cousin, the defendant, came to her and asked what was "coming to her." She, according to her testimony, replied: "There is $15 on my monthly allowance and $2.50 for five days' additional amount, and $29.00 I had advanced Auntie to pay her hired man." The receipt was given, if the date be correct, upon the day upon which the will was filed and some time before Mr. McConnell was appointed executor. The paper was, of course, receivable as an admission; but it was for the jury to say whether or not it was, under all the circumstances, an admission of full payment of all that she believed herself to be entitled to receive under her aunt's will. When the receipt was given the defendant was not executor, and the document could not be regarded, in a strict sense, an account stated between plaintiff and the estate; but, even if it be so regarded, there is nothing to prevent impeachment of such an account for fraud or mistake. 1 R. C. L. 218–220. According to the modern doctrine, an account stated "simply affords strong presumptive evidence, which may be rebutted by showing fraud or mistake." 1 C. J. 709. Clearly it was for the jury to say whether or not under the evidence Miss Doolittle signed the receipt through mistake.

[11] It is asserted by appellant's counsel that respondent has no standing in court by reason of an improper verification of the creditor's claim. The affidavit attached to the claim was made by Miss Doolittle's attorney, who deposed as follows:

"That he is the attorney for E. Phœbe Doolittle, whose foregoing claim is herewith presented to the executor of said deceased; that the amount of said claim, to wit, the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, is justly due to the said claimant; that no payments have been made thereon which are not credited, and that there are no offsets to the same, to the knowledge of said affiant; that the reason why this affidavit is not made by claimant is that claimant is absent from the state of California and deponent is familiar with the facts of this claim."

The verification is made in substantial compliance with section 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but appellant's counsel insist that because Mr. Sims, who signed it as attorney, was not employed by Miss Doolittle until after her aunt's death, and because, upon examination at the trial, he testified that, although he knew Miss Doolittle was living with her aunt, he knew nothing of their business relations until he was retained as an attorney, therefore he was disqualified to make the affidavit. Whatever may be the rule in other states, in California the courts have generally refused to be very technical in passing upon matters of this sort. In Estate of Swain, 67 Cal. 637, 8 Pac. 497, the court refused to declare certain claims void because of faulty verification. It was there declared that a "claim" against an estate has reference to a debt or demand which might have been enforced against the decedent in his lifetime. If the demand were the subject of a suit during his life, and if the statement of the cause of action were deemed objectionable, defective, or insufficient, the defendant would have the right to demand a bill of particulars, and similarly an executor or administrator might insist upon "vouchers and proofs" to support a claim which has been presented. Section 1494, Code Civ. Proc. It is true that in the Estate of Swain the validity of the claim was established prima facie by the administrator's approval, and the burden of proof, therefore, was upon the heirs who assailed its sufficiency; but that case is authority, we think, for holding that an executor or administrator may not postpone an attack upon a verification until after the rejection of the claim and the bringing of suit thereon, when he has not called for vouchers and proofs, and when he bases his objections upon the supposed lack of actual knowledge, on the part of the verifying agent, of the facts supporting the claim. Of course, the claim must of necessity be authenticated by a verification which on its face contains the essential matters prescribed by section 1494, Code of Civil Procedure. Perkins v. Onyett, 86 Cal. 348, 24 Pac. 1024. This verification does meet that requirement. Griffith v. Lewin, 129 Cal. 596, 62 Pac. 172. In Guerian v. Joyce, 133 Cal. 405, 65 Pac. 972, the affidavit of the claimant showed upon its face that she was ignorant of the amount of some items of her claim, yet the verification was held sufficient. The purpose of a claim against an estate is to give the executor or administrator such information as will enable him "to act upon it advisedly." Western States Life Insurance Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185–196, 135 Pac. 496. That case is also authority for a court's refusal to hear minute technical objections based upon the supposed faulty verification of a claim made long after the commencement of an action and after the time for presentation of claim has expired. The court did not err in refusing to grant a nonsuit on the ground that no legally verified claim had ever been presented to the executor.

No other alleged errors require review. The judgment is affirmed.

1. PLEADING ⟸225(2) — AMENDMENT AFTER DEMURRER—STATUTE.

Though, under Code Civ. Proc. § 472, plaintiff has right to amend complaint once without leave after demurrer is filed to it, provided he does so before demurrer is presented for decision, if demurrer is sustained, defendant is entitled to judgment, unless court in its discretion gives plaintiff leave to amend.

2. PLEADING ⟸225(2)—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT—LIBERAL EXERCISE OF DISCRETION.

A court should exercise its discretion liberally in favor of an application to amend the complaint after decision on demurrer.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸934(1) — PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING TRIAL COURT — TIME OF COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.

In absence of contrary showing, Supreme Court will presume that action was begun at latest possible time prior to filing of second amended complaint, dismissed on demurrer as barred by limitations.

4. CONTRACTS ⟸188—BREACH—LIABILITY.

Breach of a contract cannot be made basis for action for damages, or charge of fraud, against defendants who did not execute the contract and were not bound by it, or concerned with its performance so far as plaintiff is concerned.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸179(2)—FRAUD —AVOIDANCE OF THREE-YEAR LIMITATION.

Where plaintiff sues for fraud, seeking to avoid three-year period of limitations because he did not discover it until after perpetration, he must not only show he did not discover fraud until within three years, and that it was committed under such circumstances that his knowledge at time will not be presumed, but must also set forth time when and circumstances under which facts constituting fraud came to his knowledge.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Elon G. Galusha against A. R. Fraser and others. From a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles Cassat Davis, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment. The object of the action was to recover damages on account of fraud and deceit alleged to have been perpetrated by the defendants upon the plaintiff and his predecessor in interest, whereby they were induced to purchase a lot in the Silver Strand tract near Ocean Park from the defendants A. R. Fraser, G. M. Jones, and H. R. Gage. The Guaranty Realty Company is also made a party defendant. Fraser, Jones, and Gage filed a joint demurrer to the second amended complaint on two grounds, namely, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, referring to sections 338 and 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and thereupon entered judgment dismissing the action as against the defendants Fraser, Jones, and Gage.

[1, 2] The claim of the plaintiff that the court erred in refusing leave to amend when the demurrer was sustained is without merit. Under section 472 of the Code of Civil Procedure a plaintiff has the right to amend his complaint once, without leave of the court, after a demurrer is filed to it, provided he does so before the demurrer is presented to the court for decision. But, if the demurrer is sustained, the defendant is entitled to judgment forthwith, unless the court, in its discretion, gives the plaintiff leave to amend. It is true that a court should exercise its discretion liberally in favor of an application to amend; but the privilege of amending at that stage of the proceeding does not become a right, unless the circumstances are such that it would be an abuse of that discretion to refuse to allow it.

The complaint alleges that on June 29, 1905, Margaret E. Galusha, from whom plaintiff derives title, agreed in writing to purchase the lot from the defendants, Fraser, Jones, and Gage; that on January 30, 1906, before she had fully paid the price, she died, and her right and title thereupon devolved upon plaintiff, as heir or devisee, and that he completed the purchase; that to induce her to buy the lot the defendants represented to her that they would make certain improvements of the Silver Strand tract, of which said lot was a part, which, if made, would greatly enhance the value of the lot. These improvements are particularly described in the complaint. It is not necessary to give the details here. It is alleged that the defendants failed and refused to make said improvements, except a small part thereof.

Before the plaintiff made the final payment of the purchase price, he and the Guaranty Realty Company, on September 20, 1906, executed an agreement whereby, in consideration of said final payment, the Guaranty Realty Company agreed to "put in all the improvements on said tract as specified in agreement between Fraser, Jones, and Gage and the Guaranty Realty Company, which includes grading the property, bulkheads along the lagoon, sewer, sidewalks, bridges over lagoons, and staking out of lots when desired for building purposes; and the water, gas, and electricity will be put in by the city as required by building necessities." The terms of the agreement between Fraser, Jones, and Gage and the Guaranty Realty Company relating to improvements, thus referred to, are not alleged or stated in any part of the complaint other than by the above-quoted passage from the agreement aforesaid.

It is further alleged that plaintiff repeatedly demanded of the defendants that they make the improvements above described and that defendants repeatedly promised that they would do so; that in June, 1910, plaintiff demanded of Fraser that the improvements be made as promised, whereupon Fraser refused to make any improvements unless the plaintiff would agree in writing to build a house upon said lot, which plaintiff declined to do until defendants made the improvements; that until said refusal of Fraser the plaintiff believed in the honest intentions of the defendants as to said improvements, but the long delay and the final refusal of Fraser satisfied him that he had been deceived. Damages are laid in the sum of $3,500.

[3] The second amended complaint was filed on November 18, 1914. The record fails to show when the action was begun, and the parties in their briefs do not advise us of the date of filing the original complaint. It is not claimed that it was begun within three years after June, 1910. Moreover, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, we will presume, if necessary to do so in order to support the judgment, that the action was begun at the latest possible time prior to the filing of the second amended complaint. This would make it later than June, 1914.

[4] The breach of the contract alleged to have been executed between plaintiff and the Guaranty Realty Company cannot be made the basis of an action for damages, or a charge of fraud against the defendants Fraser, Jones, and Gage, since they did not execute the contract, and it does not appear that they are in any manner bound by it, or concerned with its performance, so far as plaintiff is concerned. If the complaint states a cause of action for relief on the ground of fraud, the period of limitation would expire at the end of three years from the time when the action accrued, or from the discovery of the fraud. Code Civ. Proc. § 338. If it states a cause of action for damages upon a liability not founded upon a contract in writing, and unmixed with a claim for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake within the meaning of section 338, then the action would be barred after two years from the time it accrued, by the provisions of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure.

[5] Where the plaintiff sues for relief on the ground of fraud, and seeks exemption from the three-year period of limitation for the reason that he did not discover the fraud until after it was perpetrated, he must not only show that he did not discover the fraud until within the three years next before the action was begun, and that the fraud was committed under such circumstances that he would not be presumed to have had knowledge of it at the time, but he must also set forth the times and circumstances under which the facts constituting the fraud came to his knowledge, so that the court may determine from the allegations of the complaint whether the discovery was within that period. Lady Washington v. Wood, 113 Cal. 487, 45 Pac. 809. It is doubtful if the plaintiff has brought himself within this rule. But we need not determine the sufficiency of the facts stated to show his ignorance of the fraud prior to June, 1910. He avers that at that time he became fully aware of it. The period of limitation began to run at that time, if not before, and it expired in June, 1913. This was at least a year before the action was begun, according to the presumption which we must indulge, as above stated, in favor of the judgment. The action was therefore barred, and the demurrer was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

SCOTT v. TIMES-MIRROR CO.

(L. A. 4554.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸856(5)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.
When order of the trial court granting new trial is general in its terms, it will be affirmed if it could properly have been granted upon any of the grounds upon which motion was predicated.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸977(3)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.
An order granting a new trial will not be disturbed upon appeal, except upon a showing of clear and manifest abuse of discretion.

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⟸103—REPUTATION—EVIDENCE.
In a libel case for damages to good reputation as an attorney at law, under Civ. Code, § 45, it was proper for plaintiff to affirmatively show what his reputation was as an attorney in his main case; the presumption of good reputation as an individual not applying to reputation in a professional capacity.

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⟸101(1)—DAMAGE TO REPUTATION—BURDEN OF PROOF.
In a libel action for damages to the reputation as a professional man, plaintiff had the affirmative, and was bound to plead and prove what that reputation was.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Joseph Scott against the Times-Mirror Company, a corporation. Verdict for plaintiff, and from an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph Scott, of Los Angeles, and John Mason Ross, of Bisbee, Ariz., for appellant. Samuel Poorman, Jr., and Hunsaker & Britt and Le Roy M. Edwards, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order granting the defendant's motion for a new trial in an action for libel wherein the plaintiff was awarded compensatory damages in the sum of $10,000 and exemplary damages in the sum of $20,000 by the verdict of a jury. A motion for a new trial having been made upon all the statutory grounds, the same was granted by a general order of the trial court. The main contention urged by the appellant as one of the grounds for the reversal of that order is that the trial court abused its discretion in attempting to set aside the verdict of the jury as to both of these elements and amounts of damage. A brief consideration of the nature of the action is essential to a determination of this as well as of the other points in the case. The plaintiff in his complaint alleged that he was at the date of filing the same and for some 20 years or more prior thereto had been an attorney at law of the several courts of record of the state of California, practicing his profession principally in Los Angeles, but also in several other counties of the said state and also in the state of Arizona, and that as such attorney at law he had always conducted and demeaned himself with honesty and fidelity and without any misconduct or malpractice in his said profession, and had thereby come to enjoy and did enjoy a good name and reputation as an attorney at law. He then proceeded to allege the facts and details of the publication complained of, which consisted of an article on a report regarding a certain action for divorce in which the plaintiff herein appeared as attorney of record for the plaintiff therein, with certain insinuations and animadversions reflecting upon the conduct of this plaintiff in the matter of advising and commencing said action, all of which this plaintiff alleged to be maliciously and knowingly false and to have been published with express malice and ill will on the part of the defendant toward this plaintiff, and with the intent to injure him in his professional standing and reputation and to bring him into public discredit as an attorney at law, by reason whereof he had suffered $10,000 actual and $50,000 exemplary damages. The answer of the defendant admitted the publication of the article complained of, but denied that it was either false or malicious. The defendant also, basing its denial upon the want of sufficient information, denied specifically the averments of the plaintiff's complaint respecting his general conduct as an attorney at law during the period of the practice of his profession, and upon the same ground denied that during all or any of the said period prior to the date of the publication of said article the plaintiff had or enjoyed a good name or reputation as an attorney at law. It would serve no useful purpose to restate or review at length the evidence presented upon these issues upon the trial and embraced in the somewhat voluminous record before us upon this appeal.

[1-3] It is the well-settled rule of this court that when the order of the trial court in granting a new trial is general in its terms it will be affirmed if it could properly have been granted upon any of the grounds upon which the motion for it was predicated. Weiseer v. S. P. Co., 148 Cal. 426, 83 Pac. 439, 7 Ann. Cas. 636; Morgan v. J. W. Robinson Co., 157 Cal. 348, 107 Pac. 695. It is an equally well-settled and long-established rule of this court that an order granting a new trial will not be disturbed upon appeal except upon a showing of clear and manifest abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in respect to granting the same. Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 1019; Doolin v. Omnibus Cable Co., 125 Cal. 148, 57 Pac. 774; Sherwood v. Kyle, 125 Cal. 652, 58 Pac. 270; Lee v. S. P. Co., 101 Cal. 118, 35 Pac. 572; Meinberg v. Jordan, 29 Cal. App. 760, 157 Pac. 1005, 1007. Having in mind these principles, we have carefully examined the record before us, and we are unable to say upon such examination that the trial court has in any degree whatever abused the discretion with which it is invested with respect to the matter of granting a new trial upon either the ground of excessive compensatory or excessive exemplary damages. The order of the trial court must therefore be affirmed upon these grounds, irrespective of whether the appellant is right or wrong as to certain other contentions. In view of the fact, however, that a new trial must be had of the case, we deem it proper to pass upon one other of the appellant's contentions in order that the trial court may be advised of our views upon the retrial of the cause. Among the grounds assigned in the motion for the new trial was the statement that the trial court had erred in the admission of the affirmative evidence offered on the part of the plaintiff in his main case as to his good reputation as an attorney at law. The trial court upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial concluded that it was in error in that respect, and assigned this as one of the grounds for granting the motion in its opinion filed at the time of doing so. We are of the opinion that the trial court was in error in this latter view, and that such evidence was properly admitted upon the trial of the cause. It is to be noted that the whole gravamen of the plaintiff's case is the alleged injury to his reputation as an attorney at law. In other words, it is an action by plaintiff for damage for that form of libel which, according to the definition found in section 45 of the Civil Code, "tends to injure him in his occupation." It is and has always been true that every suitor or party to an action or proceeding in a court of justice comes into court with the presumption of a good reputation as an individual, upon which presumption he is entitled and in some cases is bound to rely until his said reputation as such has been assail-

ed. This rule is well stated and its application to libel cases clearly defined, with the authorities supporting it fully collated, in the case of Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 116 Pac. 530. While this is therefore the undoubted rule in respect of the reputation of the litigant as an individual, we know of no such rule nor of any such presumption with respect to the reputation of a litigant in his capacity as an attorney at law or in any other business or professional capacity, and we are cited to no cases which pretend to assert the existence of such a presumption. On the contrary, our attention is directed to the case of Aston v. Examiner Printing Co. (D. C.) 226 Fed. 496, which was an action for a libel uttered against the plaintiff in his profession as an engineer. The plaintiff offered evidence of his good reputation in that capacity, which was admitted over the defendant's objection. In passing upon the question thus presented, Judge Van Fleet said:

"It is at once apparent, I think, not only from the form of the questions themselves, although somewhat inartificial, but from the general nature of the subject about which the witness was being examined, that the inquiry was not addressed to the personal character or reputation of the plaintiff, of which complaint was made in Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 185, 116 Pac. 530, relied on by plaintiff, but was solely with reference to his standing as an engineer, his professional character, as to the propriety of which there can be no question."

[4] It would seem to be obvious that such a presumption as the appellant contends for could not exist, since an individual may have a perfectly good reputation as such and yet may have no reputation at all as a lawyer or doctor or engineer, though he may also be such, for the simple reason that he has not practiced his profession to the extent or with the degree of success necessary to acquire such a reputation. It would also seem to be obvious that the plaintiff would not have been entitled to claim and recover damages for an injury to his professional reputation as an attorney at law without alleging in his complaint that he was such attorney at law and that he had acquired a reputation as such. If this be true, it would follow that the rule of pleading in ordinary libel cases to the effect that it is not necessary for the plaintiff in the first instance to allege his possession of a good reputation could have no application to a complaint in which the pleader seeks to recover damages for injuries to his reputation in respect to a particular trade, occupation, or profession. In the latter case the averment would be essential and its denial would raise a material issue so as to require affirmative proof on the part of the plaintiff as to his possession of the particular kind of business or professional reputation which he asserted had been injured by the publication. In the instant case the plaintiff did allege his possession of a professional reputation as an attorney at law. The defendant denied, specifically the plaintiff's averments in that regard.

A material issue was thus presented, upon which the plaintiff had the affirmative and was bound to offer evidence. He did so, and the trial court properly admitted the evidence thus offered, and later improperly ruled, upon motion for a new trial, that its original action in admitting such evidence was error, for which a new trial should be granted. The new trial was, however, properly granted upon other grounds, and our ruling upon this particular ground is given for the guidance of the court upon a retrial of the case.

(L. A. 4555.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃79(2) — ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE—CONDITIONS.

Where a lease provided that it was not to be transferred without the lessor's consent, and then only on payment of a sum equal to three months' rent, and that in no case should the lessor be obliged to consent to any assignment, unless the tenant was absolutely satisfactory to him, an assignee with the lessor's consent, after payment of the stipulated amount, could not thereafter transfer the lease without a payment of an equal amount, with lessor's consent; the rights of the lessor not having been exhausted by the first payment.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by S. L. Rothrock and others against Mrs. E. J. Sanborn and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Daniel M. Hunsaker, I. Henry Harris, and Charles A. Bank, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. In May, 1913, defendants, the Sanborns, leased to Mr. and Mrs. Kendis an apartment house in Los Angeles city consisting of 25 furnished apartments for a term of ten years at a monthly rental of $496, payable on the 1st of each month of the term, in advance. The lease provided (paragraph 4) that it should not be assigned without in each case the written consent of the lessors. By subsequent paragraph (No. 12) it was provided that:

"It is further understood and agreed that should the lessees desire to transfer or assign their interest in the within lease to other parties that the lessors will give their consent, provided said party or parties deposit or give unto the said lessors a sum of money equal to the last three months' rent of this lease, said last three months' rent amounting to $1,488, said money to be paid to the lessors, their assigns or representatives at the time the written consent of the lessors as provided for in paragraph No. four (4) of this lease is obtained, and in no case shall the lessors be obliged to consent to any transfer or assignment of this lease except as herein provided, and unless tenant is absolutely satisfactory to lessors."

In November, 1913, the lessees, Mr. and Mrs. Kendis, assigned the lease to plaintiff and appellant Nell L. Rothrock, the defendants Sanborn consenting thereto by the following written instrument:

"And we hereby consent that the said lease may be transferred by the said Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Kendis to Mrs. Nell L. Rothrock. This consent shall not be treated in any way as waiving any of the provisions of said lease, nor shall the same be assigned, or transferred by the said Mrs. Nell L. Rothrock to any person, without our consent first being had and obtained, and then only according to the provisions of paragraph XII of said lease."

And, concurrently with the execution of this written consent the original lessees, the Kendises, delivered to the defendants Sanborn, the lessors, the sum of $1,488 in compliance with the provisions of said paragraph 12 of the lease.

In March, 1914, said Nell L. Rothrock desired to assign said lease to one M. A. Merrill, and sought the consent of said lessors Sanborn, who refused to consent thereto unless they were again paid $1,488, which they claimed they were entitled to under said paragraph 12 of the lease. The said Rothrock objected to doing this, but the defendants insisted, and in order, so it is alleged, to prevent the loss of a large profit in a deal whereby said lease was to be transferred to said Merrill in exchange for some real estate, and under protest, said Nell L. Rothrock made and delivered to defendant E. E. Alexander, as agent of the other defendants Sanborn, her check for $500 and her promissory note for $988, which were still in his hands when this suit was commenced. Thereafter plaintiff brought this action to obtain a cancellation of both said check and said promissory note. Judgment went for defendants denying the relief sought, and plaintiffs appeal.

The only question in the case is the construction to be placed on paragraph 12 of said lease respecting the consent of the lessors to assignments of the lease and the conditions on which successive ones are to be granted or permitted. Appellants' contention, coming down to its real effect, is that the plaintiffs in making an assignment to Merrill were entitled to have the consent of defendants thereto without the payment of any sum of money whatever; that the right to exact the payment of a sum equivalent to the amount of three months' rent as a condition to an assignment had been satisfied and exhausted when the first assignment of the lease was made, and had no application to assignments thereafter; that such deposit of $1,488 was intended as security for the payment of the last three months' rent of the lease, and was fully complied with on the first payment, and the provision respecting it was thereafter inoperative, as it could only be complied with once. According to this construction which plaintiff seeks to put on the contract, though the lease was for a term of ten years, and though many occasions might arise in that time for assigning it, the only matter really contemplated by paragraph 12 was a payment of rent as such for the first assignment, and not a payment or bonus for the consent to any assignment. We see nothing in the terms of the provision in question which compels such a construction. In fact, to do so would require a consent on the part of the lessors without any bonus or consideration therefor after the first assignment. But the provision relating to consent to an assignment does not say anything about applying the amount paid by the lessees as a payment on the last three months' rent of the lease. The three months' rent is merely mentioned in connection with $1,488 as measuring the sum to be paid. If it had been intended that such payment should be made solely as a deposit to secure the payment of the last three months' rent of the term, it would have been very easy to have said so. Not doing so, the sum required must be considered as a payment, which might be exacted by the lessors as a consideration or bonus each time that their consent to an assignment was given, and not as a payment of rent. But even if we should construe the provision as one treating the payment of the $1,488 as security for the last three months' rent to ultimately be applied thereon, and therefore the provision requiring its payment was exhausted on the first assignment, it does not follow that the lessors were bound to consent to the second assignment of the lease without any consideration. It is to be noted that by paragraph 4 the lessees are prohibited from making any assignment of the lease whatever without in each case the consent of the lessors, and the lessees were the Kendises. By paragraph 12 this prohibition is qualified to the extent that, if the lessees desired to assign their interest in the lease, the lessors will consent to said assignment upon the lessees depositing or giving the lessors a sum of money equal to the last three months' rent of the lease amounting to $1,488, said money to be paid to the lessors, "and in no case shall the lessors be obligated to consent to any assignment of the lease except as herein provided and unless tenant is absolutely satisfactory to lessor." Now, this paragraph must be construed as a whole, and if its effect, as contended by plaintiffs, is that the right to demand $1,488, or any other sum, for the assignment, was exhausted by the payment made by the original lessees, the Kendises, it must necessarily follow that the right thereafter to require an assignment by any assignee of the lessees without such payment is gone also, because it is so declared in the very same provision when it says that in no case shall the lessors be required to consent to an assignment of the lease excepting as therein provided, namely, by payment of said $1,488. If the result of the first payment is to exhaust any right of the lessors to demand its payment again for a subsequent assignment, then also any right of the lessees to demand any subsequent assignment without such payment cannot exist because paragraph 12 says it shall not; the rights of all parties under the paragraph are gone for all purposes, and the only provision in the lease thereafter controlling as to consent of the lessors is paragraph 4, which provides that no assignment shall be made without the consent of the lessors, and, of course, the lessors could fix any terms of payment for giving their consent that they saw fit.

In concluding it may be said it appears that, when the lease was originally transferred by the lessees to plaintiff with the consent of the defendants, lessors, all the parties placed a harmonious construction on said paragraph 12. The plaintiffs then accepted the written consent of the defendants, which in express terms prohibited them from assigning the lease without the written consent of the lessors, defendants, to be obtained only by complying with paragraph 12, which, of course, required the payment of $1,488. If, under this written consent so given and accepted by the plaintiff, the payment by the Kendises was to be treated as a payment of the rent and thereby exhausted the right of the lessors to the payment of a like amount for a subsequent consent, then all the language of the written consent to the plaintiffs about a consent to a subsequent transfer by them, and only in accordance with the provisions requiring the payment, was idle, meaningless, and useless. We do not so construe the terms of the writing.

WILEY v. YOUNG. (L. A. 4462.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 6, 1918.)

1. TRIAL ⟹139(1) — QUESTIONS FOR JURY — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.
The weight of the evidence is for the jury.

2. HIGHWAYS ⟹184(1)—COLLISIONS—PLEADING.
In an action by one riding in a motorcycle side car, which collided with an automobile, plaintiff need not allege whether he was riding as guest or otherwise; such question being germane only to the affirmative defense of contributory negligence.

3. TRIAL ⟹261—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL.
Where several instructions were offered as a whole in several paragraphs, and one of the paragraphs was erroneous, the whole was properly refused.

4. NEGLIGENCE ⟹93(1) — IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.
A guest riding in a motorcycle side car was not responsible for the negligence of the driver, who collided with an automobile, even if he selected him as host.

5. HIGHWAYS ⟹172(1) — INJURY ON HIGHWAY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.
The fact that one riding in a motorcycle side car knew that the driver was usually negligent was only a circumstance to be considered by the jury in an action for damages against the owner of an automobile with which there was a collision.

6. TRIAL ⟹350(6) — QUESTIONS TO JURY — DISCRETION OF COURT.
In action by passenger of motorcycle side car against owner of automobile, with which there was a collision, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to submit to the jury questions as to which side of road accident occurred on, speed of the vehicles, and whether defendant's car was struck by motorcycle.

7. TRIAL ⟹251(8) — COLLISIONS — SUDDEN PERIL—INSTRUCTIONS.
Where there was a collision in broad daylight between motorcycle and automobile, and a slight swerving of either might have avoided the accident, and there must have been a time in the mind of the driver of each when it was apparent that a collision was possible, it was proper, as against objection that it was outside the issues in the case, to instruct with reference to duty of persons in great peril.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1033(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.
A party cannot complain of an instruction which is more favorable to him than he deserves.

9. DAMAGES ⟹216(7)—PAIN AND SUFFERING.
In an action for damages, it was proper to instruct that plaintiff might recover for suffering "reasonably certain" to be endured in the future.

10. DAMAGES ⟹216(1) — PAIN AND SUFFERING—INSTRUCTIONS.
In an action for damages, an instruction, "It is not necessary, therefore, that any of the witnesses should have expressed an opinion as to the amount of such damages for pain and suffering, but the jury may make such estimate of the damages from the facts and circumstances and evidence, and by considering them in connection with their own knowledge and experience in the affairs of life," was correct.

11. TRIAL ⟹295(11) — DAMAGES — PAIN AND SUFFERING—INSTRUCTIONS.
An instruction that, "with regard to pain and suffering the law prescribes no definite measure of damages, but leaves such damages to be fixed by you as your discretion dictates, and as under the circumstances may be just and proper," was correct; the jury having been already instructed in the same instruction that damages should be compensatory, so that effect of charge as a whole was that plaintiff was entitled to compensatory damages only.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Ethel Wiley against P. H. Young. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, and B. P. Gibbs, of St. Paul, Minn., for appellant. R. T. Walters, of Whittier, and W. J. Wallace, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1] Defendant appeals from a judgment for damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff in a collision upon a Los Angeles county highway between a motorcycle side car in which she was riding and an automobile operated by the defendant. Plaintiff's evidence tends to show that, as the two machines were approaching each other, the defendant's automobile was following a one-horse wagon; that when defendant's machine turned out to the left, to pass the wagon, the motorcycle was so close to the wagon that the collision resulted. It is claimed that the defendant violated the state law, which required that, in turning out for the purpose of passing a slower moving vehicle, the highway must be clear for 100 yards to the front. Stats. 1913, p. 647. Defendant's claim is that his machine was at all times on the right-hand side of the highway, but that the machine in which the plaintiff was riding suddenly swung to the left in front of his machine, and that the collision resulted. There was sufficient direct evidence to sustain the plaintiff's contention if believed by the jury. We cannot consider whether or not the weight of evidence was in her favor.

[2] Appellant demurred to the complaint on the ground of alleged uncertainties therein. The demurrer was overruled. This ruling is claimed to be error, for the reason that the complaint should have shown the capacity in which plaintiff was riding in the side car of the motorcycle, whether as guest or otherwise. This question was germane only to the defense of contributory negligence, which, being an affirmative defense, was required to be set up by the defendant. The demurrer was properly overruled.

[3] Certain instructions given by the court are claimed to have been erroneous. The instructions requested by the defendant and refused by the court are contained in four paragraphs, but it does not appear that these paragraphs were separately offered, as separate instructions. If the instruction was offered as a whole, then, if any one of these paragraphs is erroneous, the whole was properly refused. Without quoting these instructions at length, the only point in them not fully covered by other instructions is that with relation to the plaintiff's knowledge concerning the alleged habitual carelessness of the driver, Lewis, with whom she was riding, and the effect of that knowledge upon her rights and conduct in the premises.

[4] A part of the proposed instructions relating to this matter is as follows:

"I charge you that, if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff selected as a driver the person [Lewis] shown to have been operating the motorcycle at the time of the accident, and directed or assisted in directing his movements, which contributed to place the motorcycle in peril, and which contributed to cause the injury, then the plaintiff is responsible for the negligence, if any, on the part of the driver [Lewis], and if such negligence, if any, contributed to cause the injuries complained of, then plaintiff cannot recover."

This instruction is erroneous, for the reason that if, as claimed and proved, the plaintiff was riding as a guest of Lewis, she was not responsible for his negligence, even if she selected him as her host. Nor is it correct to say that, if she directed or assisted in directing his movements, she was responsible for his negligence. Defendant's claim that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence is based upon the proposition that she omitted some precaution which she, as a guest, was under the obligation to take, including, if need be, warning or suggestion to the driver of the motorcycle to avoid the collision. There is no evidence that plaintiff either directed or assisted in directing the driver's movements. It was not error to refuse this instruction.

"I charge you that, if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff knew or had reason to believe that the driver of the motorcycle was usually careless or negligent in the operation of the same, before she accompanied him on the occasion of this accident, then plaintiff is chargeable with any negligent act or acts of the driver of the motorcycle (if you find that there were any such negligent act or acts) which might have been reasonably anticipated by the plaintiff; and if you find that the driver of the motorcycle was negligent, and that such negligence contributed to cause the injury to the plaintiff, and that plaintiff, before accompanying said driver, knew or had reasonable grounds to believe that said driver was usually negligent in the operation of said motorcycle, and that it was negligence for the plaintiff to accompany the driver under the circumstances, then she cannot recover, and your verdict must be for the defendant."

This instruction is predicated upon the theory that it would be negligence upon the part of the plaintiff to ride with a driver, if she had reason to believe that the driver of the motorcycle was usually careless or negligent in some unspecified particular in the operation of the same. This is not the law. If the plaintiff knew, or had reason to believe, that Lewis was usually negligent in the operation of his machine, it was her duty to consider that fact in determining what precaution she should have taken for her safety in the event of meeting the defendant's automobile upon the public highway, and the question for the jury to determine under all the facts and circumstances, including the knowledge of the plaintiff, if any, concerning the driver, Lewis, was whether or not she was guilty of any negligence which proximately contributed to the injury. The only evidence as to plaintiff's knowledge of the driver's habitual negligence, if any, is the inference to be drawn from the fact that plaintiff had ridden as his guest some 15 times. There was no evidence that he had ever collided with any other machine, or obstacle, and hence there was no basis for an instruction so general in its terms, even if otherwise proper.

[6] The defendant requested that the jury answer four questions: One, as to which side of the road did the accident occur; the others with relation to the speed of the automobile and the motorcycle, and the question of whether or not defendant's car was struck by the motorcycle. There was no abuse of discretion in refusing to submit the questions to the jury.

[7] Appellant also complains of the giving of an instruction with reference to the duty of persons in great peril. That the instruction was correct in point of law is not questioned; but it is claimed that there was no such issue in the case, and it was therefore calculated to mislead the jury. The collision occurred in broad daylight. Each party involved was in plain view of the other. According to some of the testimony, both vehicles were operated at a high speed. There must have been a time in the mind of the driver of each vehicle when it was apparent that a collision was possible. A slight swerving of the automobile or motorcycle might perhaps have avoided the accident. Whether or not, under these conditions, both acted with care, was to be determined by the jury; and it was proper to instruct them, therefore, in relation to the standard by which the conduct of persons in peril was to be determined, varying, as it does, from the standard by which the conduct of men is judged under ordinary circumstances.

[8] Appellant complains of the following instruction:

"If you believe from the evidence that at the time of the collision in this case the defendant did not use ordinary care to avoid the accident, and that the injuries which the plaintiff received were caused by such want of ordinary care on the part of the defendant, without any contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, or those lawfully in charge of her, then I charge you to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff."

The phrase in this instruction, "or those lawfully in charge of her," is objected to as injecting a condition of uncertainty in the instruction. Appellant certainly is in no position to complain of this instruction. It clearly prevents plaintiff's recovery if she was negligent, and adds the additional provision preventing her recovery if those "lawfully in charge of her are guilty of negligence." This was less favorable to the plaintiff than she was entitled to. But the parenthetical provision was introduced for the sole purpose of qualifying an instruction as to defendant's negligence. What constituted contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff was elsewhere defined by the court at the request of the defendant. There was no error in this instruction prejudicial to the appellant.

[9] Complaint is made of the instruction as to the measure of damages, which contains the following:

"You are instructed, however, that in considering such damages for pain and suffering you are to take into consideration pain and suffering caused at the time of the accident, but also the pain and suffering reasonably certain to be endured in the future, if any, which are the result of the accident."

This form of instruction, authorizing the jury to give compensation for damages "reasonably certain" to result in the future, was approved in Cordiner v. L. A. Traction Co. et al., 5 Cal. App. 400, 91 Pac. 436, and is in accord with the provision of the Civil Code (section 3283):

"Damages may be awarded, in a judicial proceeding, after the commencement thereof, or certain to result in the future."

The case of Malone v. Sierra R. R. Co., 151 Cal. 116, 91 Pac. 522, cited by the appellant, dealt with an instruction which authorized the jury to award damages for such pain and anxiety as the plaintiff "may suffer by reason of his injuries." The vice of the instruction in the latter case was due to the use of the word "may," thus allowing the jury to engage in speculation as to the possibilities, instead of confining them to damages reasonably certain to occur as a result of the accident. In that case it is said:

"It is true that in a succeeding instruction the court declared that plaintiff was entitled to recover, not only such damages as he may have suffered, but also 'such damages as by the evidence it is reasonably certain he will suffer in the future.' Herein is a declaration of the true rule, but none the less the instructions on the matter are conflicting, and it cannot be said by which the jury was guided."

That case, therefore, is direct authority for the instruction in the form given in this case.

[10] Appellant also complains of that portion of the instruction with relation to the damages which reads as follows:

"It is not necessary, therefore, that any of the witnesses should have expressed an opinion as to the amount of such damages for pain and suffering; but the jury may thus make such estimate of the damages from the facts and circumstances and evidence and by considering them in connection with their own knowledge and experience in the affairs of life."

This instruction was proper, and so far as we know is always given. There is no other method by which the pecuniary value of pain and suffering can be included in a verdict, except by the jurors applying to the facts and circumstances in evidence their own knowledge and experience in the affairs of life.

[11] The following portion of the instruction is also objected to:

"You are instructed, however, that with regard to pain and suffering the law prescribes no definite measure of damages, but the law leaves such damages to be fixed by you as your discretion dictates, and as under all the circumstances may be just and proper."

This was correct. Rystinki v. Cen. Cal. Trac. Co., 165 Pac. 952. The jury had already been instructed in the same instruction:

"If you find the defendant liable, you are instructed that the damage should be fixed at such an amount as will compensate plaintiff for such loss sustained by her as set forth by her in her complaint, and any injury that she will sustain in the future as is supported by the evidence."

The effect of the instruction as a whole is that the plaintiff is entitled to compensatory damages only. The instruction with reference to the amount of damages for pain and suffering is elaborated, for the purpose only of disclosing to the jury that it is not necessary that any particular witness should have fixed a particular amount as the damage for such pain and suffering.

The judgment is affirmed.

NICHOLS v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al. (L. A. 4551.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⟸117(24) — INJURIES ON TRACKS—DUE CARE—QUESTION FOR JURY.
In action against electric railway for injuries on track in collision with automobile, question whether plaintiff, while passenger in automobile, exercised ordinary care on approaching tracks held for jury.

2. TRIAL ⟸232(3)—FUNCTION—INSTRUCTION.
Instruction, with reference to jury's duty in weighing testimony of witnesses, stating they were sole and exclusive judges of facts and of credibility of witnesses, etc., held an excellent presentation of the jury's duty.

3. TRIAL ⟸296(8)—INSTRUCTION—WEIGHING TESTIMONY.
Court's statement to jury that they were not bound to believe testimony of any witness unless it imported verity and established conviction in their minds, in connection with whole instruction with reference to their duty in weighing testimony, held proper.

4. TRIAL ⟸194(17)—INSTRUCTION—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.
Instruction that, to hold plaintiff injured in collision with street car guilty of contributory negligence, jury must find from "all the evidence in the case" that plaintiff failed to do that which a person of ordinary prudence and caution would have done was proper, since jury is required to pass upon "all" the evidence.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1033(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.
Electric railway company, joined as defendant with driver of automobile in suit by passenger in automobile for injuries in collision on track, cannot complain of instructions on question of automobile driver's negligence which were too favorable to him.

6. NEGLIGENCE ⟸93(1) — IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE—GUEST IN AUTOMOBILE.
Negligence of automobile driver who collided with car of electric railway on its track was not imputable to a guest in the automobile.

7. STREET RAILROADS ⟸117(24) — INJURIES ON TRACKS—EXCESSIVE SPEED OF AUTOMOBILE—QUESTION FOR JURY.
In action against electric railway for injuries to passenger in automobile in collision with car, whether or not automobile was being driven at excessive speed by its driver held for jury.

8. CARRIERS ⟸280(7)—INJURIES TO GUEST IN AUTOMOBILE—LIABILITY OF DRIVER.
Under Civ. Code, § 2096, providing carrier of persons without reward must use ordinary care, driver of automobile owed to guest reasonable care, and if collision between automobile and electric car was proximately caused by driver's negligence, or concurrent negligence, of both driver and company, driver's guest could recover, unless guilty of contributory negligence.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Mildred Nichols against the Pacific Electric Railway Company, a corporation, and Dr. J. C. Negley. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Barstow, Beach & Rohe, Frank Karr, and R. C. Gortner, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Hindman & Yakey, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff for damages received by her in a collision between an electric railway car operated by the defendant railway company and an automobile operated by the defendant Negley, in which plaintiff was riding as a guest. Defendant railway company relies upon the defense of contributory negligence, it being claimed that the plaintiff was negligent in riding in the automobile of defendant Negley while it was being driven at a dangerous speed, without herself taking any precautions to ascertain whether or not the car of the defendant railway company was approaching. The automobile had a single seat, and plaintiff was seated at the left of the defendant Negley, who was driving the car, and on her lap was seated a Mrs. Collins. Plaintiff testified that the speed of the automobile was not excessive, and explained her statement in her complaint that the defendant Negley was driving his automobile at a rapid and dangerous rate of speed, by saying:

"His speed was rapid or he would not have hit the car. What I would call an excessive rate of speed would be the speed at which we were going to hit the car. I can only say that it was rapid and dangerous enough to hit the car."

Her first knowledge of the danger of a collision was the fact of the collision.

[1] The question as to whether or not the plaintiff, while passenger or guest in an automobile, exercised ordinary care upon approaching the tracks of a railway company is a question for the jury, under proper instructions by the court. Irwin v. Golden State Auto Tour Co., 171 Pac. 1059.

[2] The court gave the following instruction:

"You are the sole and exclusive judges of the facts in this case, and of the credibility of the witnesses. Your power of judging, however, is not arbitrary, but must be exercised with legal discretion, and in subordination to the rules of legal evidence. You are not bound to believe the testimony of any witness unless such testimony imports verity and establishes conviction in your minds, nor are you bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in your minds as against a lesser number, or against other evidence satisfying your minds. Every witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption may be repelled by the manner in which he or she testifies, by his or her interest in the case, if any is shown by the evidence, his or her partiality or impartiality, by the reasonableness or unreasonableness of any statement he or she makes, by his or her candor and fairness or lack thereof, and by any other fact or circumstance elicited during the trial which may aid you, in determining as to whether the witness has spoken the truth."

[3] This is an excellent presentation of the jury's duty. Exception is taken to the clause, "You are not bound to believe the testimony of any witness unless such testimony imports verity and establishes conviction in your minds." It should be observed that the court in this sentence is not dealing with the measure of proof or instructing the jury with relation to a preponderance of the evidence, but is instructing them with reference to their duty in weighing the testimony of the several witnesses. It should, of course, be considered as a part of the whole instruction. The jury is never bound in law to believe the testimony of any witness that they do not in fact believe, and this is the meaning of this portion of the instruction.

[4] The railway company also complains of the instruction that:

"In order to hold the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence you must find from all the evidence in the case that the plaintiff * * * failed to do that which a person of ordinary prudence and caution, etc., would have done."

—the particular objection being directed to the use of the word "all." The instruction was proper. The jury was required to pass upon all the evidence in the case in arriving at a verdict.

[5, 6] The following instruction is also complained of by the defendant railway company:

"Defendant Negley had a right to assume that, if a street car was proceeding along its tracks on Sixth street towards Crocker, some signal would be given by it of its approach, and he also had the right to assume that it would proceed at a moderate rate of speed and within the limit of speed as fixed by the governing ordinance, and he also had the right to assume that the motorman would operate said street car in a careful and prudent manner."

Other instructions were given in connection with the question of defendant Negley's negligence. The jury found that both defendants were negligent. Even if the instructions, taken together, were too favorable to defendant Negley on the question of whether or not he was guilty of negligence, the jury found him negligent. The defendant railway company cannot complain of such instruction, for Negley's negligence, if any, was not imputable to the plaintiff. Tousley v. P. E. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 457, 137 Pac. 31.

[7, 8] The defendant Negley claims that his motion for a nonsuit should have been granted, for the reason that there was no proof of negligence on his part. The testimony tended to show that he was driving about 15 miles an hour at the time, at the intersection of Crocker and Sixth streets—a well built up section of the city of Los Angeles; that he did not slow down previous to the collision; that at the intersection of these two streets a hotel building extended to the sidewalk, occupying the southwest corner of Crocker and Sixth streets. The collision occurred between the north-bound automobile and the east-bound street car. The hotel, therefore, obscured the view of the driver of the automobile in the direction from which the car was approaching. The question of whether or not the automobile was being driven at an excessive speed was a question for the jury. Under this condition of the evidence the motion for nonsuit was properly denied. For the same reason it cannot be said that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict against the defendant Negley. The jury was properly instructed that defendant Negley owed to the plaintiff, his guest, "a reasonable degree of care for the safety of such guest, and that if the accident or collision between the automobile and the electric car was directly and proximately caused by the negligence of Negley, or the concurrent negligence of both, the plaintiff was entitled to recover against Negley unless she was guilty of contributory negligence." "A carrier of persons without reward must use ordinary care and diligence for their safe carriage." Section 2096, Civ. Code. See, also, Fitzjarrell v. Boyd, 123 Md. 497, 91 Atl. 547.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte FARB. (Cr. 2141.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜89(4)—FREEDOM OF CONTRACT—EMPLOYMENT.

Contracts to work, contracts to employ, and liberty freely to make such contracts, are protected by Const. art. 1.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜89(4)—LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY—POLICE POWER.

The constitutional guaranty to freely make contracts to work and to employ, while apparently absolute, is qualified by the legislative authority to enact proper laws under the police power.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜81 — LEGISLATIVE DISCRETION—POLICE POWER.

A large discretion is vested in the Legislature in determining, not only proper subjects for the exercise of the police power, but the method of putting that power in force by statute.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜275(2)—MASTER AND SERVANT ⊜69—DUE PROCESS—REGULATING TIPS.

St. 1917, c. 172, making it a misdemeanor for an employer to require his employé to pay over to him tips or gratuities received as a condition of the employment, is void as in conflict with the due process provision of the United States Constitution and Const. art. 1, § 13.

Richards, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Application by Sam Farb for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner dismissed.

Oscar Samuels and J. Samuels, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. A. T. Roche and C. M. Fickert, both of San Francisco, for respondent. John T. Williams, of San Francisco, for Thos. F. Finn, Sheriff.

MELVIN, J. A writ of habeas corpus was issued upon the petition of Sam Farb, found guilty under a complaint charging him with violation of chapter 172 of the Statutes of California of 1917. It is conceded by petitioner's counsel that the one question involved in a final determination of this matter is whether or not that part of the statute is constitutional which prohibits an employer from entering into a contract requiring an employé to surrender to the employer all tips or gratuities received for services rendered to the public on behalf of the employer. The part of the act pertinent to this discussion is as follows:

"Any employer or agent or representative of an employer or other person having authority from his employer to hire, employ or direct the services of other persons in the employment of said employer, who shall demand or receive directly or indirectly from any person then in the employment of said employer, any fee, gift or other remuneration or consideration, or any part or portion of any tips or gratuities received by such employé while in the employment of said employer, in consideration or as a condition of such employment or hiring or employing any person to perform such services for such employer or of permitting said person to continue in such employment, is guilty of a misdemeanor." Stats. 1917, p. 257.

It is the contention of petitioner that this statute permits a violation of the right of employers and employés freely to enter into contracts, that it is in conflict with the provisions of the federal and state Constitutions, and that it seeks to make an improper extension of the police power of the state.

Respondent seeks to justify the statute upon the ground that it is designed to relieve the public against fraud and imposition arising from the employer's failure to notify the public that the gratuities bestowed upon employés go to the employer; and upon the further ground that the Legislature is empowered to enact such laws to "provide for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of any and all employés." Article 20, § 17½, Const. of Cal. It is further contended in opposition to the writ that regulation will not accomplish the removal of the evil to be overcome, and that therefore the Legislature has the right to prohibit any agreement whereby an employer may enjoy any part of the gratuities tendered to the employé.

[1-3] At the outset it is to be noted that the statute under review does not by its terms or otherwise seek to limit or reduce the bestowal of tips or the practices by which either the keepers of places of public resort or those employed therein may try to wheedle or extort contributions from customers. That the custom of tipping has in many communities grown into proportions that astonish and dismay the person of moderate wealth is undoubtedly true; and that in many establishments one seeking accommodation must either tip or go unserved is equally well known. Therefore we may well concede that the police power might be invoked to prevent, by regulation, some of the evils arising from the tipping custom in those places where it has developed almost into organized blackmail. We cannot see how the statute before us would have any tendency by its operation to benefit the public generally. Indeed, it would rather have the opposite tendency, because the waiter or other employé engaged in serving the public would probably seek very keenly to coax or extort contributions from his customers if he were the sole beneficiary of such payments, while his enthusiasm and art would be less heartily enlisted in getting from customers gifts to be enjoyed exclusively or principally by the employer. The statute, if defensible at all, must be upheld therefore as a measure tending reasonably to protect employés in their health, or safety or to preserve their morals or to promote their general welfare. That contracts to work, contracts to employ, and liberty freely to make such contracts, come under the protection of the very first article of our Constitution, is undoubtedly true. It is also true that the constitutional guaranty freely to make such agreements, while apparently absolute, is qualified by the legislative authority to enact proper laws under the police powers of the state. It is also true that a large discretion is vested in the Legislature in determining, not only the proper subjects for the exercise of the police power, but the methods of putting that power in force by statutes. Yet the courts must determine, in passing upon the constitutionality of such laws, whether or not that discretion has been exercised in such manner as to interfere unduly with the right of contract. We might quote very many authorities from many jurisdictions to illustrate the principles upon which such questions as that now before us should be determined, but we find a brief and sufficient declaration of them in Mr. Justice Shaw's language, in the opinion of this court in a matter involving the right of the limitation by law of the hours of work for women in certain occupations. We refer to In re Miller, 162 Cal. 687–693, 124 Pac. 427, 428, where the following language was used:

"Because of the great value to mankind and the consequent paramount importance of the preservation of individual liberty, it is universally admitted and held that the police powers of the Legislature are not absolute or unlimited. These personal rights cannot be taken away or impaired at the mere will of the Legislature, nor at all, unless public welfare demands it. So far as the effect on himself alone is concerned, each person has the absolute right to judge for himself whether the hard labor which he voluntarily performs is for his best interest or not. The Legislature cannot judge for persons in this respect and interfere solely to prevent them from injuring themselves by excessive labor. The injury must be of such character and extent and to such a number of persons that it may be reasonably supposed that it will cause injury to others, that is, to the community in general, or, as it is expressed, to the public health and general welfare. Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 136 [38 L. Ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. 499].

"The means adopted to produce the public benefit intended, or to prevent the public injury, must be reasonably necessary to accomplish that purpose and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. The determination of the Legislature as to these matters is not conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the courts, and, if the above qualities are wanting, a law arbitrarily interfering with the right of contract, or imposing restrictions upon lawful occupations, will be held void."

"As the liberty of contract guaranteed by the Constitution is freedom from arbitrary restraint —not immunity from reasonable regulation to safeguard the public interest—the question is whether the restrictions of the statute have reasonable relation to a proper purpose."

Upon the principles above announced, courts have not hesitated to sustain statutes enacted in pursuance of the police power having the legitimate function of protecting the health or morals of certain classes, but they have been equally ready to apply constitutional rules to the overthrow of laws which under the guise of such regulation have interfered with the freedom of contract. It will suffice for the purposes of this discussion to cite a few of the leading cases of that kind. In Adams v. Tanner, 244 U. S. 590, 594, 37 Sup. Ct. 662, 61 L. Ed. 1336, L. R. A. 1917F, 1163, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 973, the Supreme Court of the United States considered a law enacted by the people of the state of Washington, by which it was declared unlawful for any employment agent to demand or receive either directly or indirectly from any person seeking employment any fee for furnishing him or her with employment or information leading thereto. The statute was held to be in violation of the guaranty of liberty secured by the Fourteenth Amendment. In the course of the prevailing opinion in that case, Mr. Justice McReynolds, answering the contention that certain abuses had grown up in connection with the business of conducting employment agencies used the following language:

"Certainly there is no profession, possibly no business, which does not offer peculiar opportunities for reprehensible practices; and as to every one of them, no doubt, some can be found quite ready earnestly to maintain that its suppression would be in the public interest. Skillfully directed agitation might also bring about apparent condemnation of any one of them by the public. Happily for all, the fundamental guaranties of the Constitution cannot be freely submerged if and whenever some ostensible justification is advanced and the police power invoked."

This language is peculiarly apt in view of the arguments advanced in defense of the statute here under review. We are cited to the incident of a man who employed girls to attend to the checking of hats. These girls were required, as a condition of retaining their employment, to put all tips into a locked box through a slot, and were compelled to comply with the requirement that they should wear dresses and aprons having no pockets, lest they might secrete some of the money and take it away with them. Such an exaction would, of course, be humiliating to the employé, but one desiring to avoid it might resign.

In Coppage v. State of Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 35 Sup. Ct. 240, 59 L. Ed. 441, L. R. A. 1915C, 960, a statute of the defendant in error making it a misdemeanor for an employer to require an employé to agree not to become a member of any labor organization during the time of the employment was held repugnant to the "due process" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. After citing Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 764, to the effect that the right to sell and the right to purchase labor are correlative and each subject to regulation by contract, Mr. Justice Pitney, who wrote the opinion of the court, said (236 U. S. 12, 35 Sup. Ct. 243, 59 L. Ed. 441, L. R. A. 1915C, 960):

"Granted the equal freedom of both parties to the contract of employment, has not each party the right to stipulate upon what terms only he will consent to the inception, or to the continuance, of that relationship? And may he not insist upon an express agreement, instead of leaving the terms of the employment to be implied? Can the Legislature in effect require either party at the beginning to act covertly; concealing essential terms of the employment—terms to which, perhaps, the other would not willingly consent—and revealing them only when it is proposed to insist upon them as a ground for terminating the relationship? * * * Can the right of making contracts be enjoyed at all, except by parties coming together in an agreement that requires each party to forego, during the time and for the purpose covered by the agreement, any inconsistent exercise of his constitutional rights?

"These queries answer themselves. The answers, as we think, lead to a single conclusion: Under constitutional freedom of contract, whatever either party has the right to treat as sufficient ground for terminating the employment, where there is no stipulation on the subject, he has the right to provide against by insisting that a stipulation respecting it shall be a sine qua non of the inception of the employment, or of its continuance if it be terminable at will."

The statute before us is not defensible as a regulatory measure upon any of the grounds which have operated to uphold laws prescribing hours of labor, conditions of workshops, and the like; but this court is urged to uphold it upon the ground that it is designed to protect the public from fraud. We are told that gratuities are bestowed, not upon the employer, but upon the employé as a reward for promptness or politeness or skill beyond the mere performance of his duty to serve his master's customers, and that when this personal gift is appropriated by the employer a fraud upon the giver is perpetrated. If we concede the correctness of this contention, for the purposes of discussion, still we must declare the statute void as seeking to overcome by prohibition of any contract between employer and employé, a deception which would instantly disappear if the former were required to post in his place of business a notice of the terms of the contract whereby he was to have the benefit of gratuities. It can hardly be doubted that an employer might (as a few of them do) forbid the employé, under pain of dismissal for disobedience, to accept any tips. This would be no fraud upon the customer. How then would the customer be defrauded if he were informed that he might not give a tip to the employé but might bestow a gratuity upon the employer? To ask the question answers it. The law does not tolerate the prohibition of something which may be regulated in such way as to overcome any evils which may be incidentally connected with it. As was said in Adams v. Tanner, supra:

"Appellant's occupation as agent for workers cannot exist unless the latter pay for what they receive. To say it is not prohibited because fees may be collected for something done in behalf of other principals is not good reasoning. The statute is one of prohibition, not regulation. 'You take my house when you do take the prop that doth sustain my house; you take my life when you do take the means whereby I live!'"

In other words, even if it be conceded that the object of the statute is to protect the public from fraud existing because of keeping people in ignorance of the ultimate disposition of tips bestowed upon employés, the means used to accomplish that object are most unreasonable. It has been held in California that while the Legislature might well regulate or prohibit the transportation of diseased fruit or prevent deception in the labeling of it, a law requiring every package of fruit to bear a label naming the county and immediate locality in which the fruit was grown could not be upheld as a legitimate exercise of the police power. Ex parte Hayden, 147 Cal. 649, 82 Pac. 315, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 184, 109 Am. St. Rep. 183. It has also been held that, while regulations to prevent deception of the public by the offer of stale eggs as fresh ones are beneficial laws and should be upheld, this object would not be attained by laws requiring each egg brought from without the state of California to bear a printed declaration of the fact of its importation. Matter of Application of Foley, 172 Cal. 744, 158 Pac. 1034, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 180. These and other authorities which might be cited confirm the doctrine that reasonable regulation, where it is practicable, is the only method by which incidental evils sometimes attaching to a legitimate business or calling may be overcome and abolished.

In the foregoing discussion it has been conceded for the purposes of argument that concealment from the customer of the contract by which gratuities are enjoyed by the employer amounts to a fraud upon the said customer. There is nothing essentially immoral in the contract itself whereby the employé agrees to work for a certain wage and to surrender all tips to his employer. Supreme Court of Iowa (correctly we think) approved an instruction to the effect that while the plaintiff, a bootblack, would be entitled to any gifts by way of tips, the employer might, if he could, prove an agreement on plaintiff's part to turn the tips over to him. Zappas v. Roumeliote, 156 Iowa, 709, 137 N. W. 935. If it is lawful, as between employer and employé, to provide for the ownership of tips given into the possession of the latter, it can hardly be said that the patron's ignorance of it makes the contract unlawful. A waiter, for example, might buy a suit of clothes and agree with the tailor that he would apply all tips to the payment of the bill for the garments until the stipulated price should be fully paid. Would the patrons bestowing those gratuities be defrauded by their ignorance of the contract? Assuredly they would not. Yet such a contract does not differ in principle from one whereby the servant agrees to forego the enjoyment of tips for the sake of his salary and of retaining his position. In either case it would make no difference whether the extra payment or gift were bestowed because of the good quality of the food (for which the waiter might not be responsible); or the comfort of the chair (for which the barber might deserve no credit); or because of the beauty of the girl in the hatroom, the sweet voice of the cabaret singer, the deftness of the bootblack, or any other attribute or excellence of a personal nature. Even if we concede that the gratuity is essentially a personal earning of the employé, nevertheless it must be true that one may enter into a contract involving the expenditure of one's earnings.

[4] The statute under review is void because it is in conflict with the "due process" provision of the Constitution of the United States and with section 13 of article I of the Constitution of California.

Petitioner dismissed from custody.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; WILBUR, J.; LORIGAN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (concurring). I am of the opinion that, in so far as the act under discussion prohibits any contract between the employer and the employé that all or any tips and gratuities received by the employé while in the employment of the employer shall belong and be paid to the employer, or that prohibits any demand or receipt by the employer from the employé of the tips and gratuities to which he is entitled under any such contract, it is in violation of provisions of the federal and state Constitutions. In my opinion the only conceivable ground upon which this portion of the act might be upheld is that it was essential to the protection of the public against fraud. As is shown by the prevailing opinion, the only possible fraud on the public is the keeping of them in ignorance of the ultimate disposition of tips and gratuities conferred by them. That this evil might be sufficiently overcome by reasonable regulation short of absolutely prohibiting a contract between the employé and employer is also sufficiently shown in the opinion. This being so, the authorities amply sustain the conclusion that there can be no such prohibiting of contract. See, also, In re Kelso, 147 Cal. 609, 82 Pac. 241, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796, 109 Am. St. Rep. 178.

I therefore concur in the judgment discharging the petitioner.

RICHARDS, Judge, pro tem. I dissent. The statute under review in this proceeding was not chiefly designed, as the prevailing opinion seems to indicate, "to protect employés in their health or safety or to preserve their morals or to promote their general welfare." Its chief and obvious purpose was to deal with the relation or transaction arising between patrons of places of public resort for service, pleasure, or instruction, and the servitors in such places, wherein the former seeks to insure or reward promptness, fidelity, and courtesy on the part of the latter in the performance of some particular service by the giving to such servitor a sum of money popularly known as a "tip." In the individual instance the offering is usually small and the service slight, but in the concrete a very large proportion of the general public is affected by what has grown to become an almost universal custom. Every person who travels in this age of travel or who patronizes hotels or restaurants or attends theaters, lectures, or other public places of amusement or instruction, is affected by the custom of giving and receiving tips.

Whether or not it is a pernicious custom savoring of extortion, and furnishing a fertile soil for flunkeyism, favoritism, and partiality in respect to those elements of promptness, fidelity, and courtesy to which patrons of such public places or conveniences are equally entitled without the voluntary offering or the compulsion of such gratuities, the law in question does not attempt to determine. All that it does is to say that the employer and the servitor shall not make an agreement between themselves the effect of which would be to divert the gratuity given by the individual patron from the person for whom it was intended, and thus destroy the incentive to prompt, faithful, and courteous service which prompted the gift. Can it be said that a statute which has for its object the preservation of the spirit, intent, and effect of a relation and agreement to which in the concrete the general public is the most largely interested party is invalid when it seeks to prevent the proprietor and the servitor from making another agreement, to which the general public is not a party, the effect of which is to divert the consideration, destroy the incentive, and render ineffectual the relation created by the former agreement? To my mind the right of freedom of contract does not extend so far as to embrace the freedom to make one contract which shall violate the spirit, intent, and obligation of another, particularly when that other is one of a class of like agreements so infinite in number as to affect the public at large.

In addition to this, however, the contract, the freedom to enter into which is upheld by the prevailing opinion, is one which is in its essence unconscionable and fraudulent, and is also one which in many if not most instances is devoid of that very element of freedom as to one of the parties by which it is sought to be justified. It is unconscionable because by its terms the employer as the proprietor of the place or service in connection with which the tip is received by his employé, is not entitled to it, since he is already fully paid for whatever he furnishes by his regular charges, which cover and compensate him for the fullest measure of promptness, fidelity, and courtesy toward his patrons on the part of his employés. To permit him to exact more is not only to legalize an overcharge, but is also to encourage discriminations in the price and quality of his service as between those of his patrons who do and those who do not submit to the overcharge. It is fraudulent in respect to those patrons because it secretly aims to take from them that which they intended for another, and because its effect is to destroy the very incentive for doing those things for which the gratuity was given. The porter, the waiter, the bellboy, the chambermaid, who either willingly or unwillingly enters into a contract with his or her employer by which the tip is to be surrendered, has no longer any interest in doing promptly, faithfully, and courteously the service which the tip was given to insure, and to the extent of the inevitable lapses in the efficiency of such service the immediate patron, and by extension the general public, is defrauded of its due.

The suggestion in the prevailing opinion that all this would be avoided by the simple expedient of having the proprietor post in his establishment a notice to the effect that all tips paid to his employés were by agreement to belong to the employer has, it is true, the merit of simplicity, but has nothing else to recommend it. That such notices, as a matter of common knowledge, have never been posted anywhere, may be taken to be sufficient proof that the publication of such an agreement by that means would defeat the very purpose for which the agreement was made by stopping the flow of tips at once, since the public would have no interest in giving tips to servitors who had no longer any interest in doing the service with the degree of promptness, fidelity, and courtesy which the tip was given to induce. Besides, it is not the province of the courts to suggest similar ways of remedying admitted evils as a reason for refusing to uphold those which the Legislature has seen fit to adopt in the exercise of its right of selection in the choice of remedies. In so far as the elements of freedom of contract, as between the proprietor and his employé, is concerned, upon which emphasis is laid in the prevailing opinion, it may be safely said that the trend of modern authority and decision is against the longer acceptance of that outworn fiction upon which Adam Smith predicated much of his impractical economics. How much is there of mutual freedom of contract between the proprietor, who has his choice and time in the matter of selecting his servants, and the average applicant for the position of waiter or bellboy or chambermaid, whose every hour of unemployment is a step nearer to starvation? We have already banished this fiction from many of our statutes and decisions regulating the obligations and liabilities arising out of the relation of master and servant. Why then should we invoke it to defeat a piece of salutary legislation framed in the public interest and intended not only to forbid fraud upon the public, but also to prevent employers from compelling their employés, under the pretense of an agreement which would not as a rule from the very nature of things be voluntary, to yield up to their employers that which they have no right to appropriate? The illustration used in the prevailing opinion of the waiter agreeing with his tailor to turn over to him his tips in payment for a suit of clothes has no possible aptitude, since in that case the incentive is left in the waiter to earn the tips in order that he may the sooner enjoy the clothes, while no such incentive remains when by previous agreement or compulsion his employer appropriates his tips; and, if it be argued that he would still strive to deserve the tip in order to hold the job, then what becomes of the argument based upon his supposititious freedom of contract?

The cases cited in support of the views expressed in the prevailing opinion have no application to the instant case, since their facts bear no similitude to those of the case at bar. The statute under review is novel, and the case is one of first impression. The subject with which the statute deals is one in which the public interest is so far involved as to bring it properly within the purview of the police powers of the state. It is practically conceded in the prevailing opinion that the Legislature might well and safely have enacted a statute abolishing altogether the custom of tipping, and declaring it unlawful to permit this practice in any place of public resort, for the reason, as well stated therein, "that the custom of tipping has in many communities grown into proportions that astonish and dismay persons of moderate wealth, and that in many establishments one seeking accommodation must either tip or go unserved." That the state has the almost unlimited power to regulate that which it has full power to destroy has been too frequently decided to require the citation of authority. The statute in question is a step in the way of such regulation which should be sustained upon all the grounds urged in its support.

The writ should therefore be discharged and the petitioner remanded.

PEOPLE v. MOONEY. (Cr. 2175.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 15, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸998 — SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT—FRAUD.

Motion to set aside judgment and sentence on ground that verdict, order denying new trial, judgment, and sentence were procured through the willful nonfeasance and malfeasance and willful fraud of the district attorney, committed upon the superior court, jury, and defendant, whereby defendant was deprived of a fair and impartial trial, and which prevented a fair submission of the cause, was too general as a charge of fraud.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸997 — SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT—WRIT CORAM NOBIS.

Motions in the nature of writs of coram nobis to set aside judgments cannot be granted, where remedies exist by statute which did not exist at common law; such writ applying only where the defendant has been denied a trial upon the merits, or where there has been no trial at all.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸998 — SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT—GROUNDS.

A judgment in a criminal case cannot be set aside for fraud, because it is predicated upon perjured testimony, or because material evidence is concealed or suppressed.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸998 — SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT—FRAUD.

The duty of a district attorney does not differ in the trial of criminal actions from that of counsel in civil actions, and if he introduces perjured testimony, or suppresses material evidence, the injured party is without remedy, in so far as the judgment is concerned.

In Bank. Thomas J. Mooney was convicted of murder, and the conviction was affirmed by the Supreme Court. From an order of the superior court, denying his motion to set aside the judgment and sentence, he appeals, and applies for a certificate of probable cause. Application denied.

Maxwell McNutt and Edwin V. McKenzie, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Charles M. Fickert, Fred L. Berry, A. R. Cotton, and Louis Ferrari, all of San Francisco, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant applies to the court for a certificate of probable cause on his appeal from an order of the superior court denying his motion to set aside the judgment and sentence heretofore pronounced against him. His object is to obtain a stay of execution of the judgment under section 1243 of the Penal Code.

[1] He was regularly convicted of the crime of murder, and was sentenced on February 24, 1917. He moved for a new trial and his motion was denied. Thereafter he appealed to the Supreme Court from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial and on March 1, 1918, said judgment and order were affirmed. 171 Pac. 690. The present proceeding was begun by a notice of motion filed in the superior court on April 28, 1918, which was after the affirmance of the judgment and order by the Supreme Court had become final. The grounds of the motion involved in this appeal, as set forth in said notice and in his oral motion in open court, are that the verdict of the jury, the order denying a new trial, the judgment, and the sentence, were procured through the willful nonfeasance, malfeasance, and willful fraud of the district attorney and his assistants, who conducted the prosecution, committed upon the superior court, the jury, and the defendant, Mooney, whereby defendant was deprived of a fair and impartial trial, and which prevented a fair submission of the cause. These general averments are not sufficient as a charge of fraud, under any rule of pleading, civil or criminal, known to our law. People v. McKenna, 81 Cal. 159, 22 Pac. 488; Reay v. Butler, 69 Cal. 582, 11 Pac. 463. In order to ascertain the facts constituting the asserted fraud, we must look to the affidavits offered in evidence in support of the motion at the hearing in the court below.

The crime charged was committed July 22, 1916, on Steuart street, near Market, in San Francisco, by the explosion of a bomb. On the trial it was the theory of the prosecution that the bomb, inclosed in a suit case, had been carried to the place in an automobile by Mooney, Billings, and others, all of whom rode in the automobile, and that it was deposited on the sidewalk by Billings a few minutes before it exploded. The affidavits set forth that two witnesses, Mrs. Edeau and Frank C. Oxman, testified at the trial that they, respectively, saw the defendant, at about the time and near the place of the explosion, in the company of the other persons accused of the crime, and under circumstances tending strongly to show that Mooney was a participant therein, which testimony, it is alleged, was wholly false, and that prior to the trial the district attorney was informed that certain statements had been made out of court by Mrs. Edeau which tended to show that she had never seen Mooney until after his arrest upon the charge of murder set forth in the indictment, and which, if shown, would have impaired her credibility with the jury. With regard to Oxman, it is asserted in the affidavits that certain information was given to the district attorney before the trial, which, it is claimed, would have tended to discredit Oxman as a witness. The affidavits are vague and unsatisfactory on this subject, and it is doubtful if they even tend to show that the information possessed by the district attorney and his assistants was of a character that should have raised a suspicion in their minds of Oxman's credibility. These alleged discrediting circumstances were not communicated to Mooney or his attorneys by the prosecution, and they had no knowledge thereof until after the trial, nor until after their motion for a new trial had been denied, and the judgment pronounced.

It must be admitted that the showing of fraud or misconduct on the part of the district attorney and his assistants in conducting the trial is of the weakest character, even if he were under any duty or obligation to disclose to the defendant all the evidence within his knowledge relating to the case. But we do not place our denial of the application for a certificate of probable cause entirely upon this ground. There are other reasons which lead us to conclude that the motion below, and the appeal from the order denying it, are alike without merit. The proceedings by way of motion to set aside the judgment, when made after the judgment has been rendered and has become final, and after a motion for a new trial has been denied and the time therefor has expired, is in the nature of an application for a writ coram nobis, at common law. Mr. Freeman, referring to the nature of this proceeding at common law, says:

"But this writ does not lie to correct any error in the judgment of the court, nor to contradict or put in issue any fact directly passed upon and affirmed by the judgment itself. If this could be, there would be no end of litigation. * * * The writ of error coram nobis is not intended to authorize any court to review and revise its opinions, but only to enable it to recall some adjudication made while some fact existed which, if before the court, would have prevented the rendition of the judgment, and which without fault or negligence of the party, was not presented to the court." 1 Freeman on Judgments, § 94. The italics are ours.

The learned judge of the court below, in giving his decision on the motion, delivered an opinion from which we quote and adopt the portions applicable here:

[2] "In all of the cases submitted by counsel on both sides, in which such relief has been sought, it is held that courts of general jurisdiction have the power to issue writs or hear motions in the nature of the writ of coram nobis. But where remedies exist by statute which did not exist at common law, the office and function of the writ are abridged thereby, and in such cases the writ is unavailable. These remedies are the right to appeal and to make a motion for a new trial, and, where they are provided by statute, to that extent an application for a writ of coram nobis cannot be entertained. It is in those cases where the defendant has been denied a trial upon the merits—in other words, where there has been no trial at all—that relief of this kind may be granted. In such cases it is obvious that the statutory remedies have no application and that defendant is wholly without remedy; and it is upon that theory that we look to the common law to provide a remedy. Such a case was People v. Perez, 9 Cal. App. 265, 98 Pac. 870; and, indeed, all of the cases cited, in which relief was afforded, were cases where no trial had been had, but a plea had been obtained from the defendant by some character of duress, or the trial was affected by some outside force. Asbell v. State, 62 Kan. 214, 61 Pac. 690; Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 318, 44 Am. Rep. 29; State v. Calhoun, 50 Kan. 523, 32 Pac. 38, 18 L. R. A. 838, 34 Am. St. Rep. 141.

[3] "In the case at bar the defendant was not denied his defense. On the contrary, a trial was had, a motion for new trial was made by him, and appeal taken. These were the remedies provided by our statute to the exclusion of any common-law remedy. The statute, in other words, takes the place of the writ, and only in cases where there is no remedy by statute may we look to the common law. In the trial of the case of Thomas J. Mooney the truth or falsity of the testimony of the witnesses Oxman and Edeau was a part of the issue submitted to the jury, and that issue, upon the return of the verdict, became an adjudicated issue of fact, which cannot now by the writ of coram nobis be readjudicated. The remedy in such case is by motion for a new trial, and if newly discovered evidence is too late in its production, its consideration cannot be brought about under the guise of a motion to vacate the judgment upon the ground of fraud. The defendant in such case is without remedy. In this state it is the settled law that a judgment cannot be set aside because it is predicated upon perjured testimony, or because material evidence is concealed or suppressed. The fraud which is practiced in such cases upon both the court and him against whom the judgment is pronounced is not such fraud as is extrinsic to the record; and it is only in cases of extrinsic fraud that such relief may be had. Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 134, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159; In re Griffith, 84 Cal. 112, 23 Pac. 528, 24 Pac. 381; Allen v. Currey, 41 Cal. 321.

[4] "Nor can it be said that the duty of a district attorney differs in the trial of criminal actions from that of counsel in civil actions. Each has an equal duty imposed upon him by the oath he has taken and by the law of the land to present to the court and to the jury only competent and legitimate evidence from which may be determined the truth of the issues involved. If that obligation be violated, and perjured testimony produced, or material evidence suppressed by either, as we have seen, in so far as the judgment is concerned, the injured party is without remedy."

For these reasons, the application for a certificate of probable cause is denied.

N. O. NELSON MFG. CO. v. RUSH et al.

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂=118 — NOTICE TO OWNER.

Where the owner by letter requested a subcontractor's materialman to give him the stop notice provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, setting forth such notice, which sufficiently described the property, which demand was served on the materialman's credit manager, and the materialman failed to give such notice, he could not claim any lien on the owner's property for materials furnished.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂=118 — MATERIALMAN'S NOTICE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—VALIDITY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, providing that a materialman, who shall refuse to give notice that he has furnished material and its amount, shall be deprived of the right to claim the lien, is not unconstitutional, as depriving materialmen or laborers of the lien given by Const. art. 20, § 15.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

Suit by the N. O. Nelson Manufacturing Company against T. J. Rush and others, to foreclose a materialman's lien. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Daniel Beecher and R. L. Horton, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. G. C. De Garmo, Behymer, Craig & Salzman, and W. T. Blakely, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment. The action is to foreclose a lien claimed by the plaintiff upon the property of T. J. Rush for materials furnished to W. A. Merrick, who was a subcontractor for a plumbing and heating plant installed in an apartment house erected by the Pacific States Investment Company, as original contractor, for T. J. Rush, the owner. The plaintiff is a corporation.

The plaintiff's claim for the materials amounted to $6,261.95. The court allowed it only $461.95. It is of this reduction that the plaintiff complains. During the progress of the work on Merrick's subcontract, the principal contractor paid Merrick from time to time, sums amounting to $7,500 on the subcontract price, out of moneys received from the owner. This money Merrick deposited in his general bank account, in which he also kept other moneys derived from other sources. By checks drawn on this account he made payments to plaintiff amounting to $7,500. At the time each of these checks was drawn he had just received a large sum from the principal contractor as aforesaid, and the balance of his account was not then sufficient to have paid the check without drawing upon the money so received from the principal contractor. At that time he owed other debts to the plaintiff amounting to $5,800, but he gave no directions to plaintiff as to the application of these checks. The plaintiff thereupon applied $5,800 thereof upon the other debts, the result whereof was that there still remained unpaid, on the debt for which the lien is claimed, the sum of $6,261.95 as above stated. The court refused to allow this application on the other debts, and credited the $5,800 on the $6,261.95, claimed to be due for the materials furnished to Merrick. The court took the view that by reason of the provisions of the lien law this application could not lawfully be made. In this it is claimed that the court erred.

[1] We do not find it necessary to determine the question thus presented. For other reasons about to be stated, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to any lien upon the property of Rush for any part of this claim. Section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that any of the persons said to be entitled to a lien in section 1183 may give a notice to the owner that they have performed labor or furnished material, or both, to the contractor, for use in the building, or that they have agreed to do so, stating the amount of that done or furnished, or agreed to be done or furnished, and thereupon it proceeds as follows:

"And any of the said persons who shall on the written demand of the owner, refuse to give such notice shall thereby deprive himself of the right to claim a lien under this chapter."

After the plaintiff had begun to furnish materials to Merrick on this subcontract, and had furnished a large amount thereof, and during the progress of the work, while the owner still held enough of the original contract price unpaid to have satisfied the plaintiff's claim, if a stop notice had been given, the owner, Rush, served upon one Sackett, who was then the credit manager of the plaintiff, a demand, the material portions of which are as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, June 24, 1913.

"To Dr. T. J. Rush and Mrs. Eva Rush, Owners of Building at Northwest Corner of Orange and Bonnie Brae, Los Angeles:

"You are hereby notified that the undersigned has furnished materials, namely, * * * to be used in the construction of said building; that said materials were sold and furnished to * * * and that the value of said materials so furnished is the sum of $———, on which there is a credit of $———, leaving a balance of $———, still due, owing, and unpaid.

"You are hereby notified to withhold from any moneys due or that may become due from you for the construction of said building, a sum sufficient to pay the undersigned said sum of $———, together with costs, as provided by law.

"Please fill out the above and mail to me.

"Dr. T. J. Rush."

The description of the property in the complaint states that it is situated on the northwest corner of Orange and Bonnie Brae streets in the city of Los Angeles. The description in the above form of notice was sufficient to identify the property to which it referred as the same property on which the building was being erected, and for which plaintiff was furnishing materials. This paper was therefore, in substance and effect, a demand by the owner upon the plaintiff that it should give the stop notice provided for in section 1184 aforesaid. It further appears that the plaintiff never gave such stop notice, and that the owner had paid out to the original contractor all the moneys due on the contract price, as they became due, prior to the filing of the claim of the plaintiff in the recorder's office. It follows from this that the plaintiff is deprived of the right to claim any lien for any part of the materials furnished to the subcontractor.

Although these facts are all stated in the findings, the court below was unwilling to rest its decision upon this point, because of its doubt whether a demand served on the credit manager of the plaintiff could be deemed to be a demand upon the plaintiff. The defendants have acquiesced in this view, at least so far that they did not take an appeal from the judgment for $461.95. In resisting the plaintiff's appeal, however, they claim that because of these facts the plaintiff was not entitled to any lien, and, consequently, that he cannot complain of the action of the court in eliminating the $5,800 from his lien claim and reducing it to $461.95. We are satisfied that the demand upon the credit manager of the plaintiff was sufficient. The materials furnished to Merrick were sold upon credit, and the debts thus arising from Merrick to the plaintiff were a part of the credits of the plaintiff, of which Sackett was the manager. Prima facie, at least, his duties would embrace the determination of the advisability of giving this credit to Merrick and the taking of such steps as would be necessary or appropriate in the ordinary course of business to secure their payment. Among these would be the giving of the stop notice to the owner in order to have money withheld from the contract price out of which to pay this claim. It would be strictly within the scope of the duties of a credit manager to attend to this part of the business of the plaintiff. A corporation can act only by agents, and hence a demand upon an agent who is in charge of a particular branch of its business, on a matter relating to such branch and in the ordinary course thereof, is sufficient. This demand was sufficient to accomplish the desired end and the failure of the plaintiff to give the stop notice thus required brought it completely within the terms of the provision of section 1184, and prevents it from claiming or enforcing any lien thereon upon the property for any part of its claim. It has obtained by the judgment more than its lawful right.

The authorities fully support this conclusion:

"The officer or agent to whom the management of the business is thus intrusted may be called the 'manager,' 'general manager,' 'general agent,' 'superintendent,' etc., or he may be the 'president,' 'treasurer,' 'secretary,' etc. But his title, while it may raise a presumption as to the extent of his authority, does not necessarily determine his authority. The extent of his implied authority depends upon the duties with which he is intrusted. He may be intrusted with the entire management and control of the business, and in such a case his authority to act for the corporation is very broad. Or he may be intrusted with the management of a particular branch of the business only. In any case the extent of his authority depends upon the scope of his employment. * * * If he is intrusted with the management of a particular branch of the business only, his authority does not extend beyond such contracts and acts as are incident to the management of that particular branch." 3 Clark & Marshall on Corp. § 700; Hobbs v. Georgia Lumber Co., 74 Ga. 371; Love v. Anchor, etc., Co., 45 Pac. 1044.[1]

[2] The plaintiff suggests that the above-quoted provision of section 1184 is unconstitutional, that it operates to deprive persons bestowing materials or labor upon a building of a lien given to them by section 15, article 20, of the Constitution. The provision of the section is nothing more than a regulation of the exercise of the constitutional right to a lien. It is reasonable and just, and one which the Legislature has a right to make in the exercise of the police power, similar to that which it has to regulate the exercise of the right to make contracts by prescribing reasonable regulations respecting the form thereof.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

CHURCHILL CO. v. KINGSBURY, Surveyor General. (Sac. 2798.)

1. NAVIGABLE WATERS ⟹36(3)—LANDS UNDER WATER—PROPERTY OF STATE.
Lands bordering a navigable lake left uncovered in the fall by the natural recession of its waters are sovereign lands of the state.

2. NAVIGABLE WATERS ⟹36(1)—LANDS UNDER WATER—OWNERSHIP.
The shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the federal Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the states respectively, and new states have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over such shores as the original states.

3. NAVIGABLE WATERS ⟹1(3)—DEFINITION—"NAVIGABLE."
In England, the only waters regarded as navigable are those in which the tide ebbs and flows, but in this country the broader rule prevails that all waters are deemed "navigable" which are really so.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Navigable.]

4. NAVIGABLE WATERS ⟹36(1)—LANDS UNDER WATER—TITLE OF STATE.
The title of the state to land under navigable waters extends, not only to the land underlying the part of the navigable waters over which navigation may be conducted, but to the entire bed, in particular to the land covered and uncovered by the ordinary rise and fall of the tide, stream, or lake.

5. NAVIGABLE WATERS ⟹1(1)—"NAVIGABLE LAKE"—EXTENT.
A "navigable lake" consists of a body of water contained within its banks as they exist at the stage of ordinary high water.

6. PUBLIC LANDS ⟹61(14)—LANDS UNCOVERED BY RECESSION OF WATERS—STATUTE.
Lands on shore of navigable lake, periodically left uncovered in fall by natural recession of waters, did not come within Pol. Code, §§ 3493m, 3493s, validating uncanceled certificates of purchase and patents made for lands as swamp and overflowed lands now uncovered or which may hereafter be uncovered by recession or drainage.

7. PUBLIC LANDS ⟹61(14)—VALIDATION OF CERTIFICATES OF PURCHASE AND PATENTS—EFFECT OF STATUTE.
Pol. Code, § 3493s, validating uncanceled certificates of purchase and patents made as for swamp and overflowed lands, merely validates certificates, etc., for lands at the time of the passage of the act belonging to one of the classes described in section 3493m.

In Bank. Petition for mandamus by the Churchill Company against W. S. Kingsbury, Surveyor General and ex officio Register of the State Land Office of the State of California. Alternative writ discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Tapscott & Tapscott, of Yreka, and A. E. Bolton, of San Francisco, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, and R. T. McKisick, of Sacramento, for respondent. C. E. McLaughlin and A. B. Reynolds, both of Sacramento, amicus curiæ.

SLOSS, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus, brought to compel the state surveyor general to perform the acts preliminary to the issuance to petitioner of a patent for 5,120 acres of land in Siskiyou county. An alternative writ was ordered. The material facts are admitted, either by answer or by stipulation.

On October 11, 1872, one Dorris made application under the law of 1868 (Stats. 1867–68, p. 507) for the land in question, as swamp and overflowed land. The county surveyor of Siskiyou county made a survey, and returned the same to the surveyor general. On October 4, 1874, the register of the state land office issued to Dorris certificate of purchase No. 4185 for said land, as swamp and overflowed land. Dorris and his successors in interest have ever since been in possession of said property, and have paid all taxes levied and assessed against it. On October 11, 1917, the petitioner, as successor to the interest of [1] Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 114 Cal. xvi.

Dorris, presented to the county treasurer the certificate of purchase, made tender of the amount due for the balance of principal and interest, and took the further steps required under the law to entitle it to demand a patent. The tender and demand having been refused, this proceeding followed.

The land lies at the edge of Little Klamath Lake, a navigable body of water about 18 miles long, and half as wide, lying partly in California and partly in Oregon. Little Klamath Lake has no outlet and no separate watershed. It receives its main supply of water from Upper Klamath Lake, which is in Oregon. From Upper Klamath Lake water flows to Little Klamath Lake through a branch of the Klamath river. There is but a slight fall in the channel between the two lakes, and water flows through it to Little Klamath Lake only when the water in Upper Klamath Lake is high. In ordinary seasons the water in Little Klamath Lake reaches its maximum height about the month of April in each year. During the summer months the water level gradually falls, reaching its lowest point from August to November. Ordinarily, the difference between the high and the low water levels of Little Klamath Lake is about three feet. The land in question is part of a wide strip which, in ordinary seasons is covered during the period of high water to a depth of about three feet, and is uncovered when the water is at its lowest stage; the latter condition continuing, usually, during the months of September and October. The strip which includes the tract in controversy slopes gently toward the center of the lake. At its inner edge there is an abrupt break or drop to a depth varying from four to seven feet. This break marks the edge or bank of the lake at low water. There is, also, a distinct rise of several feet at the outer border of the strip. The land thus annually uncovered is fertile and susceptible of cultivation without further reclamation than such as would be necessary to exclude the water of the lake from it. Klamath river itself, as well as Little Klamath Lake, is navigable. A survey of the region was made under the authority of the United States in August, 1872. In making that survey a meander line was run along the ordinary high-water line of the lake, and marked upon the land. No land was surveyed or lines run north or west of said meander line (i. e., below said high-water line), and no survey has ever been made by the United States of the lands (including those in controversy) beyond said meander line.

Whether the lands in question were swamp and overflowed lands, passing to the state by grant from the United States, or were lands lying under the waters of a navigable lake, belonging to the state by virtue of her sovereignty, the petitioner concedes that no right of purchase was vested in Dorris by the certificate, under the law as it stood when the certificate was issued. The statute then in force did not authorize the sale of swamp and overflowed land until six months "after the same has been segregated by authority of the United States." Pol. Code, § 3441; Garfield v. Wilson, 74 Cal. 175, 15 Pac. 620; Wren v. Mangan, 88 Cal. 274, 26 Pac. 100; Polk v. Sleeper, 143 Cal. 70, 76 Pac. 819. The pleadings and the stipulation of the parties show that there had been no segregation of the land below the meander line. So, likewise, the certificate of purchase was invalid if the land described in it was sovereign land of the state, there being at the time no law authorizing the sale of any such land, except tidelands. Edwards v. Rolley, 96 Cal. 408, 31 Pac. 267, 31 Am. St. Rep. 234.

[1] The petitioner relies upon the terms of the act of March 24, 1893, providing for the sale of lands uncovered by the recession or drainage of the waters of the inland lakes, and unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands. Stats. 1893, p. 341. This act, which, with its amendments, has been incorporated into the Political Code (section 3493m et seq.) contains a provision validating certificates of purchase theretofore made for any lands as swamp and overflowed lands which belonged to any of the classes offered for sale by the act. The petitioner claims, accordingly, that its certificate, although unauthorized by law at the date of its issue, was confirmed and made valid for all purposes by the statute just mentioned. Since the act authorizes the sale both of sovereign lands and of unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands, it might not be necessary for the petitioner to maintain that the lands in question fall within one of these classes rather than the other. It does, however, take the stand that the land is, in fact, sovereign land of the state, and in this we think it is clearly right.

[2-5] Since the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How. 212, 229 (11 L. Ed. 565), there has never been any question of these propositions, there laid down:

"First, the shores of navigable waters, and the soils under them, were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the states respectively. Secondly, the new states have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original states."

In England the only waters regarded as navigable are those in which the tide ebbs and flows. The different conditions prevailing in this country have, however, led to the adoption of the broader rule that "all waters are deemed navigable which are really so." Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 336, 24 L. Ed. 224. The title of the state extends, not only to the land underlying that part of a navigable stream or body of water over which navigation may be conducted, but extends to the entire bed, and in particular to the land which is covered and uncovered by the ordinary rise and fall of the tide, stream, or lake. Barney v. Keokuk, supra; McManus v. Carmichael, 3 Iowa, 1. The agreed facts in this case show that the land in controversy is a part of the bed of Little Klamath Lake, a navigable body of water. During the greater part of the year, in ordinary seasons, the land is covered by the waters of the lake. It is uncovered only at times of low water. The extent of land covered by any navigable water must necessarily vary with the tide, or the rise or fall of the stream or lake. There will always be some land that is covered or uncovered as the water is high or low. Such land is no less a part of the bed because it is extensive in area. The record does not sustain the respondent's claim that the waters covering the lands in question are flood waters. The stipulation refers only to the high and low water stages reached in ordinary seasons. The lake consists of the body of water contained within the banks as they exist at the stage of ordinary high water. See Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 59, 99 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391. Such cases as Niles v. Cedar Point Club, 175 U. S. 300, 20 Sup. Ct. 124, 44 L. Ed. 171, and State v. Lake St. Clair Fishing & Shooting Club, 127 Mich. 580, 87 N. W. 117, relied on by respondent, are not in conflict with our conclusion. In each of them the decision was based upon the particular state of facts, which, in the view of the court, warranted a finding that the land was not a part of the bed of the lake, but was a marsh or swamp land adjoining the border of the lake.

[6] Section 3493s of the Political Code, which, as petitioner claims, validates the certificate of purchase, provides:

"All uncanceled certificates of purchase and patents heretofore issued, and payments heretofore made for any lands as swamp and overflowed lands, which belong to any of the classes described in section thirty-four hundred and ninety-three m, whether or not such lands were segregated or sectionized, are for all purposes valid, and have the same force and effect as if such lands had been at all times subject to sale as swamp and overflowed lands. * * *"

Section 3493m, which is referred to as describing the classes of land affected by the confirmatory provision, declares that:

"Any person desiring to purchase any of the lands now uncovered or which may hereafter be uncovered by the recession or drainage of the waters of inland lakes, and inuring to the state by virtue of her sovereignty, or the swamp and overflowed lands not segregated by the United States, must make an application therefor to the surveyor general. * * *"

As we have seen, the lands in question are not swamp and overflowed, and the petitioner can therefore prevail only by bringing them within the first class described in section 3493m, viz. "lands now uncovered or which may hereafter be uncovered by the recession or drainage of the waters of inland lakes, and inuring to the state by virtue of her sovereignty." We are satisfied that the effort to do this cannot succeed. The history of the legislation under discussion is well known. The act of 1893, which forms the basis of section 3493m, was passed for the purpose, primarily, of meeting the conditions created by the gradual recession of Tulare Lake. By that recession—which was believed to be permanent—large areas of land over which the waters of the lake had stood became uncovered. Provision was accordingly made for the sale of such land to private owners. When the act speaks of lands "uncovered * * * by the recession * * * of the waters," it obviously does not refer to such a temporary uncovering as will take place annually in the course of the ordinary fluctuations of the water level. What was contemplated was a recession permanent or apparently so, not one that was merely seasonal or periodical. The lands in question were not "now uncovered" when the act of 1893 was passed. Are they described by the further phrase, "lands which may hereafter be uncovered by the recession or drainage," etc.? The petitioner interprets this clause as meaning lands which might become so uncovered; in other words, lands whose future uncovering is within the bounds of possibility. We cannot assent to this interpretation. So read, the act would authorize the taking up of the entire bed of any inland lake, since, so far as any one can say, it is possible that such lake may at some time dry up entirely, or else be completely drained. But surely the Legislature did not intend that lands underlying the waters of a lake should be open to purchase. When it authorized the taking up of lands that "may hereafter be uncovered," it was applying to recessions, as and when they should occur in the future, the same rule that was being enacted for past recessions. In addition to offering for sale lands "now uncovered," it provided that, if in the future any lands should in fact become uncovered by the recession or drainage of a lake, those lands should then be subject to purchase in the same way as if the uncovering had taken place prior to the passage of the act. As illustrating and supporting the propriety of this construction of the words "may be," as used in our Code, we refer to two cases dealing with somewhat analogous employments of the phrase. Durfee v. Plaisted, 38 Cal. 80; Radcliffe v. St. L., etc., Ry. Co., 90 Mo. 127, 2 S. W. 277.

The lands embraced in the petitioner's application were not within the description of the statute. There is nothing in the pleadings, or in the stipulation of facts, to indicate that there had ever been any change in the natural conditions which we have outlined. The lands are still covered by the waters of the lake during the greater part of each year. Although the petition refers to the installation of reclamation works by the United States, it is not alleged, even inferentially, that these works have in fact lowered the plane of Little Klamath Lake so as to uncover the lands in question.

could have no greater effect that to validate certificates, etc., for lands then (i. e., at the time of the passage of the confirmatory act) belonging to one of the classes described in section 3493m. By the new legislation the state authorized the sale of certain classes of land not theretofore offered for sale, and at the same time validated certificates, patents, and payments already made for any of such lands as swamp and overflowed lands. The validating section was intended to operate presently. By its terms it confirmed pending or past proceedings for the purchase of lands which then fell within the description of section 3493m. It did not provide for a prospective confirmation, contingent upon a change of conditions which might, at some future time, bring the lands within the classes offered for sale by the new legislation. The contrary view would leave the status of unauthorized applications for the purchase of lands under navigable lakes forever uncertain. Whatever may be said about the present status of the land, there is no pretense that it had been uncovered by recession or drainage at the time section 3493s went into effect.

It follows that the petitioner has not established his right to any relief. We need not, therefore, go into a discussion of the other points argued by counsel. It appears from the answer that various contests between this petitioner and opposing applicants for purchase of portions of the lands are pending in the superior court, pursuant to reference by the surveyor general. Pol. Code, § 3414. It should perhaps be said that the rights of the contestants are not foreclosed by our decision herein, which is, of course, based upon the facts as stipulated by the parties to this proceeding.

The alternative writ is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

CATANIA v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF OAKLAND et al. (Civ. 2011.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 20, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1918.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⟹141(2) —DISCHARGE OF TEACHERS — POWER OF BOARD.

Under Pol. Code, § 1617, subd. 7b (now section 1609 by amendment of 1917) and Oakland Charter, § 192, the power of the board of education to discharge plaintiff school-teacher for the ensuing fiscal school year by giving the notice required by statute is unrestricted and absolute.

2. MANDAMUS ⟹72—SUBORDINATE BOARDS—DISCRETIONARY POWERS.

Courts will not by mandamus disturb decisions and actions of subordinate boards and officers having discretionary powers, where they do not act arbitrarily or capriciously.

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⟹141(2) —DISCHARGE OF TEACHERS — POWER OF BOARD.

In the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions, the power of the board of education to discharge a teacher for the ensuing school year is always absolute.

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⟹141(2) —DISCHARGE OF TEACHERS — POWER OF BOARD—"REQUIRED."

Contention that school-teachers have, under Pol. Code, § 1617, subd. 7b (now section 1609 by amendment of 1917), permanency of tenure, subject first to the power of the board to remove at any time for insubordination, etc., under Pol. Code, § 1793, and second at the end of the school term, is without merit, the use of the word "required" being intended merely to designate the period in which the persons enumerated would be permitted to hold in the pleasure of the board.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Require.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Suit by A. R. Catania against the Board of Education of the City of Oakland and others. Judgment that plaintiff take nothing by her action, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Gerald H. Catania, of Fresno (W. W. Sanderson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. W. H. L. Hynes, Dist. Atty., and Walter J. Burpee, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. Plaintiff herein by mandate sought reinstatement in the school department of Oakland, and for her salary, amounting to the sum of $1,200 a year, during the time she had been deprived of her alleged right to teach. In the court below, after trial, the writ was denied; findings were waived, and judgment was had that plaintiff take nothing by her action.

From the facts it appears that the city of Oakland is organized under section 1576 of the Political Code as Oakland School District of Alameda county, and is governed by a city board of education elected under a freeholders' charter. Plaintiff, A. R. Catania, had for a number of years prior to July 30, 1916, been regularly employed by said district as a school-teacher. Previous to September 20, 1915, she had been a single woman, but on that date she intermarried with Gerald Catania. The Oakland board of education had a rule, adopted in 1913, which provided in substance that when a woman employé married her position should become vacant. Petitioner having placed herself within the operation of this rule, the board of education by resolution decided that it would no longer employ plaintiff, and written notice to this effect was served upon her.

The statute relating to the employment and discharge of teachers was at that time found in subdivision 7b of section 1617 of the Political Code, but is now contained in section 1609 of that same Code by amendment of 1917, and reads as follows:

"The powers and duties of trustees of common school districts and of boards of education in city school districts are as follows: * * *

"(b) To employ the teachers, and immediately notify the county superintendent of schools, in writing, of such employment, naming the grade of certificate held by the teacher employed; also to employ janitors and other employés of the school; to fix and order paid their compensation, unless the same be otherwise prescribed by law; provided, that no board shall enter into any contract with such employés to extend beyond the close of the next ensuing school year, except that teachers may be elected on or after June 1st for the next ensuing school year, and each teacher so elected shall be deemed re-elected from year to year thereafter unless the governing body of the school district shall on or before the 10th day of June give notice in writing to such teacher that his services will not be required for the ensuing school year: such notice shall be deemed sufficient and complete when delivered in person to the teacher by the clerk or secretary of the governing body of the school district or deposited in the United States mail with postage prepaid addressed to such teacher at his last known place of residence," etc.

The charter of the city of Oakland contains a similar provision upon this subject. On June 8, 1916, the board of education passed a formal resolution, providing that the services of certain teachers and employés of Oakland school district would not be required, during the ensuing fiscal school year beginning July 1, 1916, and directed its secretary to give the notice required by the statute. Appellant was one of the teachers whose services were thus dispensed with. The general law and the charter provision are in conflict with reference to the time such notice should be given. Notice was given under section 1617 of the Political Code, and no question is raised as to the sufficiency of the notice in point of time. Shortly after receiving this notice plaintiff addressed a letter to the board, asking why she was dismissed. The secretary was directed by the board to reply by quoting to her the rule regarding the employment of married teachers. The rule is as follows:

"In case of the marriage of a woman employed by the board of education, her position shall at once become vacant."

At the next ensuing school term the board declined to permit plaintiff to teach. There had been no abolition nor consolidation of classes in the grade taught by plaintiff, and the class which plaintiff had taught was in charge of another teacher.

[1] The question, then, presented for consideration is the validity of the board's action in discharging plaintiff. The grounds upon which appellant relies for a reversal are two: (1) That the board of education was guilty of abuse of discretion in discharging plaintiff. (2) That under the statute plaintiff is entitled to her position until her services are no longer "required," subject only to removal for insubordination or other causes specified in section 1793 of the Political Code. With reference to the first contention it is the claim of petitioner that the rule, for the violation of which she was dismissed, is illegal and void, as it operates as a restraint upon marriage, and also discriminates against women, and in this respect violates the direct inhibition of article 20, § 18, of the state Constitution, which provides:

"No person shall, on account of sex, be disqualified from entering upon or pursuing any lawful business, vocation or profession."

[2, 3] She further claims that the rule is unreasonable and oppressive, for the reason that no educator has ever advocated the disqualification of married women as teachers, but, on the contrary, experts in pedagogy have warned against the present tendency to leave the instruction of our youth entirely in the hands of unmarried women, and have demanded a wider field in our educational system for the larger and broader and more sympathetic outlook of the teacher who has become a wife and, perhaps, a mother. Whatever the views of educators may be upon this subject, we are concerned only with the validity of the board's action in discharging plaintiff. It is a general rule that courts will not by mandamus disturb decisions and actions of subordinate boards and officers having discretionary powers. It is true that in the exercise of such powers an officer will not be permitted to act arbitrarily or capriciously. If, therefore, the statute contemplates that a dismissal must be for some reasonable cause, then the board is subject to judicial check in the exercise of its power of removal. In the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions, however, the power to discharge is always absolute. Here no civil service in relation to school district employés, of which plaintiff was one, is contemplated. On the contrary, there is no provision relating to the permanency of their tenure except that found in section 1617 of the Political Code and section 192 of the Oakland charter, and these sections provide for the manner of discharge, and contain no limitations upon its exercise except the statutory limitation as to time. If the contention of appellant be correct, teachers in a like position with appellant have the benefits of civil service rights and permanency of tenure. We are cited to the case of Richards v. District School Board, 78 Or. 621, 153 Pac. 482, L. R. A. 1916C, 789, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 266, as insuring such tenure. There a teacher was dismissed under a rule similar to the one here involved; but in that case the board was authorized to dismiss only for good cause shown, and it was for this reason that reinstatement was had. It was there held, however, in referring to the first section of the statute involved—which provided that the board should have power and authority to appoint and remove, hire, and discharge all teachers and employés—that if this section stood alone there would be ample reason to support the contention that the power to dismiss was unrestricted. Here the right of removal stands alone; and it has been uniformly held in this state that boards of education may exercise an unlimited discretion in the employment and dismissal of teachers under like employment with appellant. Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483, 22 Pac. 1042; Barthel v. Board of Education, 153 Cal. 376, 95 Pac. 892; Stockton v. Board of Education, 145 Cal. 246, 78 Pac. 730; Loehr v. Board of Education, 12 Cal. App. 671, 108 Pac. 325. This being so, it follows that the power of the board to discharge plaintiff was unrestricted and absolute.

[4] The second contention, that schoolteachers now have under the statute a permanency of tenure subject first, to the power of the board to remove at any time for insubordination, etc., under section 1793, Political Code, and, second, at the end of the school term when it is determined that, by reason of consolidation of classes, closing of schools, etc., her services will no longer be needed, is without merit. The use of the word "required" was intended merely to designate the period in which the persons enumerated would be permitted to hold in the pleasure of the board, and was never intended to insure any permanency of tenure beyond the period stated. The legislation clearly shows this intent. The argument that this construction might lead to a wholesale change in the personnel of the teaching force lends no weight. This is possible though, as counsel suggests, fortunately not common in the field of education. If the legislation is not wise, it is not our province to alter it. The remedy is elsewhere.

SPAULDING & CO. v. CHAPIN et al.

(Civ. 2215.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 18, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟸386(5)—VACATION—TIME FOR APPLICATION—VOID JUDGMENT.

A judgment rendered on a demurrable complaint but within the relief demanded, while erroneous, is not void and will not be set aside on motion after the time for appeal or vacation has expired.

2. JUDGMENT ⟸386(4)—VACATION—VALIDITY OF JUDGMENT—SERVICE OF NOTICE.

That the affidavit of service of notice of overruling of a demurrer to a complaint erroneously shows service to have been made on attorneys not representing defendant does not make the judgment void on its face, and subject to vacation on motion after the time allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473; the service in fact having been made on the proper counsel.

3. JUDGMENT ⟸386(5)—VACATION—TIME FOR APPLICATION—VOID JUDGMENT.

That the clerk of court errs does not render judgment based on his act void and subject to vacation on motion made after time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, where his authority is undoubted; such error being correctable on motion or on appeal.

4. JUDGMENT ⟸346 — VALIDITY — "VOID JUDGMENT."

A judgment is "void" on its face when it so appears by an inspection of the judgment roll.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Void Judgment.]

5. JUDGMENT ⟸386(4)—VACATION—TIME FOR APPLICATION—VOID JUDGMENT—"RECORD."

Since proof of service of notice of decision on demurrer does not constitute part of the "record" within Code Civ. Proc. § 670, that the affidavit of service is defective does not make a judgment thereon void on its face and subject to vacation on motion filed after time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Record.]

6. JUDGMENT ⟸380—VACATION—WAIVER.

A defendant who has obtained numerous extensions of time after service of notice of demurrer overruled cannot move to strike the judgment as being void on its face because of improper service of such notice.

7. JUDGMENT ⟸386(5)—VACATION—TIME FOR APPLICATION—AMOUNT—VOID JUDGMENT.

Where a judgment has been entered for an amount greatly in excess of what was actually due, the judgment is not thereby rendered void and subject to vacation on motion after the time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, though it is the duty of counsel to see that defendant be credited with the excess amount.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Spaulding & Co., a corporation, against Katherine Chapin and husband. From an order setting aside a judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Willard P. Smith and B. B. Blake, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Bert Schlesinger, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This an appeal from an order setting aside a judgment made after the time for appeal had elapsed and after the time when a motion to vacate the judgment might have been made under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This court heretofore, on January 24, 1918, rendered its judgment on the appeal and reversed the order, but thereafter granted the petition of W. W. Chapin, the respondent, for a rehearing, and has heard further argument upon some of the questions involved.

In view of the fact that the judgment here attacked could properly have been set aside only in the event that it was void on its face, but two of the points discussed in the briefs and upon the arguments will require consideration at this time.

Respondent contends, in support of the action of the trial court in setting aside the judgment recovered against him, that the judgment was void on its face, and this for two reasons, namely: That the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against him; and that the proof of service of notice of the overruling of his demurrer was insufficient.

From the record it appears that the plaintiff brought suit against the defendants as husband and wife to recover the sum of $1,384.80, alleging in one count that this was the agreed price of certain merchandise sold and delivered to Katherine Chapin, the co-defendant of respondent; in another count that it was the reasonable value of those goods; and in a third count that it was the amount of an account stated between plaintiff and said Katherine Chapin. Judgment was asked against both of the defendants. The respondent was served with process, and in due time he served and filed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled; and, the respondent having failed to answer within the time allowed by the court and by stipulations, default and judgment were entered against him. More than seven months thereafter, having employed other counsel, who now represent him, he moved to set aside the judgment on the ground, as before stated, that it was void on its face, and therefore an absolute nullity.

[1] There can be no doubt that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained; but the court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, and, as the judgment entered was within the relief demanded, it follows, under the authorities, that, although the judgment be erroneous, it is not void. It was so decided in the case of Blondeau v. Snyder et al., 95 Cal. 521, 31 Pac. 591. There both a mortgagor and the person to whom she conveyed the property, subject to the mortgage, were made parties defendant, and in the prayer of the complaint, in addition to other relief, the plaintiff demanded a deficiency judgment against both defendants. The action was dismissed as to the mortgagor; but her grantee, Mrs. Woodford, having failed to appear, a personal judgment was taken against her. There it was claimed that the complaint did not state facts showing a personal liability on the part of Mrs. Woodford for the mortgage debt, and therefore the court was without jurisdiction to declare such liability, and that the judgment in that respect was void. The Supreme Court held against this contention, saying:

"The judgment in this respect was within the relief demanded in the complaint and specified in the summons, and the court had jurisdiction, and indeed was required, to determine in that action whether upon the facts alleged the plaintiff therein was entitled to the relief which he demanded in his complaint. The court undoubtedly committed an error in finding such liability, but its judgment was not for this reason void. The error could have been corrected upon appeal from the judgment, or upon a proper showing by motion, if it had been made within the time limited by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but it is now too late to do so by motion."

See, also, In re James, 99 Cal. 374, 33 Pac. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; Canadian, etc., Co. v. Clarita, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 672, 74 Pac. 301; Brush v. Smith, 141 Cal. 467, 75 Pac. 55; McGinn v. Rees, 33 Cal. App. 291, 165 Pac. 52.

[2, 3] Nor is the judgment void on account of the clerical error in the affidavit of service of the notice of the order overruling the demurrer. Upon this question it appears that at the time the judgment was entered the original affidavit of service of notice of the overruling of the demurrer showed that such service was made upon certain attorneys who did not represent the respondent. Subsequently a corrected return of service was filed showing that service had in fact been made upon the true attorney of record for respondent, and that the statement in the original affidavit of service was an inadvertence. It is the contention of the respondent that the condition of the record at the time the judgment is entered controls, and as the record at that time failed to show a proper service that the judgment is void. In support of this position we are reminded that the clerk in entering a judgment acts merely in a ministerial capacity, and, unless he confines himself strictly within the statute, his acts can have no binding force. It is true that the clerk exercises no judicial functions, and that no intendments can be indulged in support of the validity of his acts. The statute directs the judgment. The clerk acts as the agent of the statute. If the law does not authorize the act, the judgment is without authority and is void. If, however, in a case where the authority of the clerk is undoubted and he errs, his act is not void, but only erroneous. His error can be corrected on motion made in time or on appeal. A judgment, therefore, based on his erroneous exercise of jurisdiction, until modified or reversed, is valid. Freeman on Judgments, §§ 129, 534; 1 Black on Judgments, § 88.

In asserting this doctrine we are not unmindful of the case of Reinhart v. Lugo, 86 Cal. 398, 24 Pac. 1089, 21 Am. St. Rep. 52, upon which respondent mainly relies, which is to the effect that, where the proof of service is defective at the time of entry of judgment, the act of the clerk is invalid and void. That case, however, was expressly overruled in Herman v. Santee, 103 Cal. 524, 37 Pac. 509, 42 Am. St. Rep. 145, as not being in harmony with the weight of authority upon the subject. Contrary to the doctrine laid down in the Reinhart Case, it is the fact of service which confers jurisdiction, and where the proof of such service is absent or defective it may be amended or supplied. So, as here, where the facts respecting the service of the notice as disclosed by the return on file were not sufficient to establish a valid service, still the judgment will be sustained, even when entered by default, by proof of the actual existence at the time of its entry of the requisite jurisdictional facts. This proof is permitted, not for the purpose of authorizing the court to enter a new judgment, but to show that the judgment previously entered was not without jurisdiction, and never was void. Freeman on Judgments, § 89b; Herman v. Santee, supra. In this respect we can see no reason in principle for any distinction between judgments entered by a court and those entered by the clerk in pursuance of the terms of the statute.

[4, 5] In Hallock v. Jaudin, 34 Cal. 167, it is said that, although entered by the clerk in conformity with the statute, the judgment is deemed in law to have been rendered by the court. See, also, 6 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. p. 102. To the same effect is Dillon v. Porter, 36 Minn. 341, 31 N. W. 56, where it is held that the action of the clerk in entering judgment in cases of this kind is to be taken as the action of the court, and the fact that a particular entry is improper, unauthorized, and erroneous does not render the judgment void any more than if it were entered under the immediate direction of the court itself. In this case it is stated that a contrary doctrine prevails in this state. This declaration no doubt is based upon expressions found in some of the earlier cases, culminating in the decision of Reinhart v. Lugo, supra. Aside from these considerations, we are of the opinion that the judgment was in no manner affected by the defective return. A judgment is void on its face when that matter is made apparent by an inspection of the judgment roll. Here the service of the notice was not jurisdictional, nor did it form any part of the judgment roll. Section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure enumerates what documents constitute that record, and we find no mention of any proof of service of notice of decision upon demurrer, from which it must follow that failure to give such notice does not render the judgment void upon its face. Jacks v. Baldez, 97 Cal. 91, 31 Pac. 899; Cal. C. C. Co. v. Crescent City L. W. Co., 30 Cal. App. 619, 159 Pac. 209.

[6] Besides this, we are further of opinion that respondent is estopped from asserting that the notice was defective. It appears that his attorney obtained numerous extensions of time from appellant's attorney after the service of the notice within which to answer after demurrer overruled. Under these circumstances he cannot be heard to say that the time allowed him to answer does not begin to run until written notice of the order is given. Wall v. Heald, 95 Cal. 364, 367, 30 Pac. 551; Estate of Keating, 158 Cal. 109, 114, 110 Pac. 109; Bell v. Thompson, 8 Cal. App. 483, 97 Pac. 158.

[7] Our attention has been called to the fact that the clerk erroneously entered judgment for an amount greatly in excess of what was actually due. While this act does not, as claimed, affect the judgment (Bond v. Pacheco, 30 Cal. 530), it is the duty of counsel for the appellant to see to it that respondent be credited with the excess amount. It is only fair to state that, recognizing their duty as attorneys, counsel for appellant have expressed their willingness so to do, and beyond question the error will be rectified.

From what we have said it follows that, the court having no jurisdiction to set the judgment aside, the order so doing constituted error, and it is hereby reversed.

We concur: BEASLY, Judge pro tem.; ZOOK, Judge pro tem.

CITY OF PETALUMA v. HUGHES et al.

(Civ. 1798.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 6, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 5, 1918.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸169—PROCEEDINGS—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.
Although Petaluma City Charter did not contain a system providing for opening of streets, but permitted the authorities by ordinance to adopt a system, and the city never adopted any system, it nevertheless had authority to proceed under St. 1889, p. 70, the general statute relating thereto.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸167(4) — STREETS — CONDEMNATION—STATUTES.
In condemnation proceedings to open and widen streets, municipalities can act legally only in strict compliance with requirements of statutory law defining their activity.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸757(1) — MATTERS REVIEWABLE—BRIEFS.
On appeal under the alternative method, it is incumbent upon appellants to set out in their brief matter and portions of the transcript which they desire to call to the attention of the court.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸181—PROCEEDINGS—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY.
Immaterial changes in the notice during publication, required by Act March 6, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70), relating to opening and widening streets, does not invalidate the notice.

5. TRIAL ⟸29(1)—PREJUDGING CASE.
That the judge manifested a knowledge of the essential principles involved, and announced during the progress of the trial that the Supreme Court had made a certain decision in reference thereto, did not show that he prejudged the controversy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the City of Petaluma against Isabelle Hughes and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. T. Mooney, of Petaluma, T. J. Geary, of Santa Rosa, and C. W. Lynch, of San Francisco, for appellants. G. P. Hall, of Petaluma, and W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against certain defendants, arising out of certain condemnation proceedings undertaken by the City of Petaluma (a municipal corporation) for the widening and extending of a certain street within its corporate limits, the undertaking being commonly known as the "Douglass Street Extension."

It is the contention of appellants:

(1) "That the charter of the city of Petaluma does not contain a valid system providing for the opening of streets, but it permits the city authorities, by ordinance, to adopt such a system; that the city of Petaluma never adopted any system providing for the opening of streets, and is therefore without authority to proceed."

(2) Closely allied to this is the further claim that the said proceedings taken by said municipality are void ab initio, for the reason that they have been undertaken and pursued under a general law of the state of California, to wit, the act of March 6, 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 70), which has no application to said city of Petaluma, instead of having been undertaken and pursued, as the charter requires, as hereinbefore stated.

(3) Further, that "even if we concede (which we do not) that the city had the right to proceed directly under the general law without consideration for the charter provisions cited above, the proceedings as actually taken were defective, in that there was not a posting and not a publication of the 'Notice of Public Work' in the matter given as required by the act of March 6, 1889. This being true, the city never gained jurisdiction to order the work and improvement."

(4) Defendants also raise the point that they were restrained from offering any evidence as to the assessment side of the proceedings taken, and in support thereof quote Los Angeles v. Dehail, 97 Cal. 13, 31 Pac. 626.

(5) They further contend that the trial court "practically" prejudged the controversy, before its presentation, by the use of the following language:

"The Court: You have authority to act under the general law. The Supreme Court has expressly held in four different cases the general law is incorporated."

[1] The first two contentions of appellants, virtually involving the same question, may be considered together, and it is probably sufficient to say that they have been answered by the District Court of Appeal for the First District in the case of In re Thomas et al., 33 Cal. App. 547, 165 Pac. 1021. Therein the learned author of the opinion, referring to sections 21 and 68 of article 3 of the charter of Petaluma, says:

"It seems clear to us, when these two sections of the city charter of Petaluma are read together, as they must be, that no preliminary ordinance was necessary to entitle the city authorities to proceed immediately under the state law in making the street improvement under review. The city charter did not itself embrace a procedure for the doing of such work; and the only requirement of section 21 of article 3 of its charter is that when this character of work is to be done it should be done by ordinances not in conflict with state laws. The particular state law adopted by the city for the purposes of this work provides that the contemplated improvement shall have its inception in an ordinance of the city, for such the resolution of intention is, as required by said state law. The passage of an additional ordinance by the city resolving to adopt this ordinance required by the state law would be doing of an idle act, and any construction of section 21 of article 3 of the charter which would require the doing of such act would do violence to the intendments of section 68 of article 3 of the same charter. We find no merit, therefore, in the appellant's contention in this regard."

A somewhat analogous case is Park v. Pac. Fire Extinguisher Co. et al., 173 Pac. 615, wherein it is said:

"Street lighting is a municipal affair; but the charter of the city of Berkeley, while conferring power upon the city to adopt a complete procedure for the creation of a system of street lighting, does not contain such a procedure. This is conceded. The city has power to provide such general scheme; but, not having done so, it is governed by general law in that respect and may in this case follow the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1911. Fragley v. Phelan, 126 Cal. 383, 58 Pac. 923."

In the Fragley Case it is said:

"It is not within the constitutional power of the Legislature, by approving a freeholders' charter which fails to make provision upon subjects pertaining to municipal affairs, to exempt that city from being subject to legislative control in reference to those subjects, nor can the city secure exemption from such control by omitting to make such provision in its charter."

The following cases are also opposed to these contentions of appellants: Osburn v. Stone, 170 Cal. 484, 150 Pac. 367; Clouse v. San Diego, 159 Cal. 436, 114 Pac. 573; Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 156, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057.

[2] Of course, it is fundamental that, in proceedings like this, municipalities can act legally only in strict compliance with the requirements of the statutory law, defining their activities, or, to put it in the language of the decisions, that the mode is the measure of their power.

In the case of City of Napa v. Maxwell, decided by this court, reported in 171 Pac. at page 839, the court uses the following language:

"Of course, the rule is that proceedings for the improvement of streets are in invitum and purely statutory, and afford no opportunity for invoking any of the principles of equity, and the validity of an assessment therefore depends upon a statutory power, and the party seeking the right to enforce it must show that the statutory power has been strictly followed."

Therein, the proceedings were declared invalid because two commissioners, instead of three, were appointed, as provided for by section 6 of the act of 1889, to ascertain the benefits accruing or the damage resulting to property affected by the proposed improvement.

[3, 4] But in the instant case no such consideration is involved. Section 2 of said act of 1889 provides:

"Before ordering any work to be done or improvement made which is authorized by section one of this act, the city council shall pass a resolution declaring its intention to do so, describing the work or improvement and the land deemed necessary to be taken therefor, and specifying the exterior boundaries of the district of lands to be affected or benefited by said work or improvement, and to be assessed to pay the damages, cost and expense thereof."

Then follows a section requiring the street superintendent to post a notice of this resolution and also to publish it for ten days in a daily newspaper. The only asserted defect as to this proceeding is pointed out in the opening brief of appellants by quoting from the transcript, as follows:

"Mr. Geary: 'It may be stipulated that all the proceedings which are set out in the complaint as having been taken by the council of the city of Petaluma were in fact taken by them.' The Court: 'With the exception of the fact, for a portion of the time of publication, the word "Stratton" appeared in the notice instead of the word "Harriman" and that there were not 10 full days of posting or publication of the "Harriman" in there.'"

There is nothing therein to show that respondent consented to the statement of the court and, besides, if it be regarded as a stipulation of the city of Petaluma, it is entirely unintelligible. It does not appear what difference it made whether the word "Stratton" or "Harriman" was used. It was incumbent upon appellants to set out in their brief the portions of the transcript upon which they relied to show error, the appeal being under the alternative method. Scott v. Hollywood Park Co., 169 Pac. 379.

They should have exhibited the evidence in their opening brief, in order that respondent might have an opportunity to make suitable reply. They waited, however, until the filing of their final brief to call the attention of this court to the entire proceeding in reference to said publication. But the record as exhibited in this final brief does not aid appellants in any manner. It does not show that the word "Stratton" or the word "Harriman" affected in the slightest degree the accuracy or sufficiency of the description of the property. As far as anything to the contrary appears, either word might have been used throughout, or both eliminated, and the full and definite information required by the statute still be contained in said publication. In other words, from the record we must assume that the clerical error was entirely immaterial and resulted in no prejudice whatever. Of course, no one would contend for the absurd proposition that an immaterial and unimportant change in the phraseology of the notice would invalidate it, the facts stated remaining essentially the same and corresponding with the requirements of the law. As to this we may adopt the language of the Supreme Court of Montana in reference to the publication of a notice of contemplated changes in the Constitution, reported in State v. Alderson, 49 Mont. 414, 142 Pac. 216, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 39, as follows:

"Indeed, to reach the very acme of absurdity, we need only say that the rule of literal compliance requires that every word be spelled correctly, and if in the last illustration the printer inadvertently omitted the letter 'a' from the word 'measures' and this was the only departure, the amendment would fail under the rule in question. A court which would nullify the expressed will of the people upon such a flimsy pretext, as any one illustrated above would deservedly forfeit every claim to the respect or confidence of the community."

The case of Ferri et al. v. City of Long Beach et al., 169 Pac. 385, decided December 11, 1917, has no application to this case. The notice therein contained the misstatement of a matter of fact. We, of course, agree that, "where the statute prescribes a certain kind of notice, a court is not justified in saying some other kind of notice would be equally effective." It would be absurd to contend that notice, for instance, by mail, would answer the requisite of newspaper publication or notice by posting; but, in the instant case, no such question is involved.

As to the fourth point, it is sufficient to say that appellants' brief set forth nothing from the transcript inviting attention even. However, the reading of the entire record discloses no such ruling as they claim. The case seems to have been tried with exceeding care and fairness, and appellants have no just cause for complaint.

[5] The charge that the trial judge had prejudged the cause seems particularly unfounded. The accusation apparently arises from the fact that he manifested a knowledge of the essential legal principles involved, and announced during the progress of the trial that the Supreme Court had made a certain decision in reference thereto. It is certainly somewhat novel that the familiarity of the trial judge with the law—however unusual it might be considered—should be the basis for criticism or animadversion.

Appellants suggest some other alleged errors, but they are not argued and we pass them by without further notice.

The appeal seems to be entirely destitute of merit, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

37 Cal. App. 683

SPURRIER et al. v. NEUMILLER, County Treasurer. (Civ. 1809.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 26, 1918.)

1. DRAINS ⇐85 — INVALID ASSESSMENT — PAYMENT—RIGHT TO CREDIT.

If Pol. Code, § 3466½, in its original form, created a vested right to a credit for an excessive amount paid by a landowner on a reclamation district assessment adjudged invalid, such credit was given by a subsequent assessment equalizing inequalities, requiring those who did not pay to pay their proportion of the former assessment as well as of the latter.

2. MANDAMUS ⇐10 — CREDIT ON ASSESSMENT—NECESSITY OF SHOWING INJURY.

To entitle landowners to mandamus to compel entry of a credit on a reclamation district assessment by reason of payments made on a former invalid assessment, it is incumbent on them to show that they are injured by failure to so credit their land.

3. MANDAMUS ⇐15 — RIGHT TO REMEDY — EFFECT INEQUITABLE OR UNJUST.

Mandamus will not lie where its effect would be inequitable or unjust as to third persons, or will introduce confusion, or will not promote substantial justice.

4. MANDAMUS ⟸176—RELIEF—CREDIT ON ASSESSMENT—INTEREST NOT DEMANDED.

Where it appears landowners, seeking by mandamus to compel a credit of payments made on an excessive reclamation district assessment, have in fact been given credit therefor, and that they did not demand or claim interest, they are not entitled to the writ because interest was disregarded; they having elected to stand or fall on the claim that they were entitled to a credit for principal and interest.

5. DRAINS ⟸85 — RECLAMATION DISTRICT —PAYMENT—INVALID ASSESSMENT—RIGHT TO REIMBURSEMENT.

Pol. Code, § 3466½, in its original form, providing for reimbursement of those who may have paid amounts assessed against their lands not liable therefor, because of invalidity of a reclamation district assessment, does not entitle landowners to reimbursement where the payments were made by former owners, and there is nothing to show that they expended anything therefor, or incurred liability in consequence thereof.

6. DRAINS ⟸83—RECLAMATION DISTRICT—REASSESSMENT.

A reclamation district reassessment, pursuant to Pol. Code, § 3466½, as amended (St. 1911, p. 647), is a method of liquidating the indebtedness of the district, within the meaning of section 3478, as amended (St. 1911, p. 648), expressly declaring section 3466½, as amended, to be applicable to such a case, in enumerating an exception to its application.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸105 — VESTED RIGHTS—PAYMENT OF INVALID ASSESSMENTS —RIGHT TO CREDIT.

The right of landowners, under Pol. Code, § 3466½, before it was amended, to be credited with payments made, where a reclamation district assessment is adjudged invalid, was not a vested right before the adjudication.

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸144 — OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS — RIGHT TO CREDIT AGAINST ASSESSMENT.

Landowners were not deprived of any contractual right by being deprived by amendment of Pol. Code, § 3466½, by St. 1911, p. 647, of their statutory right to credit for payments made where a reclamation district assessment is adjudged invalid, and hence the amendment did not violate Const. art. 1, § 16, or Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by S. M. Spurrier and another against W. C. Neumiller, as County Treasurer of San Joaquin County. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

D. V. Marceau and John A. Wilson, both of Stockton (S. M. Spurrier, of Stockton, of counsel), for appellants. Clary & Louttit, of Stockton, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The controversy herein arises by reason of two assessments levied by reclamation district No. 17 in the county of San Joaquin. The first one, which we will denominate the "Bonbini assessment," was based upon a petition filed with the board of supervisors of said county on the 2d day of April, 1907; Charles and George Dangers being then the owners of the lands herein involved. The property was charged with an assessment of $3,270.63, against which a credit of $900.18 was allowed in consequence of a former assessment, and the balance, with interest, was finally paid on March 3, 1909. On May 9, 1911, by judgment entered in the superior court of said county, the Bonbini assessment was decreed to be invalid. Seven landowners within the district did not pay the Bonbini assessment. The other, which we may call the Spurrier assessment, was based upon a petition filed on the 16th day of October, 1911. In apportioning this assessment, the commissioners equalized the inequalities caused by the payment by some and the failure of payment by others of said invalid assessment. As to this the court found:

"The said commissioners did charge and assess against the said respective parcels of land situated in said district, against which the said prior assessment had been declared by a court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, and which said assessment remained unpaid, with such proportion of the former invalid assessment as the benefits derived by the said respective parcels of land from the reclamation works for which said former assessment was levied bore to the whole amount of said former invalid assessment, and the said charges and assessment so fixed and levied by said commissioners against said respective parcels of land did charge the said last named parcels of land, and each of the other tracts of land within the said district, with its proper proportion of the costs of the reclamation of the lands therein; * * * that the land of plaintiffs has not paid, and it has not been charged with, more than its proper proportion of the costs of reclamation."

It is not contended that this finding is unsupported. Indeed, it was stipulated at the trial:

"That the commissioners, in levying and charging the lands in said reclamation district No. 17 in 1911, did charge and assess against the respective parcels of land situated in said district, and which said parcels of land did not pay the former invalid assessment, with such proportion of such former assessment as the benefits derived by said respective parcels of land from the reclamation works for which said former invalid assessment was levied bore to the whole amount of said former invalid assessment."

Notwithstanding the foregoing stipulation and finding, it is the contention of appellants that the county treasurer of said county should be compelled to enter a credit of the amount paid by said Charles and George Dangers on the Bonbini assessment to be applied pro tanto to the payment of the Spurrier assessment. The basis for the claim is found in the following language of section 3466½ of the Political Code as it formerly existed:

"In all cases in which an assessment shall have been levied since October first, eighteen hundred and ninety-six, or shall hereafter be levied, for reclamation purposes, upon the lands embraced within any reclamation district, and the assessment shall have thereafter been or shall be adjudged invalid, by any court of competent jurisdiction, and any landowner of the district shall have paid the amount assessed, in said assessment against land belonging to him, before said assessment shall have been or shall be so adjudged invalid, the amount so paid by said landowner, together with the legal interest thereon from the date of its payment, shall be credited, by the treasurer of the county in which said land is situated, to the tract of land on which the same was paid, and shall be applied upon any assessment thereafter levied on the lands of the district to the payment, pro tanto, of the amount therein assessed against said tract of land."

In explanation of the course pursued in equalizing said assessment it is proper to say that by an amendment taking effect April 5, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 647), and prior to said Spurrier assessment, the said section 3466½ was made to read as follows:

"In all cases in which an assessment shall have been levied or shall hereafter be levied, for reclamation purposes upon the lands embraced within any reclamation district, and if the assessment upon any tract or tracts of land shall have thereafter been adjudged invalid by any court of competent jurisdiction, or if, for any reason, any tract or tracts of land shall not have been charged with said assessment, then such tract or tracts of land shall be charged in any subsequent assessment with such proportion of the former assessment, as the benefits derived by said land from the reclamation works for which said former assessment was levied bears to the whole amount of said former assessment; or a subsequent reassessment of such tract or tracts of land may be made separately for the purpose of charging said land with its proper proportion of the costs of reclamation."

In this connection we may state that the validity of this Spurrier assessment, under said section as amended, was upheld by the Supreme Court on an appeal taken by these same appellants in the case of Spurrier v. Reclamation District No. 17, 172 Cal. 157, 155 Pac. 840. In the leading opinion filed in said cause it is declared that:

"The legal effect of the amendment was, of course, to repeal the portion of the section which had been omitted, and leave the rights of those owners who had paid an assessment adjudged invalid unaffected by any express statutory provision as regards the obtaining of credit for such payment."

This language would seem to imply that there is no longer any statutory authority for allowing credit for the payment of the invalid assessment. It is fair, though, to say that the Supreme Court, in another portion of the opinion, specifically disclaimed the purpose of determining in that decision whether the appellants were entitled to credit for said payment, and in the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Shaw it was suggested that:

"If the parties, who paid the assessment have any remedy for the interest afterward accruing thereon, it must be sought by some other mode than by including it in a reassessment upon the delinquent lands under the section as amended in 1911."

[1] But, assuming that said section 3466½ in its original form created a vested right to a credit in favor of appellant, which could not be impaired or destroyed by a subsequent amendment to the law, it is entirely apparent that appellants were not entitled to the mandate as applied for. This follows from the said stipulation and finding that there was an equalization of the inequalities which arose from the Bonbini assessment. In other words, those who did not pay said assessment were required by the Spurrier assessment to pay their proportion of the former assessment as well as of the latter. Thus, in effect, were appellants given credit for their payment of the Bonbini assessment, except the interest, as the others were compelled to make a similar payment. In other words, the situation was rendered practically the same as though all the landowners had paid their full proportion of the invalid assessment. In such condition how would credit be given? Suppose there were 4 landowners all together, and an invalid assessment of $100,000 had been levied and paid by them, $25,000 each, and it was necessary to raise another $100,000 by assessment. The money could not be raised by crediting the land with the payment of the invalid assessment. If it were desired to give each parcel of land specific credit for the payment of the invalid assessment, it would be necessary to petition for an assessment of $200,000, in order that, after full credit had been given, there might be available $100,000 to apply to the purposes of the second assessment. But it is obvious that no more would be required of each landowner if the assessment were for $100,000 and he be required to pay his proportion. The nonpaying landowners in the case at bar having been required to make good their delinquency on the invalid assessment, we have a similar situation to one wherein all the landowners have paid the invalid assessment.

[2] Of course, to entitle them to the writ, it was incumbent upon appellants to show that they were injured by the failure to credit the land with said payments. To the contrary, the finding is that the inequalities were adjusted, and that appellants were charged with no more than their just proportion of the cost of reclamation.

[3] It also appears that, if the writ were granted, appellants would gain an advantage over other landowners who have already been charged with an excess amount to equalize the burden. "Mandamus will not lie where its effect would be inequitable or unjust as to third persons or will introduce confusion or will not promote substantial justice." Board of Education v. San Diego, 128 Cal. 369, 60 Pac. 976.

[4] At any rate, appellants, in effect, have been given credit for the principal of their payments, and the only consideration of which they could complain is that interest on said payments was not regarded in equalizing said assessments, and this was probably the consideration that Judge Shaw had in view in making the suggestion hereinbefore quoted. But they made no such demand on the treasurer, nor is there any intimation in this proceeding that they desire such credit. They claim that they are entitled to credit for principal and interest, and upon that claim they have elected to stand or fall.

[5] There is another view which, in my opinion, although not argued by counsel, is fatal to the claim of plaintiffs. While the language of the original section is that payment shall be credited "to the tract of land on which the same was paid" yet it is true as declared by the Supreme Court in Reclamation District v. Bonbini, 158 Cal. 206, 110 Pac. 580, that:

"The whole object and scheme of section 3466½ of the Political Code was to provide for the reimbursement of those who may have paid the amounts assessed against their lands where such lands were not liable therefor because of the invalidity of the assessment against them."

Plaintiffs herein did not pay said assessment, and hence the occasion does not call for reimbursement. It was paid, as we have seen, by the former owners of the property, and there is nothing to show that appellants expended a dollar therefor, or incurred any liability in consequence of it. It does not appear that the land cost them any more than if said assessment had not been paid by the Dangers brothers, or that said circumstance entered at all into the consideration for said purchase. In other words, we must assume that the plaintiffs are in exactly the same situation financially as though said payment had not been made by the former owners. In that view of the case, it would appear plain that no injury to plaintiffs has been shown.

[6] Moreover, we think the said section 3466½, as amended, is the law applicable to the case, and that it cannot be said that there has been a destruction or impairment of any vested right. Appellants call attention to the fact that several sections of the Political Code were amended at the same time as said section 3466½ in 1911, among them being section 3478 of said Code. The last made said amendment applicable to all reclamation districts, with three exceptions or provisions, as follows:

(1) "Any proceeding that shall have been already commenced for the levy or collection of assessments in such district when this section takes effect." (2) "Any act done or performed in relation to the affairs of such districts prior to such last mentioned date." And (3) it shall not affect "the indebtedness of such districts theretofore incurred, excepting as to the method of liquidating such indebtedness."

Only by virtue of these provisions could it be said, if at all, that the amended section does not control said Spurrier assessment. But without a specific analysis of these provisions it is sufficient to say that said assessment involved "the method of liquidating the indebtedness of the district," and therefore the amended statute is expressly declared to be applicable to such a case.

[7] The inquiry as to whether there was in plaintiffs, or the former owners of the land, any vested right to said credit, leads to the consideration, as suggested by respondent, of the nature of a reclamation district, the character of the obligation created by assessments, and the relation between the district and the landowner as to the assessment and its payment. These districts are undoubtedly "governmental agencies to carry out a specific purpose." Reclamation District No. 7 v. Sherman, 11 Cal. App. 407, 105 Pac. 277. And the local assessment levied in return for the benefits conferred upon the property assessed by the improvements for which the assessment is levied is a species of tax. Cooley on Taxation, page 416. It is true that the method of apportionment in the local proceedings is different from that involved in the general burdens imposed by taxation for state and municipal purposes, but in each case the assessment is an exercise of the taxing power.

Taxes are not debts, nor founded upon contract; but they are charges upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes. Perry v. Washburne, 20 Cal. 318. A swamp land assessment is a charge imposed upon property by authority of the Legislature, and the fact that it is only a lien upon the property assessed, and not a direct charge against the owner, is immaterial. People v. Hulbert, 71 Cal. 72, 12 Pac. 43. The levy of a street assessment is based upon the governmental power of taxation. Hornung v. McCarthy, 126 Cal. 17, 58 Pac. 303.

The Legislature must originate the power to tax and prescribe the rules under which taxes are to be levied, but the determination of the amount, even of a state tax, may be referred to some other authority. The amount of the local taxes is determined in various ways. In some cases they are fixed by the Legislature or under its direction and in other cases they are determined by local boards, which exercise a quasi legislative authority. Bixler v. Board of Supervisors, 59 Cal. 698. The courts are very generally agreed that the authority to require the property specially benefited to bear the expense of local improvements is a branch of the taxing power or included within it. French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 181 U. S. 324, 21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879.

"A tax is an enforced contribution for the payment of public expenses. It is laid by some rule of apportionment according to which the persons or property taxed share the public burden, and whether taxation operates upon all within the state, or upon those of a given class or locality, its essential nature is the same." Houck v. Little River Drainage District, 239 U. S. 266, 36 Sup. Ct. 58, 60 L. Ed. 266.

These assessment charges are based upon the benefit which accrues to the property by reason of the improvement, and, therefore the liability therefor persists against the property until some suitable legislation is enacted which will enable the governmental agency to enforce the same.

Page and Jones on Taxation by Assessment, § 958. Hence, if an illegal tax is voluntarily paid, no recovery in the absence of statutory authority will be permitted. Justice v. Robinson, 142 Cal. 199, 75 Pac. 776. The method of levying taxes is a question of legislative policy and there exists no contract between the taxpayer and the Legislature that the same policy will be continued and that the method of levying taxes will not be changed. Bailey v. Magwire, 22 Wall. 215, 22 L. Ed. 850.

[8] Herein the Legislature, in amending section 3466½, changed the policy of levying reassessments in reclamation districts, and this did not, for the reasons heretofore stated, deprive appellants or their predecessors in interest of any contractual right. The case, relating, as it does, to the method of taxation for the promotion of a governmental purpose, does not involve section 10 of article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, or section 16, article 1, of our state Constitution, which plaintiffs claim would be violated if section 3466½, as amended, is to be applied to the situation. Of course, it cannot be said that the law "impairs the obligation of a contract," if there was no contract between the state and the owners of the land.

The broad ground upon which the United States Supreme Court declares the authority of the Legislature to change the law rests is that the lawmaking power "is not making promises, but framing a scheme of public revenue and public improvement," and where it announces its policy by the enactment of a statute "it may open a chance for benefit to those who comply with its conditions, but it does not address them and therefore makes no promise to them. It simply indicates a course of conduct to be pursued until circumstances or its views of policy change. It would be quite intolerable if parties not expressly addressed were to be allowed to set up a contract on the strength of their interest in, and action on, the faith of a statute, merely because their interest was obvious and their action likely, on the face of the law." Wisconsin v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379, 24 Sup. Ct. 107, 48 L. Ed. 229.

Moreover, assuming that a question of vested interest might arise under the application of said sections of the Code, still this case must fail since it was a mere expectant or contingent interest at the time of the amendment of the statute. Such rights are contingent when they are only to come into existence on an event or condition which may not happen or be performed until some other event may prevent their vesting. Pearsall v. Great Northern Railway, 161 U. S. 673, 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 40 L. Ed. 838. The section prior to said amendment provided that, before credit should be given, three circumstances must exist: First, an invalid assessment; second, payment before judgment of invalidity; and, third, judgment of invalidity. The invalid assessment was paid in 1909; the amended statute became a law on April 5, 1911; but the judgment of invalidity was not entered until May 11, 1911, or after the repeal of the statute providing for the credit. The interest was not vested, therefore, and it ceased with the repeal of the statute. Anderson v. Wilkins, 142 N. C. 154, 55 S. E. 272, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1145.

The right to credit for such payment is purely statutory. Hence, being in fieri at the time of the repeal of the statute, it ceased with such change in the law. The subject is thoroughly discussed in Moss v. Smith, 171 Cal. 788, 155 Pac. 90, and we think the principle set forth therein is applicable to the present situation. We conclude that in any event appellants have shown no injury or prejudice, and, besides, no reason exists for holding that the state entered into a contract with them, binding itself to give them credit for such payment, and, finally, that if the statute did create a right or interest that under certain contingencies could not be destroyed by subsequent legislation, such right or privilege being purely statutory and not being vested, fell with the law that give it birth.

Other considerations might be suggested for an affirmance of the judgment, but we think the foregoing sufficient; and the judgment is affirmed.

KROHN et al. v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 17 et al. (Civ. 1856.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 26, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; John Hancock, Judge.

Action by Henry Krohn and another against Reclamation District No. 17 and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

D. V. Marceau and John A. Wilson, both of Stockton (S. M. Spurrier, of Stockton, of counsel), for appellants. George F. Buck and Clary & Louttit, all of Stockton, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. This action was brought to prevent the sale of the property of plaintiffs to enforce the lien of a reclamation tax, and is a companion case to Spurrier v. Neumiller, etc., 174 Pac. 338, this day decided. It is conceded that the decisive question is the same in the two appeals, and that is whether the land should be credited with the payment of said invalid assessment. Having reached the conclusion that the lower court was correct in holding that no such credit should be given, it follows that we should affirm the judgment in this case; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. WILLIAM YEE. (Cr. 418.)

1. HOMICIDE ⊂=309(3) — INSTRUCTION ON MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for murder, in view of the evidence, showing a deliberate assassination, the elements of manslaughter not being involved, defendant, moreover, relying on an alibi, held, that the trial court properly refused to give an instruction defining manslaughter.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=730(5)—ARGUMENT — INSTRUCTION AS TO ACCESSORIES.

In prosecution of defendant, charged with two others with homicide, where district attorney in argument declared jury were justified in finding defendant guilty though they might find he did not himself do killing, it was necessary for court to read instruction embracing principle declared in Pen. Code, §§ 31, 971, as to accessories.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=59(4) — INNOCENT ACCESSORY.

One who innocently aids and assists or encourages another to commit an act which is criminal is not guilty as an accessory equally with the perpetrator of the act.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=792(3) — INSTRUCTION ON ACCESSORIES—"ABETTED."

In prosecution for murder, instruction that one aiding, assisting, and encouraging another in committing a criminal act is guilty equally with the perpetrator, and that to justify conviction it must be shown he aided, assisted, and abetted therein, was proper statement of law of accessories, declared in Pen. Code, §§ 31, 971; "abetted" implying knowledge of wrongful purpose of perpetrator.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=1173(2) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTION.

In prosecution for murder, where all evidence, except what defendant offered in support of alibi, tended to show he himself did killing, omitting in instruction the element accessory must have guilty knowledge was harmless.

6. HOMICIDE ⊂=233—PROOF OF MOTIVE.

To convict of homicide it is not essential to prove a motive, which becomes material only to reinforce evidence merely circumstantial.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=720(9) — ARGUMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

In prosecution of one Chinese for murdering another, where defense introduced testimony as to existence of a "tong" war, argument of district attorney declaring its existence, and that homicide resulted from it was proper.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=1171(1) — APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ARGUMENT.

In prosecution of one Chinese for murdering another, district attorney's argument declaring existence of a "tong" war, and that homicide resulted from it, held harmless to defendant in view of the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

William Yee was convicted of murder in the first degree, and, from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, jointly with two other Chinese, named, respectively, Toy Yock and Lee Sing Park was charged by information filed in the superior court of Sonoma county with the crime of murder. The defendant was given a separate trial and was convicted of murder of the first degree, the jury fixing the penalty at imprisonment for life. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

The homicide occurred on Sunday, the 11th day of March, 1917, at about the hour of 3 p. m., on the farm of one Finley, situated between four and five miles north of the city of Santa Rosa. The deceased, one Hom Hong, at the time of the homicide, was employed as a laborer on the Finley ranch, as were some dozen or more other Chinese.

There is ample evidence from which the jury were warranted in finding these facts: That, at about the noon hour of the said 11th day of March, one Potter, a taxicab driver at Santa Rosa, received an order by telephone from Sebastopol, a town situated a short distance from Santa Rosa, for a taxicab; that, acting upon the order so received, he drove to Sebastopol, and, upon reaching a point near that town, was stopped by a Chinaman, who was standing in the middle of the road, waving his hand, evidently for the purpose of attracting the driver's attention and so stopping the machine. Potter brought the taxi to a stop, and shortly thereafter four Chinese entered the machine, three taking seats inside and one taking the outside seat, riding by the side of the driver. Acting under the direction of the man sitting by his side, Potter took a circuitous route to the Finley ranch. Upon arriving at a point a short distance from the gate leading into the ranch, Potter was told by the Chinese to stop the machine, and, upon doing so, the four Chinese left the taxi, instructing Potter to remain at the spot where he had stopped until their return, which, they said, would not be over 15 or 20 minutes. Three of the Chinese passed through the gate into the Finley premises and thence to the cabin near which an aged Chinese, one Won Fong You, who was employed as a foreman and who also devoted himself to looking after and attending the flower garden on the place, was walking about the garden. Won Fong You, observing the three Chinese, who were strangers to him, greeted and invited them into the cabin to partake of a cup of tea. The defendant and another of the three Chinese accepted the invitation, the third remaining outside of the cabin. At this time, Hom Hong, the deceased, and a number of other Chinamen were engaged in chopping wood near the cabin. Finishing the tea, the two Chinese left the cabin and immediately went to the spot where Hom Hong was engaged in chopping wood "on a block," about 30 feet from the cabin, and the defendant at once opened fire upon Hong with a pistol, shooting at him five times, four of the bullets entering his body, almost instantly causing his death. The third Chinaman—the one who did not partake of tea—remained near the cabin door while the shooting was going on. After the killing of Hom Hong, the defendant threw the pistol with which he did the shooting into the hopfield near by, and thereupon the three Chinese hastened to the place at which they had left the taxi, entered the machine, and ordered the driver to take them back to Sebastopol. On reaching a point near what is known as "Old Chinatown," in Sebastopol, the Chinese got out of the machine. The taxi driver, upon receiving pay for his services, started back to Santa Rosa, leaving the three Chinese at Sebastopol.

The sheriff of Sonoma county, having been immediately notified of the homicide after it occurred, started post haste for the Finley ranch, where, upon his arrival, he found the dead body of Hom Hong lying "crumpled" on the ground. The sheriff, shortly after his arrival, found a pistol, with five chambers, in the hopfield a very short distance from where the body of Hom Hong lay. Five empty cartridge shells were found in the weapon. An inquest was held by the coroner on the evening following the day of the homicide, and at the same time an autoptical examination of the body of the deceased was made by Drs. Temple and Scamell. It is not necessary to present herein a description of the several wounds as given by the doctors at the trial. It is enough to say that the point of entrance of each of the four bullets which went into the body of the deceased was such as conclusively to show that, when shot, the deceased had his back or side toward his assailant. In other words, it is obvious, from the point of entrance into the body of each of the bullets, that the deceased was at no time squarely facing the man who did the shooting.

[1] The point first urged for a reversal grows out of the omission by the court to give to the jury an instruction defining manslaughter.

Instructions must be pertinent to the evidence received into the record, and, manifestly, it is not error to refuse or fail to give an instruction having no bearing upon any of the facts proved. The undisputed evidence in this case (synoptically given above) did not warrant an instruction defining manslaughter. According to the evidence, the deceased was assassinated—deliberately and wantonly shot to death without cause or provocation—and there was therefore no element of manslaughter in the act of killing. And certainly there was no such element in the case, so far as the defendant was concerned, for he relied upon and attempted to establish an alibi, and, as the position thus assumed by him in the case implied, he did not pretend to know anything about the homicide, how it occurred, or by whom perpetrated, and therefore introduced no proof which would reduce or tend to reduce the crime to that of manslaughter. It was, as stated, according to the evidence produced by the people, a cold-blooded murder and nothing less. The Supreme Court has time and again very properly held that, in such a case, it is not error for the trial court to refuse or omit to instruct the jury upon manslaughter. See People v. Turley, 50 Cal. 469; People v. Lee Gam, 69 Cal. 552, 11 Pac. 183; People v. Chavez, 103 Cal. 408, 37 Pac. 389; People v. Chaves, 122 Cal. 134, 140, 54 Pac. 596; People v. Fellows, 122 Cal. 233, 240, 54 Pac. 830.

[2-5] It is next contended that the court should have given to the jury a more definite definition of "an absent accessory and what acts were required of such accessory to constitute guilt" than it did.

According to the evidence, the defendant was not an "absent accessory," by which is meant a participant in the commission of the crime who was not present at the scene of the crime when it was committed and who did not actually commit the criminal act. As has been shown, the defendant, under the evidence, was either present at and took an active part in the commission of the crime, or, accepting the proof addressed to his attempted alibi, had no connection whatever with the crime or the commission thereof. Of course, it was proper, and indeed necessary, for the court to read to the jury an instruction embracing the principle declared in sections 31 and 971 of the Penal Code as to accessories in crime, for the reason that the defendant was charged with two others with the commission of the homicide, and for the further reason that the district attorney, in his argument to the jury, declared that, under the evidence, they were justified in finding the defendant guilty, although they might find that he did not himself actually do the killing. And the court did so instruct the jury as follows:

"If two or more persons plan and undertake the commission of a criminal offense, and pursuant to that agreement the actual criminal offense or act denounced by the law as a crime is committed by one of the several parties, he being aided and assisted and encouraged in so doing by the other or others with whom he has so planned or agreed, under our law the participants in a criminal act accomplished under those circumstances are alike guilty. That is to say, those, if such there be, who aided, assisted, and abetted the commission of the act or participated in the commission of the crime as just stated are deemed by the law as guilty of the act as they would have been, you might say, had it actually been committed by them or one of their number."

It may be conceded that, under the decisions, the first part of the above instruction, taken alone, falls a little short of stating the rule correctly, for it would then merely have told the jury, in effect, that one aiding and assisting and encouraging another in committing a criminal act would be equally guilty with the perpetrator of the act himself. This, as stated, does not correctly state the rule, because one might innocently aid and assist and encourage another to commit an act which is criminal. People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 492, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50. But, as will be observed, the court followed the language thus referred to with the statement that, to justify the conviction of one who did not himself actually commit the criminal act, it must be shown that he aided, assisted, and abetted therein; the word "abetted," unlike the words immediately preceding it, including "knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator and counsel and encouragement in the crime." People v. Dole, supra; People v. Bond, 13 Cal. App. 175, 185, 109 Pac. 150. Thus the rule was clearly and correctly stated to the jury, and it cannot be doubted that they well understood from it that, to warrant the conviction of a person who did not himself actually commit a criminal act, it was requisite to show that he abetted, or what is the equivalent in legal signification to that word, criminally or with guilty knowledge and intent aided the actual perpetrator in the commission of the act. Moreover, even if the instruction involved an erroneous statement of the rule, it could hardly be said to be prejudicial in its effect upon the rights of the defendant, inasmuch as all the evidence, save that which he offered in support of his claim of alibi, tended to show that he himself actually committed the act of killing.

[6-8] The last point to which special attention is given in the appellant's brief is that the district attorney, for the purpose of developing in the minds of the jury a motive for the commission of the homicide, declared that there existed a "tong war" among the Chinese at about and before the date of the killing, and further declared that the defendant was a member of one of the hostile and warring tongs.

Conceding that there is no evidence in the record that a tong war was in progress and the killing of Hom Hong was the result of hostilities arising and existing between rival Chinese societies, still we do not think the defendant could have been harmed by the remarks of the district attorney in that particular. The evidence upon which the prosecution relied for a conviction was sufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty without showing motive or undertaking by argument to work one out of the evidence. While proof of motive is important in a case wholly dependent for its establishment upon circumstantial evidence, yet where the crime is brought directly home to the accused—that is, by direct evidence it is shown that he committed the crime—then the proof of motive is entirely unimportant. In this case, it is highly probable that the jury founded their verdict entirely on the direct testimony tending to show that the accused was one of the actual perpetrators of the crime and did not stop to look for a motive or pay any heed to the remarks of the district attorney relative to motive or the existence of hostilities between rival Chinese factions. But an examination of the record will disclose that there was in the testimony some reference to a tong war, and this testimony came from the defense itself. It was brought out in this way: A Chinese witness for the people, named Bing Lee, testified that he saw the defendant and his companions alight from the taxicab near old Chinatown, in Sebastopol, on the day of the homicide and after the killing had taken place. Several witnesses, among them a police officer of Sebastopol, who was acquainted with Bing Lee, were called by the defense to testify, and did testify, that Bing Lee had not been seen in or about Sebastopol for several days before or after the 11th day of March, 1917, and that he was not seen there on that day. Reference to page 517 of the transcript will show that counsel for the defense asked his witness Sing Wo if he did not hear that a tong war was on and, if so, when he first heard of it, to which the witness replied that he heard of such a "war" before the killing of Hom Hong. And on page 523 will be found a like question to the police officer, who testified that he had received information of tong hostilities before the date of the homicide. It is true that the defendant was not shown to have been connected with either one of the warring tongs; but, in argument, it is permissible for an attorney to deduce any legitimate theory of the case which the evidence may reasonably afford, and since the attorney for the defendant himself seemed to assume that a tong war was in progress, and in fact filed an affidavit made by the defendant and upon which he predicated a motion for a continuance, in which it was declared without qualification that a tong war was going on prior to, at the time of and after the homicide, we cannot say that the district attorney overstepped the record very far by referring to the existence of a tong war and the homicide as a probable culmination thereof. In any event, however, as above stated, the defendant could have suffered no prejudice from the district attorney's remarks.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LEE SING PARK. (Cr. 439.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1168(1) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR.

Conviction of murder will be affirmed in absence of argument by appellant, where court perceives nothing in any of rulings on testimony which, assuming same to have been erroneous, could have prejudiced unduly defendant's rights.

2. HOMICIDE ⟸250—MURDER — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Lee Sing Park was convicted of murder, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan and Carl Barnard, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted, in the superior court of Sonoma county, of the crime of murder of the first degree; the jury having, in the exercise of the discretion committed to them by section 190 of the Penal Code, adjudged that the accused be confined in the state prison for life. The defendant has appealed from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial, but no brief has ever been filed in support of the appeals, nor was he represented by counsel when the cause was called for hearing and argument at the regular June term of this court, upon the calendar of which the case was regularly placed for hearing and argument. The Attorney General therefore submitted the case upon the record.

The defendant was jointly charged by information with one William Yee and one Toy Yock of the crime of murdering one Hom Hong, on or about the 11th day of March, 1917, at a ranch near the city of Santa Rosa, in the said county of Sonoma. He was given a separate trial, with the result as above stated.

[1] William Yee, one of the defendant's codefendants, was, previously to the trial of the present case, separately tried and convicted of murder of the first degree, the jury fixing the punishment in his case at imprisonment for life, and upon appeal the judgment and the order were affirmed by this court on June 18, 1918. The general facts of this case are stated in the opinion filed in the said case of William Yee, 174 Pac. 343, and it is therefore unnecessary to repeat them herein. Nor, since no argument, either oral or printed, was made before this court pointing out the errors, if any there were, upon which the appellant intended to rely for a reversal, is it necessary or even practicable for the court to consider herein the numerous exceptions reserved by the defendant to rulings admitting and excluding certain testimony. It must suffice to say, generally, that we have examined the record with care and perceive nothing in any of the rulings upon the question of the propriety or impropriety of the testimony which, even assuming some to have been erroneous, could have unduly prejudiced the rights of the accused or which had the effect of depriving him of a fair and impartial trial. Indeed, we are justified in saying that the record is comparatively free from error, and that the accused was accorded a perfectly fair trial. As to the instructions, we are prepared to declare that a careful examination of the entire charge delivered by the court to the jury has convinced us that thus the law of the case was clearly and correctly stated.

[2] There is no claim that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. Nor could such a claim find support in the record. The evidence, generally speaking, was, as above stated, the same as that presented in the case of People v. William Yee, and, as will be observed by an examination of the opinion in that case, it was amply sufficient to justify the jury, if they believed it, in finding the accused guilty. Indeed, we may say as to both cases that, under the evidence as it is presented to us, and as we are required to consider it, the accused can count themselves as singularly fortunate in having been saved from the extreme penalty which the law provides may be inflicted in a case of murder of the first degree; for the act of killing Hom Hong, by whomsoever committed, involved a deliberate and cruel murder, in the commission of which there appeared no circumstances of mitigation which justified the infliction of any punishment less than that of death.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

BURNS v. BAUER. (Civ. 1769.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 15, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸80(11) — LACK OF CONSIDERATION—FRAUD—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action by assignee of corporation on note given in payment for its stock, evidence held to support finding there was no consideration for note, and that it was obtained from the maker by corporation through fraudulent representations.

2. GUARANTY ⟸46(1)—NOTE — DEMAND AND NOTICE—STATUTE.

Under Civ. Code, § 2807, transferee of note, after maker refuses to pay, and before bringing suit against him, has a right to call upon the transferor, a guarantor of the note, for payment, without demand or notice.

3. Bills and Notes ⟸525—Holder in Due Course—Sufficiency of Evidence.
In action by assignee of corporation on note given for its stock and procured from maker by fraud and misrepresentations, evidence held to justify finding that transferee was not an innocent purchaser, nor a bona fide holder.
4. Bills and Notes ⟸497(2)—Holder in Due Course—Burden of Proof.
In action by assignee of corporation on note given for its stock, and procured from maker by fraud and misrepresentations, burden was on assignee to prove he was an innocent holder.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Action by Mark L. Burns against G. F. Bauer. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. G. Eby, of Sacramento, for appellant. Abe Darlington and Wm. F. Bray, both of Placerville, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brought the action to recover on a promissory note executed and delivered by defendant at Diamond Springs, Cal., September 7, 1915, to Great Western Securities Corporation, due one year after date at 7 per cent. interest, assigned to plaintiff by the following indorsement:

"Pay to the order of Mark L. Burns, Great Western Securities Corporation, by S. H. Whisner, Pres. Payment Guaranteed. [Signed] S. H. Whisner."

In his amended answer, defendant admits the execution of the note, but denies that it was executed or given for a valuable or any consideration, and alleges that it is without consideration and void; denies that plaintiff became the owner or holder of said note before maturity, or that he is the owner or holder thereof for value or otherwise; alleges that said note was given in payment of certain stock of said Great Western Securities Corporation, which said stock was represented to defendant by said corporation "to be valuable and to be reasonably worth the price at which it was sold to defendant, but stock was then, and ever since has been, entirely worthless and was known at the time of said agreement to sell the same to defendant by said Great Western Securities Corporation, a corporation, to be worthless and of no value whatever, and there was no other consideration for said promissory note"; that at the time said note was assigned to him, plaintiff knew that it was without consideration, and knew that it was void, and that the stock of said corporation was worthless, and that he did then and there conspire with said corporation to defraud defendant by having said note indorsed by said Whisner to plaintiff "for the purpose of preventing defendant from making his defense of want of consideration when suit should be brought upon said note"; that "no stock was ever issued to defendant by said Great Western Securities Corporation, a corporation, until the time of the pretended assignment of said note to plaintiff."

As a further and separate answer and by way of affirmative defense, defendant alleges certain facts, most of which were by the court found substantially as alleged, and may be stated as given in the findings, as it will shorten somewhat this opinion. The cause was tried by the court without a jury. At the close of the trial and the coming in of the closing brief, the court made the following minute order:

"In our opinion the plaintiff was not an innocent purchaser for value of the note sued on. The inadequacy of the consideration he paid for the note put him upon inquiry as to the circumstances under which the note was given and the consideration the payee had given Bauer. This was easy for him to have done. He could and ought to have communicated with Bauer. He did not even make inquiry of Whisner. His friend Eby was the secretary of the payee. He made no inquiry of him. His only concern was to ascertain if Bauer was good. There was no need of rescission because the stock was valueless. The motion to strike out is denied. Counsel for defendant may take ten days to prepare and serve findings herein. N. D. Arnot, Judge."

In due course the court made the following findings of fact: That said promissory note was given in part payment for 750 shares of the capital stock of said Great Western Securities Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the Securities Corporation), which said stock was and is of no value whatever; that on July 8, 1916, said Securities Corporation, by its president, S. H. Whisner, assigned said note to plaintiff for the consideration paid of $350, and at the making of said assignment the said Whisner personally guaranteed payment thereof, no part of which or interest thereon has been paid; that the stock of said corporation, in part payment for which said note was given was represented to defendant, at the time he contracted to purchase the same, to be valuable and reasonably worth the price at which it was sold to defendant, to wit, the sum of $1 per share, but in fact said stock was then worthless and of no value, which was well known to said corporation; "and plaintiff, at the time said note was assigned to him, knew that the Great Western Securities Corporation was involved in litigation, but made no effort to ascertain whether or not said note was given for a valuable consideration." The transaction, as found by the court, is set forth as follows in its findings:

"That on the 17th day of February, 1914, one J. S. Danner, the agent of said Great Western Securities Corporation, called upon defendant at his home in the county of El Dorado, state of California, and asked him to become a subscriber for shares of stock in Great Western Securities Corporation, a corporation. Said J. S. Danner represented to defendant that said corporation had been organized for the purpose of erecting a 20-story building in the city of Sacramento, state of California, and he further stated to defendant that said corporation had obtained an option on a lot on J street between Fifth street and Sixth street in said city, and stated that work on said building would commence not later than October 31, 1914. That said corporation already had a building permit for said building and had a large portion thereof leased to prospective tenants, and further stated to the defendant that even if 30 per cent. of said building were idle and untenanted, the net income therefrom would be 15 per cent. * * * That the representations of said J. S. Danner, as agent of said corporation, as aforesaid, were false at the time said representations were made by said J. S. Danner, and said corporation knew that said representations were false at the time said Danner made the same. That it was reliance upon the representations of said J. S. Danner, made as aforesaid, that caused defendant to enter into the agreement to purchase 750 shares of the capital stock of said plaintiff corporation, and if it had not been for said representations aforesaid, defendant would not have entered into said agreement to purchase said stock. * * * That by reason of the representations of said corporation as above set forth, defendant entered into a contract with it for the purchase of 750 shares of its capital stock, and paid on account thereof a total of more than $622, and gave the promissory note mentioned in plaintiff's complaint for the balance of the agreed purchase price and interest remaining due at the date of said note. That if it had not been for the false and fraudulent representations of said corporation, as herein set forth, defendant would not have contracted for any of said stock. That the promissory note sued upon herein was assigned to the plaintiff by said Great Western Securities Corporation, by S. H. Whisner, its president, on the 8th day of July, 1916. That the consideration paid therefor was the sum of $350 that the plaintiff is, and was on said 8th day of July, 1916, a lawyer engaged in a general law practice. That the stock for which said note was given in part payment was not issued until said 8th day of July, 1916, but was issued on said day. That Mr. F. G. Eby, who is the plaintiff's attorney in this action, was the secretary of said Great Western Securities Corporation at the time said stock was issued and at the time this action was commenced. That plaintiff, at the time he purchased said note, knew that said Great Western Securities Corporation and other corporations organized and controlled by said S. H. Whisner were involved in much litigation. That plaintiff made no inquiry or effort to learn whether or not said note was valid and given for a valuable consideration, but did inquire into the financial condition of the defendant and learned that he was able to pay the note and then purchased the same, intending to bring suit upon it if it should not be promptly paid."

As conclusions of law the court found that said promissory note was procured by fraud and is void for want of consideration; that plaintiff is not an innocent purchaser nor a bona fide holder of said note; that plaintiff is entitled to take nothing by this action; that said note be canceled by the clerk of this court; and that defendant recover his costs of suit herein. Judgment was accordingly entered, from which plaintiff appeals.

[1] The evidence abundantly supports the findings that there was no consideration for the note sued upon, and that it was obtained by the Securities Corporation through false and fraudulent representations. Not only is defendant's narrative of the false statements made to him by the Securities Corporation's agents uncontradicted, but the record contains specimens of the literature, highly misleading, gotten out by the Securities Corporation and exhibited to its victims, including defendant, as inducement to purchase its shares. As part of this promotion propaganda is found in the record the photograph of an imposing structure of architectural beauty looming skyward to the ambitious height of 20 stories, twice the height of any of the finer business buildings in the city of Sacramento. These flaming photographs were accompanied by commendatory letters written by officials of prominent banks in said city which, while not indorsing the corporation, or its financial standing, spoke in encouraging terms of the project to erect such a building. In short, the evidence shows that a gross fraud was perpetrated by that corporation on defendant in inducing him to purchase its stock. It was to throttle in their infancy just such schemes as this that our "Blue Sky Law" (Investment Companies Act, Stats. 1913, p. 715) was enacted, and it was the imposition being practiced on a confiding public by promoters of such schemes which gave birth to the law.

The only question in the case worthy of further consideration is connected with the findings in respect of plaintiff's relation to the promissory note the subject of the action.

[2-4] The court found that the note sued on was assigned to plaintiff by the Securities Corporation on July 8, 1916, by S. H. Whisner, its president, and plaintiff paid therefor $350; that plaintiff at that time was a lawyer engaged in a general law practice; that the stock for which said note was given in part payment was issued on the same day; that plaintiff's attorney in this action was the secretary of said Securities Corporation at the time said stock was issued and at the time this action was commenced; that at the time he purchased said note, plaintiff knew the said Securities Corporation or other corporations organized and controlled by said Whisner were involved in litigation; "that plaintiff made no inquiry or effort to learn whether or not said note was valid and given for a valuable consideration, but did inquire into the financial condition of the defendant, and learned that he was able to pay the note and then purchased the same intending to bring suit upon it if it should not be promptly paid." The face value of the note when transferred was $423.33. It was therefore discounted to the extent of $73, and no explanation is given why the Securities Company was willing to sell the note, falling due in so short a time, for so great a discount, the maker of which concededly was able to pay it; nor is there any explanation of the fact that the president of the payee corporation was required by the plaintiff to personally guarantee the payment; nor why plaintiff did not, after the defendant had refused to pay the note, call upon the guarantor for payment before bringing suit against the maker, which, under the circumstances shown, would have been a natural thing to do and upon whom he had the right to call immediately without demand or notice. Civ. Code, § 2807. Plaintiff testified that he made no inquiry from the president of the company as to his authority to assign the note, nor from the secretary of the corporation, his attorney herein, as to the consideration given for the note, nor as to any of the circumstances under which it was given, nor as to any fact from any person except to ascertain that defendant was able to pay it. Plaintiff was an attorney at law engaged in the practice of his profession, and did not claim to be a purchaser of commercial paper in the regular course of his business. Plaintiff testified that he did not purchase the note with the intention of bringing suit should defendant fail to pay, and that if he had supposed it would have been necessary for him to do so, he would have had nothing to do with it. The finding of the court is to the contrary, and if it was not justified in doing so, there remain findings sufficiently supported by the evidence to justify the judgment.

The rule in this class of cases is stated in Jordan et al. v. Grover et al., 99 Cal. 194, 33 Pac. 908. In that case plaintiffs purchased the promissory note in question "before maturity for one-half of its face value, with knowledge upon inquiry previously made of the maker's solvency, but without inquiry as to the consideration thereof; nor was there any reason or explanation given for the purchase of the note at a price so grossly inadequate to its actual value. These circumstances," said the court, "were of themselves sufficient to arouse the suspicions of an ordinarily prudent man and put him on inquiry as to the consideration, therefore material for the consideration of the jury in determining whether the purchase was made by plaintiffs in good faith." The rule there stated "as well settled" was:

"Where fraud or illegality in the inception of the note is shown by the maker, the burden of proof is then cast upon the indorsee to show that he is an innocent holder" (citing cases).

And the court said:

"The plaintiffs must, therefore, in order to sustain the burden thus cast upon them, show that they purchased the note before maturity in good faith, for value in the usual course of business, and 'under circumstances which create no presumptions that they knew the facts which impeach its validity.' 1 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (4th Ed.) § 815."

It is a fair inference from the evidence that the president and secretary of the corporation knew that its stock, which was the consideration given for the note sued upon, was sold under false representations, and that there was in fact nothing of value given as a consideration for the note. We think, too, that the facts and circumstances elicited at the trial were such as justified the court in its conclusion "that plaintiff is not an innocent purchaser nor a bona fide holder of said note." The circumstances under which the note was sold to plaintiff, the heavy discount offered so near to the due date of the note, the maker of which was known by both the corporation and plaintiff to be able to pay, would have suggested to an ordinarily prudent man that there might be some infirmity in the paper, and that it might not be safe to rest wholly on an inquiry as to the ability of the maker of the note to pay it when due. We do not think that plaintiff sustained the burden which was cast upon him by proof that the note was tainted with fraud and was without consideration. Plaintiff was put upon inquiry which, had it been reasonably pursued, would have placed him in possession of the facts. He testified:

"I think Mr. Whisner [his guarantor] is able to reimburse me, and will do so, I think, if I am unsuccessful in this case."

It is not improbable that his reliance upon Mr. Whisner's ability to respond to his guarantee led plaintiff to be indifferent as to the circumstances surrounding the execution of the note. His investment was safe in any event.

We think the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

HERMAN v. ROHAN et al. (Civ. 2357.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜76(1)—RIGHT OF ASSIGNMENT — CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Agreement whereby owners of market gave renter of stall the right to sell his interest in the stall upon condition that purchaser pay monthly rental did not condition renter's right to sell upon the suitability of purchaser, except as to payment of rent if that be classed as suitability.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊜76(2)—BREACH OF CONTRACT TO PERMIT ASSIGNMENT—DEFENSES.

Where owners of market agreed that occupant of a stall, who had purchased the right to the use thereof, might sell such right, owner's contention that no action of theirs could prevent occupant from selling such right, is no defense in action by latter against former for breach of such agreement, where former refused to permit latter's purchaser to occupy the stall.

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⊜44(4)—AGREEMENT NOT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN YEAR—RIGHT TO SELL RIGHT TO USE MARKET STALL.

An agreement whereby owners of market gave renter of stall the right to sell his interest in the stall is not invalid under Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 1, invalidating all agreements not to be performed within a year.

4. LICENSES ⊜53—USE OF MARKET STALL—SALE OF PRIVILEGE.

Owners of market who had sold the right to use a stall, even considering the matter a personal privilege or license, could make valid agreement giving purchaser right to sell such privilege.

5. LICENSES ⊜44(2) — PRIVILEGE DISTINGUISHED FROM LEASE.

Where a market owner sold the right to use a stall, no term being agreed upon, a monthly rental being paid and occupant having right to sell, his interest was more than a privilege, it being presumed, under Civ. Code, § 1943, that hiring was for one year, and possession beyond year, and landlord's acceptance of rent raising presumption, under section 1945, of a renewal upon same terms from month to month.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃75(3) — TENANT'S RIGHT TO ASSIGN LEASE—LESSEE OF MARKET STALL.

Aside from any agreement with lessor, the renter of a market stall whose lease expired, but who, by remaining in possession and paying monthly rental, under Civ. Code, § 1945, renewed lease upon same terms from month to month, had right to sell and assign his lease.

7. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃76(1)—RENTER OF MARKET STALL—RIGHT TO ASSIGN LEASE —IMPLIED CONDITION OF SUITABILITY.

Agreement whereby market owner gives stall renter the right to sell his rights in the stall to any person who will pay monthly rental wipes out any implied condition as to suitability of person to whom stall lessee may assign his lease, and renter may sell to whomsoever he chooses, provided purchaser pays rent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by Harry Herman against John C. Rohan and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. R. Geary, of Oakland, for appellants.
M. J. Rutherford, of Oakland, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. Stripped of immaterialities, the facts of the case are as follows: The plaintiff Herman took a stall in an Oakland market from the defendants. He purchased the right to occupy the stall in another market than the one in question here from the defendants, who were the owners of that market, and from another person who occupied the stall so purchased, and paid the defendants and his predecessor a substantial sum of money therefor. Presently the defendants built a new market, and Herman was transferred to a stall therein, and from time to time purchased additional frontage, thus enlarging his stall, paying in each instance an additional sum to the defendants as a sort of bonus therefor, and paying in addition $1.75 per front foot per month for each foot of space embraced within the stall. At one of the times when the plaintiff purchased extra frontage from the defendants, paying $200 therefor, they agreed, in consideration of this purchase, that the plaintiff might sell all his right, title, and interest in the stall for any price he might obtain to any purchaser he might secure, upon the condition only that the purchaser should pay the $1.75 per front foot monthly rental charged for the use of the property. Plaintiff thereafter secured a purchaser who was ready, willing, and able to buy his right to the stall for the sum of $500, which he agreed to pay therefor, this sum being payment for whatever right and interest the plaintiff had in the market and for the fixtures in his stall. The defendants refused to permit this sale to be made, and refused to permit a transfer of the possession of the stall to the purchaser. Plaintiff thereupon began this action for breach of the defendants' contract with him, and obtained a judgment in the court below for $475 as damages therefor.

[1] On this appeal the defendants contend: First, that they did nothing more than agree that plaintiff could sell to a suitable person only. The answer to this is that the finding of the court, based upon sufficient evidence, is exactly as above set forth, and that there was no condition whatever in their agreement as to the suitability of the person to whom the plaintiff might sell, except that such person should pay the monthly rental, if that be classed as suitability.

[2] The second contention of appellants is that:

"No action of defendants could prevent plaintiff from selling that which he owned and had acquired by a proper conveyance."

But in this case the defendants could and did prevent Herman from selling by refusing to permit the person to whom he sold to take possession of the subject-matter of the sale, namely, the right to occupy the stall and the fixtures therein contained.

[3] Defendants' third contention is that:

"Even if the defendants had agreed to permit Herman to sell, it was an oral agreement, and had to be performed within one year."

But the answer to this is that the agreement was not one which, by its terms, was not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 1.

[4] The defendants' fourth contention is that:

"Plaintiff claims no interest in the realty, and, if so, has failed to prove his title thereto by proper deed duly acknowledged."

This claim must be considered in connection with another which is argued more definitely, to the effect that the plaintiff's rights were in the nature of a personal privilege to occupy the market, and were therefore not assignable. In answer to this it may be said that, even considering the matter a personal privilege or license, there is nothing whatever in the law to prevent the defendants from making an agreement, if they saw fit, to the effect that this personal privilege might be assigned. The property was theirs; they were letting whatever privilege Herman had and whatever rights he possessed in the stall to him; and they could legally—and the court found that they did—agree that he might sell those rights as above set forth.

[5-7] The interest which Herman had in the stall, however, was something more than a privilege. He paid a monthly rental therefor; no term of his hiring was fixed, and no usage on the subject of the length of the term is shown. It is therefore presumed that his hiring was for one year from its commencement (Civ. Code, § 1943), and when he remained in possession beyond the year and his landlords accepted rent from him the parties were presumed to have renewed the hiring upon the same terms from month to month. Civ. Code, § 1945. Aside, therefore, from the agreement, Herman had the right to sell and assign his lease; and if, because of the nature of the property as a market, there was an implied condition that in case of sale the purchaser should be a suitable person, that condition was wiped out by the point-blank agreement found by the court, to the effect that he might sell to whomsoever he chose so long as the purchaser would pay the rent.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROSEDALE CEMETERY ASS'N v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2541.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐405(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding to obtain compensation for personal injuries under Workmen's Compensation Act, evidence held to support a finding that one skilled in blasting was an employé of a cemetery association, and not an independent contractor.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐375(1)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — "CEMETERY WORK."

"Cemetery work" consists in platting, grading, planting, beautifying, and maintaining a tract of land in such manner as to render it a proper place for sepulture of the dead, and to preserve it as such, and includes the blasting of concrete foundations formerly supporting water tanks used in connection with irrigation, under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐403 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—WILLFUL MISCONDUCT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 12, the burden is on an employer to show that a servant claiming compensation was guilty of willful misconduct.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by one Armstrong to obtain compensation for personal injury, opposed by the Rosedale Cemetery Association, a corporation, the employer. There was an award by the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California, and the employer applies for a writ of review. Award affirmed.

Williams & Williams and Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. It is sought by the petitioner to annul an award of the respondent, whereby one Armstrong was allowed compensation for injuries suffered by him while in the rendition of certain services to the petitioner. Armstrong was skilled in the work of blasting and in the handling of explosives used in the conduct of blasting operations, and was engaged by the petitioner to remove from its cemetery property, in that manner, certain concrete foundations which had formerly supported some discarded water tanks once used in connection with irrigation. It was in the prosecution of this work that Armstrong was injured.

[1] The respondent found from the facts before it that Armstrong was an employé of the petitioner, and this finding is assailed as being without support in the evidence; the contention of the petitioner being that the injured man was an independent contractor in the performance of the service for which he had been engaged. There was no written agreement evidencing the employment of Armstrong. He testified that the conversation by which he was engaged took place between him and the superintendent and the secretary of the petitioner. These officers desired Armstrong to state to them the probable cost and duration of the work in contemplation. He answered that it could be done in a week and that the expense would depend upon the cost of powder. This figure he was asked to procure, and he was also to order the requisite amount of the explosive for the work. Under an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles it was necessary that a permit be secured from the city authorities allowing the work of blasting to be done. Armstrong was told by the superintendent to procure this permit, and he did so. Armstrong testified, as to his status in doing the work, as follows:

"And then as to my part of the work, it was talked of my taking a contract, and I said I couldn't take a contract, because I didn't know what I was up against, but that I would go out there and work for $5 a day to take it out, and that they were to furnish me help to dig out what digging was to be done, and give all the help necessary, so as to be able to take it out within a week's time."

Under this phraseology, it is a matter of some difficulty to determine the nature of Armstrong's employment. There are some features of the statement indicating that he was to be only an employé; others tending to show that he was engaged as an original contractor. It does appear, however, that he was to be paid by the day, and that there were no restrictions placed upon the power of the employer to direct and control his operations at will. The undisputed evidence is that the petitioner actually exercised no direction or control over the work during its progress. In support of its contention that Armstrong was an independent contractor, the petitioner cites many authorities to the general effect that, to quote from Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 99, 78 Pac. 337, 339:

"The chief consideration which determines one to be an independent contractor is the fact that the employer has no right of control as to the mode of doing the work contracted for."

⇐For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Whether, however, the employer has or has not such a right of control is necessarily to be determined from the contract of employment. The fact that there was no right of control cannot be predicated upon an absence of the exercise of it, in practice, if the contract in fact allows the right. The employer would be very likely to refrain from exercising a direction or control over an employé as to whom he had the undoubted right of control, merely because the employé had a greater knowledge concerning the nature of the work to be done than did the employer himself. Nothing more seems to have been the case here. There is nothing in the opinion in Brown v. Industrial Acc. Comm'n, 174 Cal. 457, 460, 163 Pac. 664, which conflicts with the views above expressed, as an examination of Anderson v. Foley Bros., 110 Minn. 151, 124 N. W. 987, cited in the opinion, will show. We are satisfied that the finding that Armstrong was an employé of the petitioner is supported by the evidence.

[2] The next contention of the petitioner is that the employment of Armstrong was both casual and not in the ordinary course of the business of the employer. It is admitted by the respondent that the employment was casual, but can it be said that it was not in the usual course of the petitioner's business? According to the superintendent of the petitioner, the business in which it engaged was cemetery work. That expression may be properly defined, we believe, in the statement that it consists in platting, grading, planting, beautifying, and maintaining a tract of land in such manner as to render it an appropriate place for the sepulture of the dead, and to preserve it as such. It can make no difference whether "cemetery work" is done by means of blasting or through the use of the wheelbarrow, the spade, or the spirit level. All these and other instrumentalities may be required to reduce a given tract, necessarily variable to some extent in character, to a proper condition for cemetery uses and to so maintain it. The employment of Armstrong was in the ordinary course of the business of the petitioner.

[3] The final contention of the petitioner is that Armstrong was guilty of willful misconduct in and about his work. This misconduct is alleged to have consisted of a violation of the terms of the permit granted by the city of Los Angeles. That permit was to the effect that not more than one stick of dynamite was to be used in each blasting charge. Armstrong used one and one-half or two sticks to the charge; but there is no evidence that his departure from the permit regulations in this regard either proximately or remotely caused his injury. It was necessary that such a showing be made. Workmen's Compensation Act, Act 2144a, Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, § 12a (3). Not only so, but the showing must have been made by the petitioner, for willful misconduct is an affirmative defense in these cases. United States Fid. & G. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm'n, 174 Cal. 616, 163 Pac. 1013. In addition to the utter failure of the petitioner to introduce evidence to support the burden of proof thus cast upon it on the hearing before the Industrial Accident Commission, there was some evidence on the part of the applicant tending to show that his injury was not the result of the use of the excessive charges of dynamite.

The award is affirmed.

BOOT v. BOYD. (Civ. 1566.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 15, 1918. On Petition for Rehearing, July 15, 1918.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⟸135 — CHANGE OF POSSESSION—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Civ. Code, § 3440, requiring a change of possession on the transfer of personal property, a sale, to be good against the vendor's creditors, must be accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession, such as to give notice to the world of the claims of the new owner.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⟸150 — CHANGE OF POSSESSION—SUFFICIENCY.

Where real property is sold and a bill of sale for personal property located thereon is at the same time given the vendee, the fact that the vendee took possession of the real property is not sufficient evidence of a change of possession of the personal property.

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⟸147(1) — CHANGE OF POSSESSION—SUFFICIENCY.

What constitutes an immediate delivery and an actual and continued change of possession is to be determined on the evidence in each particular case.

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⟸147(3) — CHANGE OF POSSESSION — SUFFICIENCY — "SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES."

That a vendee of personal property went upon the land where it was located and checked the property off, thus exercising an act of ownership over it, where the purported vendor continued in actual possession, was only one circumstance to be considered in determining whether there was a delivery and change of possession; the continued possession of vendor constituting a suspicious circumstance.

On Petition for Rehearing.

5. EXEMPTIONS ⟸93—WAIVER—DELAY.

Where peronal property was levied on under an execution, a delay by the alleged owner to make claim of exemptions after he had had almost a month's notice of the seizure of the property by the sheriff constituted a waiver of his claim for exemptions.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸173(2) — RESERVATION OF GROUNDS—EXEMPTION FROM EXECUTION.

The appellate court will not consider the question of exemption of property from execution when raised for the first time on appeal.

Action by Leonard Boot against Jud. W. Boyd. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George R. Freeman and Frank Freeman, both of Willow, for appellant. P. H. Coffman, of Red Bluff, for respondent.

HART, J. Action in claim and delivery, the defendant being the sheriff of Tehama county. On the 9th day of January, 1915, R. A. Boot and Nora Boot, his wife, in consideration of $15,642.50, by deed conveyed to plaintiff 170 acres of land in Tehama county, spoken of as the R. A. Boot ranch. On the same day, said R. A. and Nora Boot executed to plaintiff a bill of sale conveying certain personal property, consisting of mules, horses, wagons, farming implements, etc., it being stated therein that the consideration named in the above-mentioned deed was also paid for the personal property transferred by the bill of sale. On the 13th day of January, 1915, an action was commenced in the superior court of Tehama county by Jesse A. Brown, as plaintiff, against Robert Boot and James A. Boot, as defendants, to recover $2,691.83, the amount alleged to be due on certain promissory notes given by the defendants in said action in connection with a contract between the parties for the sale by said Brown to defendants of land adjoining the Boot ranch. A writ of attachment was issued and delivered to the sheriff, who made return that, on January 18, 1915, he levied upon certain personal property and also upon the Boot ranch. The court afterward ordered the attachment released as to the personal property, and it was returned to the defendants in said action. On July 7, 1915, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, Brown, for $2,691.83; an execution was issued, under which the sheriff levied upon the personal property in question and sold the same for the net sum of $896.95, which money was delivered to the plaintiff in said action. The present action was brought to secure judgment for the recovery of the possession of said personal property, or for $1,800, the value thereof, and for $1,000 damages for the alleged wrongful taking of the same. Judgment was in favor of defendant, from which plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant states that:

"But one thing is involved in the action, namely, the validity of the sale, on January 9, 1915, of the property involved, to plaintiff by said Robert A. Boot and his wife. The trial court decided that the sale was invalid because there was no immediate delivery followed by actual and continued change of possession of the property such as is required by section 3440 of the Civil Code, * * * the alleged sale being void as against the execution creditor."

It appears from the testimony that plaintiff, Leonard Boot, resided in Glenn county. He stated that he received the bill of sale above referred to on the 9th day of January, 1915; that, with R. A. Boot and James Boot, he went to the R. A. Boot ranch, where the personal property was, checked off each item on the bill of sale, looked at every article on the ranch, and took possession of it. The property was assessed to him in the year 1915, and he paid the taxes on it. He stated that he authorized all the work that was done on the personal property, and paid those who had anything to do with it. On cross-examination he stated that the personal property in question had been on the R. A. Boot ranch, and had belonged to R. A. Boot for about two years; that when he took possession of it he did not take any of it away from the ranch, but put Robert (R. A.) Boot in possession of the property as manager and left it in his control. He said that he knew about the transaction in which Robert and James Boot entered into an agreement, about July, 1913, for the purchase from Jesse A. Brown of what was known as the Brown or Westlake ranch, and knew that said Robert and James were indebted to Brown on account of said purchase. Plaintiff remained overnight at the Boot ranch, on January 9th, and left there the next afternoon. In a few days he returned, looked over the place, and directed certain work to be done. He testified that thereafter he visited the ranch about once a week; that R. A. Boot conducted the ranch for him, and that he paid said R. A. Boot wages for looking after the property. A few hogs and some fruit raised on the ranch were sold by plaintiff after he received the bill of sale.

Jud. W. Boyd, the defendant, testified that, on the 11th of September, 1915, he levied upon and took into his possession the personal property in question; that at that time he found the property in the possession of Robert Boot on the Robert A. Boot ranch, and took the property from him; that plaintiff was not there at the time.

Jesse A. Brown testified that, in 1914, 1915, and down to September 11, 1915, the personal property was in the possession of Robert Boot; that, when farming Brown's ranch Robert and James Boot had the property there, and, about the 1st of January, 1915, they moved it to the Boot ranch. The witness stated that he was "about the Boot ranch a good deal" since the 1st of January, 1915, and that Robert Boot had charge of the property; that he never saw any change of possession of it, and never saw Leonard Boot exercise any act of ownership or control over it. On cross-examination the witness said that he had been on the Boot ranch but once since said 1st of January and that at that time he saw Robert Boot and no one else there; that he had seen him going back and forth, and had seen him sitting by the gate one day; that he knew that Leonard Boot claimed the property.

Dan Hamilton testified that, in the summer of 1915, he was employed by Robert Boot to work on the Boot ranch, and that he worked there for about three months; that he was there on the 11th of September when the sheriff took the property under the execution; that while witness was on the ranch Robert Boot had charge and control of the personal property; that Leonard Boot was there three or four times, but did nothing with the property that witness knew of; that plaintiff worked one day in the dry yard, and he worked, picking fruit for the Chinamen a day or two.

Elmer Oakes, who lived across the road from the Boot ranch, testified that, since the 1st of January, 1915, the property taken by the sheriff had been in the possession of Robert and James Boot, and that he saw no change in the possession of it during that time. Ray Barker testified to the same facts.

In rebuttal, R. A. Boot testified that during the summer of 1915 he was conducting the ranch for Leonard Boot, who paid all the bills incurred.

[1] The single point submitted here for decision involves an attack upon the finding that there was not an immediate and continuous change of possession of the chattels from the owner to the purported vendee, within the meaning and intent of the law. The case as made by the evidence was one peculiarly for the decision of the court, before which it was tried without a jury. In other words, we do not see our way clear to declare, as a matter of law, that there was at any time a change of possession of the chattels involved from R. A. Boot and wife to Leonard Boot. We, therefore, adopt and approve the following portion of the learned trial judge's opinion rendered and filed in deciding the case, and which is incorporated in the brief of respondent:

"The sheriff as a defense sets up his official capacity, and that as such sheriff he took the property under attachment (execution) in a suit wherein one Jesse A. Brown was plaintiff and Robert Boot and James A. Boot were defendants, and at the time he took the same said property belonged to Robert Boot.

"The plaintiff claims that before levy thereon by the sheriff he had bought, for a valuable consideration all the said property from said Robert Boot, and that it was his property, and not liable to process in the suit of Brown against Boot.

"I have considered the evidence carefully and the authorities cited by the respective parties, and am satisfied that the plaintiff has not shown title good against the process held by the sheriff in said action.

"Section 3440 of the Civil Code provides: 'Every transfer of personal property, other than a thing in action, or a ship or cargo at sea or in a foreign port, and every lien thereon, other than a mortgage, when allowed by law, and a contract of bottomry or respondentia, is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession.'

"The Supreme Court, in considering this section, has held uniformly that a sale of personal property, to be good against the creditors of the vendor, must be accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession, and that this means not a mere formal change, but that the possession of the vendee must be open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks and indications of ownership by the vendee, and it must be such as to give notice to the world of the claims of the new owner, and must be continuous.

"From the evidence introduced in this case, about which there is no conflict, it is clear that if any person who had been familiar with the property and its ownership a week before the alleged sale to the plaintiff, had visited the premises a week thereafter, he would have seen or noticed nothing in the management of the property, its possession and location, that would have given him any notice that there had been a change of ownership from Mr. Robert Boot to the plaintiff in this action.

"The case seems clear to the court, and judgment and findings are ordered for the defendant."

[2] The position of the appellant is that the fact that the land on which the personal property involved herein was kept was conveyed, and possession thereof taken by him while the personal property was still on the said land and at the time the bill of sale for the former property was delivered to him amounted to the taking by him, and therefore a change of the possession of the personal property. We do not think this was sufficient to evidence that change of possession of personal property which the law requires. Nor do we find that it is so held in any of the many cases cited by the appellant in support of his position.

In Banning v. Marleau, 101 Cal. 238, 35 Pac. 772, the gist of the decision as to the question whether there was a change of possession of the chattels therein involved is, generally stating it, that the findings were not specific enough to show upon what theory the case was decided—"that is, whether it was upon the theory that plaintiff was not the owner of the property in any sense, or upon the theory that a sale of said property by Hannon to plaintiff was void as against creditors, for want of delivery and an immediate and continuous change of possession under section 3440 of the Civil Code."

In Porter v. Bucher, 98 Cal. 454, 33 Pac. 335, the plaintiff, who was the wife of one Howard B. Porter, with whom she lived on a farm upon which her husband had duly filed a declaration of homestead, was the owner as her separate property of a hundred or more head of cattle, which were kept on said homestead. The plaintiff bought from her husband a large quantity of hay grown on the homestead for the purpose of feeding it to her cattle. After the hay was cut and stacked in corrals on the premises, the plaintiff and her husband together went to the stacks, "estimated the quantity of hay, agreed upon the price, and the husband, by words, delivered the hay to the appellant (his wife), who thereupon closed and fastened the gates of the corrals, made a payment of $10 and a few days later made another payment of $30, and, in accordance with the agreement of sale, assumed the payment of certain specified debts of the husband, amounting, with the cash payments, to about $870, and which debts she afterwards paid." The husband later became an insolvent debtor, having been duly so adjudicated, and thereupon the assignee of the estate of the husband made a demand for and finally seized the hay as being a part of the husband's assets. At the trial of the action by the wife in claim and delivery for the return of the hay to her possession, the trial court instructed the jury that there was no evidence justifying a finding that there was immediate delivery of the possession of the property followed by an actual and continued change of possession. The Supreme Court, reversing the judgment entered upon the verdict against the plaintiff, merely held that the evidence was such that the question whether there was the delivery and change of possession required by the law to make the sale valid as against creditors should have been submitted to the jury.

The many other cases cited by appellant are, as we understand them, no more in point in this case than those to which we have above given special attention.

[3] As above stated, we think it is absolutely correct to say here, as is said in Porter v. Bucher, supra:

"That what constitutes an immediate delivery and an actual and continued change of possession is a fact to be determined upon the evidence in each particular case."

[4] Much stress is, however, laid upon the testimony of the plaintiff that, upon buying the farm and the personal property, he went to the land and checked off the personal property, thus exercising an act of ownership over it. But that was only a circumstance to be considered by the court in determining whether there was a delivery and change of possession. The other fact remains that in point of fact the purported vendor of the property continued in the actual possession of the same. In Hickey v. Coschina, 133 Cal. 81, 65 Pac. 313, the plaintiff bought a certain stock of cigars, goods, and fixtures from his son-in-law, one Offield. Some of the goods were shortly after the sale transferred to the rooms of the plaintiff, while a part of them remained for some time thereafter in the rooms of Offield, and finally all removed to a store. Offield remained with the plaintiff as an employé in and about the cigar store. The goods and fixtures were subsequently attached by the defendant as a constable, in an action to recover a debt due from Offield. The plaintiff prevailed in the court below, and the judgment was affirmed on appeal. The court, among other things, said:

"It is urged that plaintiff, after the sale, employed Offield, his son-in-law, in and about the cigar store. While this was a suspicious circumstance, and one that should have been carefully weighed by the jury, and the court below, yet it was by no means conclusive. It was a circumstance that might be, and was, explained."

So in the case at bar. The continued possession of the personal property by R. A. Boot, although the land upon which it was then situated was at the same time transferred to the purported vendee of the chattels, constituted what the court below well might and no doubt did consider a "suspicious circumstance," and sufficiently suspicious to lead it to conclude, in considering it in connection with other evidence in the case, that there was not that actual delivery and change of possession of the property requisite to make the sale valid as against creditors.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. For the first time the point is made in the petition for a rehearing of this case that the personal property in dispute herein, and which was seized and sold by the sheriff on an execution in satisfaction of the judgment referred to in the original opinion filed herein, is exempt from execution by virtue of the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code. It is conceded that no claim of exemption was at any time asserted by any one as to the property, but it is vigorously contended that, under the terms of the section named, a claim of exemption is not required to place exempt personal property within the protection of the law against seizure under legal process for the satisfaction of a judgment against the owner, and in support of this contention the recent case of Williamson v. Monroe, 174 Cal. 462, 163 Pac. 662, is cited. In that case, a part of the property levied upon by the sheriff and sold under an execution consisted of the farming utensils, implements of husbandry, and other personal property essential to the prosecution of farming. The property had been sold to the plaintiff, Williamson, by the owner, one Fonnesbeck, and at the time of said sale it was under attachment issued at the behest of a creditor of the vendor. A part of the consideration of the sale was that Williamson would cause the attachment to be released, and this he did. At no time after the levying upon the property or before the sale thereof under the execution, the purpose of which was to satisfy a judgment secured by one Merkeley against the said Fonnesbeck and one Holmes, did Williamson make a specific claim that any of the property was exempt from execution under section 3440, supra. It was argued in that case that none of the property was exempt from execution "unless a claim to that effect was made, and that consequently the proviso [referring to the exemption clause of section 3440 of the Civil Code] does not apply in this case." But the Supreme Court held adversely to that contention, saying:

"The exemption is not declared to be conditional upon the assertion of a claim of exemption by the debtor. Its status as exempt property comes from its character and use, and not from any claim for exemption."

The court, in that case, though, further said:

"It is true that the right of exemption may be waived, and that, when the officer actually makes a levy upon such property, if the debtor does not claim his right within a reasonable time thereafter, the delay may be sufficient evidence of such waiver. Gavitt v. Doub, 23 Cal. 78, 80. But here, when the sale was made on November 14, 1910, the vendee assumed the burden of the attachment lien then existing, and immediately discharged it. There was no occasion at that time to claim the exemption, and no person to whom such claim could be made. No other execution or attachment was outstanding. The sale then became complete, there was no waiver of the exemption, the title vested in Williamson, and the exempt property was not afterward subject to execution against Fonnesbeck."

[5] In the present case the contention that the property in question is exempt under the terms of the statute necessarily proceeds upon the assumption that said property, when seized by the sheriff, belonged to Robert A. Boot—that is to say, the assumption to support the theory of exemption is that the trial court's judgment that the purported sale to the plaintiff was, as against creditors, fraudulent and void, is sound, for if the sale were a valid one as against creditors, there would be no occasion for the assertion of a claim of exemption by the plaintiff, who was not affected by the judgment to satisfy which the execution was issued and the property thereupon sold. That Robert A. Boot made no claim of exemption at any time is, as above stated, conceded, and we think that he had a reasonable time within which to do so, and that his failure to make the claim within such time amounted to a waiver of the claim. The judgment upon which the execution was issued was given and entered on the 7th day of July, 1915. The execution was taken out on the 28th day of July, 1915, and on that day delivered to the sheriff. On the 11th day of September, 1915, the sheriff levied upon and took into his possession from the possession of Robert A. Boot the property in dispute, and on the 2d day of October, 1915, said sheriff sold the said property as commanded by the said execution. Thus, it will be observed, Robert A. Boot had almost a month's notice of the seizure of the property by the sheriff under the execution, and that much time within which to have asserted the claim that the property was exempt from execution. As before stated, we think that under these circumstances he should be held to have failed to set up his claim of exemption within a reasonable time, and, therefore, waived his right to do so.

But, as stated at the beginning of this opinion, the proposition that the personal property involved herein is exempt from execution has been raised for the first time in the petition for a rehearing of this case. No such issue was presented by the pleadings, no such claim made at the trial, and no claim or point involving that proposition is presented or discussed in the original briefs filed herein by counsel for the appellant. In fact, counsel for the appellant themselves in their opening brief state the question which was submitted to and tried and decided by the trial court and submitted here as follows:

"The action is an ordinary action in claim and delivery, and but one thing is involved in it, namely, the validity of a sale, on January 9, 1915, of the property involved to plaintiff by said Robert A. Boot and his wife."

And the discussion in the briefs, both in the opening and closing by appellant, is confined entirely to the proposition as thus stated. There is, as in effect before declared, not the slightest intimation, either in the record or the briefs, that the question of the right to claim exemption of the property from execution was or would be relied upon.

[6] It has long been the rule in this state that the appellate courts will not review or consider points which have not been made in the court below. In the very early case of Morgan v. Hugg, 5 Cal. 409, it was held:

"Errors cannot be relied upon in an appellate court which are not taken advantage of and raised at the trial."

This rule, which is a most salutary one, has been uniformly adhered to by the reviewing courts of this state down to the present day. See, also, McDonald v. Bear River & A. W. & M. Co., 13 Cal. 220; King v. Meyer, 35 Cal. 646; Stoddard v. Treadwell, 29 Cal. 281; Williams v. McDonald et al., 58 Cal. 527; Anderson v. Black, 70 Cal. 231, 11 Pac. 700; Adams v. Crawford, 116 Cal. 495, 48 Pac. 488; Sprigg v. Barber, 122 Cal. 573, 55 Pac. 419.

We are satisfied with the conclusion announced in our former opinion upon the other branch of the discussion.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

37 Cal. App. 313

CHARLES HING v. JOE LEE et al.

(Civ. 1751.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 20, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court.)

1. EXEMPTIONS ⇐50(1) — LIFE INSURANCE POLICY—ANNUAL PREMIUMS.

Proceeds of life insurance endowment policy, on which annual premium was less than $500, held exempt from execution, under Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 18.

2. BANKS AND BANKING ⇐165—PROCEEDS OF INSURANCE POLICY—TRUST FUND.

Where, upon maturity of endowment policy, insured sent check for proceeds to bank, to whom policy had been assigned as security, making it payable to insured and bank, and insured, after signing check and authorizing bank to deduct from proceeds his indebtedness to bank and to a third party, directed bank to hold balance until he could call for it, the bank held such balance in trust for insured.

3. BANKS AND BANKING ⟸165 — TRUST FUND—CHANGE OF RELATIONSHIP—DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Where bank holds proceeds of collection, the trust relationship can be changed to that of debtor and creditor by custom or agreement; but bank cannot, at its own convenience, divest itself of the trust relation, and make beneficiary without his consent a depositor.

4. BANKS AND BANKING ⟸169—TRUST FUND—BANK'S DUTY AS TRUSTEE—EXECUTION.

Bank which, holding proceeds of insurance policy in trust for insured, paid over proceeds to sheriff on an execution, without first ascertaining if insured wished to claim exemption of such proceeds from execution, was guilty of breach of trust; its duty having been to protect trust fund for benefit of insured, the beneficiary of the trust.

5. EXEMPTIONS ⟸50(1)—EXECUTION—INSURANCE POLICY PROCEEDS—BANK DEPOSITS.

Where proceeds of insurance policy, exempt from execution under Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 18, were deposited in bank, the deposit was exempt from execution.

6. BANKS AND BANKING ⟸169—DEPOSITS—EXEMPTION FROM EXECUTION—BANK'S DUTY TO NOTIFY DEPOSITOR.

Where proceeds of collection exempt from execution were levied on without knowledge of depositor, it was bank's duty, where bank knew deposit was exempt, to notify depositor before paying over the money to sheriff, and upon its failure so to do, making it impossible for depositor to claim privilege of exemption, bank is liable for amount lost.

7. EXEMPTION ⟸89—WAIVER.

Exemption from execution is a personal privilege, which judgment debtor may waive, but which exists until he, or some one authorized to do so for him, waives it, either by express words, overt act, or by waiting more than reasonable time before attempting to claim it.

8. PLEADING ⟸129(1) — ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT—FAILURE TO DENY.

Allegation in complaint, not denied in answer, is deemed admitted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Charles Hing, sometimes known as Hoo Hing Chong, against Joe Lee, the First National Bank of Merced, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Terry W. Ward, of Merced, for appellant. John Outcalt, of Merced, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. On the 1st of April, 1901, the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States issued to respondent an endowment policy of life insurance. Thereafter respondent borrowed from said society the sum of $1,000 and assigned to appellant the said policy as security for the payment of said indebtedness; the bank undoubtedly acting as agent of the insurer in the matter.

[1] The policy matured on the 1st of April, 1916, and there became due plaintiff the sum of $1,325.94, being the face value of the policy and the surplus reduced by said $1,000 loan. The insurer sent to appellant a check for said amount, payable to said bank and to plaintiff, which was received by appellant on the 4th day of April, 1916. At this time respondent was indebted to appellant in the sum of $431.45 on certain promissory notes, and also to one J. H. Simonson upon a promissory note for the sum of $436, which note was held by the bank, as security for the payment of a loan by it to said Simonson. The annual premium on said policy was less than $500, and therefore "all moneys, benefits, privileges or immunities accruing or in any manner growing out of" said policy were exempt from execution. Subdivision 18, § 690, Code Civ. Proc.; Briggs v. McCullough, 36 Cal. 542; Holmes v. Marshall, 145 Cal. 780, 79 Pac. 534, 60 L. R. A. 67, 104 Am. St. Rep. 86, 2 Ann. Cas. 88.

[2] On receipt of said check the cashier of the bank sent a clerk with the check to plaintiff's home, a few blocks distant, with a request that plaintiff sign it, which he did. It was understood and agreed between plaintiff and the bank that out of the proceeds of the policy the said indebtedness of respondent to appellant and to said Simonson should be paid. Plaintiff was credited with these payments on the 5th day of April, and the balance of said check for $1,325.94, or the sum of $458.49, was deposited in said bank by the cashier to the credit of plaintiff. The next day the sheriff of the county, under and by virtue of an execution issued out of the superior court of said county upon a judgment recovered in said county by one Joe Lee against said plaintiff and others, previous to the 6th day of April, 1916, for a sum in excess of $458.49, levied upon the money of plaintiff in the hands of said bank, and the said bank, through its president and cashier, delivered to said sheriff upon said execution the said sum of $458.49. Plaintiff knew nothing of the levy until some days after the money had been paid over to the sheriff, and therefore had no opportunity to claim any exemption from execution. He afterward made a demand upon the bank for the payment of said amount, but it was denied. The court held that the proceeds of the insurance policy constituted a trust fund in the custody of said bank, and that appellant was not legally justified in paying it over to the sheriff, without affording the plaintiff an opportunity to make his claim of exemption. The finding as to the trust relation is supported by the testimony of plaintiff. His testimony was given in somewhat broken English, but, after stating that Mr. Hart, the cashier of the bank, called him up by telephone, he proceeded:

"He told me, 'you know the money came all right;' he told me to sign the name on the check. I say, 'You leave the money in there, and I go up where I get well with my foot, when I go up there; I will pay Mr. Simonson, and the balance I leave in the bank to pay the Chinaman.' I owe the Chinaman two or three hundred dollars. I borrow money to pay on that life insurance two or three years ago from two Chinamen; he go home now. I no tell Mr. Hart to deposit the money. I said, 'The balance you leave; I want to take that money and pay the Chinamen.'"

There can be no doubt that the check was the property of plaintiff, and that he directed the said officer of the bank to cash it, pay the claim of the bank and of Simonson, and hold the balance until plaintiff could call for it. The situation is covered by the principle announced in section 313, page 634, 7 C. J., as follows:

"The deposit of mortgages and other specific instruments for collection or the drawing of a draft on a debtor and giving it with specific instructions to collect and remit is a trust transaction and the money, if collected, is affected with the trust."

As to this point several instructive cases are cited by respondent, one of which is Hall v. Beymer, 22 Colo. App. 271, 125 Pac. 561. Therein Beymer placed with Rocky Ford Bank a note for collection. The bank sent the note to a Colorado Springs bank, which collected it and remitted the proceeds in the form of a draft. This was received by the Rocky Ford Bank on December 28th, which, on the same day, sent it to a Pueblo bank to the credit of the former. On December 31st the Rocky Ford Bank placed the amount of the collection to Beymer's credit on its books, and the same day said bank ceased to do business. The testimony showed that Beymer was asked by the president of said bank if he "wanted to put the proceeds in as a deposit," and he replied, "No; I wanted it for myself; I wanted the collection." The court held that the Rocky Ford Bank was Beymer's bailee, not his debtor.

[3] The facts of that case present a similar situation to the one herein involved. There seems to be no essential difference. It is true, as the authorities hold, that in such cases "the trust relation might be changed by custom or agreement into that of debtor and creditor after the collection of the proceeds"; but it is equally true that "a bank cannot divest itself of the trust relation and assume the other at its own convenience." 7 C. J. 634.

[4] Of course, it is the duty of the trustee to protect and preserve such property for the benefit of the beneficiary. 39 Cyc. 325. It was a clear violation of this primary obligation for the trustee to pay over the property to the sheriff without making any effort to preserve it for plaintiff. The bank sustained to respondent a relation of trust and confidence, and it had no right to withhold from the latter information that was essential to the protection of plaintiff's interests. Indeed, rather than permit the property to be lost to plaintiff without an opportunity to assert his claim of exemption, the bank should have informed the sheriff that the money was exempt from execution, and would not be paid over until it could be ascertained whether plaintiff desired to waive his privilege. It is manifest, also, that the bank could have lost nothing by pursuing this course. Within a few minutes plaintiff could have been notified, and, unless he claimed his privilege immediately, he would have been justly deemed to have waived it. The bank was apparently more anxious to have the judgment creditor satisfied than to exercise the utmost good faith toward plaintiff. Debts should be paid, but public policy recognizes the exemption of certain property belonging to debtors as even more important than the payment of his debts. Otherwise it would not be protected by the law from execution. But of what avail to the debtor is the privilege, if he have no opportunity of exercising it? He is not required to claim the privilege until an occasion arises whereby the property is liable to be taken away from him. Here he had no such opportunity in consequence of appellant's violation of its duty to notify him of the occasion for the exercise of his privilege. We consider it a plain case of breach of trust on the part of appellant, and we cannot believe that the moral sense of the community, or the common practice of banks, or any provision of the statute, justifies the course which was herein pursued to the prejudice of respondent.

[5] We think that the case is governed by the fundamental principle of good faith which characterizes the status of a trustee; but, even if we concede that, by virtue of the deposit of the money, the bank became merely the creditor of plaintiff, the debt was exempt from execution. The reason for this view is clearly set forth in the Holmes Case, supra. Therein it is said:

"Appellant contends that by the deposit of the money in the bank the money lost its identity, and that thereafter the bank owed Annie J. Jenkins the money; that the debtor thus voluntarily parted with the money, which was exempt, and acquired in lieu thereof a credit due by the bank. Such construction would seem to be unreasonable, and no authority is cited which supports it."

The court proceeds to a more detailed consideration of the subject, and reaches the conclusion that appellant's contention involves an absurdity, which must be rejected.

[6] Considering it thus a deposit, we feel satisfied that, in view of the ignorance of plaintiff of the levy of the execution, it was the duty of the bank to notify him before paying over the money to the sheriff. If it had been other personal property belonging to plaintiff, in the possession of defendant, a sale would be required, and it would have made no particular difference whether the bank gave notice or not, since the sheriff would have been required to give notice to plaintiff before the sale. But, it being money, the conduct of the bank made it impossible for plaintiff to claim this privilege of exemption, and hence appellant should be held responsible for the amount lost. In Freeman on Executions (3d Ed.) § 416, it is said:

"Although as a general rule the exemption of property from execution can only be claimed by its owners, yet the rule does not apply to proceedings by garnishment. If the garnishee has in his possession any property or credit of the defendant not subject to execution, he certainly may, and he probably must, assert the fact of such exemption, and thereby prevent the property from being taken and applied under the execution. * * * When, however, the person summoned knows of a defense, as that the debt or property sought to be reached is exempt from execution, we believe that it is his duty to assert such defense, or, at least, to inform his creditor of the proceeding, and give him an opportunity to act for himself, and, if the duty is not performed, that no judgment or order against the person summoned can protect him from liability to his creditor."

In the case at bar the garnishee knew, or, at least, had reason to know, that the property was exempt from execution, and that the judgment debtor had no knowledge of the garnishment, and hence the payment of money to the sheriff does not protect appellant from liability to the judgment debtor.

[7] We agree with respondent in the statement of these propositions:

"(1) Respondent was the owner of the policy in question and of that part of the proceeds thereof here in controversy at the time of the receipt of the same by the bank on April 4, 1916, and continuously up to and including the time of the levy. (2) The proceeds of said policy were exempt from execution under subdivision 18 of section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure. (3) It was not the respondent's duty to claim exemption before the levy, or to make such claim upon anybody other than the levying officer, or to make such claim after it would have been an idle and ineffective act. (4) Appellant bank was a trustee of the proceeds of said policy for respondent's benefit. (5) The bank could not make respondent its depositor without his consent. (6) Though exemption is a personal privilege, which the judgment debtor may waive if he choose, yet the privilege exists until he himself, or some one authorized to do so for him, waived it, either in express words or by overt act, or by waiting more than a reasonable time before attempting to claim it; and a garnishee, whether trustee or mere debtor, cannot waive it for him, or deprive him of the opportunity to claim it without being liable to him in damages." 18 Cyc. 1449; Smyth on Homestead and Exemptions, § 562; Southern Ry. Co. v. Fulford, 125 Ga. 103, 54 S. E. 68, 5 Ann. Cas. 168.

In some of the cases cited in support of the lower court's decision, the garnishment proceedings involved a formal suit in court; but, manifestly, the same principle must apply with greater emphasis to our summary proceeding of garnishment, wherein more easily may a judgment debtor be deprived of his statutory privilege of exemption.

[8] Another point, upon which appellant lays some stress, relates to the proof of the demand claimed to have been made upon appellant for the payment to respondent of said sum of money. The allegation of the complaint, however, as to that, was not denied in the answer, and, of course, it is deemed admitted. We need not, therefore, consider the sufficiency of the proof.

Some other questions are argued by appellant, but we think the foregoing covers the material considerations in the case.

We are satisfied that the decision of the lower court is just and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

MENDOZA et al. v. CENTRAL FOREST CO. et al. (Civ. 1584.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 17, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 15, 1918.)

MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂⊃24—IMPROVEMENT SUBJECT TO LIEN — FARM DEVELOPMENT — "STRUCTURE."

Farm development, consisting of ditches, drains, embankments, and roads, so correlated as to form one harmonious entity, designed to convey water to and distribute it over the land, and constituting a permanent improvement to the land, increasing its value, is a "structure," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing for mechanic's lien on specified improvements "or other structure."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Structure.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by Antonio Mendoza and others against the Central Forest Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Freeman and George R. Freeman, both of Willow, for appellant. Harmon Albery, of Colusa, and Duard F. Geis, of Willow, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiffs commenced the action to enforce certain service liens against the real property belonging to defendant Central Forest Company. These liens consist of two classes: (1) Labor performed; and (2) liens for appliances, teams, and power furnished and supplied. The trial was by the court without a jury, and plaintiffs had judgment, from which defendant Central Forest Company appeals.

Appellant states in its closing brief that "since the brief was prepared the laborers have been paid and the judgment has been satisfied so far as it affects the laborers." Appellant asks that the judgment be reversed as to plaintiffs J. A. Davis and Eldon E. Thwaites, whose claims fall under the second class above referred to. Section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows:

"Mechanics, materialmen, contractors, subcontractors, artisans, architects, machinists, builders, miners, teamsters and draymen, and all persons and laborers of every class performing labor upon, or bestowing skill or other necessary services, or furnishing materials to be used or consumed in or furnishing appliances, teams and power contributing to the construction, alteration, addition to or repair, either in whole or in part, of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, aqueduct, well, tunnel, fence, machinery, railroad, wagon road or other structure, shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, for the value of such labor done and materials furnished and for the value of the use of such appliances, teams or power, whether at the instance of the owner, or of any other person acting by his authority or under him, as contractor or otherwise; and every contractor, subcontractor, architect, builder or other person having charge of the construction, alteration, addition to or repair either in whole or in part of any building, or other improvement as aforesaid shall be held to be the agent of the owner for the purposes of this chapter."

It is alleged in the complaint:

"That at all times herein mentioned, the defendant J. S. Westphal was the contractor, agent, and representative of the defendant Central Forest Company, a corporation, in the work and construction under the contract hereinafter mentioned, and represented defendant Central Forest Company in that behalf. That on the 15th day of May, 1914, said defendant J. S. Westphal made and entered into a contract with the defendant Central Forest Company, a corporation, to do the farm development, consisting of plowing, preparation of soil, leveling, checking, ditching, draining and building roads under and pursuant to the terms and specifications of said contract in and upon the above described land, the property of the defendant Central Forest Company, a corporation. That said contract was in writing and subscribed by the parties thereto, and the same was filed for record in the office of the county recorder of the county of Glenn, state of California, the same being the county in which said property is situate, a copy of which said contract is hereto annexed, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part of this complaint. That the said defendant J. S. Westphal, contractor and agent of and for said defendant Central Forest Company, a corporation, commenced the building and construction of said farm development under and pursuant to the terms and conditions of said contract, and under and pursuant to the specifications and plat thereof attached, on or about the 18th day of May, 1914, and continued said work until on or about the 1st day of September, 1914."

The specific purpose for the development of appellant's tract of land was so to prepare it that it could be seeded to alfalfa and could be readily and economically irrigated. It will be perceived from the provisions of the contract, some of which will presently be stated, that the work to be done constituted a permanent improvement to the land, installed thereby a permanent system for utilizing it for greater profit and greatly increasing its productive capacity, and added to its value certainly at least the contract price for the work, which was $24 per acre. The character of the work, and the necessity for its being carefully planned and supervised by a competent engineer, will be seen from the contract itself, under which the work was done; some of its provisions being as follows:

"The said contractor hereby promises and agrees to and with the said company that the contractor will, for the consideration hereinafter mentioned, do the farm development, which shall consist of plowing, preparation of soil, leveling, checking, and draining, and building roads; the work to be done according to plans shown on the accompanying blueprint attached hereto and made a part of this contract on the south half of the north half of section seventeen, township twenty north, range three west, M. D. B. & M., and agreed for the consideration mentioned to furnish all necessary labor, tools, machinery and equipment for such work; said work to begin within ten days after acceptance of and signing of this contract and to be completed before the 25th day of August, 1914. All of said work to be done under the direction of and completed to the satisfaction of John P. Ryan, the engineer of the company.

"Consideration.—The said company hereby promises and agrees to and with the said contractor that when and as said work is completed the said company will * * * well and truly pay or cause to be paid unto said contractor at the rate of $24 per acre of work done; such acreage not to include roads at the rate of $100 per mile for roads built hereunder. * * *

"Order of Work.—The contractor shall commence his work at such points as the engineer in charge may direct, and shall conform to said engineer's orders and directions as to the order of time in which different parts of the work shall be done. * * *

"Change of Plans.—The company shall have the right to make such changes in alignment, dimensions, or character of work to be done as in the opinion of the engineer the interest of the work or company may require.

"Prosecution of Work.—Should the contractor fail to begin work within the time required, or fail to prosecute the work with not less than 40 head of stock, or if at any time the contractor is not carrying out the provisions of this contract in its true intent and meaning, * * * the company in such case shall have power to terminate the contract or withdraw any portion of the work under said contract; or the company may employ other parties to carry the contract to completion, or hire such force and tools, appliances, materials, and animals at the contractor's expense as may be necessary for the proper conduct of the work and for the completion thereof. * * * In the determination of the question of whether there has been such noncompliance with the terms of this contract as to warrant the termination thereof, the decision of said engineer shall be binding upon all parties.

"Payment of Men.—The said parties hereto further agree as follows: That the said contractor shall pay punctually the men who shall be employed on the aforesaid work, and the persons who shall furnish the materials therefor, and before the said contractor shall be entitled to any of the progress or final payments, as herein provided, he shall first satisfy, or cause to be satisfied, all claims for labor expended or materials used, or stock hired, in the construction of said work that may in any event become a lien upon said property, or may in any way become binding upon or chargeable to the said company, and shall furnish, if demanded, to the said company satisfactory evidence that all claims are satisfied. * * * In estimating extra work, only the time of the men and teams actually employed, the foreman immediately in charge of the work, and the material consumed shall be considered chargeable to the work. * * *

"Specifications.

"Stakes and Marks.—All lateral and drain work performed under the terms of this contract shall be indicated by center stakes only; grades shall be given where necessary. The engineer shall give one set of inspection levels, when asked for by the contractor. Border checks shall be located by the contractor in accordance with the plans attached.

"Excavation.—All excavation shall be deposited in embankment or shall be evenly wasted over adjoining area as directed by said engineer.

"Construction of Embankments.—Borrowing for embankments shall be made at such points as said engineer shall direct; the material for the construction of levees may be borrowed where the contractor deems best, keeping in mind that the land between checks shall be level transversely with a continuous slope longitudinally.

"Finish.—Tops and slopes of embankments and bottom of cuts shall be finished in a workmanlike manner and be true to line and grade, and ordinary scraper finish being required. No high points shall be left in bottoms or laterals or drains or between border checks. A continuous downward slope shall be demanded on border checks."

The testimony of plaintiff Davis was that the contractor, Westphal, hired from him 15 mules, with their equipment of harness, stretchers, lines, and other appliances—a complete outfit ready to be used, and which were used, in the development work being done by Westphal under his contract with the defendant corporation. The mules rented to Westphal by plaintiff Thwaites were similarly equipped and so used by the contractor, "grading and scraping and all the development work." In their reply brief, respondents, we think, fairly described this work and its purpose as follows:

"When the farm development was finally complete, its component parts constituted a unified structure, arranged, built, and constructed of earth, with ditches and laterals built from the source of water supply to convey the water to the farm development, and with laterals to distribute the water over the land. At regular intervals on the farm development there were checks (small embankments of earth) thrown up parallel to each other, for the purpose of holding the water on the parts or portions of the farm development desired; thus, the land between any two of these checks could be irrigated separately and independently of any other unit of the farm development. The land between the checks was required to be level transversely, with a continuous slope longitudinally, so as to insure the successful operation of the irrigation system, and in order to comply with the contract. Thus, when the alfalfa in any one unit had been sufficiently irrigated, gates in the lower end of the unit were opened, and the water was automatically taken from the unit and removed by gravity away from the farm development. This could be done without interfering with the irrigation of the other units of the system. The land lying between the checks, or small embankments, consisted of specially leveled and highly prepared and cultivated seed beds, and it was in these beds that the alfalfa seed was planted. It is thus readily apparent that the farm development was an entity, consisting of integral component parts, each part of which was necessary and vital to the successful operation of the whole."

We are called upon to decide whether the phrase "or other structure," as used in section 1183, supra, may safely be said to apply to a completed undertaking such as was contemplated by this contract. The court made the following, among other, findings of fact:

"That the completed farm development erected upon the south half of the north half of section seventeen, township twenty north, range three west, Mt. Diablo base and meridian, situate in Glenn county, California (the said lands being the lands of the Central Forest Company herein and heretofore mentioned), under or pursuant to the contract of May 15, 1915, heretofore found to have been made and entered into by and between defendant J. S. Westphal and defendant Central Forest Company, a corporation, constitutes and is a structure."

The court also made the following finding as conclusion of law:

"That the farm development erected upon the lands of the Central Forest Company, as aforesaid, constitutes and is a structure within the meaning of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California."

In Williams v. Mountaineer Gold Mining Co., 102 Cal. 134, 34 Pac. 702, 36 Pac. 388, Mr. Justice Temple, speaking for the court, construed these terms as follows:

"The use of the phrase 'other structure' in the above extract (from section 1183) shows that the word 'structure' comprehends all the properties specifically enumerated, and is broad enough to include any similar thing constructed, should the enumeration prove incomplete."

The definition found in 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 191, is as follows:

"In the broadest sense a structure is any production or piece of work artificially built up or composed of parts joined together in some definite manner; any construction."

What was said in Caddy v. Rapid Transit Co., 195 N. Y. 415, 88 N. E. 747, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30, we think quite true, namely:

"In cases like this, lexicographers' definitions are useful as guideposts; but they do not take us to our destination. The statutory meaning of a word or phrase must be gathered from the purpose for which the law containing it was enacted."

In the present case, we think, the definition given by Judge Temple, supra, will lead us to our destination. The statute gives the lien to all persons—

"furnishing materials to be used or consumed in or furnishing appliances, teams and power contributing to the construction, * * * either in whole or in part, of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, aqueduct, well, tunnel, fence, machinery, railroad, wagon road or other structure * * * for the value of such labor done and materials furnished and for the value of the use of such appliances, teams or power, whether at the instance of the owner, or of any other person acting by his authority," etc.

The farm development here contemplated was a finished piece of work, composed of integral parts, some of which the statute expressly designates as structures, and, when completed, consisted of ditches, drains, embankments, roads, so correlated as to form one harmonious entity, designed to accomplish a particular object, and constituting a permanent and valuable improvement to the land, and necessary to its highest and most profitable uses. When finished, it stood out as obvious and visible in its usefulness and its purpose as would a house, or barn, or any other of the structures enumerated in the statute. Viewing the statute with that liberality with which we are not only authorized, but by the statute itself we are enjoined, to regard it, we feel no hesitancy in holding with the learned trial court that the work to which plaintiffs contributed, as shown, constituted a structure.

Appellant's contention, that the only section of the Code applicable is section 1191, and that, as plaintiffs have not brought themselves strictly within that section, they are without remedy by way of lien, and must look alone to the contractor, we do not think maintainable. If, as we think, they have shown that the improvement or farm development, towards which they contributed teams for the power necessary to its accomplishment, constituted a structure, they had a right to look to section 1183 for relief.

The judgment is affirmed.

BENNETT et al. v. HILLMAN. (Civ. 2414.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 18, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1918.)

1. JURY ⇐25(4) — DEMAND — FAILURE — EXCUSE.

Trial court held not to have abused discretion in denying defendant's motion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for order setting aside assignment for trial to court without jury, made on ground defendant had failed to ask jury trial in time on account of attorney's ignorance of addition to section 631 of subdivision 4, predicating waiver of right to jury trial on failure to announce desires when cause is first set for hearing.

2. JURY ⇐31(5)—TRIAL BY JURY—DENIAL—FAILURE TO DEMAND.

Code Civ. Proc. § 631, subd. 4, predicating waiver of right to jury trial on failure of party to announce desires when cause is first set for hearing, is not violative of Const. art. 1, § 7, securing right of trial by jury to all, but providing trial by jury may be waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Edmon G. Bennett and others against C. D. Hillman. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Hazlett, of South Pasadena, and Haas & Dunnigan and Arthur C. Vaughan, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Oscar Lawler and Bertin A. Weyl, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. The plaintiffs are attorneys at law, and the action was brought to recover from defendant the value of services rendered to him by them and to recover cash advances made by them in connection with the services. The plaintiffs had judgment for nearly $21,000, and the defendant appeals.

The first contention of the appellant is that he was improperly denied the right of trial by jury in the action. The question presented largely concerns the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 631 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That subdivision was added to the section by the Legislature through an act passed May 20th and which took effect August 8th, both in 1915. So much of the section as is material to the present controversy, including subdivision 4, is as follows:

"Trial by jury may be waived by the several parties to an issue of fact * * * in manner following: * * * (4) By failing to announce that a jury is required, at the time the cause is first set upon the trial calendar if it be set upon notice or stipulation, or within five days after notice of setting if it be set without notice or stipulation."

On a day between December 22d and December 27th, both in 1915, the parties entered into a written stipulation that the action might, on the latter day, be set for trial. On that day it was by the court set for May 4, 1916, in a department of the court in which jury trials are not held ordinarily, and also on that day, December 27th, notice that the cause had been set down for May 4th in the department mentioned was served on the counsel for the appellant. At the time the cause was set for trial, the appellant did not announce that he desired a jury trial thereof. Under notice dated April 28, 1916, the appellant notified the respondents that on May 1, 1916, he would move the court "for an order setting aside the assignment" of the action "to the court and without a jury and setting said action upon the trial calendar to a jury or transferring said action to a department of the court where a trial by jury may be had." The notice was accompanied by affidavits of the appellant and of the attorney who was then his sole counsel, to the effect that the appellant had always desired and intended that the action should be tried by a jury; that at about the time the answer was filed, which was before December 22, 1915, the appellant instructed his counsel to demand a jury trial; that thereupon his counsel informed him that under the law a jury could be demanded at any time before the commencement of the trial, that a jury trial could be had upon such demand, and that he, the counsel, would make the demand in proper time; that the appellant knew nothing about the law in the premises except as it was so imparted to him by his counsel; that the counsel did not know until April 27, 1916, that subdivision 4 had been added to section 631 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that he first informed the appellant of that change in the law on that date; that the appellant had no knowledge, until that date, that such was the law or that his counsel had not theretofore demanded a jury trial; that on April 27, 1916, the appellant informed his counsel that he had relied upon such counsel to procure for him a jury trial and that he desired and still insisted that the action be tried by a jury; that the last time the appellant's counsel had demanded a jury trial of any action was shortly before the amendment of section 631, adding subdivision 4, had become effective; that pursuant to such demand the court had ordered a jury trial at a time long after the cause wherein the demand was made had been first set upon the trial calendar for trial; and that the counsel fully believed, until April 27, 1916, that a jury could be demanded in this action at any time before 10 o'clock of the forenoon of May 4, 1916; and that the appellant had the right to demand a jury trial at any time prior to that date. There was also an affidavit of merits.

Upon the making of the motion and the submission of the affidavits, the trial court entered an order denying the motion on the ground that a jury trial had been waived. In the order it was recited that the department of the court in which the action had been set down was, and had been at all times during the pendency of the action, a department designated by the court for the trial of civil actions without a jury; that there was no jury in attendance in that department; that there were at all times two or more departments of the court in which civil actions in which juries were demanded were regularly set and tried; that the assignment of causes for trial as above indicated was pursuant to rules of the court duly adopted and in effect for many years past; and that, were the motion to be granted, it would be necessary to transfer the cause to the department of the presiding judge for reassignment to a jury department in which the cause would, in the ordinary course of the business and practice of the court, be reset for trial before a jury at a date many months in the future.

[1] The appellant's motion was made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which entitles a party to be relieved from the effect of an order entered or proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. The section expressly provides that the right to such relief rests in the discretion of the court; and that discretion is, of course, not subject to review on appeal except in cases in which its abuse is plainly shown. Blumer v. Mayhew, 17 Cal. App. 223, 119 Pac. 202; Vinson v. Los Angeles Pac. R. Co., 147 Cal. 479, 483, 82 Pac. 53. Under all the facts before the trial court we cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion in denying the motion presented to it by the appellant. On the contrary, it appears that the court was amply justified in ruling as it did upon the question.

[2] The appellant insists that subdivision 4 of section 631 is unconstitutional, under the language of section 7 of article 1 of the state Constitution, to the effect that:

"Trial by jury may be waived * * * in civil actions by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law."

This language of the section follows a statement that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate." The appellant argues that the consent which will amount to a waiver of the right to jury trial must be express and that it will not do for the Legislature to predicate it upon a failure of a party to announce that he desires a jury at the time his cause is first set for hearing. This contention has been answered, in effect, in City of Los Angeles v. Zeller, 167 Pac. 849, in which the constitutionality of a section of a certain act of the Legislature regulating the right to trial by jury in street opening cases was established. That section was, in legal effect, substantially like subdivision 4 of section 631 of the Code. We say the case cited answers the contention of the appellant in effect, for the reason that the precise point now made seems not to have been presented to the Supreme Court in that case. Nevertheless, the reasoning of the opinion sufficiently answers it. We conclude that subdivision 4 of section 631 shows a proper exercise by the Legislature of the power to prescribe the manner in which the right to trial by jury may be waived.

The final contention of the appellant is that the findings by which the trial court determined that the respondents were employed by the appellant, and fixed the value of their services, are not supported by the evidence. There was evidence of the employment, as well as of the experience and qualifications of the respondents, and the record shows, in hundreds of typewritten pages, of what the services of the respondents consisted. The nature of the services rendered was stated in questions addressed to prominent members of the bar, and four or five of them testified that the reasonable value of the respondents' labors for the appellant was in a sum much in excess of the amount found due them by the court. The record surely shows an ample basis for the findings made. The finding as to the value of the services has a sufficient support in the testimony, alone, of the members of the bar who appeared as witnesses. Prince v. Kennedy, 3 Cal. App. 498, 86 Pac. 609.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. BROKERS ⟸54—COMPENSATION.
The readiness, willingness, and ability of the purchaser presented by a broker were admitted by the owner, where he accepted the purchaser's proposal and accepted him as a satisfactory purchaser.

2. BROKERS ⟸60—COMPENSATION.
When a broker employed simply to negotiate a sale of land has found a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase on the vendor's terms, the right to the agreed commission is complete and is not contingent on the consummation of the sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Wm. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by Garabed Sobaje and others against P. M. Schubert. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. Coghlan, Harry I. Maxim, and F. A. Fee, all of Madera, for appellant. Harry Sarkisian, of Fresno, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action is for the recovery of $650 as commissions for procuring a purchaser of certain real property. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiffs had judgment for the amount claimed by them. The appeal is from this judgment and is here on a bill of exceptions.

It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiffs are copartners under the firm name of New England Real Estate & Insurance Company; that on or about April 15, 1916, plaintiffs "entered into the service of the defendant, P. M. Schubert, at his special instance and request as his agents to sell and dispose of the following described real property (describing it) * * * for the sum of $13,000, payable at the times and upon the terms and conditions agreed to and suggested by the said defendant, for which services defendant agreed in writing to pay plaintiffs therefor the sum of 5 per cent. as commission on the said sum of $13,000, such commission amounting to $650"; that plaintiffs did, on or about April 20, 1916, "procure a purchaser for the defendant's said lands, who was then and there ready, willing, and able to complete the purchase of the defendant's said real property upon the terms and conditions fixed and agreed to by the defendant with plaintiffs herein, by bringing together the said intended purchaser and the defendant and procuring from the said intended purchaser a written offer to purchase the said lands to and for defendant herein, which offer to purchase the defendant, on or about the 23d day of April, 1916, * * * did then and there accept and agree to make the sale"; that defendant, though often demanded to do so, has failed and refused and still refuses to consummate said sale; that plaintiffs have performed all the conditions in said contract on their part to be performed.

The answer is a specific denial of the averments of the complaint. As further answer, defendant sets forth a written agreement, of date April 15, 1916, signed by defendant, by which he agreed to pay to plaintiffs a commission of 5 per cent. for effecting a sale of said land, the sale price being $13,000, to be paid: $500 cash and the balance in installments as set forth. This appeared to be the agreement referred to in plaintiffs' complaint on which they rely. The answer then sets out what purports to be a proposal, made on or about April 23, 1916, by John Boornutian, the purchaser referred to in plaintiffs' complaint, to purchase said land upon terms and conditions fully set out; the price to be paid being the same as stated in defendant's agreement of April 15, 1916, but including some provisions not found in that agreement. This proposal was directed "to P. M. Schubert, P. O. Box No. 87, Madera, Calif." It is alleged that "defendant then and there accepted by indorsing his acceptance upon said agreement aforesaid"; that subsequently said Boornutian offered to pay defendant $500, but did not offer any written contract for the sale of said land; that defendant "is ready and willing to carry out the terms of said contract with said Boornutian, provided the said Boornutian will pay the said sum of $500 and enter into a contract containing the usual covenants and restrictions usually contained in contracts for the sale of real estate but without giving or conferring upon the said Boornutian the right of possession except for the purposes mentioned in said agreement," which were for planting and cultivating trees and vines, etc.

The court made the following findings of fact:

"II. That on or about the 15th day of April, 1916, defendant employed plaintiffs as such copartners to sell the real property described in the complaint for the sum of $13,000, and agreed to pay plaintiffs the sum of 5 per cent. of said amount as commission, in the event that plaintiffs should obtain a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase said property upon terms satisfactory to the defendant.

"III. That on or about the 20th day of April, 1916, the plaintiffs as such partners did procure a purchaser for said defendant's land upon terms and conditions satisfactory to defendant, who was then and there ready, willing, and able to purchase said real property upon such terms and conditions and introduced such purchaser to defendant and also procured from said purchaser a written offer to purchase said lands upon terms and conditions satisfactory to the defendant, which said offer was on the 23d day of April, 1916, accepted by defendant."

The court also found that the averments of the answer, paragraphs 5 and 6, were true. Paragraph 5 sets forth the agreement between defendant and plaintiffs upon which plaintiffs rely. Paragraph 6 sets out the proposal of Boornutian above referred to. The court found that plaintiffs have fully performed the terms and conditions of their contract with defendant, that they have made demand upon defendant for payment of said commissions, and that defendant has refused to pay the same. As conclusion of law the court found that plaintiffs are entitled to recover from defendant the sum of $650 and costs.

There was evidence that defendant indorsed his acceptance of the offer made by Boornutian, the latter of whom had been introduced as a purchaser by plaintiffs; this fact is also admitted in the answer; that subsequently the parties met in the city of Madera. Witness V. K. Sarkisian, one of said plaintiffs, testified: That the parties at that meeting "endeavored to reach an agreement on terms different from those contained in the offer and acceptance, but could not do so for the reason that Schubert and Boornutian could not agree; * * * that Boornutian at such meeting declared and said that he would not buy the premises from Schubert on any other terms than the terms mentioned in the offer he had made, which Schubert had accepted and that, if Schubert refused to sell, he (Boornutian) would employ a lawyer to take the matter to court." The witness testified that effort was made to bring the parties to an agreement without result. "Finally," testifies the witness, "I gave up and said to defendant: 'I have got you parties together and you have made a contract for the sale of this property. You got to pay me my commission whether you do or do not agree to different terms and conditions of sale.'" Boornutian testified that he tendered to defendant the cash payment of $500, which defendant took and held for 15 minutes and then handed the money back, stating that he could not take the money.

Defendant testified that he signed the Boornutian offer in the latter's absence, and that at the time V. K. Sarkisian, one of plaintiffs, told him it was only preliminary to a final contract that was to be drawn up on the payment of $500. He testified that, when Boornutian tendered the $500, he said he told Boornutian "to take the $500 to plaintiffs and sign a definite contract and it would be all right"; that no subsequent agreement had ever been presented to him; that he was ready at any time to make a sale of the land "in accordance with the terms of said commission agreement, whenever a binding contract is entered into by any proposed vendee" upon the terms of said commission agreement. Defendant made the same offer in open court:

"The Court: Now, Schubert, are you willing to sell this property to this man upon the same terms contained in his offer which was accepted? A. Yes, sir; if some things in there are changed. The Court: Then you don't want to sell this property upon the terms contained in the offer and acceptance, but will sell on terms different and more favorable to yourself? Isn't that true? A. Yes, sir."

The record then states:

"On cross-examination this same witness admitted that the only reason why he did not complete the sale was for the reason that the time of payments had been deferred a long time and he had leased the premises and the lessee could not be moved out before the end of the cropping season of the year 1916, and that he could not make the sale unless the purchaser was willing to take the place subject to said lease."

[1] There was no direct evidence as to Boornutian's financial ability to meet the payments called for in his proposal. But we think that his readiness, willingness, and ability were admitted by defendant to be sufficient in accepting his proposal and in accepting him as a satisfactory purchaser presented by plaintiffs. The memorandum prepared by defendant as a substitute for some of the provisions in the Boornutian offer was properly refused admission for the reason that it changed the terms of said offer, and, though prepared by one of the plaintiffs, it was not prepared with Boornutian's knowledge or consent nor agreed to by him. Defendant's expressed willingness to enter into a contract with Boornutian, provided that contract contained "the usual covenants, agreements, and penalties contained in agreements for the sale of real property," does not, it seems to us, meet the situation. The offer of Boornutian was definite in its terms and was accepted. The duty of formulating a contract in accordance therewith, if needed, was upon defendant as much as it was upon Boornutian. The answers given by defendant to the court show that the true reason for not going forward and completing the transaction was that he was, on reflection, unwilling to sell his property "upon the terms contained in the offer and acceptance."

Appellant's contention, aside from what appears above, is that the offer of Boornutian and acceptance of appellant "is but a tentative preliminary arrangement to form the basis of a contract to be subsequently entered into, all of which is apparent and satisfactorily appears from said agreement itself." It is true that the offer contemplated the happening of certain things and stipulated certain conditions. But, whatever they were, appellant accepted Boornutian as a purchaser upon the conditions laid down in the offer. Plaintiffs had performed their contract by bringing the parties together and establishing the relation between them of seller and purchaser and upon terms to which they had both subscribed. Their failure afterwards to consummate the sale was in no wise attributable to plaintiffs.

[2] The law is well settled that when a broker employed simply to negotiate a sale of real estate has found a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase upon the vendor's terms, his right to the agreed commission is complete (Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 Pac. 1105), and the right of the plaintiffs was not contingent upon the consummation of the sale. (Jauman v. McCusick, 166 Cal. 517, 137 Pac. 254).

We think the evidence sufficient to support the findings, and, as the findings sustain the judgment, it is therefore affirmed.

CAMPBELL v. INGRAM. (Civ. 1740.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 3, 1918.)

1. TRIAL ⟸388(4)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.
In suit to determine rights in water, where cross-complaint alleged that the lands were situated in an arid climate and the allegation was not denied, a specific finding that the water claimed was necessary for irrigation was not necessary.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸152(6)—APPROPRIATION—PRESUMPTION.
The use by a landowner and his predecessors for many years, without objection from adjacent owners, of 75 inches water from a ditch for agricultural purposes, raises the inference that such water was necessary to produce profitable crops.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸143—APPROPRIATION—QUANTITY.
Where lands of plaintiff and defendant were riparian, and defendant's predecessor constructed a dam, maintained it for over 30 years, and diverted a given amount of water, and plaintiff's grantors recognized defendant's right to divert that amount, judgment authorizing defendant to divert the same amount of water for agricultural purposes was warranted.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸152(11)—APPROPRIATION — ACTIONS — JUDGMENT — SUFFICIENCY.
In controversy over water rights, judgment authorizing defendant to maintain a dam and divert water was not defective for failure to state the amount of water which plaintiffs might have, when defendant conceded that he must permit plaintiff to take as much water as was needed for plaintiff's purposes.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸761—ARGUMENTS ON APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS.
Where appellant fails to reply to appellee's argument, the court may infer that appellant deems the argument unanswerable, and is justified in concluding that the judgment was proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Borroughs, Judge.

Action by Ira Campbell against John Ingram, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. Rankin and Grover C. Julian, both of Susanville, for appellant. Dodge & Barry, of Reno, Nev., for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action involves conflicting claims to the use of the water of Beaver creek, in Lassen county. Defendant answered plaintiff's complaint, and also filed a cross-complaint, some of the allegations of which were denied by the plaintiff. The court found that certain lands of both parties were riparian to the stream, and also found:

"That in the year 1870, at a time when said William Coen was in the possession and entitled to the possession of said northeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), he entered upon said Beaver creek at a point in the northwest quarter of section thirty (30), township thirty-seven (37) north, range six (6) east, in the county of Lassen, state of California, where all of the waters of said creek were flowing in their natural, well-defined channel, between well-defined banks, and constructed a dam in the channel of said stream, and then constructed a ditch two shovels in width and one shovel deep, and by means of said dam and said ditch diverted water from said stream to his said lands, and said William Coen and his grantors (grantees?) have ever since maintained said ditch and dam and conveyed water by means thereof to said lands for the irrigation of crops of hay and grain and garden growing thereon, and for the watering of stock and for domestic purposes, and that at the time said William Coen first constructed said dam and ditch as aforesaid, the lands upon which he constructed said ditch were public lands of the United States; and said William Coen and his grantors (grantees?), ever since said first diversion and appropriation of water, have continuously maintained said dam and ditch and diverted said waters for the irrigation of land in said northeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), township and range aforesaid.

"That said ditch was gradually enlarged, until the year 1901, when it was capable of conveying seventy-five (75) inches of water measured under 4-inch pressure; and defendant has ever since said year 1901, diverted and conveyed 75 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, by means of said dam and ditch, from said stream to and upon the said lands of defendant for the irrigation thereof; and that in said year 1901 the grantors of the plaintiff, who were then the owners and in the possession and entitled to the possession of the lands of the plaintiff, recognized and acknowledged the right of the defendant, who was at said time in the possession and entitled to the possession of defendant's said lands, to divert 75 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, through said ditch to the above described lands of defendant; and that neither the plaintiff nor any of his grantors, down to the year 1913, ever interfered with or denied the right of defendant to maintain said dam and ditch and divert 75 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure to and upon the said lands comprising the William Coen homestead."

The judgment decreed that defendant was entitled to divert from said stream by means of a dam and ditch, described in the answer and cross-complaint, 75 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure for the use of a part of his land known as the William Coen homestead and of the remaining waters of said creek the plaintiff should have 53/100 and the defendant 47/100, and that the parties in the same proportion should pay the expense of maintaining the dam in the creek.

Appellant contends: (1) That there is no finding that irrigation is necessary on said William Coen homestead and no evidence to support such finding; (2) "there is no evidence to show or tending to show that 75 inches of water is necessary for the irrigation of the lands of defendant or that the continuous flow of 75 inches during the irrigating season has been used"; and (3) that the findings and judgment are uncertain and void, for the reason that the amount of water that defendant shall permit to flow through the dam to water plaintiff's stock in the corral below the dam is not specified.

[1] As to the first contention, it may be said that by the allegations and admissions of the pleadings it appears that the lands herein involved are situated in an arid climate and besides there is no denial of the allegation of the cross-complaint:

"That the character of all of said lands and the soil thereof and the climatic conditions of the neighborhood in which all of the lands are situated are such that artificial irrigation is necessary."

In view of this condition of the pleadings, no specific finding as to the points was required. Moreover, it is a fair inference from the findings, which were made, that irrigation is necessary in said premises, and we think there can be no doubt that the record, both as to the evidence and the determination of the court satisfies the requirement of section 1411 of the Civil Code that the appropriation of the water "must be for some useful, or beneficial purpose." We deem it unnecessary to quote the testimony in that regard. We may, however, refer to the fact that one of the witnesses testified that irrigation was necessary even for the wild hay.

[2, 3] There is no specific finding, nor do the pleadings admit that 75 inches of water are necessary for the irrigation of said tract of land, but it is found that this amount has been used by respondent for many years, without objection from appellant, for the irrigation of hay and grain and for garden purposes. From such use it would be proper to infer that it was necessary in order to produce profitable crops. Making such reasonable deductions from the facts found by the court we find sufficient support for the judgment. It would have been more satisfactory, of course, if there had been a specific finding as to the necessity of the use; but we do not think the cause should be reversed for this defect, which has not resulted in a substantial injury.

[4] The judgment does not award a specific amount of water to the plaintiff for the use of his stock in the corral, but it does provide that the defendant has the right "to maintain said dam as the same has been heretofore maintained, and the ditch leading therefrom." And as to how it has been maintained the finding of fact is:

"That said dam has continuously since said date been maintained and repaired by the defendant and his grantors, but in such a way as to permit water to flow through said dam sufficient for watering stock in the corral immediately below said dam."

In this respect, also, are the findings and judgment somewhat open to criticism; but it is conceded by respondent—and we think the judgment is susceptible to that interpretation—that by the decree of the court defendant is required to permit plaintiff to use whatever water is needed for the use of his stock in the corral, and as to that appellant could ask for no more. Indeed, the uncertainty in that respect is rather in favor of appellant, and respondent has the greater cause for complaint. The difficulty, if not impossibility, of determining in advance the amount that may be required for this purpose, is quite apparent from the record.

[5] Some cases bearing upon the foregoing considerations are cited by appellant, but respondent points out wherein they are not controlling here, and no reply brief has been filed by plaintiff. Since appellant has not deigned to reply to the argument of respondent, we have a right to assume that the former deems the argument of the latter unanswerable, and we are justified in concluding, without further delay, that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

4. STATUTES ⊂⊃158—REPEALS BY IMPLICATION.
Repeals by implication are not favored, and the courts will not declare such a repeal unless the two statutes as to vital matters are irreconcilably inconsistent with or repugnant to each other.

5. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⊂⊃21—CO-EXISTENCE WITH CITY—SEPARATE CORPORATE ENTITIES.
A school district, the territorial boundaries of which are coterminous with the boundaries of the city in which it is situated, is a corporate entity separate and distinct from the city as such an entity.

6. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⊂⊃25—CITY AND DISTRICT—EXERCISE OF IDENTICAL POWERS.
Though they are separate corporate entities, a municipality, and a school district having the same territorial boundaries, if Legislature elects to give right, may exercise same power with respect to matters connected with public school system in so far as city and district are concerned.

7. Schools and School Districts ⊂=25—City's Provision for Superintendent of Schools.

A city had the right, by virtue of its charter provisions, to provide for a superintendent of city schools and his compensation, even though the school district of the city extended territorially beyond the limits of the municipality.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Jennie Malaley against the City of Marysville. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. P. Rich, of Marysville, for appellant. W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

HART, J. At the general election in November, 1914, plaintiff was elected county superintendent of schools for the county of Yuba and assumed the duties of that office on the 4th day of January, 1915. She also performed the duties of city superintendent of schools of the city of Marysville for 20 months, commencing on said 4th day of January, 1915. She brought the action to recover compensation for her services as such city superintendent, alleging that the salary provided by law to be paid to her by defendant was the sum of $50 per month, and also alleging that that sum was the reasonable value of the services so rendered by her. The trial was before the court, sitting without a jury. Findings of fact followed the averments of the complaint, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for $1,000. The appeal is by defendant from said judgment.

The city of Marysville was first incorporated in 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 23). There were amendments in 1857 (Stats. 1857, p. 40) and in 1866 (Stats. 1865–66, p. 69), and in 1876 (Stats. 1875–76, p. 149) the city was incorporated. In none of these charters or amendments is there any reference to schools or educational matters. By the terms of an act of the Legislature, approved April 1, 1870 (Stats. 1869–70, p. 583), there was created a board of education for the city of Marysville, of which board the superintendent of public schools of the county was declared to be ex officio a member. It was also provided that said county superintendent should be ex officio superintendent of public schools for the city of Marysville. The act specified what duties he should perform and fixed his salary at $50 per month, "payable in the same manner as the salaries of other city officials." In 1874 (Stats. 1873–74, p. 153) the Legislature passed another act regarding said city superintendent, and his duties and all conflicting acts were repealed; but there was no material change from the act of 1870.

Appellant admits that respondent has acted and is acting as superintendent of schools of the city of Marysville, and concedes that she "has been and now is the de facto superintendent of schools of the city of Marysville," but contends that her compensation for rendering services as such superintendent must come from the board of education of said city, or, in other words, from the school fund, which is under the exclusive control of said board, and not from the city of Marysville.

[1, 2] Of course, there can be no de facto officer unless there is a de jure office, and the concession of the appellant necessarily assumes and further concedes that there is such an office of superintendent of schools of the city of Marysville existing by virtue of some law. And, if the respondent is a de facto officer, she has become so by virtue of her office as county superintendent of schools and not by employment by the board of education of the school district. However, as is conceded by the appellant, a de facto officer is entitled to receive the compensation prescribed for the services performed in executing the duties of such office.

The question to be decided here must therefore, as appellant has suggested, depend upon the solution of the further question whether the provisions of the Political Code relating to the establishment and maintenance of schools in cities as part of the common school system of the state have had the effect of repealing those provisions of the Marysville charter providing that the county superintendent of schools of Yuba county shall act as superintendent of schools of said city and fixing the compensation for the services so performed at fifty dollars per month.

The Constitution of the state (article 9, § 5) provides:

"The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools, by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least six months in every year, after the first year in which a school has been established."

In pursuance of said section, the Legislature has established a system of common schools and has gone into much detail in relation to the organization, government, and maintenance of the system, and has enacted provisions specially applicable to common schools in cities. Pol. Code, c. 3, tit. 3, pt. 3.

Section 1617 of said Code contains, among others, the following provision:

"The powers and duties of * * * boards of education in city school districts, are as follows: '(1) * * * (2) * * * (3) * * * (4) * * * (5) * * * (6) * * * (7) * * * To employ a city superintendent of schools and when necessary deputy or assistant city superintendent of schools, and to fix and order paid the compensation of the same unless the same be otherwise prescribed by law.' "

[3, 4] The above is the only provision of the Political Code of the many relating to the common school system and having special application to city common schools which might be said to have the effect of nullifying or repealing the provision of the city charter under the authority of which the respondent purports to exercise the functions of the office of school superintendent of and for the city of Marysville; but we see nothing in the language of the Code provision which compels us to hold that it effected a repeal of the charter provision. Under subdivision 7 of the Code section named, the board of education has the power to employ a superintendent of schools for the city, and it would probably be its duty to do so if the situation required such action. This is as far as the provision goes, and we cannot see why the charter provision cannot stand, even in the face of the power so conferred upon the board of education of the city, as a valid and enforceable part of the charter.

"Repeals by implication are not and have never been favored, and the courts will not so construe the effect of a subsequent statute upon a prior legislative enactment, where there is no express repeal of the prior statute by the later one, unless the two are, as to the vital matters to which they relate, irreconcilably inconsistent with or repugnant to each other." Mansfield v. Chambers, 26 Cal. App. 499, 505, 147 Pac. 595.

There is no inconsistency or repugnancy between the provision of the Political Code conferring upon the boards of education of cities the power to employ a school superintendent and the provision of the charter authorizing the county superintendent to perform the duties of the office for the city. The general purpose of the two provisions is precisely the same, and the result of the existence of the two provisions is merely the providing of two different sources from which the city may receive the benefit of the services of such an officer. According to the stipulated facts of this case, the board of education of the city of Marysville has never exercised nor attempted to exercise the power conferred upon it by the Political Code to employ a superintendent of schools, and the duties of that office, if, indeed, it is in fact an office under the Code until a person is duly employed to discharge the duties of a school superintendent, have always been performed by the county superintendent of schools of Yuba county under the authority of the charter provision above referred to.

[5] It is, of course, to be conceded, as appellant points out, that a school district, the territorial boundaries of which are coterminus with the boundaries of the city in which it is situated, is a corporate entity, separate and distinct from the city as such an entity. It was so held in Los Angeles School Dist. v. Longden, 148 Cal. 380, 83 Pac. 246. In that case the governing board of a school district, which, territorially, comprised the city of Los Angeles and certain contiguous outlying lands, inaugurated proceedings looking to the issuance of bonds of the school district for the purpose of erecting a schoolhouse, and after the holding of an election at which the question whether bonds should be issued was submitted to the voters of the district, who, by the requisite number of votes, approved the proposition, the board of trustees of the district duly certified to the board of supervisors of the county all the proceedings had in the premises, as required by section 1884 of the Political Code. The board of supervisors refused to issue the bonds, as provided by the section last mentioned, claiming that the city of Los Angeles, as a municipal corporation, and under its charter and the general laws of the state, was alone vested with the power to issue bonds for the purpose specified. The court, in that case, said among other things:

"That school districts may in proper cases issue bonds is, of course, not disputed. It remains to be considered whether this general power to issue bonds which has been granted to school districts has been taken away from this particular school district by force of the charter of the city of Los Angeles. Upon this proposition the contention of respondent is that all matters touching schools within the corporate limits of a city are 'municipal affairs,' and that as, under the provisions of section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution, the charter of a city is supreme in municipal affairs, the charter of Los Angeles thus becomes the sole guide, authority, and power for the issuance of school bonds; that the charter of Los Angeles denies the power to its board of education to take the initiatory steps towards the issuance of school bonds, and confers that power upon its city council; and that its city council, under the provisions of section 78 of the charter, draws its power from the provisions of the General Improvement Act of 1901. Herein reliance is placed upon the language of this court in the case of Law v. San Francisco, 144 Cal. 384 [77 Pac. 1014]. There this court had under consideration the question of the power of the municipality to issue bonds for the erection of new schoolhouses and the improvements of existing schoolhouses, and the case of In re Wetmore, 99 Cal. 151 [33 Pac. 769], was cited and quoted from, to the effect that, as schoolhouses are essential aids in the promotion of education, their erection is but incidental to the maintenance of the schools, and falls as completely within the functions of a municipal government as does the erection of a hospital for its indigent poor or buildings for its fire engines. It thus may be taken as decided and settled that a city, as such, may bond itself for public school purposes, and that this power extends to all cases where the object is in furtherance, and not in derogation of or in conflict with, the general school system established by the state. For in this connection it must be remembered, as was said in Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554 [74 Pac. 44], that the school system of the state is a matter of general concern, and not a municipal affair."

The court then, after explaining, as first above indicated, that a school district and a city, although their territorial boundaries are coterminous, are, nevertheless, distinct and separate corporate entities, deriving their powers as such from different sources, proceeds to say:

"What, therefore, the Wetmore Case (99 Cal. 146 [33 Pac. 769]) and the Law Case (144 Cal. 384 [77 Pac. 1014]) decided was that the erection of schoolhouses within the corporate limits of a municipality was justly to be regarded as a municipal affair, and that the city therefore, as such, could create a bonded indebtedness for such and like purposes, even though power to do the same thing was, under the general school system of the state, vested in a school district which, while occupying the same territory as that of the city, was still in point of law a distinct corporate entity. It follows therefore that the declaration of this court that the issuing of bonds for the building of schoolhouses by a city is a municipal affair constitutes in no sense a negation of the fact that another corporate entity—the school district—may, under the general school system of the state, do the same thing for the same purpose."

[6] The above excerpts are thus brought into this opinion, not because we feel prepared to hold that a superintendent of city public schools, or the matter of the appointment or employment of one, is a municipal affair, but because the principle thereby enunciated and approved and as applied to the situation considered in that case supports the proposition for which the respondent contends here, viz.: That, notwithstanding that they are different and separate or distinct corporate entities, a municipality and a school district, the territorial boundaries of which are the same as those of the city, may, if the Legislature elects to give them the right to do so, exercise precisely the same identical power with respect to matters connected with and calculated to further the interests of the public school system, in so far as such city and school districts are concerned, and that therefore, merely because the Political Code, in its provisions establishing a system of common schools, confers upon the board of education of the city of Marysville power to employ a superintendent of city public schools, non constat that the provision of the charter of the city of Marysville has become a dead letter; that, on the contrary, the provision being one whose object is and has always been in furtherance and not in derogation of the general school system, cannot be held to be inconsistent or in conflict but perfectly consistent therewith.

Of course, the provision of the charter with respect to the superintendent of schools for the city need not necessarily be observed; it may be put in abeyance by the exercise by the board of education of the power conferred upon it to employ a superintendent of the city schools, but this does not mean that thus the charter provision would be rendered null and void or be repealed or that it is inconsistent with the power conferred upon the board of education with respect to the subject to which it relates.

There was by the attorneys on both sides a sort of stipulation, somewhat vague in meaning and scope, from which it might be inferred that the Marysville school district not only embraces all of the city of Marysville but a small strip of adjacent territory in which some 20 or 30 persons reside. The city attorney, representing the appellant, argues that the board of education and not the city of Marysville ought to pay the salary of the city superintendent of schools, because in that case the Marysville school district, including the outside territory, would be taxed for the purpose of raising this money to pay the superintendent's salary. "On the other hand," he continues, "if the salary of the school superintendent of the city of Marysville is paid by the city of Marysville, then the only property taxed to pay her salary will be the property within the corporate limits of the city of Marysville."

[7] While, if it be true that the Marysville school district covers more territory than that comprehended within the municipal limits of the city of Marysville, it would only be just that those living outside the city limits and owning property situated in the outlying portion of the district should be made to bear their just and proper proportion of the tax necessary to pay the salary of the superintendent of schools of the city, yet the fact that they may not do so is no argument in impeachment of the proposition that the city of Marysville has the right, by virtue of the provisions of its charter, to provide for a superintendent of city schools and his compensation for performing the duties of that office, even though the district may extend territorially beyond the limits of the municipality. Nor, obviously, is it an argument supporting the proposition that the provision of the Political Code, empowering the board of education of Marysville to employ a superintendent of city schools, has had the effect of repealing by implication the provision of the city charter under which the county superintendent is acting, ex officio, as city superintendent of schools. The city of Marysville, when making provision in its charter for employing and compensating the county school superintendent to perform like services for the city, undoubtedly considered and determined that so much of the school district as lay within the limits of the city would be benefited by such services commensurately with the burden thus placed upon its taxpayers. At any rate, the fact that there may be other territory than that of the city proper included within the school district can, in our judgment, have no material bearing upon the question whether the provision of the city charter we are considering is still a valid, existing law, notwithstanding the provision of the Political Code in question.

Our conclusion is that the judgment is correct, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

37 Cal. App. 1

PEOPLE v. AH GEE. (Cr. 428.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 16, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 14, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸59(2)—PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSORIES—COMMMON LAW—"PRINCIPAL IN FIRST DEGREE"—"PRINCIPAL IN SECOND DEGREE"—"ACCESSORY BEFORE THE FACT."

At common law, a principal in the commission of a crime was of two degrees, one who was the actual actor or absolute perpetrator being a principal in the first degree, and one who was present, actively or constructively aiding and abetting the fact to be done, being a principal in the second degree; and one who, absent at the time of the crime, procured, counseled, or commanded another to commit it, was an accessory before the fact necessary to be prosecuted, tried, and punished as such, and not as principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accessory before the Fact; Principal.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸59(5) — "PRINCIPALS" — JOINT COMMISSION OF CRIME—STATUTES.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 31, 971, providing that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, are principals, and that the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and between principals in the first and second degree, in cases of felony, is abrogated, and that all persons concerned in the commission of a felony shall be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, if two persons conspire to commit a crime together, one to perform the actual criminal act, the other to do something conceived as necessary, and if such other aids and abets in the commission of the crime, though not present when the final criminal act is committed, he is a principal, whatever the character, nature, quality, or extent of the assistance contributed by him to the consummation of the offense or execution of the joint intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Principal.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸59(2)—"ACCOMPLICE"—"ACCESSORY."

An "accessory" to a crime is always an "accomplice," while an accomplice is not necessarily or always an accessory in the commission of the crime in whose consummation he has aided and abetted, since he may have advised and encouraged the crime, and so rendered himself an accomplice, and yet be punishable as a principal for an offense distinct therefrom, yet associated therewith, to which the law attaches a distinct punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accessory; Accomplice.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸80 — "PRINCIPAL" AND ACCESSORY—ACCUSATION AND TRIAL OF ACCESSORY—STATUTES.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 31, 971, an accessory is not only to be charged in the accusatory pleading as a principal, but is also to be tried as a principal, so that it is immaterial what the proof shows was the nature of the part he took in the commission of the crime, that is, it is not a material matter whether it is shown that he has been the actual perpetrator, or only to have aided and abetted in its commission, since in either case he is a principal.

5. HOMICIDE ⟸162—EVIDENCE—PARTICIPATION IN CRIME BY DEFENDANT.

Where defendant was charged with murder jointly with two others, the prosecution was entitled to prove the charge by any testimony which would reveal defendant's connection with the crime, and the testimony of witnesses, one of whom testified that he saw defendant fire a shot into the body of decedent, the other of whom testified that defendant fired a couple of shots at deceased, which apparently failed of their mark, and then disappeared from the scene of the shooting, was material, relevant, and competent, and admissible as tending to prove the ultimate fact in issue, that defendant killed and murdered deceased, and was not objectionable on the ground that it tended to establish two different theories on which defendant might have been a participant in the crime.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1159(4) — APPEAL — REVERSAL FOR CONFLICTS IN TESTIMONY.

Appellate courts are not authorized to reverse the result reached at nisi prius because of conflicts, inconsistencies, or disparities in the testimony of witnesses produced by the people in support of the charge.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1159(1) — APPEAL — REVERSAL—INCONSISTENT TESTIMONY.

Appellate courts will not reverse a conviction of crime merely because the testimony presented to sustain the charge tended to disclose two different theories of how defendant committed the offense, unless both theories are inherently improbable.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Ah Gee was convicted of murder. From the judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Ben Berry and D. P. Eicke, both of Stockton, and Roy Bronson, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. Defendant and two others, Toy Lee and Foo Kee, were jointly charged, in an information filed by the district attorney of San Joaquin county, with the murder of one Lee Wun, in the city of Stockton, on March 21, 1917. Separate trials of the defendants were had, and Ah Gee was convicted of the crime of murder of the first degree and was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of his natural life. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The record discloses that Lee Wun met his death during a tong war. He and the three defendants above named were engaged in the shooting, and Foo Kee testified that he was fired upon by one Lim Buck Hee. There is but one point urged for a reversal, and it is this: That the prosecution presented its case upon two distinct and inconsistent theories, to wit: (1) That the defendant aided, abetted, and assisted Toy Lee in the murder of Lee Wun, and (2) that Ah Gee himself actually killed and murdered said Lee Wun.

In support of this proposition, appellant calls attention to the testimony of the witnesses C. W. Potter and A. F. Peterson, who testified to having been eyewitnesses to the homicide and who gave testimony for the people. Potter, a police detective of the city of Stockton, testified that he was in a store on East Market street; that he heard shooting, went out of the store, and saw three men in the street (the three defendants) shooting at Lee Wun; that as he looked out of the door he saw Ah Gee step up and fire two shots. The witness "hollered" at defendant, who turned and started to run west. Foo Kee fired a shot and ran east. Lee Wun was backing away and firing and Toy Lee kept advancing. At the final shot by Toy Lee the deceased fell to the ground. Witness said that after he saw Ah Gee and Foo Kee running away he gave all his attention to Toy Lee and Lee Wun and saw nothing more of defendant. Peterson testified that he heard shots and saw Ah Gee shooting at a man who was running. He testified:

"He was running and he was firing at him as he ran. He just had his gun out, all he had in his hand; he was bang, bang, bang, bang at this man. It seemed to me like when this man fell * * * defendant stopped and started to go down—he first started off at a walk, then he took a little dog trot. * * * I had my eye on nothing else but him and never took my eye off him till the minute he was caught."

The witness said he saw no one but the defendant shooting and saw no other Chinaman with him. According to the testimony of Potter, so the argument goes, the defendant, having fired two unavailing shots at the deceased and then ran away or disappeared from the scene of the homicide, merely aided, abetted, and assisted Toy Lee in the commission of the crime, while, on the other hand, according to the testimony of Peterson, the defendant actually fired the shot which produced the death of Lee Wun. Hence, so the argument proceeds, there were presented by the people two inconsistent theories of the part taken by the defendant in the commission of the crime, and this, it is claimed, is fatal to the result reached by the jury. The position of the defendant, as above set forth, is not well taken.

[1, 2] Under the common law, a principal in the commission of a crime was of two degrees, viz.: One who was the actual actor or absolute perpetrator of the crime, who was the principal in the first degree; (2) one who was present, actually or constructively, aiding and abetting the fact to be done, who was a principal in the second degree. 4 Cooley's Black (4th Ed.) p. 34. One who, being absent at the time of the crime committed, procured, counseled, or commanded another to commit the crime, was an accessory before the fact, and under the common law it was necessary to prosecute, try, and punish him as such accessory and not as a principal. Id., p. 37. The distinction between a principal in the second degree and an accessory before the fact, it will be observed, was founded upon the presence or nonpresence at the commission of the crime of the party aiding and abetting the actual perpetrator of the act which constituted the final consummation of the crime in its commission. Both, though, were nevertheless principals. However, the act of an accessory before the fact was treated by the common law as constituting a substantive offense, distinct from, though growing out of, the principal fact itself. A number of reasons are given by the learned English commentator why the distinction was maintained by the common law. Among these the most substantial from a present-day point of view was that the accused might know how to defend himself when indicted; "the commission of an actual robbery being quite a different accusation from that of harboring the robber." There are other reasons given for the distinction which are not at all germane to our system, as, for instance, the right of an accessory after the fact to claim the benefit of clergy, notwithstanding that the punishment prescribed to both principal and accessory, whether before or after the fact, was the same; the principal's offense not being clergyable. But there cannot logically be said to be less moral turpitude or a less or different degree thereof in the act of a person who, though not actually committing the act constituting the crime, and is not present when it is committed, has actively, with the intent that it shall be committed, contributed to or aided and abetted, by advice or counsel or command or otherwise, in its commission, than there is in the act of the person who actually perpetrated the crime. Indeed, abstractly speaking, from no point of view can there be found any logical reason for the distinction. If A. and B. join in the formation of an intent to commit a crime and assign to each other different parts for the execution of that intent—one actually to perpetrate the act and the other to perform some other part which they conceive to be necessary to consummate the crime—how may it logically be said that the one is not equally a principal with the other? It is the execution of the joint criminal intent which constitutes the crime, and it is immaterial, so far as the degree of guilt is concerned, how or by whom of the two it is actually accomplished. If the one aids and abets in the commission of the crime, though not present when the act, the final step in its commission, is committed, he is logically a principal, whatever may have been the character, nature, quality, or extent of the assistance contributed by him toward its consummation or the execution of the intent jointly formed by him and the actual perpetrator of the act to do the wrongful act.

Thus, undoubtedly, our Legislature viewed the proposition, and therefore by express mandate has abrogated the mere formal distinction (and it was no more than this) existing at common law between principals in the commission of crimes and accessories before the fact, or those participating in their commission without actually perpetrating the acts which, with the intent, constitute the crime. Therefore whatever may be the law in other jurisdictions the rule in this state, as laid down by the Legislature, is that:

"All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be for a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission * * * are principals in any crime so committed." Pen. Code, § 31.

Again, the rule, as promulgated by the Legislature is that:

"The distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and between principals in the first and second degree, in cases of felony, is abrogated; and all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, though not being present, shall hereafter be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, and no other facts need be alleged in any indictment or information against such an accessory than are required in an indictment or information against his principal." Pen. Code, § 971.

[3] Of course, there should be no confusion arising from the distinction existing between accomplices and accessories in crime. An accessory necessarily presupposes a principal in the very crime committed and at the same time he is an accomplice of the principal, while, on the other hand, "it is not a legal criterion of an accomplice that he must be indictable as principal for the same identical crime as that charged against the defendant on trial. He may have advised and encouraged that crime, and so be an accomplice therein, and yet be punishable as principal for an offense distinct therefrom, yet associated therewith, to which the law attaches a distinct punishment." People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 119 Pac. 901, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704. In brief, an accessory is always an accomplice, while an accomplice is not necessarily or always an accessory in the commission of the crime in whose consummation he has aided and abetted.

[4] Under our Code sections, above quoted herein, an accessory is not only to be charged in the accusatory pleading as a principal, but is also to be tried as a principal; hence it is immaterial what the proof shows was the nature of the part that the accused took in the commission of the crime; that is, it is not a matter of material importance whether he is shown to have been the actual perpetrator of the criminal act or only aided and abetted in its commission. In either case, he is a principal, and it can make no difference in the proof of the charge what particular act he did or part he took in the execution of the criminal act that made him one.

[5] In the present case, the defendant, jointly with two others, is charged in the information with the murder of Lee Wun. There is but one count in the information, and that is the usual or common one by which murder, as defined by the law, is charged. There is no attempt at describing how or in what manner the act was committed, or any allegation that the defendant was merely an aider and abettor of the crime, an allegation which is not required under our law. The prosecution was entitled to prove the charge by any testimony which would reveal the defendant's connection therewith. It happened that, while one of the witnesses presented by the people to support the charge testified that he saw the defendant fire a shot into the body of Lee Wun, another witness, likewise presented, testified that the accused fired a couple of shots at the deceased, which apparently failed of their mark, and then disappeared from the scene of the shooting. Even according to the common law, the defendant would be a principal under the testimony of the witness Potter. But the testimony of both witnesses was material, relevant, and competent, and therefore clearly admissible in any event as tending to prove the ultimate fact in issue, viz. that the defendant killed and murdered Lee Wun. Indeed, the objection to the testimony on the ground that it tended to establish two different theories upon which the defendant might have been a participant in the commission of the crime does not go to the proposition that said testimony does not show or tend to show the guilt of the accused of the crime charged but to the proposition that he was a party to the commission of the crime in two different ways. As we view the situation, the proposition is no different in principle from a case where one witness for the people had testified that the deceased had been killed by a blow with a club in the hands of and wielded by the defendant, while another witness for the people had testified that the death of the deceased had been produced by the defendant by means of a knife; the particular manner in which death was produced not being alleged in the indictment. But, as stated, the people had the right to make the proof as it was made and leave to the judgment of the jury the question whether upon the whole the evidence was of sufficient probative force to warrant the conviction in their minds that, beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant, whatever might have been the nature or extent of the part he might have taken in the commission of the act, was guilty as charged.

[6, 7] But, after all, we can see in this case nothing very much different from what is to be found in the large number of criminal cases which find their way to courts of appeal, for it may safely be said that there is rarely to be encountered a criminal case in which there is not to be found some conflict upon vital questions of fact between witnesses whose testimony is presented by the people in support of the charge. The same may be said to be true in some measure of witnesses whose testimony is offered in support of the defense. But the courts are not authorized to reverse the result reached at nisi prius because of such conflicts or because of inconsistencies or disparities in the testimony of any one witness. These are matters for the jury to resolve. That is one of their important functions. Nor will the courts reverse a case merely because, as is the claim here, the testimony presented to sustain a criminal charge tends to disclose two different and inconsistent theories of how the accused committed the act charged. Such a situation might affect the evidential strength of the people's case, but it involves a question solely for the jury's determination, unless it plainly appears that, upon the testimony as it is presented in the record up for review, both theories are inherently improbable. We may add that there would not be many criminal cases which could escape the fate of a reversal if for such reasons courts of review were required to nullify the verdicts of juries.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

37 Cal. App. 180

PEOPLE v. ALLEN. (Cr. 436.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 8, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 2, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜594(3)—CONTINUANCE—APPLICATION TOWARD END OF TRIAL.
Where motion for continuance is made when case is nearing its conclusion, on the ground of absence of witness, but no assurance was given that witness could be found, it would have been an unreasonable exercise of discretion for court to grant continuance.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜595(4)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENCE OF WITNESS—MATERIALITY OF EVIDENCE—INTENT.
In prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor in dry territory, court's refusal to continue trial because of absence of witness was not reversible error, where expected evidence all bearing on question of the intent of accused would have been immaterial; the undisputed evidence being that the bottle accused sold contained whisky.

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⊜229 — PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE AS TO INTENT—ADMISSIBILITY.
In prosecution for selling liquor in dry territory, evidence that purchaser was a spy trying to discover violations of the no-license law was inadmissible as tending to prove that accused intended to play a joke on purchaser by selling liquor that merely resembled whisky, the intent of accused being inadmissible, undisputed evidence having shown liquor sold by accused to have been whisky.

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⊜224—INTENT—INFERENCE.
In prosecution for illegal sale of liquor, where there is evidence beyond reasonable doubt that accused sold the liquor, an intent to violate the law will be implied.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜448(7) — OPINION EVIDENCE—WHISKY.
The drinking of whisky is so common an occurrence that liquor can be prima facie shown to be whisky by the opinions of persons accustomed to its use.

6. EVIDENCE ⊜355(5)—MEMORANDA.
Code Civ. Proc. § 2047, providing that a witness may refresh his memory by memoranda, does not authorize the introduction of memoranda in evidence in corroboration of what the witness has testified to without the aid thereof.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1186(4)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.
Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that no judgment shall be reversed unless there has been a miscarriage of justice, the admission of written notes to corroborate witness who had made the notes was not reversible error; the facts having been fully testified to before memorandum was admitted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence A. Raker, Judge.

Felix Allen was convicted of selling alcoholic liquors in no-license territory, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Oscar Gibbons, of Alturas, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was informed against by the district attorney of Modoc county for the crime of unlawfully selling alcoholic liquors, to wit:

"That on or about the 29th day of May, 1917, and before the filing of this information, at and in the county of Modoc, state of California, said Felix Allen then and there, within the incorporated limits of the town of Alturas, in said county, which was then and there no-license territory, willfully and unlawfully did sell and furnish alcoholic liquor, to wit, whisky, to one Lulu Sisson, contrary," etc.

The cause was tried before a jury, and defendant was found guilty. Judgment on the verdict was that defendant pay a fine of $400 and in default of payment that he be confined in the county jail of said county one day for each $2 of said fine. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is now urged that the court committed the following errors: (1) In refusing a continuance of the trial for the purpose of giving defendant the opportunity to produce the witness A. Gibson; (2) admitting expert testimony as to the character of the liquid introduced by the prosecution; (3) rejecting testimony offered by defendant tending to show that prior to the 29th day of May, 1917, the prosecuting witness, Lulu Sisson, was a spy; (4) permitting the witnesses Lulu Sisson and Mrs. Geo. Campbell to be corroborated by their notes in writing made of matters to which they had testified; (5) in giving instructions Nos. 1 and 5.

The information was filed on November 22, 1917, and defendant, being in court, was given until the next day, November 23d, in which to answer the arraignment, and on that day defendant pleaded not guilty, and the cause was set down for trial on December 5, 1917. The cause then being called for trial, defendant moved for a continuance, and the matter was continued to December 7, 1917. The proceedings had at the arraignment on motion for continuance were read, and the court denied the motion and ordered the jury to be drawn. The motion for continuance was based in part upon the shortness of time between the arraignment and the date set for trial, defendant's attorney claiming that he had not sufficient time in which to prepare his defense, but principally the ground for the motion was based upon other facts set out in the defendant's affidavit filed in support of the motion, and which related to the testimony of one A. Gibson, who, it is alleged, was a necessary witness in the case for defendant. It was stated in the affidavit that affiant was informed and believed that at said time the said Gibson was "either out of the state of California or at the southern extremity of the same, in the government service"; that on November 23, 1917, defendant had caused to be issued a subpœna for said Gibson and placed in the hands of the sheriff of Modoc county, and that said sheriff has ever since been unable to locate said witness in said county of Modoc; that on the 26th day of November, 1917, defendant prepared an affidavit entitling him to a foreign subpœna for said witness but, owing to the absence of the judge of said court, was not able until the 27th day of November to obtain the necessary order, and on the 28th day of November he caused said subpœna to be deposited in the United States post office at Alturas, inclosed in a sealed envelope addressed to the sheriff of San Diego county, Cal., at San Diego, with postage prepaid thereon and inclosing therewith a letter instructing said sheriff to serve the said subpœna and informing him that the said Gibson was in a United States training camp in San Diego county; that no return has ever been made by said sheriff of his proceedings under said subpœna, and no word has been received by defendant or his attorney in response to said communication; that said sheriff maintains an office in the city of San Diego, Cal., between which city and Alturas there is a regular communication by mail; and that the two places are more than one thousand miles apart. It is further alleged in the affidavit:

"That said A. Gibson is a necessary and material witness in this action, and without his testimony being had and taken at said trial I cannot safely proceed to trial; that I expect to prove by said witness that on the 29th day of May, 1917, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock in the afternoon thereof, I went to the drug store then and there owned and operated by said A. Gibson in said town of Alturas, in company with divers other persons, and did then and there tell said A. Gibson, in the presence of said other persons, that I had been asked by the Lulu Sisson mentioned in the information in this action to furnish her (the said Lulu Sisson) with a bottle of whisky; that I further told him that I desired to have his (the said A. Gibson's) assistance in mixing a bottle of liquid resembling whisky as far as possible in color, smell, and taste, save that the same should not contain more than 1 per cent. of alcohol; that said A. Gibson thereupon furnished certain appliances and assisted me in preparing said described liquid; that thereupon said liquid was placed in a quart bottle in the presence of said A. Gibson and said other persons, and was wrapped in a piece of paper and by me taken to the house of said Lulu Sisson, in said town of Alturas."

It is further alleged that the said Gibson is the only witness by whom affiant could prove that the said liquid contained only 1 per cent. of alcohol or by whom he could prove the quantity or quality of all the ingredients contained in the liquid delivered to the prosecuting witness, Lulu Sisson. Affiant further states in his affidavit:

"I further expect to prove by said A. Gibson that at divers times and places prior to the 29th day of May, 1917, that I have stated that Lulu Sisson was in my opinion trying to earn a reward by asking people to furnish her liquor, and that in my opinion any one would be very foolish to accede to her requests."

He further states that said A. Gibson will testify to the matters above set forth if his presence be had at said trial or if his deposition be taken, and that said Gibson is at present in or around the United States training camp in San Diego county.

[1] On December 8th, while the trial was progressing, counsel for defendant again renewed his motion for a continuance based on information which that day had been received by the sheriff of Modoc county by letter written to him by the sheriff of San Diego county, dated December 4, 1917, in which it was stated, among other things:

"I am returning herewith subpœna In re People v. Felix Allen, which was sent to me for service. On going to the Camp Kearney, I found that this man had been discharged October 6, 1917."

Considered with this second motion were the proceedings taken at the time the first motion was heard. As to the ruling of the court on defendant's motion made after the letter from the sheriff of San Diego county was received and the subpœna returned by him "Not found," we cannot say there was prejudicial error. No additional facts were produced at this time and no assurance offered that the witness could be found. The case had progressed nearly to its conclusion. It would have been an unreasonable exercise of discretion for the court to continue the case at that stage to an indefinite period and to excuse the jury with leave to return to their homes until such period might arrive. As to the ruling on the motion made at the arraignment and before the day for the trial was set and at the opening of the trial, we think enough appeared to justify the court in granting the continuance asked. But we cannot say, in view of the showing made, that its refusal demands a reversal of the judgment. The defense, indeed the only defense made, was that defendant knew the prosecuting witness, Lulu Sisson, to be a spy, and was engaged in an effort to induce him to sell her a bottle of whisky in order to obtain the county reward offered; that he conceived the idea of "playing a joke upon her" by selling her a bottle of liquid resembling whisky, but in fact containing less than 1 per cent. of alcohol; that he explained his scheme to several different persons, and Dr. Gibson, a druggist in the town, who, as defendant testified, prepared a bottle of the simulated whisky, gave it to defendant, who immediately took it to Mrs. Sisson's home and sold and delivered it to her; and that this was the bottle and only bottle of liquid of any kind delivered by him to her.

It is perhaps best at this point to state the evidence on which the verdict was based, as it necessarily has much to do with our conclusion upon the several assignments of error. The evidence was that Mrs. Sisson was engaged in ferreting out violations of the no-license law; that she suspected defendant of being engaged in the illicit traffic in alcoholic liquor; that to confirm her suspicions, and, as she admitted, to earn the reward offered by the county, she sought a meeting with defendant at which he agreed to sell and deliver to her at her house a bottle of whisky at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of May 29, 1917. Mrs. Sisson arranged to have her sister-in-law, Mrs. Campbell, and Lily Ferraris, a house servant, so concealed as to witness, unknown to defendant, and hear what took place when defendant came to the Sisson house. These three women testified that defendant came to Mrs. Sisson's house on the day and at the hour agreed upon, was admitted, and stated to Mrs. Sisson he had brought her the bottle of whisky as he had promised to do, and told her the price was $1.50; that he took the bottle from his coat pocket and delivered it to Mrs. Sisson; that she found she had but $1.40, which she gave him, saying she would pay him the remaining 10 cents when she next saw him; that he took the money and went away. The conversation between Mrs. Sisson and defendant was testified to, and there was substantial agreement in the testimony of these three witnesses as to what was there said and done, and it agreed substantially with the testimony of the defendant, except that he testified he did not know what was in the bottle. As soon as defendant departed, Mrs. Campbell and Miss Ferraris came out from their place of concealment, examined the bottle carefully, and were able to and did identify it when produced in court. Mrs. Sisson immediately notified Deputy Sheriff Estes, who came to her house in the evening of that day, uncorked the bottle, and drank of its contents. His testimony was that it was "good whisky." The bottle was delivered to him at that time. He sealed it, and thereafter it was cared for by him until it was brought into court in the same condition as when he received it. In the presence of the court and jury he removed the cork and again sampled the contents and pronounced it whisky. Dr. John Style, a practicing physician, was called as a witness. He testified that he had drank whisky and could distinguish the difference between whisky and nonalcoholic liquids "by taste and smell—by taste practically." He sampled the contents of this bottle, and pronounced it whisky.

It is not claimed that Dr. Gibson could or would testify, if present, further than that at defendant's request and for the purpose defendant explained to him he filled and gave to defendant a bottle resembling the one in evidence, but containing less than 1 per cent. of alcohol. And the witnesses who saw the druggist in the act of making up the compound, whatever it was, testified that they saw the bottle delivered to defendant by Dr. Gibson and saw defendant immediately thereafter drive in his automobile to and enter Mrs. Sisson's house. What defendant did after entering the house they knew not. The most that can be claimed from what Dr. Gibson could testify to and what the witnesses who testified saw done by him and by defendant is that the mixture prepared by Dr. Gibson contained less than the inhibited per cent. of alcohol, and that these facts tended to show an innocent intent on defendant's part. If Dr. Gibson gave defendant a bottle whose contents were innocuous, the evidence conclusively shows that it was not the one delivered to Mrs. Sisson by defendant, and as it is not pretended that this change of bottles could have happened through any agency other than defendant's, it entirely overthrows any inference of innocent intent to be drawn from anything Dr. Gibson could have testified to. But the law upon this question of intent, in this class of cases, treats the element of intent as immaterial. The rule is stated as follows in the case of the People v. Pera, 171 Pac. 1091:

"The decisions appear to be quite uniform upon the proposition that where, in invoking and applying the police power, the Legislature has prohibited certain acts and denounced them as criminal, the mere commission of such acts, regardless of the intent with which they were committed, is sufficient to constitute the crime so denounced. There are, perhaps, certain exceptions to this rule, as, for instance, where the statute itself uses language in describing or defining the crime indicating that scienter or a specific intent to do the act was essential to constitute it a crime. But, particularly in cases interdicting the traffic in intoxicating liquors, the rule generally is that the mere commission of the act is sufficient to consummate the offense, and in the present case the law authorizing the establishment of 'no-license territories' uses no language indicating an intention in the Legislature to make the intent with which the act of keeping a resort for the purpose of selling intoxicating liquors is committed an ingredient of the offense."

The case of Commonwealth v. Holstine, 132 Pa. 357, 19 Atl. 273, is cited, where the court said:

"It is not necessary to sustain a conviction for selling intoxicating liquors under the act of 1887 for the commonwealth to prove a criminal intent. It is enough to show the sale, when the defendant may, if he can, shield himself behind a license. If the sale is contrary to law, the intent has nothing to do with it. A contrary ruling would fritter away the act of 1887, and conviction under it would be rare."

Section 13 of the act of April 4, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 599), provides as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any person * * * within the boundaries of any no-license territory to sell, furnish, distribute or give away any alcoholic liquors except as provided in section 16 hereof." (Nothing in said section 16 has reference to the facts in this case.)

Plainly the rule applies in cases arising under this section, as it did in People v. Pera, which arose under the same statute though for a different offense.

[2, 3] This rule of law furnishes sufficient answer to defendant's points above designated as 1, 3, and 5. Dr. Gibson's testimony, as we have seen, would have been addressed to the question of intent, as would testimony that defendant had knowledge, prior to the 29th day of May, 1917, that Mrs. Sisson was a spy, for the purpose of that testimony was to bolster up defendant's claim that he was playing a joke upon her, and hence had no intention to violate the law.

[4] As to instructions 1 and 5, they both in effect charged the jury that the intent to violate the law is implied upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant sold to Mrs. Sisson at the time named, within the limits of the town of Alturas (admittedly no-license territory), alcoholic liquor, to wit, whisky containing more than 1 per cent. of alcohol. A similar instruction in People v. Pera, supra, was given and was held to be a correct statement of the law.

The testimony that the bottle, with its contents, as it was sold and delivered to the prosecuting witness, was the same bottle, with the same contents, which was brought into court, is not controverted; nor is there any evidence that the liquid in this bottle was other than whisky, and there was evidence that it contained 15 per cent. alcohol. The bottle was passed to the jury, who were, without objection, "permitted to smell the contents and taste it if they desire." The jury examined the bottle, but it does not appear that they drank any of the contents. Defendant offered no evidence that the contents were not whisky.

As to defendant's second point, he says in his brief that "the only point in dispute between prosecution and defendant was: What was the character of the liquid delivered to Mrs. Sisson?" The contention is that under paragraph 9, § 1870, Code of Civil Procedure, only one who "is skilled therein" can give "his opinion on a question of science, art, or trade." Witness Estes concededly did not testify as an expert. He testified, however, that he was familiar with the taste of whisky and had drank of different brands, that he could distinguish between the taste of whisky and brandy, and his opinion was quite emphatically given that the bottle in question contained whisky.

[5] In the case of People v. Monteith, 73 Cal. 9, 14 Pac. 373, a nonexpert witness was permitted to testify that a person at a given time was intoxicated, the court saying:

"Drunkenness is, unfortunately, of such common occurrence that it does not require an expert to pronounce upon it. We think the case falls within the principle of People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 32, 33."

Likewise we may safely say that the drinking of whisky is, unfortunately, of such common occurrence that it does not require an expert to pronounce upon it. We do not think it was necessary for the people to have caused a chemical analysis of this liquid to be made, but that it was competent to establish prima facie that the liquid in question was whisky by the opinion of persons who were accustomed to the use of whisky. The way was open to defendant to rebut this evidence either by causing an analysis to be made of the liquid or by having other witnesses familiar with the taste of whisky to test it and give their opinion. He did neither, but rests wholly on the incompetency of the witness Estes to testify. We do not think the court erred in its ruling.

[6, 7] Appellant claims that the court erred in permitting Lulu Sisson and Mrs. Campbell to be corroborated by their notes taken of what occurred when defendant was at Mrs. Sisson's house. It appeared that after he had gone they entered in a memorandum book what they remembered of the occurrence. After they had testified to the facts without consulting their memoranda or finding it necessary to do so, the district attorney, over objection, was allowed to introduce this book showing what these witnesses had written down therein. Substantially it agreed with their testimony. We think this was error. Under section 2047, Code of Civil Procedure, a witness may "refresh his memory respecting a fact, by anything written by himself, or under his direction, at the time when the fact occurred, or immediately thereafter, or at any other time when the fact was fresh in his memory, and he knew that the same was correctly stated in the writing." But, where the witness can and does testify fully as to the facts without resort to his memorandum, we do not think he can be corroborated by the introduction of his memorandum. We think, however, that the ruling was without prejudice. Section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution would seem to apply here.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MOORE v. INDIAN SPRING CHANNEL GOLD MINING CO. et al. (Civ. 1837.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 28, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE ⟸20(1) — JUDICIAL NOTICE — MATTER OF COMMON KNOWLEDGE.

It is common knowledge that a refusal by an employer, hiring many men, some being discharged and others taken on the job daily, to pay discharged men, would tend to create breaches of the peace and disturb public tranquility.

2. STATUTES ⟸74(1)—UNIFORM OPERATION—DUTY TO PAY WAGES UNDER PENALTY.

St. 1911, p. 1268, as amended by St. 1915, p. 299, providing that whenever an employer discharges an employé, wages due and unpaid shall become payable immediately, etc., imposing a penalty recoverable by the employé, is not violative of Const. art. 1, § 11, providing all general laws shall have uniform operation.

3. STATUTES ⟸76(1) — LOCAL OR SPECIAL LAWS—APPLICABILITY OF GENERAL LAW.

St. 1911, p. 1268, as amended by St. 1915, p. 299, providing that, whenever an employer discharges an employé, wages due and unpaid shall become payable immediately, etc., imposing a penalty recoverable by the employé, is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 33, providing Legislature shall not pass local or special laws, where general law can be made applicable.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸275(2)—MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸69—DUTY TO PAY WAGES UNDER PENALTY—DUE PROCESS—STATUTE.

St. 1911, p. 1268, as amended by St. 1915, p. 299, providing that, whenever an employer discharges an employé, wages due and unpaid shall become payable immediately, etc., imposing a penalty recoverable by the employé, is not violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, providing no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process, etc.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Oscar Moore against the Indian Spring Channel Gold Mining Company, a corporation, Charles Mushrush, and others. From judgment for plaintiff against defendant Mushrush, the latter appeals. Affirmed.

Carleton Gray, of Oroville, for appellant. W. K. Hays, of Chico, and Jones & Jones, of Oroville, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action brought by plaintiff upon his own claim and certain claims assigned to him by his fellow laborers, for work performed by them as miners. The court found in favor of the plaintiff on his own and the assigned claims, and "that defendant Charles Mushrush promised to pay each of said above-named persons at the rate of three and 50/100 dollars a day wages for eight hours work," no part of which has "ever been paid to either or any of said named persons."

The action was to recover, not only the wages of the men, but also the penalty as provided by the act entitled "An act providing for the payment of wages," approved May 1, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1268), and the amendment thereof, approved April 28, 1915, in effect August 8, 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 299). The court found, in addition to the sums found due as wages, that there was due each of the several claimants a sum specifically found "as a penalty for nonpayment of wages." Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant Mushrush for the sum of $1,010.55 as wages and the further sum of $1,184.15 as a penalty. The findings were in favor of the other defendants. The appeal is from the judgment by defendant Mushrush.

There was no controversy as to the amount due to these several claimants. The only question of fact being tried was whether all of the defendants were liable, and, if not all, which of them. The court found as to each claim that the "service was rendered to the defendant Charles Mushrush at his special instance and request." We have examined the testimony and documentary evidence in the case, and are entirely satisfied that the court was justified in finding that defendant Mushrush is liable for the amount of these several claims. The only question open for discussion is the constitutionality of the act of 1911, as amended in 1915, imposing a penalty for nonpayment of the wages, the subject of the action.

Appellant contends that the act of 1911, as it was enacted and as amended, is in violation of section 11, article 1, and subdivision 33 of section 25, article 4, of the Constitution of this state, and also of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution. Section 11, article 1, declares that:

"All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation."

Section 25, article 4, provides that:

"The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: * * * Thirty-Third: In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable."

Article 14 of the federal Constitution provides:

"No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Section 1 of the act of 1911 is as follows:

"Whenever an employer discharges an employé, the wages earned and unpaid at the time of such discharge shall become due and payable immediately. When any such employé not having a contract for a definite period quits or resigns his employment the wages earned and unpaid at the time of such quitting or resignation shall become due and payable five days thereafter."

Section 2:

"All wages other than those mentioned in section 1 of this act earned by any person during any one month shall become due and payable at least once in each month and no person, firm or corporation for whom such labor has been performed, shall withhold from any such employé any wages so earned or unpaid for a longer period than fifteen days after such wages become due and payable: Provided, however, that nothing herein shall in any way limit or interfere with the right of any such employé to accept from any such person, firm or corporation wages earned and unpaid for a shorter period than one month."

Section 3:

"Any person, firm or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not to exceed five hundred dollars."

Section 4:

"None of the provisions of this act shall apply to any county, city and county, incorporated city or town, or other municipal corporation."

The act of 1911 was before the District Court of Appeal for the First District in the Matter of Crane, 26 Cal. App. 22, 145 Pac. 733, and section 3 was held to be violative of section 15 of article 1 of the Constitution, which provides that:

"No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action, on mesne or final process, unless in cases of * * *."

The constitutionality of the act otherwise was not considered. Since that decision, and possibly by reason of it, the Legislature amended section 3 (Stats. 1915, p. 299) to read in part as follows:

"In the event that any employer shall fail to pay, without abatement or deduction, within five days after the same shall become due under the provisions of section 1 of this act, any wages of any employé who is discharged or who resigns or quits, as in said section 1 provided, then as a penalty for such nonpayment the wages of such servant or employé shall continue from the due date thereof at the same rate until paid; or until an action therefor shall be commenced: Provided, that in no case shall such wages continue for more than thirty days. * * *"

Appellant expresses "difficulty in discovering any material distinction between the two acts. In the act of 1911," continues the brief, "the penalty is nothing more nor less than a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars; while in the amendment of 1915 the penalty is in effect a fine not exceeding thirty times the servant's daily wage." It seems to us that the distinction is obvious in this: The act of 1911 declares that a violation of its provisions is a crime for which the violator is answerable to the state, while by the amendment he must compensate the wage-earner by way of penalty.

In the present case there was no dispute as to the facts. These laborers had been working for appellant several months at a daily wage, receiving their pay at the end of the month regularly at a time and at a wage agreed upon. The mine shut down at the end of August, 1915, and filled up with water, and the laborers were discharged. Appellant, who had theretofore paid them their wages, failed and refused to pay for the month of August, and on September 29, 1915, the action was commenced, thus bringing the case within the terms of the act. No question arises as to the correctness of the amounts due each claimant as to wages earned and the penalty imposed.

The provisions of our Constitution, relied upon by appellant, have many times, and under many different legislative enactments, been before the courts of review in this state, as, also, has the Fourteenth Amendment of the national Constitution. That in certain cases special laws are permissible was shown in City of Sacramento v. Swanston, 29 Cal. App. 212, 155 Pac. 101, where the subject was given a somewhat extended treatment, and it was there held that under certain circumstances attorney's fees were allowable in condemnation proceedings, although in that regard the statute is clearly special legislation. It is doubtless true, as was said in Bruch v. Colombet, 104 Cal. 347, 38 Pac. 45, that:

"No absolute, inflexible rule has ever been formulated, and probably never will be, by which to determine what departure from uniformity is permissible, and what will be fatal. The courts must determine each case as it arises, presuming in favor of the rightful exercise of the legislative power. Yet the inhibition should be enforced unless there is discoverable some reasonable ground for a distinction."

The courts have, however, announced certain governing principles which are more or less applicable to all legislation of this class. Perhaps as concise a statement of the rule as may be found, is given in the Matter of the Application of Miller, 162 Cal. 687, 698, 124 Pac. 427, 430, as follows:

"A law is general and uniform in its operation when it applies equally to all persons embraced within the class to which it is addressed, provided such class is made upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction between the persons composing it and others not embraced in it. It is not general or uniform, and it makes an improper discrimination if it confers particular privileges or imposes peculiar restrictions or disabilities upon a class of persons arbitrarily selected from a larger number of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to the privileges granted or burdens imposed, and between whom and the persons not so favored or burdened no reasonable distinction or substantial difference can be found justifying the inclusion of one and the exclusion of the other from such privileges or burdens. The difference on which the classification is based must be such as, in some reasonable degree, will account for or justify the peculiar legislation."

The act in question, in imposing a penalty where the facts are as therein mentioned, is not unlike, in its operation, the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure—sections 732, 733, 735—which authorize the court to impose treble damages where a tenant commits waste, cuts down trees, and in cases of forcible entry and detainer. The constitutionality of these sections is not questioned. They are held not to be penal, but remedial. Jahns v. Nolting, 29 Cal. 508, 513. Such laws relate to matters of procedure as to which the court said, in Cohen v. Alameda, 168 Cal. 265, 267, 142 Pac. 885, 886:

"The legislative discretion as to the different modes of procedure or rules of practice to be prescribed for the numerous and various actions and proceedings allowed in courts of justice is very wide, and that its judgment on the question whether or not a particular provision shall be made for any class of cases, and as to the classification thereof, is not to be interfered with except for very grave causes and where it is clear beyond reasonable doubt that no sound reason for the legislative classification, and for the different provisions regarding the same, exists."

The legislative authority in this class of laws is, however, usually referable to the police power, and if the act in question may be regarded as deriving its validity from such source, it is not without its restrictions and limitations. But here, too, as was said in Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 694, 151 Pac. 398, 401:

"The broad and all-pervading scope of this power makes a satisfactory definition of it impossible."

For the purposes of the discussion in that case, Mr. Justice Sloss said:

"The police power is, we think, adequately and well described by the Supreme Court of Washington in these words: 'By means of it, the Legislature exercises a supervision over matters affecting the common weal and enforces the observance by each individual member of society of duties which he owes to others and the community at large. The possession and enjoyment of all rights are subject to this power. Under it, the state may "prescribe regulations promoting the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its welfare and prosperity." In fine, when reduced to its ultimate and final analysis, the police power is the power to govern.'" State v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 177, 117 Pac. 1101, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466.

But, as was further said by Mr. Justice Sloss:

"The arbitrary taking of life, liberty, or property cannot, of course, be justified by referring the act to the police power. But, if a given piece of legislation may fairly be regarded as necessary or proper for the protection or furthering of a legitimate public interest, the mere fact that it hampers private action in a matter which had theretofore been free from interference is not a sufficient ground for nullifying the act."

Examples are pointed out where vital legislative changes are of everyday occurrence.

"The same may be said of employer and employés. The employment creates a status involving relative rights and obligations, and it is proper for the Legislature, acting within the bounds of fairness and reason, to determine the nature, extent, and application of those rights and obligations."

Referring to the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279), the constitutionality of which was under discussion, it was further said:

"If the law-making body determines that one of the incidents of that relation shall be that the employer must compensate his employé for an accidental injury received in the service, an enactment to that end is neither arbitrary nor outside the scope of legislative authority."

Acts similar to our Employers' Liability Act are in force in several states, and in all of them the law has been upheld against all attack on constitutional grounds. In effect this act makes certain employers liable to pay a stated sum of money to every employé, who is injured while in their employ, whether or not the injury arose through the employers' fault. This compensation is based in part upon the wage of the employé and is paid during a period of the employé's idleness and inability to serve the employer. It would be difficult to find a reason which would justify this law which may not be urged in support of the act in question. There is between the two laws this striking difference: The Employers' Liability Act penalizes the employer, though he has committed no fault or wrong. The Payment of Wages Act fixes a penalty for the nonperformance of a duty the employer owes to his employé. It simply says to the employer: You shall not have the services of your employé without making provision for the payment of his wages within a reasonable time after they are due, and if you default you shall compensate him for your wrong.

In the case of International Text-Book Co. v. Weissinger, 160 Ind. 349, 65 N. E. 521, 65 L. R. A. 599, 98 Am. St. Rep. 334, an act of the Legislature of Indiana was before the court, which provided that:

"Every person * * * employing any person, to labor, * * * shall make weekly payments for the full amount due for such labor or service in lawful money of the United States to within six days or less of the time of such payment" (Acts 1899, c. 124).

And the act also prohibits the assignment of future wages to become due to employés from persons affected by the act. Weissinger assigned to plaintiff his wages to become due. The action was against Weissinger and his assignee, who had accepted the order. It was contended that the act was in violation of the Constitution of Indiana and of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution. The court said that the act unquestionably restricted the liberty of the citizen to enter into contracts which, in the absence of the statute, he would have the right to make. "Such a prohibition," said the court, "can be sustained only on the ground that some public interest is involved, and that it is of such a character as to render it a legitimate subject of legislative regulation or control. The wages of laborers have been the subject of legislative solicitude and action in this state for many years, and in a great variety of forms." The court instances a number of statutes to support its statement and points out the peculiar circumstances surrounding the day laborer which justify legislation specially designed for his protection. "If," said the court, "the Legislature, in the exercise of its general police power, to secure the safety and welfare of the state may deprive the laborer and his employer of the right to contract for the payment of wages in anything else than legal tender notes or other lawful money" (referring to decisions of the United States Supreme Court), "we do not perceive why it may not, also, in the exercise of that power, prohibit the assignment of wages before they are earned. * * * The purpose of the legislation in each is to protect a large and important class of citizens from imposition, unfair dealing, and the consequences of their own improvidence. The act * * * is not subject to the objection of a partial or improper classification."

A Kentucky statute (Ky. St. 1903, § 2739a, subsec. 1) required that all persons, corporations, etc., employing one or more persons in mining work, should within a stated number of days pay in lawful money the full amount of wages due such person or persons, "unless prevented by an unusual casualty." The act declared a violation of its provisions to be a misdemeanor punishable by fine. In Commonwealth v. Reinecke Coal Mining Co., 117 Ky. 885, 79 S. W. 287, 25 Ky. Law. Rep 2027, defendant was indicted for violation of the act. Among other grounds of demurrer it was contended that the statute "is class legislation, also, special legislation, and not a just exercise of the police power," and hence unconstitutional. The court held "that the statute in all its parts is valid."

In volume 9, Federal Statutes Annotated, at page 462, are cited certain cases bearing upon the question here. In St. Louis, etc., R. R. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 409, 19 Sup. Ct. 421 (43 L. Ed. 746), affirming 64 Ark. 83, 40 S. W. 705, 37 L. R. A. 504, 62 Am. St. Rep. 154, it was held that:

"A statute entitled 'An act to provide for the protection of servants and employés of railroads' [Acts Ark. 1889, p. 76], relating to the payment of unpaid wages without abatement or deduction on discharge of an employé, does not amount to deprivation of property, as the act is purely prospective in its operation. It does not interfere with vested rights, or existing contracts, or destroy, or sensibly encroach upon, the right to contract, although it imposes a duty in reference to the payment of wages actually earned, which restricts future contracts in the particular named."

A Rhode Island statute (Laws 1891, c. 918, § 1) providing that "every corporation, other than religious, literary, or charitable corporations, * * * shall pay weekly the employés engaged in its business the wages earned by them to within nine days of the date of such payment, unless prevented by inevitable casualty," was held valid. State v. Brown, etc., Mfg. Co., 18 R. I. 16, 25 Atl. 246, 17 L. R. A. 856. See the question considered in Ex parte Stephan, 170 Cal. 48, 148 Pac. 196, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 617; Ex parte Lichtenstein, 67 Cal. 359, 7 Pac. 728, 56 Am. Rep. 713.

There has been a pronounced tendency in state and national legislation for many years, not only to ameliorate the working conditions of the wage-earner, but to safeguard him in his relations to his employer in respect of hours of labor and the compensation to be paid for his labor. In the controversies that have arisen between capital and labor, the public conscience has become awakened to the fact that the public safety and welfare demand more enlightened laws governing the relation of employer and employé—laws which are designed to secure to the latter a reasonable wage, to provide, where practicable, for the enforcement of payment by way of liens on the product of his labor, to exempt from execution a part of his earnings, to give him sanitary and otherwise safe surroundings while employed, and the like. Does the act in question apply equally to all persons embraced within the class to which it is addressed, and is such class made upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction? If an affirmative answer may be given, the law is general and uniform in its operation and valid. Application of Miller, supra. The act refers to all wage-earners, designated as employés, as the class referred to, and it unquestionably applies equally to all of the class.

[1] Respondent quotes from an editorial in a responsible journal of January 22, 1916, the Saturday Evening Post, a statement which we think not far from the truth:

"Probably two-thirds of the inhabitants of the United States live out of a pay envelope—that is, on wages or on salaries that are only wages under a polite name. The yearly wage bill of the country has been estimated at fourteen billion dollars, which we take to be conservative."

A very large per cent. of those persons are day laborers, the greater part of whose earnings are necessarily paid out to them from day to day or week to week in the support of themselves and their families; their requirements are often obtained on credit, and must be promptly met, or the wage-earner loses his credit and sometimes his job; in many cases, he is denied credit, and must pay cash. Delay of payment or loss of wages results in deprivation of the necessities of life, suffering inability to meet just obligations to others, and in many cases may make the wage-earner a charge upon the public. It cannot be disputed that the multitudinous and important enterprises which constitute a characteristic feature of the industrial activities around us are absolutely dependent for their successful operation upon the day labor of the wage-earner. Many of these enterprises directly contribute to the welfare of the public and are necessary to the public convenience and safety. It is not to be expected that the laborer upon whose service these industries depend will give his service without assurance of receiving the reward promised for such service, and any law whose object is to give to the laborer some further assurance that he will be promptly paid for his labor, in addition to the employer's promise, would seem to be reasonable, especially as the object is to induce, if not to compel, the employer to keep faith with his employé, and imposes a penalty only when he commits a wrong which not only injures the employé, but is an injury to the public in its tendency to deprive the public of an incidental benefit which comes from the employé's labor. The law imposes no unreasonable burden upon the employer, for, operating as it does in the future, and disturbing no vested right, he must, and it is but fair that he should, make provision to pay his employé before hiring him, failing in which he should pay the penalty. Many enterprises require the services of large numbers of men—the numbers shifting from day to day—some being discharged and others taken on the job. It is common knowledge that a refusal to pay discharged men under such circumstances would tend to create breaches of the peace and disturb the public tranquility. The intention of the penalty imposed by the act in question is to make it to the interest of the employer to keep faith with his employés and thus avoid injury to them and possible injury to the public at large.

The act very properly provides that, when an employé is discharged by his employer, his wages earned and unpaid shall become immediately due. If the employment is not for a definite period, and he quits his employment, the act gives the employer five days to pay the wages earned and unpaid. We see nothing unreasonable in this provision, for the right of the employé to quit work, where there is no contract for a definite period, is as undeniable as the right of the employer to discharge his employé. Respondent cites a very ancient authority not inappropriate:

"Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates.

"At his day shalt thou give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it; for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it; lest he cry against thee unto the Lord and it be sin unto thee." Deuteronomy xxiv, 14, 15.

[2-4] We can discover no ground for holding the act to be violative of any provision of our Constitution, or that it violated the Fourteenth Amendment of the national Constitution.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

VENTURA MFG. & IMPLEMENT CO. v. WARFIELD. (Civ. 1808.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 3, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 2, 1918.)

1. SALES ⟹441(3)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action on note given for part of price of gasoline tractor, evidence held to show tractor delivered to defendant failed to do work for which such a machine is intended.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹999(1)—REVIEW—CONCLUSIVENESS OF RECORD.

Credibility of witnesses, or weight to be attached to testimony, being entirely for the jury, the appellate court may accept the bare record as conclusive on all questions of fact on which there is testimony in the record not inherently untruthful or improbable.

3. SALES ⟹181(13) — ACTION OF AGENT TO CONSUMMATE SALE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action on note for price of gasoline tractor, evidence held to justify finding that everything agent who induced sale did and said with respect to transaction, from time he procured order until defendant finally notified seller of rescission and returned machine, was done to consummate uncompleted sale.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟹123(7)—AUTHORITY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action on note for balance of price of tractor, evidence held to show that agent who negotiated sale was general sales agent of seller, and had authority to make any arrangements his judgment might dictate, as to waive conditions of original contract and written notice of unsatisfactory operation.

5. SALES ⟹181(11)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—ACCEPTANCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action on note for balance of price of tractor, evidence held to sustain finding engine never measured up to warranted test, that defendant never unconditionally accepted it, and that whole transaction was subject of controversy founded on repeated complaints.

6. SALES ⟹284(1, 2)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—GASOLINE TRACTOR.

Where gasoline tractor sold failed to come up to standard for efficiency and durability represented and warranted by seller, there was breach of warranty.

7. SALES ⟹441(1)—WAIVER OF CONDITION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action on note for balance of price of gasoline tractor, evidence held to warrant finding that agent who negotiated sale, authorized to do so, waived condition specified in written order as to time within which defendant was to be restricted in trying out or testing.

8. SALES ⟹168(2)—TIME FOR TESTING.

Where written order for tractor did not involve unconditional sale, and engine differed in material particulars from that ordered, and was delivered when satisfactory test was impracticable, buyer was entitled to a reasonable time beyond that prescribed in order to test the engine.

9. SALES ⟹445(4)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action on note for balance of price of tractor, question of breach of warranty, on conflicting evidence, is for the jury.

10. SALES ⟹285(4) — REQUIREMENT OF NOTICE—WAIVER.

Where there is requirement, in contract for sale of gasoline tractor, that notice of failure to work properly must be given within specified time, notice is waived by continued efforts of seller's agents, including one who made sale, to make machine work, after expiration of time limited.

11. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟹103(1) — AUTHORITY OF SELLER'S AGENT.

Authority of general agent who negotiates sale of gasoline tractor extends to all such acts as are properly connected with sale and delivery, and does not stop when buyer first takes machine on trial, but continues until sale is completed or machine returned.

12. SALES ⟹285(4)—REQUIREMENT OF NOTICE—WAIVER.

Though contract for sale of tractor stipulates purchaser shall give written notice of defects, and provides that failure shall constitute waiver of breach of warranty, if agent who negotiates sale is present at trial of machine, and has knowledge of failure of performance, provision as to notice is waived.

13. EVIDENCE ⟹460(11)—ACTION ON NOTE.

Where order for tractor did not contain detailed description, in action on note for balance of price, it was proper to show defendant was induced, by representations contained in seller's catalogue and a photograph of the machine to enter into the agreement.

14. SALES ⊂255—ASSUMPTION OF WARRANTY BY AGENT.

Company acting as general distributing agent of company manufacturing gasoline tractors necessarily assumed all burdens and conditions of manufacturing company's warranty; the contract, as to the particular tractor in litigation, being between distributing company and buyer.

15. SALES ⊂437(4) — ACTION FOR PRICE — PLEADING—THEORY OF CASE.

In action on note for balance of price of tractor, though defendant did not plead waiver of condition in warranty as to time of trying machine, case was not tried erroneously on theory of such waiver, where all facts of transaction, as set out in answer and cross-complaint, pointed to waiver.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by the Ventura Manufacturing & Implement Company against G. A. Warfield. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George R. Freeman, of Willow, and W. H. Barnes and Orr & Gardner, all of Ventura, for appellant. Duard F. Geis, of Willow, and B. A. Herrington, of San Jose, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff commenced the action to recover the sum of $1,967.50, and interest thereon, due on a promissory note, dated September 24, 1912, in favor of plaintiff and signed by defendant. In this note it was set forth that it was given in consideration of the sale by plaintiff to defendant of a "30 H. P. Pioneer Engine." The case was tried before a jury, and judgment was entered in accordance with their verdict, as follows: That defendant was entitled to recover from the plaintiff the sum of $1,500, paid by him on account of the purchase of the engine, together with interest thereon; that defendant was entitled to have said promissory note surrendered and canceled as though fully paid; and that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of said tractor. From said judgment plaintiff appeals.

The defendant interposed an answer to the complaint and also filed a cross-complaint and set up a counterclaim. The defendant by answer denies the vital averments of the complaint and sets up an affirmative defense, based upon alleged false representations by the plaintiff with respect to the character of the engine for capacity and durability, and relies upon the alleged violation by plaintiff of the terms of the written warranty attached to and a part of the contract of sale. The cross-complaint repeats the allegations of the answer respecting the alleged false representations by the plaintiff and charges that solely by the representations so made the defendant was induced to enter into the contract for the purchase of the tractor; charges that the engine which was delivered to the defendant by the plaintiff was not the engine which he agreed to buy and which the plaintiff agreed to deliver to him; alleges that the plaintiff violated the terms of its warranty, and that, upon learning of the difference in the engine delivered and the engine which he purchased and the plaintiff promised to provide him with, and of the defects of the engine delivered, the defendant immediately notified plaintiff thereof and rescinded the contract and demanded of the plaintiff a return of the cash money paid on account of the sale and the cancellation of the note given by him to the plaintiff for the balance of the purchase price.

The foregoing, while only a brief statement of the allegations of the pleadings filed by the defendant, is sufficient for present purposes and to show the general issues upon which the cause was tried and upon which it is submitted here by this appeal.

The facts are, briefly, these: Some time in the month of May, 1912, one C. W. Horstman, a salesman for plaintiff, solicited defendant to purchase a tractor and exhibited to him certain pamphlets and catalogues describing gas engines and also photographs thereof. The negotiations led to an agreement by the defendant, on the 22d day of June, 1912, to purchase a certain engine, a description and a photograph of which were contained in the pamphlets and catalogues referred to. Thereupon, and on the day named, the following order or agreement was signed by the defendant and delivered to plaintiff through its salesman, Horstman:

"Order for Gas and Gasoline Engine:

"To Ventura Mfg. & Imp. Co. Town Ventura, State Calif.

"The undersigned of Princeton Post Office, county of Colusa, state of Calif. Rural Route No. ———, hereby purchases of you, subject to all conditions of agreement and warranty printed on back of this order and made a part hereof, to be shipped to G. A. Warfield Ranch, Marysville, Calif.—'One 30 H. P. Pioneer'—Pioneer Tractor gas or gasoline engine (reg. size of pulley), complete including necessary fixtures, and to settle for said engine by payment of (3,467.50) thirty-four hundred sixty-seven $^{50}/_{100}$ dollars as follows: Fifteen hundred cash on delivery of engine, nineteen hundred sixty-seven $^{50}/_{100}$ note due Nov. 15, 1912. It is expressly agreed that this order shall not be countermanded, and that said engine shall remain and be held by the undersigned as your exclusive property until purchase money shall have been paid in full. It is expressly agreed that the engine shall be and remain personal property in what so ever manner it may be annexed to realty.

"Dated the 22d day of June, 1912. Sold by C. W. Horstman. [Signed] G. A. Warfield."

At one end of said order is written:

"Note to bear interest at seven per cent. after maturity. Tractor to have 60 gal. radiator and extension and swinging hitch."

The warranty is in the following language:

"Pioneer Tractor Co. (Incorporated) warrants the within described engine to do good work, to be well made, of good materials, and durable if used with the proper care. If upon trial, with proper care, the engine fails to work well, the purchaser shall immediately give written notice to Pioneer Tractor Co., Winona, and to the agent from whom it was purchased, stating wherein the engine fails, shall allow a reasonable time for a competent man to be sent to put it in order, and render friendly assistance to operate it. If the engine cannot then be made to work well, the purchaser shall immediately return it to said agent, and the price paid shall be refunded which shall constitute a settlement in full of the transaction.

"Use of the engine after three days, or failure to give written notice to said company and its agent, or failure to return the engine as above specified, shall operate as an acceptance of it and a fulfillment of this warranty. No agent has power to change the contract of warranty in any respect and the within order can be canceled only in writing from said company's Winona office.

"This express warranty excludes all implied warranties and said company shall in no event be liable for breach of warranty in an amount exceeding the purchase price of the engine. If within ninety days' time any part proves defective, a new part will be furnished on receipt of part showing defect."

On the 2d day of September, 1912, a tractor was delivered to the defendant at his ranch by Horstman. This, as the defendant testified, was after the harvesting season had ended, and when there was practically no opportunity for testing out the tractor as fully as was desirable and necessary.

There is, in point of fact, no dispute as to the proposition that there were material differences in mechanical construction between the engine purchased by the defendant and which the plaintiff agreed to furnish him with and the engine actually delivered. But, for the purpose not only of showing the differences referred to but that from the time, approximately, that the engine was received by the defendant, he was dissatisfied therewith and protested, as he continued thereafter to protest, against accepting the tractor upon the ground that it was not the machine he had bargained for, we will here present a brief statement of his testimony with regard to the transaction, as follows: He stated:

That the engine delivered was not the character of engine ordered by him as represented by the diagram and catalogue exhibited to him by Horstman. That the radiator held 24½ gallons of water instead of 60. That the engine delivered had no muffler over the exhaust pipes, there being nothing "to protect ripe grain from being burned from the cinders from the exhaust. The sparks shot from the exhaust free and clear. The main oiling system in the main pump was supposed to be in the cab, in front of the operator of the engine, in plain sight at all times, and upon examination I found this oiler was down under the hood, alongside of the cylinders and in grease where it was impossible to see it without stopping the engine, raising up the hood, and wiping off the grease, and using some artificial light to see if the oil was running. In the engine ordered this particular oil was to be in the cab in sight of the operator at all times, so that he could know that the main bearings were getting oil at all times. * * * The gears were supposed to be entirely inclosed in a case to exclude all dust from getting in the oil and among the gears, and upon examination I found there was an opening alongside of the gears on both sides, under the hood, where the dust from the fan, driving past the cylinders, would finally end up in this case where these gears revolved, and did not give any protection to speak of from any dust flying at all; the fan drove the dust back to the gears. * * * This was represented not to be the case in the engine ordered—that they were to be inclosed, all incased, and to be protected entirely from the dust. * * * The engine was to have a Kingston carburetor, and on examination we found there was a Bennett carburetor. * * * The fan for cooling air was to be a gear-driven fan, was not to have any belts at all, but to connect direct with the engine and drive with gears. It was described in the catalogue as a direct, gear-driven fan, and when the engine arrived it was found to have a belt drive with spring tightener. * * * There was an apparent defect in the wheels. The spokes were loose in the rim."

Accompanying Horstman, when the engine was delivered to defendant, was a Mr. Muir, an expert sent by the Pioneer Tractor Company, to demonstrate it. On the next day, Muir, driving the tractor, took it out into a field with some plows and operated it for two hours or more, and it was then placed in a shed on defendant's premises. At the time of the delivery to defendant, he called the attention of Horstman to the differences between the engine he received and the one he expected to receive. As to the radiator, Horstman stated that he was confident it would keep the engine cool, but that "if it didn't they would put on a larger radiator. * * * He said the only way to find out was to try it out in harvest." The witness stated:

"I told him I didn't want it the way it was. It was not the engine I had picked out on the catalogue, and I didn't think it would work at all, and I wouldn't take it under those conditions. * * * They put it in the shed on the ranch and left it there."

There is evidence that Horstman and the plaintiff attempted to reason with defendant and show him that by proper handling the tractor would do the work and so come up to the warranted test as to capacity and durability, and that thus the defendant was persuaded to give it a further trial. Accordingly, on the 24th day of September, 1912, defendant made a cash payment of $1,500 and executed and delivered to Horstman the note sued upon; it being made payable on August 1, 1913, which would be after the harvest season of 1913. After the trial made by Muir in the early part of September, no attempt was made to use the tractor until November, when defendant took it out for the purpose of plowing. He testified:

"After I got the engine started, I had difficulty in keeping it running. The ignition did not seem to work well, and the fan gave me considerable trouble. * * * The shift gears would not work well. I worked with it several days, plowing, or trying to plow, and finally parts of it began to go to pieces. The fans broke. I had to go down and get a fan belt in town, and the magneto went out of commission entirely from no cause that I could see, and I took the magneto down to San Francisco and got another one. Then I got an engineer to help me on the engine, and the two of us worked with it and fought it, and we got the engine finally to go a little piece. * * * Then the engine broke down. * * * It took me a week to plow a piece that should have been plowed in two days. The fan belt proposition went to pieces, the fan belt and the bearings that run this shaft. * * * We took those to Colusa and had them rebabbitted. * * * Then the wheels began to develop defective. The spokes were loose, and that caused a crystallization in the rim, and each spoke in the rim split out clear from the spoke to the outside of the rim, and when we brought the engine in it had something like 24 or 25 cracks across the rim. * * * We took it back to the shed, and on the way home the fan belt and gears went all to pieces."

Some rims were shipped to him by plaintiff and were put on the tractor by a man representing plaintiff, who also rebabbitted the bearings on the fan shaft.

In November, 1913, defendant attempted to harrow with the tractor, but there was a recurrence of the troubles he had theretofore had; the spokes getting loose, making it necessary to get new ones, the connecting rods not staying tight, the fan belt breaking, the shift gears giving trouble, the engine heating, and the magneto giving trouble so that he ran on the battery. He finished his harrowing with mules and put the tractor back in the shed. On the 14th of May, 1914, he started to do some grading, and on the way to the field with the tractor the clutch broke. He sent to plaintiff for a new disc, which came on May 25th. He still had trouble with the engine, and, after doing about one-third of the grading, he discontinued the work. In June he hired an engineer, and they worked 10 or 15 days on the engine, and he then hired another engineer to inspect it. They commenced harvesting, and, on the third day, "everything went to pieces, and we opened it up, and the crank shaft and connecting rods and everything were in a pile." He telegraphed plaintiff for another crank shaft, which came to him after a long delay and after he had tried to have the old one welded in Sacramento. He hired an expert mechanic to set the crank shaft, and the engine was put back "in practically as good condition as it could be put." The next day the engine commenced to heat, and sometimes two-thirds of the day was lost waiting for the engine to get cool. The harvesting, which lasted from June 9th to July 23d, was not successful; the witness stating that he probably lost half of each day on account of the engine. Then defendant tried to use the engine for pumping water for irrigating an orchard, but could not keep it cool, and after two or three days he took it back to the shed. On the way there, while running on a county road, the front axle broke. He had this repaired and then placed the tractor in the same place in the shed where it had been left by Horstman at the time of its delivery to defendant.

Expert testimony introduced by defendant tended to show that the construction of the engine was not proper in certain specified particulars, and the engineer sent by plaintiff to work on the tractor stated, on cross-examination, that "it was essential that the fan construction should be improved and changed to make it of any practical value," and that the mechanical construction of the engine should be changed.

Certain correspondence was introduced in evidence. The first letter in the record is dated Ventura, November 20, 1912, written by plaintiff to defendant, and refers to a letter theretofore received from defendant in regard to "spikes for wheels."

On December 26, 1912, defendant wrote plaintiff as follows:

"The engine (Pioneer 30) which I purchased from you by contract has proved to be far from satisfactory, and along with that your company, through Mr. Charles Horstman, have misrepresented things to me. The engine is not built for the work intended or for any durability. It is now out of commission. I have asked you people to send your mechanic, but no answer; have asked you to send extras from your shops at Ventura, instead I am compelled to pay express on extras from Ind., not getting what I asked for, have to have the extras made here at the foundry or any other place at a great expense. Therefore, according to our agreement the engine is yours. I hereby cancel the payment of the note given you in payment of the engine. I ask you to send your representative here and inspect the engine, and you will find what I tell you is the truth. The engine is at your disposal. I am stuck with a contract which your engine should do but is unable to finish."

Plaintiff replied to the above letter, stating:

"We feel confident your trouble lies in the fact that you do not know how to take care of the engine properly. If you had the right kind of an engineer on the machine, there would be nothing wrong with it."

It was further stated that Mr. Horstman would call upon defendant.

On January 8, 1913, Horstman wrote to defendant:

"Have sent off several wires yesterday to get some definite line-up from the Pioneer people with regard to their decision in the broken engine wheels."

The following letter, dated January 10, 1913, was sent to defendant by plaintiff:

"We are in receipt of a letter from our Mr. Horstman stating that the wheels on the engine we sold you have cracked in several places. We at once took this matter up with the factory, advising them of the condition of the wheels, etc., and informed them that they would have to make these wheels good. The reply we received from them was that the breaking of the wheels was due to the carelessness of the engineer in not keeping the turn buckles or spokes tight, they also stated that they would furnish some extra heavy rims for this engine free of charge. * * * Mr. Horstman also reports that the other troubles you had on the engine did not amount to anything, as on all gasoline engines you may expect more or less minor troubles. * * *"

The defendant, on March 8, 1913, wrote to plaintiff a long letter, calling attention to alleged representations by Horstman regarding the engine, recapitulating particulars in which it had proven defective and demanding the return of the $1,500 paid by him and the cancellation of the note.

On March 27th, the plaintiff replied to the above letter, stating, among other things:

"When you signed the note, this was an acceptance of the engine. As for the note, it is out of our possession. You will take particular notice of the warranty on the back of the contract, which stated that 'no agent has the power to change the contract of warranty in any respect.' * * * We are well satisfied it is no fault of the engine that it was in the condition it was in."

Other correspondence followed, showing that defendant had gone to Ventura to endeavor to effect some sort of settlement, and, on September 9, 1913, defendant wrote to plaintiff again demanding the return of the money paid by him and the note, "or deliver to me an engine of equal value that will do the work fully guaranteed to my satisfaction."

The defendant explained, and the written correspondence above referred to corroborated him in that particular, that he made repeated trials of the tractor upon the solicitation and persuasion of Horstman, after in the first instance, and the several times thereafter, he notified Horstman and the plaintiff that the machine was not the one which the latter agreed to deliver to him and that the one delivered had failed, after the several trials, to meet the warranted test.

Appellant relies upon the terms of the written warranty, denies that Horstman agreed that defendant might make a trial of the engine, but insists that if he did do so his agency was not proven, and that the contract itself expressly provides that no agent shall modify its terms.

First, it is proper to observe that the transaction out of which this controversy arises was wholly between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the assumption by the plaintiff, in its argument of the points submitted in support of this appeal, that the transaction was one between the Pioneer Tractor Company, the manufacturer of the tractor in question, and defendant, cannot be maintained. By this statement we mean to say that the verdict, which is amply supported, is conclusive upon that question. The order or agreement is addressed to the plaintiff, and the initial language thereof is:

"The undersigned (defendant) * * * hereby purchases of you, subject to all conditions of agreement and warranty printed on back of this order and made a part hereof, * * * 'one 30 H. P. Pioneer Tractor gas or gasoline engine.'"

The agreement or order further provides that:

"Said engine shall remain and be held by the undersigned (defendant) as your (plaintiff's) exclusive property until the purchase money shall have been paid."

The evidence further shows that the transaction, so far as the seller was concerned, was from its beginning to and including the time at which this action was instituted, wholly and solely, and without any interposition whatever by the Pioneer Tractor Company, conducted by the plaintiff. Moreover, the promissory note executed by the defendant for the balance of the purchase price after a cash payment by the defendant of $1,500 had been made was made to and in favor of and in the name of the plaintiff. Furthermore, the note declared upon itself states that the consideration therefor is:

"That the said Ventura Manufacturing & Implement Company has agreed and promised that upon payment of said note, principal and interest, at maturity, * * * they will sell and transfer to the undersigned (defendant), at the price of said principal and interest, the thirty H. P. Pioneer Tractor which the said Ventura Manufacturing & Implement Company has this day entrusted to the care of the undersigned."

Again, the note reads:

"It is admitted and agreed that the said property so intrusted is the property of the said Ventura Manufacturing & Implement Company, and shall remain in them until they shall make the aforesaid sale and transfer," etc.

But the contention is vigorously pressed that, assuming that the transaction was between the plaintiff and the defendant, there is no evidence showing that Horstman gave the defendant the right of any further trial of the engine for the purpose of testing its efficiency for the purposes for which it was intended and bought by the defendant than was expressly provided for in the warranty. It is further contended that, even if it had been made to appear that Horstman did allow the defendant such further trial of the engine, there is no evidence showing that he had authority to do so, and that therefore in doing so he exceeded his authority as agent and violated the provision of the warranty that:

"No agent has the power to change the contract of warranty in any respect, and the written order can be canceled only in writing from said company's Winona office."

The theory upon which the defendant sought to present the case at the trial in the court below was that, the tractor delivered not being the one which the plaintiff agreed to deliver to the defendant, the negotiations between Horstman and the defendant as to the tractor delivered constituted a new contract, and that oral testimony disclosing the terms and conditions of such contract was necessary and proper. The trial court held that the defendant's pleadings failed to set up a new contract, but relied upon the original order and warranty and therefore excluded testimony of a new contract. But we do not regard this as important in this case. The testimony, we think, very clearly shows: (1) That Horstman had the authority, as the plaintiff's sales agent, to give the defendant further opportunity to try out the engine; (2) that he did do so; (3) that the tractor delivered to the defendant failed to do the work for which such a machine is intended; (4) that it must be held that, under all the circumstances of the case the defendant duly notified the plaintiff that the tractor was a failure and would not satisfactorily perform the work for which it was intended.

[1] The third proposition above stated is, we think, abundantly supported by the evidence to some of which we have specially referred above. We need not, therefore, reproduce herein upon that question further or other testimony of which there is an abundance.

[2, 3] That Horstman was a sales agent of the plaintiff, and as such authorized to negotiate a sale of the tractor to the defendant, is not disputed, but in fact, admitted; and, under the state of this record, the verdict of the jury is conclusive upon the question of the extent of his authority in the negotiation of the transaction involved herein. In other words, the credibility of witnesses or the weight to be attached to the testimony being entirely a question for jury, we may therefore accept the bare record as conclusive upon all questions of fact upon which there is therein testimony not inherently untruthful or improbable; and, so viewing the record before us, we have found no reason for saying that the jury were not amply justified in finding, as from the verdict we must presume that they did find, that everything that Horstman did and said with respect to this transaction, from the time he procured from the defendant the order of June 22, 1912, for the tractor, until the defendant finally notified the plaintiff of his rescission of the contract and returned the machine to the place where the plaintiff delivered it, was done for the purpose of consummating an uncompleted sale of the tractor.

[4, 5] We may, however, refer to some of the testimony which tends strongly to show that Horstman had authority to make any arrangements with defendant that his judgment might dictate. Although the written order for the tractor was executed by the defendant and delivered by him to the plaintiff on June 22, 1912, the tractor was not delivered until the month of September of that year, which was after the end of the harvest season and at a time, when a proper test of the engine could not well be made. The cash payment was made and the note for the balance of the purchase price given at the time of the delivery of the engine; and, although the written order of June 22d expressly provided that the note should be made payable on November 15, 1912, the said note, upon the consent of Horstman, was made payable August 1, 1913, which, as is obvious, was at a time of the year when the harvesting season was well near an end. The plaintiff accepted the cash payment and the note. The extension of the time of payment of the note beyond the harvesting season of 1913 and the acceptance by the plaintiff of the new arrangement so made by Horstman are circumstances which tend in some degree to show that Horstman had general authority as a sales agent of the plaintiff, and to show further that he not only did extend the time for a trial of the tractor by the defendant, but that, as the plaintiff's agent, he had full authority to do so. But there is other testimony warranting the conclusion that Horstman, although only an agent for a special purpose, had general authority as such agent and was authorized to do all that was in his judgment required to consummate a sale of the machine to the defendant. We need not present herein an extended statement of said testimony. It is enough to say that, as seen, it was shown: That, because the engine was not the one which the plaintiff agreed to deliver—that is, it was in many important particulars different in mechanical construction from the one agreed to be delivered—the defendant objected to accepting it. That Horstman, after some reasoning with the defendant, persuaded the latter to give it a trial to see if it would not do the work which it was represented the engine bargained for would do. That prior to the month of December, 1912, the defendant did give it a trial, and that it failed to meet the test or the representations as to the engine the plaintiff agreed to deliver. That defendant, on the 26th day of December, 1912, addressed a letter to the plaintiff, stating that the engine had "proved to be far from satisfactory. * * * The engine is not built for the work intended or for any durability. It is now out of commission. I have asked you people to send your mechanic, but no answer." And in said letter asked for a cancellation of his note and return of the money paid down when he received the tractor. That Horstman, after some further reasoning with the defendant, induced the latter to give it a further trial. That from the very beginning of the repeated trials by defendant, parts of the engine broke or proved to be defective or incapable of the performance of their respective mechanical functions. That, from time to time, as the breakages occurred, or as the machine in certain particulars was upon repeated tests shown to be so defectively constructed as to render it inefficient for the purpose for which it was intended, the defendant notified the plaintiff thereof, insisted that the engine was a failure, and refused to accept it. That the plaintiff and (on one occasion) the manufacturer supplied the broken parts of the engine with new parts. That the plaintiff sent an expert to the ranch of the defendant to assist in giving the engine a proper test. That Horstman on numerous occasions urged defendant to give the machine a fair and further trial before refusing to accept the engine. In brief, the jury were well within the testimony adduced in finding, as their verdict implies that they did find, that the engine never at any time measured up to the warranted test; that the defendant never at any time unconditionally accepted it; that the whole transaction was at all times, after the engine was delivered to defendant, the subject of controversy between the latter on the one side and Horstman and the plaintiff on the other, founded upon repeated complaints by the defendant of the unsatisfactory work of the engine and his refusal to accept the machine.

[6-8] It will not, of course, be disputed that the failure of the engine to come up to the standard for efficiency and durability represented and warranted by the plaintiff constituted a breach of the warranty. That it did wholly fail to come up to that standard, the evidence strongly tends to show. Nor will it be doubted that there is evidence warranting the implied finding that Horstman was a general sales agent of the plaintiff, vested with full authority to do whatever was reasonably requisite to effect a sale of the machine to the defendant; that, as such agent, he was authorized to waive any of the conditions of the original contract and waive written notice by the defendant of the defective and unsatisfactory operation of the tractor; and that he did, if, indeed, the plaintiff itself did not, waive the condition specified in the written order as to the time within which the defendant was to be restricted in trying out or testing the efficiency of the engine. In fact, as before suggested, the written order did not involve an unconditional agreement of sale, and the fact that the engine delivered was in material particulars different in mechanical construction from the one which the plaintiff agreed to deliver, and the further fact that it was delivered, through no fault of the defendant, at a season of the year when a satisfactory test of the tractor was impracticable, themselves necessarily operated to entitle the defendant to a reasonable time beyond that prescribed in the order, and under conditions more favorable for that purpose than existed at the time of delivery, to put the engine to a proper test.

A case in its facts substantially like this is that of Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Kennedy, 7 Ind. App. 502, 34 N. E. 856. It was there contended that the findings did not show that the agent of the plaintiff who sold a steam separator to the defendant was the general agent of the plaintiff, and therefore was without authority to waive conditions in the contract of warranty. The court, replying to that contention, said:

"Mitchner was the agent of the plaintiff to make sales of its machinery, and at the time he received the notice of the defects in the separator, and made the attempt to remedy the same, the findings show that he was the authorized agent of the plaintiff. All that he did, and caused to be done, in relation to remedying the defects, and the promises made by him, were in the line of perfecting and completing the sale. (Italics ours.) The contract made, in the first instance, was not an unconditional contract for the sale of the machine. The defendants had the right to return it if unsatisfactory. It is a familiar rule that notice to an agent is notice to the principal of any matter that is within the scope of the agency. In Railway v. Ruby, 38 Ind. 294 [10 Am. Rep. 111], it was held that 'notice to an agent of a corporation, relating to any matter of which he has the management and control, is notice to the corporation.' This rule is peculiarly applicable to foreign corporations doing business in this state. Insurance Co. v. Hinesley, 75 Ind. 1; Insurance Co. v. Crutchfield, 108 Ind. 518, 9 N. E. 458. The terms 'general agent' and 'special agent' are relative. An agent may have power to act for his principal in all matters. He is then strictly a general agent. He may have power to act for him in particular matters. He is then a special agent. But within the scope of such particular matters his powers may be general and with reference thereto he is a general agent. Mitchner was authorized to make sales of plaintiff's machinery in certain localities. His powers for that purpose were general, and with reference thereto he was a general agent. As such, he received notice of the defects in said machinery, and notice to him was notice to the principal. His subsequent acts and promises were in the line of perfecting the sale. We think he had the right to waive the written notice required by the contract and of the other stipulations therein contained which were for the benefit of appellant. * * * We find no reversible error in the record. Judgment affirmed, at costs of appellant."

See, also, Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Machine Co., 97 Iowa, 148, 66 N. W. 96, 59 Am. St. Rep. 399; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 375, 47 N. W. 70; Hull v. Prairie Queen Mfg. Co., 92 Kan. 538, 141 Pac. 592; Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9; First Nat. Bank v. Dutcher, 128 Iowa, 413, 104 N. W. 497, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142; Harrison v. Russell, 12 Idaho, 624, 87 Pac. 784; Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Feary, 22 Neb. 53, 33 N. W. 485; McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Dodkins, 73 S. W. 1129, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 2306; Luitweiler P. E. Co. v. Ukiah W. & I. Co., 16 Cal. App. 198, 116 Pac. 707, 712.

[9-12] Summarizing the conclusions announced in the above cases, whose facts are quite similar to those of the case at bar, they are: (1) That the question of a breach of warranty such as the one involved in this case is, upon conflicting evidence, one for the jury. (2) That where, in such case, there is a requirement in the contract that notice of the failure of the machine to work properly must be given within a specified time after its receipt, such notice is waived by the continued and persistent efforts of the seller's agents, including the one who made the sale, to make the machine work after the expiration of the time limited. (3) That, under such facts as are present here, a sales agent's authority extends to all such acts as are properly connected with the sale and delivery of the machine; hence his authority does not stop when the proposed vendee first takes the machine on trial, but continues until the sale should either be completed or the machine returned without any sale being made. (4) That, although the contract of sale stipulates that the purchaser shall give written notice to the seller of any defects in the machinery purchased, and in effect provides that the failure to give such notice shall constitute a waiver of any breach of warranty, if the agent of the seller is present at the trial of the machine, and in this manner has knowledge that the machine is not performing according to warranty, the provision as to notice is waived.

As above stated, the facts of this case bring it well within the doctrines above enunciated. There is therefore no ground for the contention of the plaintiff that the acts of Horstman with reference to the transaction after the execution of the order by defendant had the effect of modifying or altering the terms of said order or of introducing a new term therein.

[13] It is claimed that the ruling allowing in evidence the catalogues and photographs, published by the plaintiff, showing the character and mechanism of the tractor referred to in the written order and which were exhibited to the defendant by Horstman when he first opened negotiations for a sale of the engine to defendant, was erroneous and prejudicial. The point is devoid of merit. The written order does not contain a detailed description of the machine bargained for in the first instance, and it was proper to show that the defendant was induced by the representations contained in the plaintiff's catalogue and photograph of the machine to enter into the agreement. Luitweiler, etc., Co. v. Ukiah, etc., Co., 16 Cal. App. 198, 210, 116 Pac. 707, 712.

There are other rulings as to evidence admitted against objection by the plaintiff which it is claimed involved error and seriously affected plaintiff's rights. We will not give these special notice herein. It is sufficient to say that we have carefully considered them and are convinced that they could not have had the effect of damaging the plaintiff's rights, even if it be true that some were without legal justification.

It is further complained that the court committed serious error in some of the instructions submitted for the jury's guidance in considering the evidence. The instructions referred to, it is insisted, erroneously stated and assumed: (1) That the plaintiff warranted the engine, whereas, so it is contended, the warranty is the warranty of the Pioneer Tractor Company, the maker of the engine. (2) That the written warranty could be waived by the plaintiff. (3) That the jury were authorized to consider any evidence tending to show that after difficulties arose in the operation of the engine the agent of plaintiff induced the defendant to make further trial thereof after the time limited by the warranty.

[14] All the above propositions have already been considered and disposed of herein. It may be added, however, referring to the first of the stated objections under this head, that the warranty of the Pioneer Company is, in the very nature of the situation as disclosed by the record, the warranty of the plaintiff. The latter, as the general distributing agent in California of the former, has necessarily assumed as such agent all the burdens and conditions of the warranty; this being shown by the undisputed fact that the contract as to the particular tractor in question is between the plaintiff and the defendant and not between the Pioneer Company and the defendant.

[15] As to the point that the defendant does not plead a waiver, and hence the case was tried upon an erroneous theory, the reply is that, while neither in the answer nor cross-complaint is there a waiver specifically pleaded, all the facts of the transaction, from its inception to its finish, are set out in both those pleadings of the defendant, and from them the implication irresistibly follows that there was a waiver by the plaintiff of the condition in the warranty as to the time for trying out the machine.

We have found no reason for disturbing the result arrived at in the court below, and the judgment is, accordingly, affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

DOTY v. CALIFORNIA RICE MILLING CO. et al. (Civ. 1840.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 5, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 1, 1918.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸13 — CONTRACT—CONSIDERATION.

Sale of land on agreement to convey an interest in a corporation to the value of $5,000, in its fully paid-up stock, to be 100 shares, with a par value $100 per share, based on an incorporation of $100,000, is not for $5,000 to be paid in money.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸267—VENDOR'S LIEN—PAYMENT OF PRICE.

Civ. Code, § 3046, giving a vendor's lien for so much of price as remains unpaid, does not avail a vendor, where the price is shares of stock, and a certificate therefor, issued in his name and under the agreement, was put in escrow as security for his paying off the incumbrance on land; he thereby being paid the price.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸267 — VENDOR'S LIEN—RIGHT TO LIEN.

Where sale of land is for shares of stock in corporation, certificate for which is issued to vendor and put in escrow as security for his discharging incumbrances, no right to vendor's lien inures to him because of corporation selling its property to another corporation for some of its stock, certificates for part of which are likewise issued to him and placed in escrow, all with his consent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by W. M. Doty against the California Rice Milling Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant California Rice Mills, Incorporated, appeals. Reversed.

Norman A. Eisner and Cushing & Cushing, all of San Francisco, and George F. Jones, of Oroville, for appellant. W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to enforce a vendor's lien upon certain real estate situated in the town of Biggs, Butte county. It is alleged in the complaint: That on November 27, 1912, plaintiff executed and delivered to California Fruit Canners' Association, a corporation, a mortgage upon said real property to secure the payment by plaintiff to said canners' association of the sum of $2,500, payable as follows: $500 on January 1, 1913; $500 December 1, 1913; $500 December 1, 1914; $500 December 1, 1915; and the remaining $500 December 1, 1916, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, which said mortgage was duly recorded May 15, 1913. That on December 1, 1913, "plaintiff did for the price or consideration of $5,000 to be paid to him by said defendant California Rice Milling Company, grant, sell, and transfer to wit the above-described real property"; that said Rice Milling Company was incorporated on September 11, 1913, with a capital stock of $100,000, divided into 1,000 shares and that at the time of the execution and delivery of said deed the said capital stock of said defendant California Rice Milling Company was reasonably worth $50 per share; "and it was then and there agreed by and between plaintiff and said defendant California Rice Milling Company that plaintiff should be paid the selling price of said lands in said sum of $5,000 by said defendant California Rice Milling Company, by the issuance by it to plaintiff of 100 shares of its said capital stock aforesaid." That at the time of the execution of said deed there was still due and unpaid on said mortgage to said canners' association the sum of $2,000; "and it was understood and agreed by and between plaintiff and said defendant California Rice Milling Company that a certificate of the capital stock of the corporation should be issued in the name of plaintiff for 100 shares as aforesaid, and deposited with Sacramento Valley Bank at Biggs, Butte county, Cal., to be by said bank retained and held until the final payment by plaintiff of all moneys secured by said mortgage aforesaid, whereupon said stock was to be delivered over to plaintiff; and said defendant California Rice Milling Company did forthwith, on or about said 1st day of December, 1913, cause to be issued in the name of plaintiff its certificate No. 7 for 100 shares of its said capital stock, and did place the same in and with said Sacramento Valley Bank, which received the same, all in accordance with said agreement aforesaid." That thereafter and until the 12th day of November, 1914, plaintiff duly performed all acts and conditions on his part to be performed and paid installments upon said mortgage required by him to be paid up to and including said 12th day of November, 1914, and "that up to said 12th day of November, 1914, the capital stock of said defendant California Rice Milling Company was and continued to be of the same reasonable value of $50 per share." That on said last-named date the said Rice Milling Company transferred all of said real property, together with all of its property of every kind and nature, to the defendant California Rice Mills, Incorporated, "and thereby said defendant California Rice Mills, Incorporated, received, absorbed, gobbled up, and gathered to itself all of the property of said defendant California Rice Milling Company, and thereby rendered the capital stock of said California Rice Milling Company, including that issued to plaintiff as aforesaid, and still in said Sacramento Valley Bank, utterly worthless and of no value whatsoever, and all of said stock has ever since continued to be, and still is, wholly worthless and valueless." That at the time of said transfer to said defendant California Rice Mills, Incorporated, defendant "had full knowledge of plaintiff's rights in and to said real property, and of all the matters and things in the first eight paragraphs in this complaint set forth" referring to the foregoing averments.

It is then alleged that defendant California Rice Mills, Incorporated, was incorporated on November 6, 1914, with a capital stock at and since its incorporation of $250,000, divided into 2,500 shares, and, after receiving said transfer of said property on November 16, 1914, defendant issued its certificate No. 6 for 100 shares of its capital stock to plaintiff, "and sent the same to said Sacramento Valley Bank for the purpose, as plaintiff is informed, believes, and therefore alleges, of having the same substituted in the place and stead of said 100 shares of stock of said California Rice Milling Company, placed there as aforesaid for this plaintiff under the terms and conditions heretofore in this complaint set forth." That plaintiff has at all times declined to accept the said substitution of said 100 shares of said Rice Mills, Incorporated, in lieu of said 100 shares of said defendant Rice Milling Company, "and never consented in any way to or approved of said transfer of property from said California Rice Milling Company, to said California Rice Mills, Incorporated." That both of said certificates still "remain in charge of said bank, and plaintiff has never received any thereof." That since the execution of said deed by plaintiff on December 1, 1913, plaintiff has performed all covenants and agreements undertaken by him to be performed in connection with all the matters in said complaint set forth, and he has made all payments to said California Fruit Canners' Association which have thus far become due, "excepting only the payment falling due on the 1st day of December, 1914, and as to that payment he has, by arrangement with said California Fruit Canners' Association, obtained forbearance and extension until such reasonable time as he can adjust his affairs, and meet and pay the same, and he is now ready, willing, and able to pay all moneys now due and unpaid upon said mortgage indebtedness, as well as all future payments required to be paid upon the same up to and including the last payment becoming due and payable as aforesaid, on the 1st day of December, 1916." (The complaint was filed April 15, 1915.)

It is further alleged, on information and belief, that since November 12, 1914, defendant Rice Mills, Incorporated, "has become and now is insolvent, its business and affairs in process of liquidation, and all of its capital stock, including that placed as aforesaid in and with said Sacramento Valley Bank utterly worthless and of no value whatsoever." It is further alleged that plaintiff has at no time ever been a stockholder of, owned any stock in, or had anything to do with the management of either of said corporations, and that "plaintiff has received nothing whatsoever for his said transfer of said lands and premises in this complaint described, and the whole consideration therefor in the said sum of $5,000 still remains unpaid, and at all times since said transfer has remained, and still remains, unsecured, and the whole thereof will become due and payable to plaintiff at and upon the full and final payment of said mortgage indebtedness to said California Fruit Canners' Association aforesaid."

The prayer is for a vendor's lien upon all the lands and premises in the complaint described, "together with their improvements and appurtenances as security for the payment to him of the said selling price of said lands and premises in said sum of $5,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum since the 1st day of December, 1913, and for costs of suit," and that after said lien has been decreed, the same may be enforced by foreclosure and sale of said premises, "and the proceeds of said sale be applied towards the payment of the amount found due and unpaid to plaintiff and secured by said lien, together with interest, expenses of sale, and costs of suit; that said certificates of stock in said Sacramento Valley Bank, as aforesaid, be ordered returned to the respective defendants, causing the issuance of same; and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet and agreeable to equity."

A general demurrer to the complaint by the Rice Mills, Incorporated, was overruled, and it answered generally and specifically, and also by cross-complaint. Briefly stated, it denied that plaintiff conveyed the property upon any consideration other than 100 shares of the capital stock of the California Rice Milling Company, which was duly issued to respondent, and alleges that the transfer of the property of that company to appellant was upon valuable and adequate consideration, and that the value of the stock of that company was not in any way diminished by reason of the transfer to the Rice Mills, Incorporated. As separate defenses, alleged that it is the purchaser of the property for value and without notice of any claim of plaintiff; that plaintiff executed to appellant a quitclaim deed for the property, and that plaintiff agreed in writing to accept stock of this defendant in lieu of the stock of the California Rice Milling Company, which stock was duly issued by this defendant.

In an amended and supplemental cross-complaint, this defendant alleged that plaintiff agreed to convey the property free of incumbrances, and that, notwithstanding plaintiff had mortgaged the property and by reason of plaintiff's failure to pay the same and in order to prevent a foreclosure, this defendant was required to pay plaintiff's mortgage. The prayer is that plaintiff take nothing by this complaint, and that defendant recover the mortgage payments made by it.

The lower court granted judgment for plaintiff, fixing a vendor's lien upon the property to the amount of $4,795, being the principal, $5,000, and interest from date of conveyance, less the mortgage payment, $1,103.29, made by this defendant. The judgment also ran against "the defendants W. J. Matson, George F. Braun, and Charles E. Hale, as trustees for the stockholders of California Rice Milling Company, a dissolved corporation." These defendants have also appealed from the judgment, and their appeal is brought up upon another record, Civil No. 1854. The California Rice Mills, Incorporated, is the sole appellant herein. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and the court made findings of fact substantially as alleged in the complaint.

It is found that plaintiff did not waive his right of a vendor's lien upon said property, but that on September 2, 1913, he executed and delivered to defendant Rice Milling Company on that day that certain agreement annexed to the answer as Exhibit A. (This is an agreement of lease by plaintiff to Charles E. Hale Company of the premises, including an agreement to sell the property to lessees or assigns at a price agreed upon, but not stated in the agreement, "free and clear from all incumbrances.") It is also found that plaintiff and said Hale Company entered into certain other agreements referred to in defendant's answer as Exhibits B and C. Exhibit B is dated September 5, 1913, and is an agreement of plaintiff, first party, to sell said premises to said Hale Company, second party, and contains the following provision:

"And the party of the second part, * * * agrees to and with the party of the first part that the party of the second part will convey without further compensation to the party of the first part, or his assigns, an interest in the Rice Milling Company owned and controlled by the party of the second part, or its assigns, to the value of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars, in full paid-up stock in the said Rice Milling Company of the party of the second part. Said fully paid-up stock to be one hundred (100) shares, with a par value of one hundred ($100.-00) dollars per share, based on an incorporation of one hundred thousand dollars."

Exhibit C is dated September 5, 1913, and acknowledges the receipt by plaintiff from Chas. E. Hale Company, Incorporated, of $10 "as part payment for the following described real property," the premises in question, and further states:

"The entire price to be paid for said above described real property is $5,000.00 (five thousand 00/100 dollars), and to be paid as follows: As written and stated in document called 'Agreement' and signed by Wm. M. Doty, Esq., of Biggs, California, known as party of the first part, and the Charles E. Hale Co., Inc., of San Francisco, Cal., known as the party of the second part, and which document called 'Agreement' is hereby made part of this 'Contract.' Ex. B. Title to be perfect; search of the same to be made; deed to be executed and delivered by the said Wm. M. Doty, Esq., to the Charles E. Hale Company, Inc., or its assigns on or before the second (2d) day of September, A. D. 1915, together with an abstract showing a merchantable title. Said above-described parcel of real property at time of execution of deed to be free and clear of all incumbrances of every name and kind, whatsoever. Provided, however, that the payment of amount as stated in document (called 'Agreement') is paid at said date, but if not paid on or before the said second (2d) day of September, A D. 1915, then this contract to be of no effect, and in that event the said $10.00 ten dollars to be retained by Wm. M. Doty, Esq., as liquidated damages. Time is of the essence of this contract."

It is further found that on November 12, 1914, when the Rice Milling Company conveyed said property to defendant Rice Mills, Incorporated, "the latter paid to the former a valuable consideration for the lands, premises and property conveyed." It is found that:

"Chas. E. Hale Company was in fact the predecessor and promoter of the defendant California Rice Milling Company, and on or about the 29th day of September, 1913, said Charles E. Hale Company did transfer all of said agreements referred to as Exhibits A, B, and C, respectively, to the defendant California Rice Milling Company, and the said deed executed by plaintiff on the 1st (2d) day of September, 1913, as aforesaid, followed and was in accordance with the provisions of said Exhibit B." That defendants Matson, Hale, and Braun, trustees of said dissolved corporation, defendant Rice Milling Company, assigned and transferred to the Rice Mills, Incorporated, said agreements A, B, and C, and to prevent foreclosure, said Rice Mills, Incorporated, on October 12, 1915, paid to the mortgagee, California Fruit Canners' Association, upon the debt secured by said mortgage, $500 principal and $94.79 interest, being the installment due December 1, 1914, and interest on whole amount unpaid, and on December 6, 1916, it paid another installment of $500 and interest falling due December 1, 1915, leaving the remaining installment of $500 payable December 1, 1916.

As conclusions of law the court found that plaintiff is entitled to judgment against defendants for the sum of $5,000 and interest from December 1, 1913, at 7 per cent. per annum, less the payments made by defendant Rice Mills, Incorporated, leaving the amount of the judgment at $4,795, provided if defendants, or any of them, should pay the balance due on said mortgage in the sum of $500 and interest falling due December 1, 1915, such amount shall be deducted from said sum of $4,795; that plaintiff is entitled to a vendor's lien upon said lands and premises, and that the same be foreclosed and the property sold to pay said sums, but no deficiency judgment to be docketed. Judgment followed accordingly.

Plaintiff was engaged in merchandizing in the town of Biggs, and purchased the property in question from the California Fruit Canners' Association November 30, 1912, the consideration being $2,500, of which $500 was paid about the time of purchase and the balance was to be paid in installments for which promissory notes were given of $500 each, payable as shown in the mortgage mentioned in the pleadings and findings. At the time there was an old building on the land, very much dilapidated and of little value in its then condition.

Chas. E. Hale Company, a corporation, was carrying on a wholesale grocery and bakers' supply business in San Francisco, and conceived the plan of establishing a rice milling establishment at the town of Biggs. To this end this company entered into negotiations with plaintiff to lease with the privilege of purchasing from him the said premises. These negotiations took written form in the three instruments above referred to, the first dated September 2, 1913, which was a lease with an option to purchase; the second and third were instruments dated September 5, 1913, by which plaintiff agreed to convey the property to the Charles E. Hale Company, the lease being made part of the agreements by reference. It appeared that the original proposition to plaintiff was that the Rice Milling Company should be incorporated for $50,000, on which, as a basis, plaintiff was to have stock of the par value of $5,000. It was later decided to capitalize the company at $100,000, and plaintiff was given stock of the par value of $10,-000. On September 24, 1913, pending negotiations, plaintiff wrote the Hale Company, requesting it to make the sale a cash transaction, the letter reading:

"In looking over the papers and before returning them to you, we would ask if the Chas. E. Hale Co. has passed a resolution authorizing their secretary to sign the various papers that have been submitted to us. We are not attempting to stall you at all, but it is better to get this right than to attempt to correct it later.

Also, would it be agreeable to you to make a cash price on the building should anything happen that would make it practically impossible for us to continue as we now expect to? I am suggesting this as many things may happen in twenty-four months, and submit it to you for your approval or disapproval, as the case may be."

On September 29, 1913, Hale Company replied as follows:

"Referring to your letter of the 24th inst. in which you asked if it would be agreeable to come to some agreement as to a cash price on the building, it will be quite impossible to take up a subject of this kind by correspondence."

On September 30, 1913, plaintiff wrote the Hale Company, again, stating:

"Before returning you the papers asked for by Mr. Barnard this morning, I would like to insert the following: ('or W. M. Doty is to receive cash for the above-mentioned cannery building and grounds, to the amount of $5,000.00; he to have the right of accepting either proposition'). Will you kindly instruct me to have the above inserted in the agreement over our signatures, and oblige yours very truly."

On October 1, 1913, the Hale Company replied, repeating the request made by plaintiff:

"Beg to say we cannot see our way clear to allow you this privilege at this time and consequently your request is respectfully declined. Please deliver the three documents you have in your possession to our Mr. W. E. Barnard on demand, and by so doing very much oblige, yours truly."

And on September 22, 1913, a certificate for 100 shares of the Rice Milling Company stock was issued, signed by Chas. E. Hale, president, and Geo. F. Braun, secretary, which recited that "W. M. Doty is the owner of 100 shares of the capital stock," etc. This certificate was placed in escrow in the Sacramento Valley Bank at Biggs, on or about September 25, 1913, with instructions reading as follows:

"To be indorsed by Mr. W. M. Doty, opened, to be held in escrow by bank until mortgage is paid off by W. M. Doty on cannery property, then stock to be turned over to W. M. Doty. [Signed] California Rice Milling Co., by George F. Braun, Secretary."

Plaintiff went to the bank and indorsed the certificate, leaving it there with the escrow memorandum, and, to conclude the transaction, plaintiff, on December 1, 1913, executed and delivered his deed to the Rice Milling Company of the said premises, and the milling company went into possession, and at once commenced preparing the building for its contemplated uses and the installation of the necessary rice milling machinery. The improvements of the building cost $7,551 and the testimony of Mr. Hale was that the Chas. E. Hale Company had "put in $26,000 actual money," and were responsible for the machinery purchased, making in all about $42,000 contributed by the Hale Company in establishing the plant. The Rice Milling Company operated the plant about 11 months and until about the middle of November, 1914, and, as stated in respondent's brief, "had built up and established in the vicinity a fairly thriving rice milling business."

[1] Before advancing to the second phase of plaintiff's investment, it is perhaps best that we should at this point determine whether or not the finding that respondent conveyed the property for the price of $5,000 to be paid him by the Rice Milling Company is supported by the evidence. It is challenged by appellant, whose contention is that the sole consideration for the conveyance was the shares of the Rice Milling Company's stock. It is not claimed by respondent that any false or misleading representations were made to respondent by any of the promoters of the enterprise, or that there was any fraud in any form practiced upon him, or that any advantage was taken of his ignorance of the promoters' intentions. There was no agreement or representation that the stock of the proposed company should have or continue to have any specified value. Plaintiff seems to have been informed of the object they had in view from the beginning of the negotiations. There is nothing in the language of the instruments, nor in the circumstances surrounding the transaction, nor in the conduct of the parties to warrant the conclusion that a cash payment was contemplated. Had such been the intention of the parties, the natural thing to have done would have been to so express it in some unmistakable written form. They were all men of experience in business affairs, and presumably capable of expressing their intention in simple and plain English in a matter such as this—simple and plain as it was. The enterprise was a legitimate and promising one, and was to be inaugurated and built up at respondent's place of residence and in what was known to be a rice producing neighborhood. The testimony of plaintiff and Mr. Hale was that at its inception the only property or assets the Milling Company had was the land conveyed by respondent to the Milling Company, which respondent valued at $5,000. At that time the value of the company's shares, beyond the value of the land, was purely prospective, and depended on the installation of a plant of sufficient capacity, which the Hale Company was to erect and did erect, and its successful operation. It represented, when completed, an investment, including the land, of about $50,000, and according to respondent's contention his shares represented a value of about $5,000. The value of these shares is, perhaps, not material if the transaction was as respondent contends, and as the court seems to have found, that the sale of the land was for $5,000, to be paid in money, and that the shares issued were but evidences of the company's indebtedness for that amount.

We must look to the written agreements to ascertain what the transaction was, for the negotiations ultimately found expression in them. The provision relied upon is found in the agreement of September 5, 1913, mentioned above as Defendant's Exhibit B, which is that plaintiff will convey to Charles E. Hale Company, or assigns, the property in question, "to the value of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, in full paid-up stock in the said Rice Milling Company of the party of the second part; said fully paid-up stock to be one hundred shares with a par value of one hundred ($100) dollars per share based on incorporation of one hundred thousand dollars." We find ourselves unable to give these agreements a construction that would justify a finding that the Chas. E. Hale Company or the Rice Milling Company, as its assigns, agreed to pay plaintiff $5,000 in money for the property. Plaintiff sought by his letters of September 24th and 29th, noticed above, to have this very provision placed in the agreements as optional with him, but it was expressly refused, and he allowed the shares which had been issued in his name, pursuant to the agreement and with his indorsement of the certificate, to remain in escrow as security for his payment of the mortgage debt resting on the property, the escrow agreement being that the certificate was to remain until the "mortgage was paid off by W. M. Doty on cannery property, then stock to be turned over to W. M. Doty."

[2] Respondent's right to a vendor's lien is to be derived, if at all, from section 3046 of the Civil Code, to wit: "One who sells real property has a vendor's lien independent of possession for so much of the price as remains unpaid and unsecured otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer." Obviously, if the price for the property was paid by the issuance to respondent of said shares, the statute does not apply. Respondent contends that he never was a stockholder in either company; that he never was permitted to have any stock. Appellant contends that under the agreement by which respondent became entitled to 100 shares of stock for his property, he became a fully paid vendor. Authorities are cited to the effect that the agreement to issue stock for the property constituted the respondent a stockholder. For example, in Cook on Corporations, § 52, it is said:

"Any agreement by which a person shows an intention to become a stockholder is sufficient."

Again at page 28:

"Issuance of the certificates of stock is not necessary to constitute one a stockholder or owner of shares in a corporation."

In Garretson v. Pacific Crude Oil Co., 146 Cal. 184, 188, 79 Pac. 838, 840, the court said:

"The fact that the Corbin shares were not issued until after other shares had been issued is immaterial, for the Corbin stock passed upon the completion of the agreement by which the consideration was conveyed to the corporation. Nothing remained to be done but the formal issuance of the certificate, upon which the ownership of the stock did not depend."

See, also, Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117, 121, 28 Pac. 110.

Here, however, the stock was in fact issued. Respondent says:

"Such is the law, but that law has no bearing upon the case at bar. Here we are dealing with this corporation which so far as it was concerned, never permitted respondent to have any stock. In fact it was contemplated that he wouldn't have such stock until December 1, 1916, when the last installment of the mortgage indebtedness must be paid."

The escrow agreement was part of the transaction. Respondent was to convey the property free from incumbrance. There was a mortgage indebtedness resting upon it, and by agreement his shares were placed in escrow as security for his performance and to be delivered to him upon performance. He could at any moment have demanded and would have received the certificate upon payment of the mortgage debt. Respondent interposed no objection to this disposition of the stock, nor could he, since the use made of it was for no other purpose than to secure the performance of his obligation, and was apparently with his consent.

What was said in the case of Greenberg v. California Bituminous Rock Co., 107 Cal. 667, 40 Pac. 1053, would seem appropriate in this case:

"The corporation did not guarantee that the stock should always have a value equal to the then actual or estimated value of the land, or that, if the stock should decline in value, they should be paid in money, or have a vendor's lien as for a money consideration. It certainly could not have been the intention that these parties should sell their land to the corporation for a definite number of shares of its capital stock, and that they might leave their stock unissued in the hands of the corporation, so that if the corporation was prosperous and its stock valuable, that they would then take it, but if the corporation became involved, they might possibly escape liability as stockholders by refusing to take it upon the ground that the stock was not of the value they contracted for, but hold the land as security for its alleged value by a proceeding to foreclose a vendor's lien."

[3] We come now to the second phase of the transaction. In the early part of November, 1914, the Rice Mills, Incorporated, or second company, as it is sometimes called, was incorporated. Its articles were filed with the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, on November 5th, and on the 6th were filed with the secretary of state. This corporation was organized with a capital stock of $250,000 in shares of $100 each. Its objects were the same as those of the old company, and it was organized to take over its property. The corporators, with the exception of Chas. E. Hale were different persons from those who organized the old company, and the president and secretary were not the same. The old company conveyed its property and assets to the new company, the consideration being that the new company assumed the liabilities of the old company, and in addition transferred to it 420 shares of the par value of $42,000 of the new company. On this subject Mr. Hale testified as follows, and it was not disputed:

"I explained to Mr. Doty that I thought, the new corporation being one of more financial strength, the stock in that would be much more desirable than the one in the old company, which was not so strong financially, and that the exchange looked to be an advantageous one for the stockholders in San Francisco of the old company. We wanted to present the matter to him. I had brought Mr. Glass and Mr. Lilly with me to explain the matter to him, to ask him if he looked at it in the same light, and, if he did, to enter into the agreements we had done in San Francisco, to carry out the project of having the new company, which had already bought the Pacific Rice Milling Company of San Francisco, also buy the mill at Biggs. If he felt that was a good thing to do we would like to have him join us, and we were waiting his decision of the matter, as he was stockholder in the old company, and after going over the subject several hours, and, as I recollect it, asking all the questions relating to it, he thought that it would be a good thing to do, and consented, and signed the contract, and also gave me the proxy to take back with me to San Francisco to vote in favor of it at a called meeting of the directors of the old company."

While the negotiations were pending, plaintiff executed and delivered the following agreement, referred to by Mr. Hale in his testimony:

"California Rice Milling Co., Biggs, Cal. Nov. 2d, 1914. To Whom it may Concern: Agreement in duplicate. I, W. M. Doty, of Biggs, California, agree on demand to the transfer of my one hundred shares (par value $10,000) of the California Rice Milling Company (Inc.) stock, now held in escrow by the Sacramento Valley Bank of Biggs, Cal., for an equal amount of the paid-up stock in the company of the prospective purchasers of said California Rice Milling Company. W. M. Doty. In consideration of the above transfer, the California Rice Milling Company agrees to waive all assessments and/or other liabilities prior to the transfer of stock from the old into the new company. California Rice Milling Company (Inc.) per Chas. E. Hale, Prest."

On the same day, plaintiff delivered to Mr. Hale the following proxy:

"Know all men by this writing: That I, W. M. Doty, hereby appoint Chas. E. Hale my proxy to vote in my place at a called meeting of the stockholders of the California Rice Milling Company to be held on the ——— day of November, 1914, at San Francisco, California, and at any adjourned meeting thereof according to the number of votes I would be entitled to if I were personally present, without power of substitution or revocation. This proxy shall continue in force until December 1, 1914. Witness my hand this second day of November, 1914. W. M. Doty."

By quitclaim deed of date November 13, 1914, plaintiff conveyed the said premises to California Rice Mills, Incorporated. On November 16, 1914, the new company issued, as a part of the 420 shares it had agreed to issue to the old company, certificate No. 6 to plaintiff, and as the said mortgage indebtedness of plaintiff was still unpaid in part this certificate was placed in escrow with the other certificate, and plaintiff indorsed it as he had indorsed the first certificate. The Rice Milling Company conveyed the said premises and appurtenances to the Rice Mills, Incorporated, on November 12, 1914. The new company operated the plant for 6 or 8 months, when it failed and shut down. The evidence was that the Johnson-Locke Mercantile Company, the owners of a majority of the stock of the new company, had undertaken to finance the new company, failed, and carried the Rice Mills, Incorporated, or new company, with it. It would seem unnecessary to trace the misfortunes of the new company. This company took over the property under the agreements entered into by plaintiff with the old company and its deed. The old company proceeded to wind up its affairs preparatory to dissolution, and was finally dissolved by decree of court, and presumably its obligations to creditors were satisfied; otherwise it could not have secured the decree. Admittedly, however, there was nothing left for the stockholders, and it is conceded that the stockholders in the new company are in like situation. The court found that at the time appellant acquired the property, it had full knowledge of all plaintiff's rights therein. Plaintiff never at any time, before bringing the action, claimed a vendor's lien. Defendants endeavored to show by the officers of both the old and new company that they had no knowledge or notice that such a claim was made by plaintiff. The court sustained objections to this line of inquiry erroneously, we think, for the pleadings raised the issue whether appellant was a purchaser for value without notice. The finding, however, is that appellant purchased with knowledge "of all plaintiff's rights," but does not specify what those rights were. So far as the existence of a right to a vendor's lien is concerned, the only right respondent had must be traced to the agreements already disposed of. If the finding refers to respondent's right arising out of these agreements, and means that appellant had notice of these agreements and of such rights as they carried, the finding is supported. But we have seen that no vendor's lien arose out of these agreements with the Rice Milling Company, and it seems to us equally clear that no vendor's lien arose by reason of the transfer of the Rice Mills, Incorporated, or from respondent's relation to the latter. Plaintiff gave his written consent to the transfer of his shares in the old company for an equivalent in the new company; he appointed Mr. Hale as his proxy to vote these shares in the new company; he indorsed the certificate and left it in the bank to take the place of the share he held in the old company; and he conveyed by deed to the new company his interest in the premises he now seeks to have charged with a vendor's lien. The negotiations and their culmination in making plaintiff a stockholder in the new company appear to have been free from fraud, misrepresentation, or mistake; indeed, nothing of this sort is alleged or claimed.

Appellant contends that, if it can be said that a vendor's lien ever existed, "it has been waived time and again," and especially "by the execution of a deed by the vendor to a subpurchaser." We do not think it necessary to consider the question of waiver. We feel quite satisfied that, for the reasons above given, no vendor's lien arose out of the transaction, and that the findings of facts from which the learned trial court reached the conclusion that such a lien did arise in plaintiff's favor are without support in the evidence. We are further satisfied that the evidence does not support the finding that plaintiff sold and transferred the property to the Rice Milling Company "for the price or consideration of five thousand dollars to be paid to him by said defendant California Rice Milling Co.," and that the judgment for said sum is without support.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

DOTY v. MATSON et al. (Civ. 1854.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 5, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by W. M. Doty against W. J. Matson and others, trustees for the stockholders and creditors of the California Rice Milling Company, a dissolved corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant trustees appeal. Reversed.

See, also, 174 Pac. 389.

Norman A. Eisner, of San Francisco, for appellants. W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal by defendants Matson, Braun, and Hale from the judgment made and entered in the cause, entitled W. M. Doty v. California Rice Milling Company et al., 174 Pac. 389, No. 1840, which latter case was this day decided, and the judgment therein reversed. Referring to that case, respondent says in his brief: "If our vendor's lien is sustained we satisfy it out of the property and that alone. If it is not sustained we get nothing." In considering the case No. 1840 we were constrained to hold that the plaintiff's alleged vendor's lien was not sustained, and that plaintiff was not entitled to the relief prayed for.

We see no reason for appellants taking this separate appeal upon a separate record.

The judgment is reversed, each party to pay his own costs of the appeal.

TURMAN et al. v. ELLISON et al. (Civ. 1831.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 11, 1918.)

1. TRUSTS ⟨⊃44(1) — ESTABLISHMENT — EVIDENCE—REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY.

Since direct evidence of one witness entitled to full credit is full proof of any fact except perjury or treason, plaintiffs, seeking to establish trust, need not corroborate their own testimony.

2. TRUSTS ⟨⊃44(3) — EVIDENCE — REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence to show that, notwithstanding absolute terms of deed, the grantee holds subject to parol trust, should be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟨⊃1009(2) — SCOPE—FINDINGS OF FACT.

The trial court's determination whether evidence to establish parol trust notwithstanding deed is absolute in terms is clear, satisfactory, and convincing will be accepted by the appellate court as conclusive when there is substantial evidence to support the trust.

4. TRUSTS ⟨⊃44(2) — PAROL TRUSTS — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The trial judge need not adopt as true testimony of witnesses who testified positively that an absolute deed was in fact a trust.

5. TRUSTS ⟨⊃44(2) — PAROL TRUSTS — QUESTIONS FOR JURY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Persons testifying nine years after the transaction and after all parties are dead that an absolute deed was intended to raise a trust are not necessarily unworthy of belief, but the trial judge will regard their testimony with serious misgivings.

6. TRUSTS ⟨⊃44(2) — PAROL TRUSTS — QUESTIONS FOR JURY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

That a grantee devised property so as to repudiate alleged parol trust from her grantor was some evidence that no trust was raised; the presumption under Code Civ. Proc. § 1903, being that the grantee was innocent of such a wrong.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Suit by Meta Stephens Turman and another against John F. Ellison, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Martha L. Tooley, deceased, and others. From the decree rendered, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 170 Cal. 164, 149 Pac. 574, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 516.

Chas. L. Donohoe, of Willow, and Glenn West, of Lodi, for appellants. Frank Freeman and George R. Freeman, both of Willow, for respondents. W. T. Belieu, of Willow, for defendant Klemmer.

BURNETT, J. The case has been exhaustively argued, although no novel proposition of law is involved. Indeed, the legal principles so ably discussed by counsel have been frequently considered by eminent jurists throughout the country, and it would be idle to attempt in this opinion to add to the learning upon the subject. It is doubtful even if any specific statement of the facts can be of any value to the profession, and we might content ourselves with the declaration that the findings of the court are supported, and therefore the judgment must be affirmed.

However, it may not be amiss to call attention to some of the circumstances that justify the conclusion of the learned trial judge. In April, 1907, Dr. L. P. Tooley was living with his wife, Martha L. Tooley, in Willows, the county seat of Glenn county. Being ill, and believing that he would not recover, he determined to dispose of his property. He sent for his attorney, Judge Frank Moody, and after a conference with him he decided to make a transfer of all his property, real and personal, to his said wife. Thereupon a deed absolute in form was made to her of the real estate, and a bill of sale of the personal property. In May, 1907, the doctor died, leaving as his heirs his widow, Logan M. Tooley, the daughter of himself and said Martha L. Tooley, and the two plaintiffs in this action, daughters of a former marriage. The deed and bill of sale were placed on record by said widow, who continued in the use and possession of said property until her death on the 12th day of February, 1913. She left a holographic will as follows:

"I give all my property at my death to my daughter, Logan Mattie Tooley, if at her death she has neither husband or children. I desire any property that may be left divided equally among my sisters and brother."

This will was admitted to probate, and on request of said Logan Mattie Tooley John F. Ellison was appointed administrator with the will annexed and proceeded with the administration of said estate. Prior to the distribution of said estate Logan M. Tooley died, leaving a will in which she devised all her property, except a small bequest, to one Lemus L. Klemmer. At the request of the latter the plaintiff Meta Stephens Turman had said will admitted to probate and herself appointed administratrix with the will annexed.

In February, 1914, the said John F. Ellison filed his final account as such administrator and petitioned for the distribution of the residue of the estate of said Martha L. Tooley to the brother and sisters of said deceased, alleging that said Logan M. Tooley had died unmarried and without any surviving child. Said Meta Stephens Turman filed a verified written objection to this petition, claiming that the second clause of said will of Martha L. Tooley was void, that said property had passed absolutely to the daughter, Logan M. Tooley, and asked that it be distributed to her estate. In this opposition Klemmer joined. The lower court construed the will in accordance with the contention of said contestants, but the Supreme Court reversed said decision, holding that said second clause of the will was operative, and that the residue of the property should be distributed to said brother and sisters of Martha Tooley. Estate of Tooley, 170 Cal. 164, 149 Pac. 574, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 516.

It is under this will that the defendants claim the property. Said decision of the Supreme Court was filed in the superior court of Glenn county on June 12, 1915, and four days thereafter this suit was brought by plaintiffs to have it declared that said defendants are holding said property in trust for the two plaintiffs and for the defendant Klemmer, as devisee of said Logan M. Tooley.

This claim is based upon the allegations of the complaint that there was an oral agreement on the part of Dr. Tooley, his wife, and the two plaintiffs providing that he should deed all his property to his wife, and that plaintiffs would cause her no trouble during her lifetime; that at her death she would convey the residue of said property to the plaintiffs and said Logan M. Tooley; that by reason of this agreement he executed the said conveyance to his wife, and after his death she repudiated and violated said agreement and made said will as aforesaid. Certain questions of fact were submitted to a jury, and they found in favor of the position of plaintiffs, but the trial court did not adopt the jury's view, but concluded that:

"Said L. P. Tooley did transfer all his property, both real and personal, to his wife unconditionally, in fee simple to have and to hold to her and her heirs and assigns forever and without any condition or limitation."

We may concede that the complaint states a cause of action, that it sets up a trust that could be legally enforced by a court of equity, and, what is more to the point of controversy, that there is evidence in the record which would support a finding and judgment in favor of plaintiffs.

To make manifest the latter statement we may refer to and quote from the testimony of Meta Stephens Turman. She said:

That shortly before her father died—probably two weeks—a conversation took place at her father's house in his bedroom; that the persons present were the father, her sister, Cliffie I. Clarke, her half-sister, Logan Tooley Clark, and her stepmother, Martha L. Tooley. "When we went into the room I stepped up to the bed and asked my father how he was. I knew he was very low, and he said he was glad we had come to see him, because he wanted to talk to us, and he turned to my stepmother and says, 'Mattie I wish you would tell Logan to come in the room.' And when Logan came in the room he said, 'I wish to tell you girls how I am going to leave the property' and we told him not to talk, because he was very low and could only say one word at a time, and my stepmother told him not to talk, and he said he must. He says, 'I want to explain how I am going to leave the property.' He says, 'One time I wanted to leave $1,000 to each of you girls of the insurance,' * * * a life insurance policy for $1,000 apiece for the girls, and he was going to change that and put it in Mrs. Tooley's name as well as all the other property, and that he had told Judge Moody to fix up the papers to that effect, because she promised him if he did put all the property in her name and she used it all her life that at her death she would divide what was left, between us three girls, and he says, 'Didn't you promise me that?' and she says, 'Yes; I did;' and he says, 'You have heard the promise, and I don't want you to bring any lawsuit, or create any trouble;' and I gave my promise, and my sister didn't say anything, and I did for her because she promised to divide at her death, and I promised we wouldn't bring any suit against it. And then Papa went on to say that she was old and after he died she wouldn't have any one to provide for her, and we were married and had husbands, and he told her to give us girls $100 apiece and Logan $25 after his death; that that was a gift to us girls. And that was all that was said right there. We were all crying, and my father—it was with the greatest effort that he explained anything at all to us."

[1] Nor was it necessary for plaintiffs to corroborate the testimony in order to warrant a finding in their favor. The Legislature has provided that:

"The direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact except perjury and treason."

The present case is not within the exceptions; therefore respondents are in error in contending that the burden was upon plaintiffs to introduce more than their own testimony in order to legally entitle them to prevail in the action. There are some decisions from other jurisdictions that seem to hold to such view but such is not the law in this state.

[2] It is true, though, that the evidence to show that a deed is not what it purports to be, that notwithstanding its absolute terms the grantee holds subject to a parol trust, should be clear, satisfactory, and convincing. Bollinger v. Bollinger, 154 Cal. 695, 99 Pac. 196.

[3] But it is also true, as held in the Bollinger Case and many others that might be cited, in fact, it follows from the scheme of our judicial procedure, that the proper application of this rule, when there is substantial evidence to support the existence of a trust, must be left to the trial court, and its determination that such evidence is clear, satisfactory, and convincing will be accepted by the appellate court as conclusive.

[4] It is likewise the law that, although one witness, or more, may testify positively to facts constituting a trust and directly supporting the theory that the deed was not intended to be absolute as it purports to be, the trial judge is under no legal compulsion to find in accordance with such testimony. He must be convinced by it in order to warrant a judgment attaching any such condition to the solemn instrument executed by the parties. To his mind the evidence must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing in order to find a trust, but if he does not believe the witness is telling the truth, or if he is convinced that he is materially in error as to the terms of the declared trust, it is not only the privilege of said judge, but it is his duty, to reject such testimony and base his finding upon the presumption that follows from the execution of a deed absolute in form, that the grantor intended to vest the estate in the grantee unembarrassed by any secret trust or incumbrance.

The foregoing are mere truisms of the law, and we need not cite authorities therefor. Nor is the proposition complicated by the fact that a jury may have found in accordance with the position of the one questioning the integrity of the deed. It is the chancellor who must be satisfied, and it is to his judgment and conscience that the matter must be submitted. In simple phrase, if A. conveys to B. an estate in absolute terms, and C. testifies that it was a trust, in an action to so charge the land, if the witness does not convince the trial judge that such trust was created, and the finding is in accordance with the presumption that arises from the instrument itself, it would be a reflection upon the honesty or capacity of the court below and an invasion of its province for an appellate court to set aside the judgment simply for the reason that the insensate record on appeal contains no affirmative evidence of the improbability of the testimony of the witness.

Besides, the record before us discloses certain considerations that confirm us in the belief that the learned trial judge did not decide arbitrarily against the claim of appellants, and that their story was justly regarded with suspicion and distrust.

Indeed, it is true that actions to enforce oral agreements claimed to have been made with persons who are dead involve a dangerous assault upon property rights, and they are often supported by false testimony, and they naturally and reasonably excite suspicion. And while they may be genuine and worthy of confirmation, they require the closest and most careful scrutiny to prevent injustice being done. Wall's Appeal, 111 Pa. 460, 5 Atl. 220, 56 Am. Rep. 288. They afford and carry opportunity for fraud against the estates of deceased persons and a great temptation to perjury on the part of disappointed or avaricious relatives. Hinkle v. Sage, 67 Ohio St. 256, 65 N. E. 999. Such considerations could not be laid out of view by the trial judge.

[5] He could not fail to observe, also, that the testimony of the plaintiffs was given nearly nine years after the transaction is said to have occurred. It is quite probable—even more than probable—that after the lapse of such a period the memory would be inaccurate as to the facts and conditions of the affair. It requires a good deal of courage and assurance for a witness to undertake under such circumstances to state definitely just what was said and done. If he does confidently make such attempt without ever having reduced the details to writing or having kept them vivid in his memory by frequent expression or recital of what took place, it is difficult to give full credit to his story. The distrust is naturally augmented by the circumstance that the testimony is not presented in any court until all the parties who could have any interest in contradicting it are dead. While we cannot say that under such circumstances it must necessarily be rejected as unworthy of belief, yet it must inevitably occur that the trial judge will regard it with serious misgivings. Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 200. In fact, it is proper to say that evidence given under such circumstances should not only be received with the greatest caution, but it has been declared to be evidence of the weakest and most unsatisfactory nature. Austin v. Wilcoxson, 149 Cal. 24, 84 Pac. 417.

[6] Moreover, there are other substantial reasons disclosed by the record which appear amply sufficient to justify the action of the court in rejecting the testimony of the plaintiffs, some of which we will briefly state. The conduct of the plaintiffs in not asserting their claims and their attitude toward the will of Martha L. Tooley and of her daughter, Logan, are circumstances of moment. The fact that said Martha L. Tooley in 1911 made a will devising all her property to her daughter Logan with the remainder over to the defendants, thus repudiating and violating an alleged solemn promise made to her husband in his dying hour, is at least some evidence that no such promise was made. The presumption is that she was innocent of any such grievous wrong. Section 1903 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The will of the said daughter also is entirely inconsistent with her knowledge and recognition of any such trust.

Judge Moody's testimony, it may be added, is strongly opposed to plaintiffs' theory. He was the adviser of Dr. Tooley, and drew the deed and bill of sale. He testified:

"Dr. Tooley sent for me to come up to his house on business. I didn't know what he wanted until I reached there, and he told me at that time in the presence of Mrs. Tooley that he wanted to dispose of his property, and he wanted to give it to his wife. There was a good deal of conversation at that time which all culminated in my advice to Dr. Tooley to make a deed and bill of sale to his wife to carry out the purpose which he stated to me at that time. * * * There were no conditions as to the making and delivery of the deed. Dr. Tooley requested Mrs. Tooley to give each of his two daughters, Mrs. Turman and Mrs. Clarke, $100 out of the insurance money when it should be collected."

He testified further:

That they had another meeting a day or two afterward when the deed was signed and acknowledged and "there were no conditions upon which the deed was to be made. Dr. Tooley stated to me the reason he was doing that was that his two daughters had husbands who were capable of making them homes, and all his wife had would be what he would leave her. All he had was made by Mrs. Tooley and himself, that they had practically nothing when they were married, and that she had made as much of the money they had saved as he had. Mrs. Tooley in answer to the doctor that he wanted his daughters to have $100 apiece said she certainly would see that they got it, or words to that effect."

We must assume that the lower court gave full credit to the testimony of Judge Moody, and that he was entitled to that consideration. Under the circumstances, it would seem quite improbable that, if Dr. Tooley desired to charge the conveyance with the burden of a trust, he would not consult his legal adviser in relation to it. It would occupy a large part of the conversation, as it involved a complicated question concerning which a layman would need information. It will not do to say that it was a private family affair which the doctor hesitated to discuss with his attorney. Why it should be considered more personal or sacred than the matters which he did mention it is difficult to understand.

There is also the testimony of Mrs. Lizette Leddy relating to what the trial court was justified in believing was the same conversation by and through which plaintiffs claim the trust was created. She testified:

"I walked into the bedroom, and Dr. Tooley said, 'Well, here comes Liz' (that was a little nickname he had for me), and Mrs. Turman was on the bed, on her knees, imploring his forgiveness for something she had done, and she said, 'Oh, Papa, Papa, forgive me; Papa, forgive me.' And he turned and said, 'I give all my property real and personal to my wife, Martha;' and she said, 'Oh Papa, we know.' And he said, 'Let me call the name, Martha L. Tooley.' He said 'To Meta I give $100, to Cliffie $100, and to Logan $25, and forgive the debt.' And I stayed in the room quite a while, and walked out and took my seat in the adjoining room, which was the dining room, and you could have heard a pin drop. I never heard a sound."

She further testified that the plaintiffs soon went home. The foregoing is, of course, inconsistent with the position that a secret trust was created as claimed by appellant. It may be further stated that as to certain important matters which plaintiffs testified occurred within the knowledge and recollection of other eyewitnesses the plaintiffs were contradicted by the other witnesses. This is pointed out in the brief of respondents and the testimony of Judge Ellison and Mrs. Ellison and Mrs. Leddy recited, but we need not repeat it.

It is contended that the trial judge adopted an erroneous theory, in that he assumed that the conveyance of the property had already been executed when the promise in relation to the trust was made, and therefore he mistakenly concluded that said promise was not the inducement for the conveyance. However this may be, it is true that he found that there was no agreement whatever in relation to the property between Dr. Tooley and the plaintiffs, and this, of course, is sufficient to support the judgment.

The deed seems not to have been delivered to the grantee immediately on the day it was signed, and the conversation to which plaintiffs referred may have occurred after the deed was signed and before it was delivered. Thus it may be that the conveyance was not entirely completed until after said conversation. However, it is of no importance, as the learned trial judge was considering the case upon the assumption that the trust was attempted to be created; and whether he was right or wrong in his hypothetical view of the legal aspect of that situation does not affect the finding upon the other material question, nor does it militate against the soundness of the judgment rendered.

MAUCHLE v. PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION CO. et al.

(Civ. 2425.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 2, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸302(2)—MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR SERVANT'S NEGLIGENCE—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT.

Where ground superintendent of exposition company struck pedestrian while driving home from work at night in an automobile used by him in performance of his duties but which belonged to the company and was ordinarily kept on the exposition grounds, the company was not responsible for the accident; the automobile not having been used at the time within scope of superintendent's employment.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸703(1)—USE OF STREETS—SLOWLY MOVING VEHICLES.

In determining distance slowly moving vehicle must be kept from the curb under St. 1913, p. 648, § 20, par. "i," and San Francisco City and County Ordinance No. 1857, § 6, providing that such vehicles must be kept as closely as practicable to the right-hand boundary of highway, convenience, condition of street, and the number of vehicles on the street must all be considered.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸705(10)—USE OF STREETS—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Failure of pedestrian pushing a hand cart on foggy night to stay close to right-hand curb, where to avoid jolting of his load and seeing no approaching car or vehicle he moved away from curb to space between rails, does not as matter of law constitute contributory negligence under St. 1913, p. 648, § 20, par. "i," and San Francisco City and County Ordinance No. 1857, § 6, requiring slowly moving vehicles to be kept as far as practicable to the right of highway.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(5)—USE OF STREETS—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT.

In action for injuries sustained in being struck by automobile, evidence held sufficient to show driver of automobile was negligent.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(6)—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—JURY QUESTION.

In automobile accident action, whether automobile lights were out at time of accident, as testified to by plaintiff's witnesses, or were extinguished by the accident, as attempted to be shown by a mechanical demonstration, was for the jury.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸995—REVIEW—JURY FINDING.

The appellate court will not pass on question of whether jury was justified in accepting positive testimony that automobile lights were out at time of accident, in preference to mechanical demonstration that lights were extinguished by the accident.

7. TRIAL ⟸255(15)—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, providing that court shall on proper occasion instruct jury that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others, does not require court to give such instruction unless requested.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Fritz Mauchle against the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Company (a corporation) and L. I. Fulcher. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed as to first-named defendant, and affirmed as to last-named defendant.

Brittain & Kuhl, for appellant Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. Everett A. Ingalls, of San Francisco, for appellant L. I. Fulcher. Chas. F. O'Callaghan, of San Francisco (Edmund Nelson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff sued the defendant for damages claimed to have been caused to him by being run down by an automobile owned by the defendant Panama-Pacific International Exposition Company, and driven by L. I. Fulcher, the other defendant. He prevailed.

The plaintiff, while on his way home from work on the evening of October 6, 1915, was proceeding westerly on Geary street pushing a hand cart of the type used about railroad stations, warehouses, and stores to move heavy boxes and parcels. Upon this truck the plaintiff had loaded some empty boxes. Proceeding westerly from Fillmore street, he kept near the curb line until he crossed Divisadero street. From that point westerly the street, except between the car tracks, is paved with blocks of stone. Observing no approaching car or other vehicle, and thinking to avoid the jolting of his load by the rough street, he moved over on the west-bound car track where the space between the rails was smooth. He had proceeded but a short distance westerly from Divisadero street when he suddenly heard the purring of an automobile engine behind him, and almost at the same instant he was struck in the back and pushed over onto the hand cart. The grade at this point is uphill, and the car which struck him stopped within a very short space. There was some conflict of evidence as to his injuries, but it may be said that the finding that he was injured is supported by the evidence.

It is contended in behalf of the appellant corporation that there was no showing that the defendant Fulcher at the time of the accident was performing any duty which he owed to the exposition company, or was using the automobile with its consent or knowledge. The respondent, answering this contention, quotes the following testimony to show liability on the part of the exposition company:

"Mr. Nelson: Q. Mr. Fulcher, * * * on the 6th of October, 1915, by whom were you employed? A. The Panama-Pacific Exposition. Q. How long had you been employed by that company? A. I should say approximately 2½ years or 3 at that time. Q. From the beginning of their work? A. Practically. Q. Are you still employed by that company? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was your particular duty in that service? A. I was superintendent of grounds. Q. The automobile that has been under discussion here, was that owned by you or by the company? A. By the exposition company. Q. Was that used by you in the service of the company? A. Yes, sir. Q. On this particular day at the time of this occurrence you had come from the grounds, had you, of the exposition company? A. Yes, sir. Q. And where were you going? A. I was on my way home at that time when the accident occurred. Q. Where did you keep this automobile overnight, say, when you went home? A. Why, it usually worked all night, and stayed out at my house until 10 o'clock and then down to the grounds. Q. You were bringing it to your house on this particular night? Where were you taking this automobile? A. I was going home with it. Q. Did you have a garage at your house to keep it in? A. No, sir. Q. After you got home with it, what would become of it? What would be done with it? A. It stood in front of my house. Q. And then later what would you do? A. My night foreman came and got it or I took it to the grounds along about 10. Q. That automobile was ordinarily kept on the grounds of the exposition company? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Nelson: That is all."

The ownership of the automobile by the exposition company is admitted, and the employment of Fulcher in the capacity of superintendent of grounds, as shown in the above testimony, is not disputed; but it is claimed that Fulcher, at the time of the accident, was not using the automobile within the scope of his employment nor upon any business or affair of the exposition company.

[1] The foregoing testimony, being the only evidence quoted in the attempt to show responsibility on the part of the exposition company, seems to us to fall far short of so doing. Respondent relies upon the case of Chamberlain v. California Edison Co., 167 Cal. 500, 140 Pac. 25; but the employé in that case had been ordered by another employé of the company, who had the right to give him instructions, to do the thing which he was doing at the time that his negligence caused the injury to the plaintiff in that case, and the defendant corporation in that case reaped the financial benefit of the work which he was performing at that time, the facts being briefly, as stated in the opinion in the case, as follows:

"Sterling, the storekeeper, ordered Rosso, the chauffeur, to go to the residence of Lighthipe with the company's truck, of which Rosso was the driver, and to bring Lighthipe's motorcar to the shop which the corporation maintained for the repair of its own motor vehicles. This order was obeyed, and, while Rosso was towing Lighthipe's automobile, Caleb Chamberlain was injured through the carelessness and negligence of Rosso. It was shown that Lighthipe's automobile was repaired at the company's shop; that a bill was rendered by the corporation [therefor] and paid by Lighthipe."

This plainly showed that Rosso was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident in that case.

The respondent relies further upon the case of Jessen v. Peterson, Nelson & Co., 18 Cal. App. 350, 123 Pac. 219. In that case the injury was due to the negligence of one Nelson. The defendant was engaged in general contracting and construction work in the city and county of San Francisco. Nelson was an officer, namely, the vice president of the defendant company, and had the right to operate the buggy. In so operating it "he had no regular hours whatsoever. He had to go around all over the city sometimes; he had to go out to the park and Richmond, where the corporation was working at times. He had to go everywhere and see that the work was all right. From this it appears that in addition to being vice president of the company Nelson was also general superintendent of its work, and in the performance of his duties he had a roving commission which permitted him to look after the business of the defendant at the times and in the manner which best suited his own convenience." This presents a far different case from the relation sustained by Fulcher to the exposition company. The evidence above quoted does not show that Fulcher was in any way serving the exposition company at the time of the accident in this case; nor does it present any evidence tending to so show.

It is contended that Fulcher's use of the automobile was a convenience which enabled him to perform his duties more expeditiously in moving about from place to place where he was needed. But while this may be true, the above-quoted evidence—which we assume from respondent's brief is the only evidence showing that Fulcher was performing duties for the exposition company at the time of the accident—fails completely to show that he was about the business of the exposition company at the time of the accident. We think the verdict not supported by the evidence so far as the exposition company is concerned, and as to that defendant the judgment will be reversed.

[2-6] Unless it must be said that the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence in not staying closer to the right-hand curb in his journey, this judgment may not be reversed as to Fulcher. Paragraph "1" of section 20 of chapter 326 of the Statutes of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 648) has this provision:

"The person in control of any vehicle moving slowly along and upon any public highway shall keep such vehicle as closely as practicable to the right-hand boundary of the highway, allowing more swiftly moving vehicles reasonably free passage to the left."

There is a similar provision in section 6 of Ordinance No. 1857 of the city and county of San Francisco. These provisions of the law are elastic. They do not attempt to lay down a definite and rigid rule as to the distance which the slowly moving vehicle must keep from the curb. Convenience, condition of the street, freedom of the street from other vehicles, or, on the other hand, its more or less crowded condition, must all be taken into consideration in determining the position upon the street which the slowly moving vehicle must occupy in order that the person propelling it or driving it shall be free from negligence. In this case the evidence was of such a character that we are not prepared to say that Mr. Mauchle was guilty of contributory negligence in moving along the west-bound car track instead of keeping close up to the curb. It does not appear that there was not plenty of room for free passage by Fulcher to the left of Mauchle. Some discretion must be left to juries and trial courts in such cases; and we think in this case that we cannot hold as a matter of law that Mauchle was guilty of contributory negligence. There are other elements, such as that the night was foggy, which are urged by appellant to show contributory negligence on the part of Mauchle; but we cannot say, as a matter of law, that they do so. It is also urged that there is no evidence that Fulcher was guilty of any negligence; but the testimony of the plaintiff and other witnesses is sufficient to support the plaintiff's contention that the lights on Fulcher's machine were not lit, and that he blew no horn nor made any other sound when approaching Mauchle. An attempt is made to demonstrate that from the mechanism of Fulcher's machine his lights went out when he stopped it, and that thus Mauchle was deceived into supposing that it had no lights, whereas its lights had been burning up to the time it stopped; but the jurors were the judges as to whether this mechanical demonstration or the positive testimony of the plaintiff was true, and they accepted the positive testimony of the plaintiff that the lights were not lighted on the machine. They accepted the evidence of the witness as against the mechanical argument, and we are not in a position to determine that they were wrong.

[7] The appellant contends that the trial court should have instructed the jury that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others, as provided in subdivision 3, § 2061, Code of Civil Procedure. The reply is that the instruction was not asked. Counsel, however, contend that the defendants had the right to rely upon the court to give those instructions which, under the Code, the court is bound to give. That section of the Code, however, provides only that the court shall give this instruction as it provides that others of a similar nature shall be given—on proper occasions. We are not inclined to lay down a rule that would place upon trial judges the burden of determining that such instruction shall be given unless the request therefor is made by the party desiring it.

As to Fulcher the judgment will be affirmed.

McCARTHY v. BOARD OF FIRE COM'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 2016.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐216(1)—SECRETARY—FIRE DEPARTMENT—CIVIL SERVICE.
Since, under San Francisco Charter, art. 8, c. 1, § 1, the police department includes policemen, the police commissioner, a chief, and such other clerks as are necessary, while under article 9, c. 1, § 1, the fire department is merely declared to be under the management of the board of fire commissioners, such board is not a part of the department, and the secretary of such board is not subject to civil service rules.

2. STATUTES ⇐209 — CONSTRUCTION — PRESUMPTIONS.
A word or phrase repeatedly used in a statute will be presumed to bear the same meaning throughout, in the absence of other intent indicated.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐216(1)—SECRETARY—FIRE DEPARTMENT—CIVIL SERVICE.
Since, under San Francisco Charter, art. 9, c. 1, § 6, no person over 35 years of age was eligible under the civil service law for appointment to the fire department, conceding that secretary of board of fire commissioners was subject to the civil service, the commissioners could discharge him at pleasure, if he were first appointed after reaching the age of 35 years.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Mandamus by John W. McCarthy against the Board of Fire Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco and others. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Paul A. McCarthy, of San Francisco, for appellant. George Lull, City Atty., and Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff, John W. McCarthy, petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate to compel the board of fire commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco to reinstate him as their secretary. On February 3, 1910, he was such secretary, and on that day the board passed a resolution removing him. The superior court denied the writ, and he appeals.

In supporting his claim for a reversal of the judgment, McCarthy contends that the secretary of the board of fire commissioners is within the classified civil service provisions of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, and consequently comes under the protection of section 12 of article 13 thereof (Stats. 1899, p. 241), providing that no person employed in the classified civil service shall be removed or discharged, except for cause, upon written charges, and after an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. The board, in appointing McCarthy, went through the form of complying with the civil service rules, and undoubtedly at the time of his appointment considered their secretary to be within the classified list. No charges were made against him when he was dismissed, and he had no trial.

The respondents argue that the office of secretary in question is not within the classified list, and that, even if it were, McCarthy was not eligible to the position when appointed, as he was then over 35 years of age, which is the limit age prescribed by section 6, chapter 1, article 9, of the charter, as it stood at the time of McCarthy's appointment, for all persons appointed to positions in the department. We are inclined to think both these positions of respondents to be well taken.

[1] Without enumerating all the city functionaries to whom the civil service provisions of the charter apply, it may be said that at the time McCarthy was discharged, and until March 28, 1913, section 11 of article 13 provided that the civil service provisions should apply to the fire department and numerous other positions and officials. What officers should be included within the meaning of the term "fire department" was not specified in that section, and we are left to a critical examination of the language of the charter to ascertain what is meant thereby, and specifically whether the secretary of the board of fire commissioners is to be considered as included within the term, and so whether the secretary is a member of the fire department within the meaning of the civil service provisions of the charter.

Perhaps this question can be best understood by a comparison between the provisions of the charter in relation to the police department and the fire department. While the police department is specified to consist of a board of police commissioners, a chief of police, a police force, and such other clerks and employés as shall be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the article providing for the policing of the city (Charter, § 1, c. 1, art. 8), the fire department is not specified to consist of all corresponding persons engaged in the protection of the city from fire, but rather to be under the management of the board of fire commissioners (section 1, c. 1, art. 9).

When different language is used in the same connection in different parts of a statute, it is presumed the Legislature intended a different meaning and effect. Black, Interpretation of Laws (2d Ed.) p. 145. As it is clear that under the language above quoted in relation to the police department the secretary of the department would be a member of the police department, so, if we apply this cardinal rule of statutory construction to the different language employed by the charter framers in dealing with the two departments, it must be held that while the commissioners, for instance, of the police department are members of that department, the board of fire commissioners are not members of the fire department. The Legislature must be presumed to know the meaning of language; and when one set of words is used in one section, and another in another section, the presumption is that the Legislature intended to convey a different meaning if the two sets of words ordinarily have different meanings. Lehman, Durr & Co. v. Robinson, 59 Ala. 219. And it has similarly been held that a change of legislative purpose is to be presumed from a material change in the wording of a statute. Hasely v. Ensley, 40 Ind. App. 598, 82 N. E. 809; Rich v. Keyser, 54 Pa. 86, 89; Thomas v. Joplin, 14 Cal. App. 662, 112 Pac. 729. This rule is applicable likewise to material changes between the language used in different sections of the same statute.

It would seem plain from this that the words "fire department," as employed in the civil service section of the charter, are not intended to embrace the board of fire commissioners nor the secretary thereof. Again, the officers and members of the fire department are enumerated in section 1, chapter 8, article 9, of the charter for the purpose of fixing salaries; and the secretary is not enumerated among them.

It is further provided by section 2 of chapter 3 of article 9 that the chief engineer may suspend any subordinate officer, member or employé of the department. It is plain that this does not refer to the secretary. And in section 2 of chapter 8 of the same article is a provision for vacations of officers and members of the fire department, in which it is provided that during each year of his service a vacation of not less than 15 days' duration, and also leaves of absence of not less than 24 hours' duration not less times than once in each week, shall be due each officer and member of the fire department without loss of pay. Certainly it will not be contended that the words "officers and members of the fire department," as used in the last section referred to, were intended to include the secretary.

[2] It is a familiar principle of the construction of statutes that a word or phrase repeatedly used in the statute will be presumed to bear the same meaning throughout the statute, unless there is something to show that another meaning is intended. McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 143, 61 Pac. 273, 63 Pac. 182, 622; Robbins v. O. R. R., 32 Cal. 472, 474; Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Woodhams, 29 Cal. App. 356, 361, 156 Pac. 62. There is nothing here to show that a different meaning was intended by the use of the words "the fire department," or "officers and members of the fire department," in the section referring to salaries and vacations, than the meaning intended to be affixed to this language in section 11 of article 13 providing for the civil service.

The proposition that the secretary is not a member of the fire department is further supported by the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Maxwell v. Fire Commissioners, 139 Cal. 229, 72 Pac. 996, in which the former clerk of the board sought to be retained as secretary of the new board of fire commissioners as organized under the present charter. The court there said:

"The position of clerk as prescribed in the law of 1878 is not, in terms at least, contained in the new chapter. By the old law, as shown, the clerk was required to be one of 'the members and employés of said fire department.' No such qualification is required by the new charter in regard to the secretary. It simply declares that the board 'may appoint a secretary, who shall perform such duties as the board may prescribe.' It cannot be said, therefore, that the secretary of the board under the new charter is the same office or place as the clerk mentioned under the old law. Chapter 8 of article 9 of the charter provides that 'the officers and members of the fire department shall receive annual salaries as follows,' and then enumerates the different classes of officers and members, but does not mention the secretary of the board, nor any 'clerk' of the fire department. It is a fair inference that the direction in chapter 2, that in reorganizing the force the department shall make its appointments of 'officers and members' from the force in service when the charter took effect, applies only to the 'officers and members' whose salaries are fixed in chapter 8, and, as the secretary is not one of those enumerated, it would follow that the board is not required to select him from the members of the old fire department. From the foregoing, and from the nature of the office and the necessity of the greatest degree of confidence between the incumbent and the board, it would seem that it was the intention of the framers of the charter that the appointment of the secretary should be left to the discretion of the board."

[3] Aside from this, as stated by counsel for the respondents in their brief, if the foregoing construction of the charter provision is incorrect, and if it should be conceded that McCarthy was, as secretary, an officer and member of the fire department, and therefore within the civil service provisions of the charter, he still must fail to establish his position here, because of the fact, found by the trial court, that at the time of his appointment to the position of secretary of the board of fire commissioners he was above the age of 35 years, and therefore not eligible to a position in the department. Section 6, chapter 1, article 9, provides that all persons appointed to positions in the fire department must be not less than 21 nor more than 35 years of age. That provision of the charter is plain and unambiguous. It formed a part of the present charter of the city and county of San Francisco when that instrument was first adopted, was in full force at the time of McCarthy's election to the position of secretary to the board and at the time he was discharged therefrom, and remained in that form until it was changed by an amendment adopted by the people on November 15, 1910, approved by the Legislature on the 17th of February, 1911. Stats. 1911, p. 1661. So that, taking either view of the plaintiff's case, whether McCarthy be considered as a member of the fire department, and so subject to the civil service sections of the charter, or whether he be considered as not within the meaning of those sections, he was still in a position where the board of fire commissioners had a right to discharge him, and he cannot be reinstated by the courts.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRAIG v. STANSBURY.

STANSBURY v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA et al.

(Civ. 2703, 2712.)

1. SUPERSEDEAS ⊂=1—INJUNCTIVE CHARACTER OF REMEDY.

The remedy by supersedeas is usually regarded as injunctive or prohibitive in character, and not corrective.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Supersedeas.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=492—EXECUTION SALE—VACATION—POWER OF COURT.

The appellate court has inherent power by writ of supersedeas to vacate execution sale made after appeal was perfected and stay of execution had become operative.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=485(4)—STAY OF EXECUTION—VIOLATION OF RIGHT OF STAY.

Where notice of appeal and bond were filed after issuance of the sheriff's certificate of sale on execution the sale worked no violation of any right of stay of execution as the conclusion of execution sale, under Code Civ. Proc. § 700a, is at least as early as the time of the issuance of the sheriff's certificate of sale.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=458(1)—EXECUTION SALE.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 946, the appellate court has no power to set aside by supersedeas an execution sale completed before the court acquired jurisdiction of any appeal from the judgment; any right of the judgment debtor to have the sale set aside must be enforced in the trial court.

5. EXECUTION ⊂=247—SALE—MOTION TO SET ASIDE—CONSPIRACY.

On motion to set aside execution sale, allegations of a conspiracy to commit a fraud on the rights of the judgment debtor cannot be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Writ of Mandate to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by J. C. Craig, executor of the last will and testament of Valentine Kratz, against Charles Stansbury, resulting in judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealing with application for writ of supersedeas. From an order dismissing motion to set aside execution sale, defendant petitions for writ of mandate against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, and Hon. John M. York, judge thereof, an alternative writ being allowed. Motion denied, alternative writ set aside and application for a peremptory writ refused.

Hocker & Austin, W. A. Alderson, Andrews, Toland & Andrews, and Kenton A. Miller, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. George P. Adams, of Los Angeles, for respondent Craig. Andrews, Toland & Andrews, Kenton A. Miller, Hocker & Austin, and W. A. Alderson, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner Stansbury. Haas & Dunnigan, George P. Adams, and Wm. M. Brown, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Superior Court. Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for purchaser at execution sale.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. For convenience the action first above entitled, Craig v. Stansbury, will throughout this opinion be referred to as the action; and the second matter, Stansbury v. Superior Court, will be alluded to as the mandate proceeding. The action was commenced for the purpose of recovering on a promissory note, the plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals. The appeal is not yet before us for decision; but the appellant asks for the issuance of a writ of supersedeas, upon his claim that the execution of the judgment had been stayed by the giving of bond, in connection with the appeal, before the making of a certain sale by the sheriff on execution, as well as upon grounds other than the ground that execution had been stayed. The application is made upon notice to the purchaser at the sale, as well as to the respondent in the action. After the appeal was taken, but before the application for a supersedeas was filed in this court, the appellant presented to the trial court, in the action, a motion to set aside the execution sale. That motion was made upon all the grounds now placed before us as a basis for the application for the supersedeas. The trial court entered a dismissal of the motion on the ground that the "court has not jurisdiction to entertain" it "on the facts stated in the notice of motion," Thereupon the appellant instituted the mandate proceeding for the purpose of compelling the trial court to proceed to hear and determine the questions involved in the motion, and an alternative writ was allowed.

[1, 2] Our first labor is to determine whether a supersedeas will issue out of this court, as demanded. It is to be observed, at the outset, that the form of relief now requested has had its most frequent use in those cases in which there has been a stay of the execution of a judgment appealed from, and in which the trial court has threatened to take some step toward an enforcement of the judgment, notwithstanding the operation of the stay (McAneny v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 6, 9, 87 Pac. 1020; Southern Pac. Co. v. Superior Court, 167 Cal. 250, 252, 139 Pac. 69); in other words the remedy by supersedeas is usually regarded as injunctive or prohibitive in character and not corrective. We are now, however, asked to apply the remedy as a corrective, by ordering vacated a sale which has been consummated by the sheriff pursuant to final process of the court, after the perfecting of an appeal and the giving of a stay bond. Notwithstanding what we have said above as to the purpose for which the remedy by supersedeas usually has been employed, there is direct authority, also, for its use in such a case as this. In Owen v. Pomona L. & W. Co., 124 Cal. 331, 57 Pac. 71, an appeal had been taken and a stay of execution was operative under it. The respondent, pending the appeal, took out an execution or order of sale, and the sheriff sold certain property described in the decree appealed from. The appellant moved to set aside the sale and quash the execution on the ground that they were in violation of the right to a stay, and the court granted the motion, going so far as to say:

"No question is made as to the power and duty of this court to grant the relief sought by the motion if all proceedings on the judgment were stayed by the appeal."

This case is directly in point here, and it has been cited with approval in McAneny v. Superior Court, supra, and in Southern Pacific Co. v. Superior Court, supra. We conclude that this court has the inherent power —for it is to that source that the right to issue the writ of supersedeas is ascribed by the authorities—to vacate the sale now sought to be set aside, if, as claimed by the appellant, the appeal was perfected and a stay of execution became operative before the sale was made.

[3] We are next to inquire whether the appeal had been perfected and the stay of execution imposed before the completion of the sheriff's sale; and, in determining this question, the property sold having been personalty, we consider the conclusion of the sale as being at least as early as the time of the issuance of the sheriff's certificate of sale. Code Civ. Proc. § 700a. The notice of appeal and the stay bond were filed with the trial court together, in point of time, and the execution sale was conducted, including the issuance of the certificate of sale, on the same day. The question of priority, as between the sale and the perfecting of the appeal, is therefore one of hours only. This fact is conceded by the entire record before us, which consists of voluminous affidavits and of some testimony from the witness stand. It would serve no useful purpose to review the evidence on this question. We have examined it carefully, and from our examination we now find and declare that the notice of appeal and bond were filed after the issuance of the sheriff's certificate of sale. The sale, therefore, worked no violation of any right of stay of execution.

[4] We have already remarked that we are asked to set the sale aside on grounds other than the one that a stay of execution was in force at the time the sale was made. We have yet to determine whether we may entertain the motion on those grounds, which, speaking in general terms, are that the sale was conducted in furtherance of a conspiracy between all those who were parties to the sale, formed to cause a sacrifice of the property under levy at an inadequate price and for other purposes claimed by the appellant to be illicit and to work a fraud upon his rights. The appellant presents to us no authority and shows us no good reason which point to the power in an appellate court to set aside, by supersedeas, an execution sale completed before the court acquired jurisdiction of any appeal from the judgment for the enforcement of which the sale was made. The general character of the remedy, as that character is above stated, seems to prevent its application in such an instance. It is true, in addition to what we have already said concerning supersedeas, that the Supreme Court has allowed its use to create a stay of execution where none had been imposed by appeal or by bond given pursuant to appeal (Hill v. Finnigan, 54 Cal. 493; Rogers v. Superior Court, 158 Cal. 467, 111 Pac. 357; Reed Orchard Co. v. Superior Court, 19 Cal. App. 648, 667, 128 Pac. 9, 18), instead of merely allowing it for the purpose of protecting a stay already existent; but its use in those instances, as well as in all others, seems to have been predicated upon the ground that an appellate court may concern itself, by supersedeas, with acts either threatened or consummated after appeals have been perfected. Where an execution sale has been completed before an appeal has been taken from the judgment sought to be executed through such sale, any right of the judgment debtor to have the sale set aside must be enforced by appropriate proceeding in the trial court. This view is sustained, in effect, if not in terms, by the provisions of section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which has to do with the effect of appeals upon proceedings in the trial court after judgments have been appealed from and upon the levy of executions outstanding for their enforcement.

We now turn to the mandate proceeding, in order to determine whether a peremptory writ shall issue requiring the trial court to proceed with the hearing of the motion to set aside the execution sale, on grounds other than the ground that a stay of execution was in effect at the time the sale was made, of which latter ground we have already disposed. The Supreme Court early declared that a motion to set aside an execution sale could not be entertained where the purchaser at the sale was a stranger to the judgment under execution (Bryan v. Berry, 8 Cal. 130); and a little later a judgment was affirmed in a case in which the trial court had set aside a sale in an action in equity brought to secure that relief (San Francisco v. Pixley, 21 Cal. 56). The case last cited was one in which a stranger had purchased at the sale, and Bryan v. Berry is cited in the opinion in connection with a query as to when relief, in such cases, may be had on motion and when by bill in equity. The question thus mentioned had not been presented by the parties, and was stated by the court not to be before it. It was said in the opinion that "whether the application for relief should be presented by motion to the court or by bill in equity will depend upon the special circumstances of the particular case"; but further language was used in indicating a view of the court to the effect that, where a third party was the purchaser and the sale had been closed by the execution of a final conveyance by the selling officer, the application for relief should be, or, at least, might be, by bill in equity. The grounds for relief in the case were that the property sold, being realty which lay in parcels, had been sold en masse, and that the price paid was nominal and out of all proportion to real value. The question next came before the Supreme Court in Boles v. Johnston, 23 Cal. 226, 83 Am. Dec. 111. The sale was there sought to be set aside on account of "numerous irregularities in the conduct of the officer in making the levy and sale," of which irregularities the purchaser at the sale was not alleged to have had notice. The court said:

'Whether a court of equity might not grant relief in a proper case showing fraud in the conduct of the sheriff in selling property in violation of the rights of the parties and the requirements of the statute, of which the purchaser and those claiming under him had notice, or in which they may have participated, is a question unnecessary to determine in this case, as it is not founded upon any such state of facts. If the plaintiffs have any remedy at all under the facts stated, it is by motion properly made in the court where the judgment was rendered to set aside the sale, and not in this collateral action. The right of action here is founded solely upon these irregularities, and the court below committed no error in dismissing the action."

These appear to be the only cases, in California, in which there is any mention of the question as to when execution sales may be set aside on motion and when that relief may be had pursuant to bill in equity, although we have a line of cases, beginning with Brown v. Ferrea, 51 Cal. 552, and running at least as late as Anglo-Californian Bank v. Cerf, 142 Cal. 303, 75 Pac. 902, and Bechtel v. Wier, 152 Cal. 443, 93 Pac. 75, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549, in which the sufficiency of various grounds urged toward the setting aside of sales on motion is considered, it being assumed that the form of remedy chosen was an appropriate one. This assumption was doubtless proper, in each case, as each had to do with mere irregularities in sales, principally under the provisions of section 694 of the Code of Civil Procedure, laying down certain rules for the conduct of sales under execution. The Supreme Court in at least two cases, also has considered the sufficiency of grounds upon which, in actions in equity, attempts were made to set aside sales because of fraud and unfair dealing (Odell v. Cox, 151 Cal. 70, 90 Pac. 194; Rauer v. Hertweek, 165 Pac. 946); but in neither of them was the question of the propriety or exclusiveness of the remedy brought into question. Now, however, we are driven to repeat the query of the earlier cases. We have not to do with a question of irregularity in the conduct of a sale. There is before us a direct and circumstantial charge that a conspiracy was formed to commit a fraud upon the rights of the judgment debtor by making sacrifice of his property. Not only so, but it is charged that the conspiracy was executed by the performance of a series of acts which led to its successful culmination in the sale now sought to be set aside. To this conspiracy the county clerk and the sheriff, or deputies of each of them, are alleged to have been parties, along with the judgment creditor and the purchaser at the sale, and the acts done by each of them in furtherance of the conspiracy are distinctly set forth in the notice of motion and affidavits which were presented to the trial judge, and which he refused to consider.

[5] We are of the opinion that such matters cannot properly be considered on mere motion. Such a case does not seem to come within any decision of the Supreme Court authorizing, either tacitly or by direct decision, the setting aside of execution sales in that summary manner. Such motions are usually based upon affidavit, and the number of persons concerned in the charge here presented, the complexity of the charge, and the fact that it has to do with many matters extraneous to the sale itself—thus, as we have already said, presenting a case entirely different from one of mere irregularity in a sale—all seem to frame a controversy which ought not to be, and which in justice to all concerned could not be, determined upon such an informal presentation. It is said in Freeman on Executions (3d Ed.) § 310:

"Where grounds exist for vacating a sale, which rest not in irregularity of proceeding, but in fraudulent devices practiced upon the complainant, or in accident or mistake for which he has suffered, and from which he is entitled to relief, he may, before conveyance is made to the purchaser, proceed either by motion in the original case or by bill in equity. In this, however, as in other matters within the concurrent jurisdiction of law and equity, the choice and propriety of remedy are governed by considerations of adequacy and expediency; and since the importance of these considerations depends quite usually upon the circumstances of the case in hand, it is impossible to deduce from the cases an inflexible rule, determining the proper choice of remedy, where the end sought is the vacation of an execution sale. The proper criterion for determining this matter is found in the nature of the question, and the character of the issue, which must be weighed and decided before the relief sought can be granted or denied. Fraud, mistake, irregularities, and inadequacy of price may justify the setting aside of an execution sale upon motion; but the nature of the proceeding by motion renders it applicable with propriety only to a minority of the cases where such grounds for vacation are set forth. If a conveyance has been executed, and the purchaser thereby vested with the legal title, it is doubtful whether he can be divested of it by motion. If the charge is that the sale ought to be vacated for matters not apparent from an inspection of the proceedings, such as combination to depress the bidding, or any other species of fraud, or for any misconduct on the part of the officer conducting the sale, the better opinion is that the purchaser's title cannot be divested otherwise than by an independent suit in equity against him."

The motion, addressed to this court in Civil No. 2703, and demanding that the execution sale be set aside, is denied. The alternative writ of mandate, in Civil No. 2712, is set aside and the application for a peremptory writ is refused.

ELLIS v. CENTRAL CALIFORNIA TRACTION CO. (Civ. 1580.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 30, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 29, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS ⟸350(11) — INJURIES AT CROSSING — NEGLIGENCE — QUESTIONS FOR JURY.
Whether 30 miles per hour was an excessive rate of speed for defendant railroad's freight train when approaching a public crossing held for the jury.

2. RAILROADS ⟸350(7)—INJURIES AT CROSSING—SIGNALS—QUESTION FOR JURY.
Whether a freight train, when approaching a crossing, gave warning of its approach, held for the jury.

3. RAILROADS ⟸344(5)—INJURIES AT CROSSING—COMPLAINT.
Plaintiff's allegations that as he reached railroad's crossing in auto stage in which he was a passenger, the railroad ran one of its trains across the highway in a negligent manner, and at negligent speed, without giving any signals, so that plaintiff, while traveling with due care, was injured, stated a cause of action.

4. PLEADING ⟸11—EVIDENTIAL FACTS.
A pleading should not set forth evidential facts.

5. NEGLIGENCE ⟸117—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN TO PLEAD AND PROVE.
In an action for personal injuries, contributory negligence is a defense which may be set up, and, if set up, must be supported by defendant.

6. NEGLIGENCE ⟸113(6) — IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE—NEGATIVING IN COMPLAINT.
The complaint against a railroad of a passenger in an auto stage for injuries in collision with a freight train at a crossing did not need to show who the owner or driver of the machine was at the time of the collision.

7. PLEADING ⟸8(17)—ALLEGATIONS OF DUE CARE AND NEGLIGENCE — CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.
Allegations of complaint against railroad, of passenger in auto stage injured at crossing collision with freight train, that plaintiff was traveling with due care, and that railroad ran train across crossing in negligent manner and at negligent speed, were not improper as mere conclusions of law.

8. RAILROADS ⊂⊃348(4)—INJURIES AT CROSSING—FAILURE TO GIVE WARNING—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action against railroad for injuries to passenger in auto stage in crossing collision with freight train, evidence held to justify finding railroad employés were negligent by failing to give any warning of approach of train.

9. RAILROADS ⊂⊃348(5) — CROSSING ACCIDENT—SPEED—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a passenger in an auto stage in collision with freight train at crossing, evidence held to justify finding that train was traveling at a negligent rate of speed.

10. NEGLIGENCE ⊂⊃92 — IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE—PASSENGER IN STAGE.

Though driver of auto stage was negligent in attempting railroad crossing, and his negligence, concurring with railroad's, brought about a collision with a freight train, a passenger could not be charged with the driver's negligence, not having had the right to control him.

11. RAILROADS ⊂⊃334—INJURIES AT CROSSING — NEGLIGENCE — PASSENGER IN AUTO STAGE.

Where auto stage approached railroad crossing at high speed, a passenger sitting on side door with his feet in the car, because it was crowded, was not negligent, because, on seeing a freight train approach the crossing, he jumped into the middle of the car holding onto the back of the front seat.

12. WITNESSES ⊂⊃318 — IMPEACHMENT — SUPPORT OF TESTIMONY.

Where depositions showed witnesses were in California at time of the accident in suit, and witnessed it, corroborating testimony of other witnesses that deponents were in state at time, and where they had opportunity to see accident would have been admissible only had adverse party attempted to show for impeachment that witnesses were not in state.

13. RAILROADS ⊂⊃347(11) — INJURIES AT CROSSING—ACTS AND CONDUCT OF PERSON OTHER THAN PARTY.

In action by passenger in auto stage for injuries in crossing collision with freight train, court properly refused to strike, on railroad's motion, answer of another passenger in stage that he did not watch or notice other passengers, and that he could see those in front of him glancing up and down the track, as the driver did.

14. RAILROADS ⊂⊃330(3) — INJURIES AT CROSSING—DUTY OF TRAVELER.

Traveler on highway approaching railroad crossing must use ordinary care and should stop to make observations, being under duty to use all of his faculties, and is negligent if he merely looks or listens, believing man in charge of train will ring bell or sound whistle.

15. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1064(1)—HARMLESS ERROR — MODIFICATION OF INSTRUCTION.

Modification of railroad's requested instruction, as to traveler's duty on approaching crossing to stop, look, and listen, by eliminating statement that passenger should stop to make observations, and was under duty to use all his faculties, was not prejudicial.

16. NEGLIGENCE ⊂⊃121(5) — BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden to prove defendant's negligence as the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries rested on plaintiff.

17. TRIAL ⊂⊃260(8) — INSTRUCTIONS — REPETITION.

An instruction correctly declaring the law that the burden to prove defendant's negligence rested on plaintiff, but covered by a portion of the court's charge, was properly refused defendant.

18. TRIAL ⊂⊃260(8) — INSTRUCTIONS — REPETITION.

The court properly refused defendant railroad the instruction that the duty to take added precautions was not cast upon the motorman by the mere fact that he saw an automobile at a crossing, but had the right to assume that it would stop; principle being covered by another charge.

19. TRIAL ⊂⊃237(1) — FINDINGS — PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 5, in civil cases, where the evidence is contradictory, an instruction requiring proof beyond the preponderance of the evidence is erroneous.

20. RAILROADS ⊂⊃324(1) — INJURIES AT CROSSING—DUTY OF PASSENGER ON VEHICLE.

Mere sight of railroad crossing by passenger in vehicle approaching, no danger being apparent, does not make it the passenger's duty to warn the driver of the crossing or of the near approach of the vehicle.

21. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1067—HARMLESS ERROR—REJECTION OF INSTRUCTION.

Where court in charge clearly stated and explained rule that plaintiff could not recover if guilty of negligence proximately contributing to his injury, rejection of instruction requested by defendant involving statement of proposition was harmless.

22. TRIAL ⊂⊃260(8) — INSTRUCTIONS — REPETITION.

In action against railroad for injuries in crossing collision, court properly refused defendant's requested instruction that jury were not at liberty to disregard testimony of either motorman or conductor simply because employed by defendant, where court did instruct jury were sole judges of value of evidence, and were not at liberty arbitrarily to reject testimony of any witness.

23. TRIAL ⊂⊃194(20) — INSTRUCTION — DIRECTION TO RETURN VERDICT.

Instruction that, if plaintiff was injured as described, jury should render verdict for him, and against railroad, for full amount of "damages," not exceeding amount prayed in complaint, was not erroneous as an unqualified direction to return verdict for full amount.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by George W. Ellis against the Central California Traction Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton, for appellant. Stuckenbruck & West, of Lodi, for respondent.

HART, J. On the 28th day of September, 1915, plaintiff was a passenger for hire, on an automobile stage owned and driven by one Sam Ebel, traveling from Stockton to Lodi along a public highway known as the "Cherokee lane." At a point about three miles from Stockton, where the highway crosses the railroad track of defendant, the automobile collided with one of defendant's trains which consisted of two cars. Plaintiff received injuries in the collision and brought the action to recover damages therefor. A jury returned a verdict in his favor for $1,700, and judgment was entered against defendant for that amount, from which judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Briefly stated, the facts are: the crossing where the accident occurred is an exceedingly dangerous one. Going in a northwesterly direction, Cherokee lane crosses defendant's railroad and immediately turns to the north. There are some trees, with dense foliage, immediately adjoining the right of way which prevent a full view of the track. It is a place where it should be imperative that the driver of a vehicle should heed the admonition to "stop, look, and listen." The testimony, as well as a number of photographs introduced in evidence, showed that at the crossing there was the usual sign, reading, "Railroad Crossing," that at a point about 100 feet south there was a sign painted, "Danger. R. R. X.," and at about 30 feet further south there was another sign on which was painted the word, "Railroad."

The owner and driver of the auto stage, Sam Ebel, for more than two months prior to the day of the accident, had been running his automobile between Stockton and Lodi, making six round trips each day. The automobile was a seven-passenger, six-cylinder, Pierce-Arrow. On the day of the accident it contained eight passengers besides the driver. The stage left Stockton at about 8 o'clock in the morning, and the collision occurred about 15 minutes later.

Plaintiff was a stranger to the locality, and the trip was his first one over the road; his destination being Lodi. Owing to the crowded condition of the stage, plaintiff sat on the door on the left-hand side with his feet inside of the machine. At a point about 75 feet south of the crossing, plaintiff saw that they were approaching a railroad track. He testified that he looked up and down the track, but could see no train; that the orchard trees grew within 6 or 7 feet of the track at one point and that a train could not be observed until one was within about 20 feet of the track; that when he was about that distance from the track he saw the approaching train coming from the north; that it was traveling at about 25 miles an hour, and the automobile was proceeding at not to exceed 6 or 7 miles an hour; that the driver, as quickly as possible, put on his brakes and swerved to the left. Plaintiff jumped to the center of the automobile and took hold of the back of the front seat, and when he recovered his senses after the collision occurred he was lying on the roadway. He and the physicians who attended him testified as to the extent of his injuries.

On of the passengers, Henry Squires, called as a witness for the plaintiff, testified that, when the stage was at a point at about 300 yards from the crossing, he for the first time observed a freight train standing on the siding located about 300 yards above the crossing; that after that, owing to an obstruction of the view caused by houses and fruit trees, he was unable to see the freight train until the auto stage had reached a point about from 25 to 40 feet of the track, when he again saw the freight train, and that it was then moving and approaching the crossing; that thereupon he immediately warned the driver of the automobile of the approach of the train; and that he (the driver) then immediately applied the brakes. Neither Squires nor, for that matter, any of the passengers testifying for the plaintiff, heard a whistle blown.

D. McCoy, also a passenger on the auto stage, called as a witness for defendant, testified that he did not know how rapidly the automobile was traveling, but that at one time he said to the driver, "You are going too damn fast"; that when he first saw the train the automobile was going faster than the train was.

The train with which the stage collided had been standing on the siding mentioned waiting for a passenger train to pass. After it passed, the freight train backed out of the siding to the main track and then started toward Stockton. The motorman testified that he blew the crossing signal—two long and two short blasts—twice before reaching the crossing where the accident occurred; the last signal being given when the train was about 100 feet from the crossing, and ending just before he reached it. The train crew testified that the speed of the train was from 10 to 15 miles an hour and that of the automobile about 30. There was evidence that there was some wind blowing from a southerly direction and that the automobile was making considerable noise, which tended to explain why none of the occupants of the stage heard the whistle, if one was blown. There is a signal gong at the crossing, but the testimony was that it did not ring at or immediately before the time of the accident, but that it was covered with a sack to indicate that it was out of order.

[1, 2] There was evidence from which the jury were warranted in finding that the train, when approaching the crossing, was traveling at the rate of at least 30 miles an hour. Whether this was an excessive rate of speed when approaching a public crossing was a question for the jury, as was likewise the question whether the defendant's train sounded or gave any warning of its approach to the crossing.

The appellant complains: (1) That the complaint does not state a cause of action in behalf of the plaintiff and that the order overruling its demurrer thereto was erroneous; (2) that the evidence does not support the verdict; (3) that certain rulings as to the evidence were erroneous; (4) that error was committed in the giving and the refusal to give certain instructions and in the modification of certain instructions proposed by the defendant and given to the jury as modified.

[3-5] 1. The objection to the complaint is without force. That pleading, after alleging that the automobile in which the plaintiff was riding at the time of the accident was a public conveyance, engaged in carrying passengers for hire, and after describing the crossing at which the collision occurred, avers:

"That as plaintiff reached said crossing and while plaintiff and said automobile were at and on said crossing, defendant ran one of its trains, drawn by a car operated by electric power, across said highway at said crossing, in a negligent manner and at a great and negligent rate of speed and without sounding any alarm, bell, or whistle, and without signal or warning of any kind, so that by reason thereof the said train struck plaintiff and said automobile, in which plaintiff was so riding as a passenger, and thereby injured and crushed plaintiff and damaged him in the following manner," etc.

It is further alleged that when the accident occurred the plaintiff was "traveling with due care in said automobile." These allegations state a case of negligence. Learned counsel seems to be of the opinion, however, that all the facts and circumstances of the accident should have been set forth in the complaint for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff himself was not guilty of the negligence, if any there was, which was the immediate or direct cause of the damage sustained by him. But this would have necessitated the pleading of the evidential facts, and no one knows better than the learned attorney for the defendant that thus the very first of the rules of pleading would have been violated. Moreover, contributory negligence in an action to recover for personal injuries is a defense which may be set up and, if so set up, must be supported by the defendant. The burden of establishing it, when relied on as a defense, is always on the defendant.

[6] The contention that the complaint should have shown who the owner or the driver of the machine was at the time of the collision is equally untenable. If the plaintiff was himself the owner or the driver of the automobile when the damage was done, either of those facts could have been shown under the claim that his negligence alone was directly responsible for the accident. The complaint, however, alleges, as we have seen, that the machine was run as a common carrier or public conveyance and that the plaintiff was merely a passenger in said machine. This was sufficient to justify the inference that he was neither the owner nor driver of the automobile, assuming, but by no means deciding, that that fact was important as a matter of pleading or necessary to be shown by the complaint.

[7] Another point is that the allegations that the plaintiff "was traveling with due care," and that defendant "ran one of its trains * * * across said crossing, in a negligent manner and at a great and negligent rate of speed," involve mere conclusions of law. Of course, the rule is elementary that conclusions of law are ordinarily not permissible in pleading. But conclusions of fact drawn from the evidential facts involve the statement only of the ultimate facts. In a measure, it is often true that the statement of an ultimate fact involves the statement of a conclusion of law, as, for illustration, the statement in a complaint that "John Doe is indebted to Richard Roe" in a certain sum. This is, in a sense, the statement of a conclusion of law; but it has also always been held to constitute the statement of an ultimate fact—a fact which has been drawn from the evidential facts. So it is true here. The allegations that the plaintiff exercised "due care" in making the crossing and that the defendant ran its train "in a negligent manner and at a great and negligent rate of speed" are, in the last analysis, conclusions of law; but they are no less conclusions of fact drawn from the facts and circumstances attending the collision, and are therefore the ultimate facts to be proved.

[8, 9] 2. The jury were apparently justified in finding that the defendant's employés were negligent by failing to blow a whistle or give any other warning of the approach of the train towards the crossing and was likewise justified in finding that, at the time the train approached and started over the crossing, it was traveling at a greater rate of speed than ordinary prudence would justify when passing over that part of a railroad track crossed by a public and popularly used highway. The case, therefore, upon the facts, comes clearly within the doctrines of the cases of Drouillard v. S. P. Co., 172 Pac. 405, and Ilardi v. California Traction Co., 172 Pac. 762, both recently decided by this court, and the cases therein cited.

[10] Here, as in those cases, the plaintiff was a passenger in the vehicle which was struck by a railroad train. He was not the driver of the machine, nor the owner, and had no authority or control over the driver. Assuming the driver to have been guilty of negligence, there is no evidence that the plaintiff participated in or was a party to such negligence. There is no evidence that he volunteered advice to the driver as to the course he should follow after the moving freight train hove in sight of the driver and the passengers. In fact, there is no evidence that he did or said anything which contributed in any measure or in any way to any negligence of which the driver might have been guilty.

In the Ilardi case, supra, it is said:

"The cases are quite uniform in the enunciation of the rule that a person riding as a passenger or guest in a vehicle driven by another may not be charged with the negligence of the latter which has caused injury to the former, unless the passenger or guest has the right to exercise control over the driver of the vehicle, or 'in the eyes of the law may be said to possess such power of control.' (Bryant v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 739 [164 Pac. 385]), or unless it is made to appear that the passenger or guest himself actively participated in the negligence of the driver."

See, in addition to the cases above named, the following: Pyle v. Clark et al. and Wright v. Clark et al. (C. C.) 75 Fed. 644; Thompson v. Los Angeles & S. D. B. Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 Pac. 709; Wilson v. Puget Sound Co., 52 Wash. 522, 101 Pac. 50, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1044; Howe v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 62 Minn. 71, 64 N. W. 102, 30 L. R. A. 684, 54 Am. St. Rep. 616; Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059; Fujise v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 12 Cal. App. 207, 107 Pac. 317; Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 Pac. 460; Clarke v. Conn. Co., 83 Conn. 219, 76 Atl. 723; Lininger v. S. F. Railroad Co., 18 Cal. App. 411, 123 Pac. 235; Chadbourne v. Springfield St. Ry. Co., 199 Mass. 574, 85 N. E. 737.

Assuming, then, that the driver of the machine was negligent, and that his negligence concurring with that of the defendant brought about the collision and its results, the plaintiff cannot be charged with such negligence, but, if not entitled to recover, must have been shown to have himself failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety. Such a showing the defendant failed to make.

[11] As is to be observed, none of the passengers heard the train whistle or give any other warning indicating that it was moving, and the first notice the passengers had of its approach was after the trees obstructing a view of the train had been passed and the automobile was at a distance of from 25 to 40 feet from the crossing. The plaintiff, who was sitting on the door of the machine, with his feet on the inside thereof, upon observing the train moving towards the crossing, immediately jumped to the center of the machine and took hold of the back of the front seat. What induced him to believe, as evidently he did for the moment believe, that he would be less liable to injury in the event of a collision by taking a position in the center of the machine than he would in the position from which he jumped to the center, the record does not show. The probability is that he himself could now give no rational reason for his change of positions in the machine. But that thus he intended and attempted to shield himself against personal injury, the jury had the right to believe; and in the absence of a showing that, under the circumstances of peril which surrounded him and which came upon him with a suddenness that would very naturally preclude the exercise of his best judgment as to what he ought to have done, he was guilty of some affirmative act of negligence, it was entirely for the jury to determine whether he did or did not exercise the care for his own safety which the law required of him. The verdict implies that he did exercise such care.

It is often true that, in cases of sudden circumstances of danger, a person does the very act that he ought not to do to save himself from being injured; but, in those cases where the party causing those circumstances has done so negligently and the injured person has not himself intentionally or from culpable carelessness contributed thereto, the latter will not be held to have been responsible for any injury he may sustain merely because he has not acted prudently or with good judgment in an effort to escape being hurt or killed. As was said, in Tousley v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 457, 137 Pac. 31, quoting the syllabus:

"A person in great peril, when immediate action is necessary to avoid it, is not required to exercise all that presence of mind and carefulness which are justly required of a careful and prudent man under ordinary circumstances."

See, also, Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 89; Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 490, 66 Pac. 734; Stapp v. Madera Canal & Irrigation Co., 34 Cal. App. 41, 166 Pac. 823.

But we are unable to perceive what the plaintiff could have done to have saved himself from injury. He might have jumped to the ground, it is true; but the peril attending such a move under the circumstances might have been equally as hazardous and dangerous as the course he did pursue. Indeed, it might have then appeared to him more dangerous to jump from the machine while it was moving at a pretty fair speed than to remain in it, for he had the right to suppose that the driver himself, who was familiar with the crossing, having passed over it many times, would exercise due care for the protection and safety of his passengers. In other words, he had the right at all times to trust to the driver of the automobile to avoid the ordinary dangers of the road, with which the driver was entirely familiar, and that even when so near the crossing as the machine was as the train was approaching he would or might take some action which would prevent what then might have appeared and probably did appear to be an impending collision between the train and the machine.

The cases cited by counsel for the appellant have no application to the facts of this case. They might be pertinent to the case of the driver of the automobile if he were plaintiff here. It should not be necessary to say that in none of them is it held that the negligence of the driver of a vehicle is imputable to a guest or passenger riding in such vehicle where injury has resulted partly from such negligence to the guest or passenger and where the latter has exercised due care for his own safety.

[12] 3. Two of the witnesses to the accident, George Bloodworth and P. S. Titus, were residents of Jacksonville, Fla., and their depositions were taken and introduced in evidence. Before introducing these depositions, counsel for the defendant called a witness, one McCurry, a clerk in the office of the defendant at Stockton, by whom he sought to prove and did prove that said witnesses voluntarily went to the office of defendant shortly after the accident and likewise stated to McCurry that they had witnessed the accident and desired to give testimony as to the circumstances thereof. The object of this testimony, as counsel explained it at the trial, was to negative the insinuation which he claimed was involved in the cross-interrogatories submitted to Titus and Bloodworth that they were not in California on the day of the accident. The object thus sought to be attained by the testimony of McCurry was in fact accomplished, he having been permitted to testify that Titus and Bloodworth voluntarily went to him and stated that they saw the accident and wished to give their testimony then, and that he took them to the law offices of defendant's counsel, to whom they made a statement of the facts and circumstances of the accident as they saw it. Further than this the court refused to allow McCurry to testify regarding that circumstance. Counsel now complains that he was entitled to show all the facts and circumstances of the presence of Titus and Bloodworth in Stockton at the time, including details of their conversations concerning the accident. There is no legal support for the objection here made to the court's ruling excluding further testimony as to the matter. All that counsel stated at the trial that he desired to show by McCurry was testified to by said witness. The fact is the depositions themselves showed that Titus and Bloodworth were in California at the time of the accident and witnessed it, and testimony of other witnesses that they were in this state at the time and were where they had an opportunity to see the accident would be admissible only where the other party had introduced proof by way of impeachment tending to show that said witnesses were not in California on the day the accident happened.

[13] 4. The court refused to strike out on motion of defendant the following answer, given by the witness Stone, a passenger in the automobile when the collision happened, in response to a question by plaintiff's attorney as to whether he (Stone) watched or noticed the other passengers as the train was moving towards the crossing:

"Sure not. I was in the back. I could see those in front of me, but naturally looked up and down the tracks, and their heads bobbing, like glancing up and down the track the driver did."

The ground of the motion, as stated by counsel, was that "what this witness did or saw is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; the witness not being the plaintiff." It is here urged that the ruling on the motion was erroneous and prejudicial. We cannot see it that way. Obviously, the witness or any witness, whether a party to the action or not, is competent to give testimony as to any fact material and relevant to the issue of which he has obtained direct knowledge; that is, any fact which he has observed or acquired knowledge of through his own perception.

There are numerous other exceptions to rulings as to certain evidence which counsel insists constitute well taken grounds for a reversal. These we have carefully examined and considered, and in none have we found prejudicial error.

[14, 15] 5. The following instruction was requested by the defendant:

"It is the duty of a traveler on a highway approaching a railroad crossing to use ordinary care in securing a time and place to stop, look, and listen for coming trains. He should stop for the purpose of making such observations. It is his duty to use all of his faculties, and it is not enough if he merely looks or listens, believing that the people in charge of any approaching train will ring the bell, or sound the whistle."

The court modified said instruction by striking therefrom the portion which we have italicized and as so modified read it to the jury. Counsel contends that the court in so modifying the instruction erred to the serious prejudice of the defendant's rights.

That the instruction as proposed contained a correct statement of the rule in the abstract, there can be no doubt (Griffin v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 775, 151 Pac. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842); and the portion of the instruction given sufficiently stated the law of this case. But the instruction as a whole is not altogether applicable to a case of this character. While it was no doubt the duty of the plaintiff to look and listen and "to use all his faculties" to the end that he might exercise the required degree of care to protect himself against injury, it is manifest that he could not stop, since he was in the machine and had no authority over the driver, but was wholly subject to the control and actions of the latter. The modification of the instruction as indicated was not prejudicial, although we cannot perceive that any harm would have been done by giving it in its entirety.

[16, 17] 6. Instruction No. 7, proposed by the defendant and disallowed by the court, contained a statement of the rule that the burden of proving the alleged negligence of the defendant as the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries rested upon the plaintiff. The instruction correctly declared the law, but the rule as stated therein was covered by the court in other portions of its charge. Repeatedly the court told the jury that, to prevail in the trial, the plaintiff was required to prove his allegations of negligence by a preponderance of the evidence and that unless he did so the defendant would be entitled to a verdict.

[18] 7. It is next contended that the action of the court in disallowing the following instruction involved prejudicial error:

"The duty of taking added precautions to prevent a collision was not cast upon the motor-man * * * by the mere fact that he saw an automobile, but he had the right to assume that the automobile would stop before attempting to cross the track."

The principle stated in said instruction was in effect declared in the following, which was given:

"Those in charge of railway cars are not compelled to stop for an automobile approaching a railway crossing where there is nothing to indicate that the person or persons in charge of such automobile are unable to stop before going on such crossing, and nothing to indicate that they have not, or might not have, seen the approaching train."

Furthermore, the negligence charged against the defendant was in its failure to give a warning signal and in running the train at an excessive speed; and the court explicitly instructed the jury that, in arriving at a verdict, they were to confine themselves to the consideration only of the negligence charged in the complaint, and that if the negligence so charged was not proved by the plaintiff to the required degree they should find for the defendant.

[19] 8. The court refused to allow an instruction, preferred by the defendant, which, if given, would have told the jury that they could not find for the plaintiff unless the evidence satisfied them that he has proved the negligence relied upon by him "beyond a preponderance of the evidence." It is obvious that the italicized language of the proposed instruction does not correctly state the rule, which is, in civil cases, where the evidence is contradictory, that the decision must be made, not beyond but according to the preponderance of the evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 5. It is true that a correct statement of the rule was embraced in the first part of the rejected instruction, but said rule having been elsewhere in the court's charge declared to the jury, it was manifestly unnecessary to repeat it.

[20] 9. Defendant's proposed instruction No. 19 would have told the jury that if the evidence showed that the plaintiff saw the "railroad crossing in ample time to have requested the driver of the automobile to stop before attempting to cross the * * * track, * * * and that plaintiff made no remonstrance or objection, but permitted the driver * * * to attempt to cross the * * * track, without stopping, looking and listening for the approach of a train thereon, then * * * the plaintiff is bound by the act of the driver * * * in not stopping, looking, and listening for an approaching train * * * and cannot recover." The instruction does not state the law applicable to this case. The mere sight of a railroad crossing by a passenger of a vehicle approaching such crossing, where there is then present no apparent danger in making the crossing, does not make it the duty of such passenger to warn the driver of the crossing or of the near approach of the vehicle thereto. As the cases point out, a passenger has the right to assume that the driver will, in such a case, as, indeed, in all cases, exercise due care to avoid the usual or ordinary dangers of the road.

[21] 10. Instruction No. 22, requested by the defendant, but disallowed, in effect involved the statement of the proposition that the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover if it appeared from the evidence that he was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to the injury. The court in its charge clearly stated and explained that rule to the jury and the rejection of said instruction was therefore not prejudicial.

[22] 11. There was no error in the action of the court in refusing to give defendant's proposed instruction No. 24. The court, had it adopted said instruction, would have declared to the jury the proposition that they were not at liberty to disregard the testimony of either the motorman or conductor of the train "simply because they were in the employ of the defendant," nor should the jury, for like reason, view the testimony of those witnesses with suspicion. The court instructed the jury that they were the sole judges of the effect and value of the evidence, and, further, that they were not at liberty arbitrarily to reject the testimony of any witness, but should attach to it such weight as in their judgment it was entitled to. This instruction was, of course, addressed to the testimony of all the witnesses testifying in the case, including the conductor and motorman of the defendant's train. There was therefore no necessity for or benefit to be derived from an instruction singling out particular witnesses and telling the jury that their testimony should not be arbitrarily or for capricious or unsubstantial reasons rejected or given no weight.

[23] 12. The last point made by the defendant to which special consideration should be given involves an attack upon plaintiff's instruction No. 3, which the court submitted to the jury. It is contended that said instruction involves an unqualified direction by the court to the jury to return a verdict for the full amount of damages asked in the complaint, if they found that the plaintiff had received the injuries complained of directly through the negligence of the defendant. We do not so understand the instruction. It in substance stated that, if the jury found from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured as described in the complaint and directly through the negligence of the defendant, "then it is your duty to render a verdict in favor of plaintiff and against the Central California Traction Company for the full amount of plaintiff's 'damages,' not exceeding, however, the amount prayed for in the complaint." The word "damages" as used in the instruction as the same appears in the record before us was without doubt intended as the word "damage" and to mean "damage" and not "damages." As so understood, and as undoubtedly the jury must have understood it from the words immediately following the word "damages," to wit, "not exceeding, however, the amount of damages prayed for in the complaint," the instruction simply and plainly means that, in case the jury found that the plaintiff had been injured through the negligence of defendant or its negligence concurring with that of the driver, the plaintiff would be entitled to full compensation for the damage (or injury) so sustained, not exceeding the amount of damages prayed for in the complaint.

We have found no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

37 Cal. App. 624

POLK v. LAUREL HILL CEMETERY ASS'N. (Civ. 1811.)

1. PLEADING ⊜35—SURPLUSAGE.
In action for the drowning of plaintiff's son in a reservoir maintained in defendant's cemetery, where children were allowed to go, allegations as to the rights of lot owners and visitors and as to the public right to use a roadway through the cemetery were surplusage.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⊜108(1)—EXCAVATION NEAR HIGHWAY—ALLEGATIONS.
Complaint, in action for the drowning of plaintiff's son in a reservoir maintained in defendant's cemetery "immediately alongside" a driveway, did not show a case of an excavation "adjoining the highway" into which a traveler rightfully in the highway accidentally fell.

3. NEGLIGENCE ⊜23(1)—TURNTABLE RULE.
The maintenance of dangerous and attractive machinery unguarded and exposed, which naturally allures and tempts small children to go upon or about it, is negligence for which the one maintaining it is liable in damages for an injury to a trespassing child.

4. NEGLIGENCE ⊜23(1)—TURNTABLE RULE—DANGEROUS MACHINERY.
The turntable rule of liability as to dangerous machinery is subject to the qualification that the danger, though novel and attractive to children, can be sufficiently guarded to protect against injury without destroying its usefulness or its intended purpose.

5. NEGLIGENCE ⊜23(1)—TURNTABLE RULE—GROUND.
The doctrine of the turntable cases is grounded in the maxim that one must so use and enjoy his property as to interfere with the safety of others as little as possible consistently with its proper use.

6. NEGLIGENCE ⊜32(4) — INVITATION TO PREMISES—SCOPE.
A permissive general invitation or privilege to visit a cemetery, not abandoned but parked and having driveways, etc., did not allow children to use it as a playground.

7. NEGLIGENCE ⊜32(1)—USE OF PREMISES—"INVITATION"—SCOPE.
An express or implied "invitation" to use premises creates a legal duty when the use is in accordance with the intention or design for which the place was adapted, prepared, or allowed to be used (citing Words and Phrases, Second Series, Invitation).

8. NEGLIGENCE ⊜32(4)—USE OF PREMISES—INJURY—LIABILITY.
Mere knowledge by a cemetery association that children habitually went into the cemetery and played would make the children, at most, licensees to whom the association would owe no duty or obligation.

9. NEGLIGENCE ⊜39 — USE OF PREMISES—RESERVOIR — LIABILITY FOR DROWNING OF CHILD.
A cemetery association maintaining an unguarded reservoir alongside a driveway near an entrance was not liable, under the rule of the turntable cases, for the drowning of a child of eight years allowed in the cemetery.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Imory Smith Polk against the Laurel Hill Cemetery Association, a corporation. Demurrer to complaint sustained, and judgment entered for defendant for costs, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John L. McNab, of San Francisco, for appellant. Haven & Athearn, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to recover damages for the death of his son by drowning in a reservoir maintained by defendant in its cemetery in the city of San Francisco. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, plaintiff elected not to amend, and judgment was entered in favor of defendant for costs, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges that defendant is a corporation; that, at the time of his death, William Henry Polk was a minor of the age of eight years and was the son of plaintiff; that defendant, for many years, has maintained in San Francisco a public cemetery; the streets surrounding it are named and it is stated that they are public thoroughfares used by the general public and by minor children attending public schools; that, for many years, said cemetery has been abandoned as a burial place owing to an ordinance of the city forbidding burials therein, but that it "has been and is now maintained as a place of adornment and attraction, parked and graded and kept open to the public daily from the hour of 7 a. m. until 5 p. m. of each day. Said cemetery is located in the heart of the residence section of the city and county of San Francisco, is surrounded by dwellings, and is maintained as an open parked ground made attractive not only for the benefit of persons whose relations and friends are buried within said cemetery, but is maintained as a public place of adornment and beauty with driveways, flower gardens," etc., "maintained open for the public view." The gates, entrances, and driveways are then described, and it is alleged that the cemetery is "daily frequented by great numbers of the general public, by visitors, * * * and particularly by great numbers of minor children who were and are permitted freely and without hindrance to enter said grounds and make a playground thereof, * * * to traverse its paths and byways, play in its driveways, and go and come freely throughout the whole of said cemetery." It is then stated that rules for the government of the public are posted in a prominent place at the entrance, to the effect that visitors should conduct themselves with proper decorum, forbid the plucking of flowers, etc.; that the owners of lots in said cemetery have the right freely to enter and do work in the way of erecting curbs, improving and adorning graves, etc.; that the cemetery contains many hundreds of individual lots, owned by the purchasers thereof, and that all the ground has been sold to individual lot owners; that for many years the general public used a roadway through said cemetery, including children going from what is known as the Richmond district to car lines at Presidio avenue; that there is a turnstile in said roadway in the boundary fence, and over said turnstile are signs reading: "Open from 7 a. m. to 5 p. m." It is next alleged:

"At a prominent place in said cemetery and immediately alongside one of the driveways therein and only a short distance from the Presidio avenue entrance aforesaid, defendant dug, excavated, and constructed a large reservoir for the holding of water. Said reservoir is still maintained on said premises and is of the length of about 130 feet, by a width of 55 feet, and was of a depth of 16 feet. Said reservoir is constructed of concrete and rises only 12 inches above the surface of the ground, which is parked and sloped up to the edge of said concrete." That said reservoir was wholly exposed without covering and without any fence or inclosure. That it was dangerous to all persons passing near the same "because the turf and ground sloped up to the edge thereof, so that any person walking or standing near the edge of said reservoir was without protection and without notice of proximity to a place of danger and was without any warning sign or indication that said place was dangerous. * * * Said reservoir was also likewise a place naturally attractive to children, and the children entering said grounds were naturally attracted on account of the water therein, and were accustomed naturally to play about said reservoir, casting stones into it, and imitating fishermen by casting lines therein and playing on the turf near the edge thereof. Said reservoir was at times filled with water almost to the brim and at other times was almost empty. * * * On the 25th day of April, 1914, William Henry Polk, the son of the plaintiff, a child of eight years of age, in company with other small minor children, entered said grounds at the driveway entrance on Presidio avenue above referred to about 2 p. m. of said day and engaged in playing in said grounds with other children, and in the same way that great numbers of children had been accustomed for years to enter and play in said cemetery with the knowledge of defendant. While engaged in such play near said reservoir, said infant stumbled and was precipitated into said reservoir and drowned, and was dead when removed from said reservoir a few minutes later. Plaintiff alleges that said child came to his death through the negligence of the defendant in constructing and maintaining such reservoir without any protecting barrier," etc., and "without any warning sign or guard to protect against the danger thereof. * * * Defendant at all the times herein mentioned well knew that said reservoir was attractive to children and was dangerous, and was well aware of the fact that any child or other person approaching or being near said reservoir was without protection or notice of danger and was in imminent danger of falling into said reservoir," and it is alleged, on information and belief, that prior to April 25, 1914, defendant, its agents and employés, had been personally notified that said reservoir was a dangerous place and a place attractive to children.

[1] Counsel for the defendant, in their brief, analyze and construe the averments of the complaint as follows:

"The facts (alleged in the complaint) may be classified as follows: (1) Facts relating to lot owners and visitors to graves located in defendants' cemetery. (2) Facts relating to the right of the public to use a certain roadway for the purpose of passing through said cemetery. (3) Facts relating to children playing in said cemetery.

"Under the first class of facts fall the allegations of paragraph 4 that the cemetery was kept open from the hours of 7 a. m. until 5 p. m., and was maintained not only for the benefit of persons whose relatives and friends were buried within said cemetery, but also as a place of public adornment and beauty. To this class of facts likewise belong the allegations concerning the rules of the cemetery which were clearly posted to govern only the conduct of those who were invited to enter the cemetery, and the allegations concerning the rights of lot owners. Under the second class of facts fall the allegations concerning the use by the public of a certain roadway for the purpose of passing through said cemetery between Presidio avenue and the Richmond district."

We are satisfied with the foregoing analysis of the complaint, and agree with the conclusion declared by counsel for the respondent that the facts coming within the first and second classes, as above indicated, are surplusage. We therefore accept and adopt into this opinion the above analysis of the complaint. We do this, not because we believe that the facts embraced within the first and second classes, as above classified, even if properly in the complaint, would add any force or strength to the case as made by the allegations as to the cause of the accidental death of plaintiff's son, but because it will clarify the situation and confine the discussion herein to the single real question submitted by this appeal, viz.: Whether the defendant owed any duty to the deceased with respect to safeguarding, if it could be done, the reservoir into which he fell.

[2] It may, however, be well first to note that, while the complaint alleges that "in a prominent place in said cemetery and immediately alongside one of the driveways therein and only a short distance from the Presidio avenue entrance aforesaid defendant dug, excavated, and constructed" and still maintains "in a prominent place a large reservoir for the holding of water," it is not alleged that said reservoir abutted upon or in any manner affected Presidio avenue or the driveway near which it is maintained. Hence the case as made by the complaint does not fall within that class where an excavation has been dug or maintained "adjoining a highway into which a traveler on the highway, where he had the right to be, had accidentally fallen." Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 349, 47 Pac. 113, 598, 56 Am. St. Rep. 106. Nor does it come within the class of cases which constitute exceptions to the general rule as to the liability of an owner of property to a trespasser thereon who has been injured through some trap or hidden or concealed danger maintained by the owner on his land, and as to which the latter has given no warning to the public or others.

But it is vigorously urged that the case here comes within the doctrine of what are known as the turntable cases.

[3-5] The rule of the so-called "turntable cases," generally stated, is this: That, where dangerous and attractive machinery is maintained unguarded and exposed to the observation and temptation of little children, the natural allurements of which will tempt them to go about or upon, and against the danger of which action their immature judgment interposes no warning or defense, the conduct of the party in so maintaining such machinery involves an act of negligence for which he is liable in damages where a child of the above description, having gone upon or played about and with the machinery, is thereby injured, notwithstanding that the child so injured is a trespasser upon the land upon which the machinery is maintained. This rule is, of course, to be understood with the qualification that the dangers of the machinery, although novel and attractive to the immature mind of a child, can be fully or sufficiently guarded to protect against injury without destroying its usefulness for the purpose for which it is maintained. The principle from which the doctrine of the turntable cases is deduced or upon which it is supported is spoken through the maxim of the law that:

"One must so use and enjoy his property as to interfere with the comfort and safety of others as little as possible, consistently with its proper use." Barrett v. Southern Pac. Co., 91 Cal. 296, 303, 27 Pac. 666, 667 (25 Am. St. Rep. 186).

The court, in that case, said:

"If defendant ought reasonably to have anticipated that, leaving this turntable unguarded and exposed, an injury such as plaintiff suffered was likely to occur, then it must be held to have anticipated it, and was guilty of negligence in thus maintaining it in its exposed position. It is no answer to this to say that the child was a trespasser, and if it had not intermeddled with defendant's property it would not have been hurt, and that the law imposes no duty upon the defendant to make its premises a safe playing ground for children.

"In the forum of law, as well as of common sense, a child of immature years is expected to exercise only such care and self-restraint as belongs to childhood, and a reasonable man must be presumed to know this, and required to govern his actions accordingly. It is a matter of common experience that children of tender years are guided in their actions by childish instincts, and are lacking in that discretion which is ordinarily sufficient to enable those of more mature years to appreciate and avoid danger, and in proportion to this lack of judgment on their part, the care which must be observed toward them by others is increased."

[6, 7] We may, however, here pause to inquire whether the plaintiff's son was in the cemetery at the time of his death under the general invitation extended by the defendant to the public to visit the cemetery.

While the complaint declares that the defendant's cemetery, for a number of years prior to the accidental death of plaintiff's son, had been abandoned as a burial place for the dead, and that since that time said cemetery "has been and is now maintained as a place of adornment and attraction, parked and graded and kept open to the public daily from 7 a. m. to 5 p. m." yet it is likewise shown that there are still buried in said cemetery many dead human bodies which had been deposited in graves therein before the cemetery had been abandoned as such, and that said graves are still maintained and cared for by surviving relatives and friends of the deceased. It is therefore quite manifest that the said cemetery is not now, nor has it been since its abandonment as such, any the less a cemetery, notwithstanding that it has been maintained in a manner to give it the appearance of a park. In other words, it has not been converted into a public park, in the sense in which such places of amusement and diversion are commonly known, and much less into a children's playground, merely because further burials therein have been stopped under the mandates of ordinances of the city of San Francisco prohibiting burials therein. The invitation to the public to visit the cemetery must therefore be assumed to be accompanied by the condition that persons accepting or acting upon it will do so with due regard to the fact that a place, such as it is, which is dedicated to the dead, as the resting place of the mortal remains of those who have passed to the beyond, is not one of recreation and pleasure, where the lighter vein of life may with propriety be given full play, but is one which, obediently to the common sentiments of mankind, demands of those who visit it dignity of demeanor and respect and that serious reflection that the one great event, which is inevitably common to all living creatures, and of which a place in which the dead have been buried is a most potent reminder, would naturally inspire. Hence it must be said, on the complaint's description of the place where appellant's son lost his life, that the invitation extended to the public by the owner of the cemetery (the defendant) to visit the same during certain specified hours of each day is limited to those of the public that go or desire to go there for a purpose other than for those lighter pleasures which are intended and calculated to divert the mind from the more serious affairs of life and even for the time from that final inevitable destiny which marks the end of all human life. Of course, it cannot be doubted that children are within the scope of the invitation, but it certainly cannot reasonably be said that the invitation included the granting of a privilege to children to make a playground of the place. No one would contend that under the invitation children are privileged to play on the graves; and, although it had been the custom of children residing in the neighborhood of the cemetery to go to the cemetery and play therein, there is nothing in the complaint to show that they had been either directly or impliedly given the right to do so. When therefore they were in the cemetery for the purpose of playing only, they were not there for any purpose to which the cemetery is put or designed to be put, nor were they there under the general privilege accorded or general invitation extended to the public to visit the cemetery.

"The invitation which creates a legal duty," says the court, in Mandeville Mills v. Dale, 2 Ga. App. 607, 58 S. E. 1060, "may be express * * * or it may be implied, as when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adopted and prepared, or allowed to be used." (Italics ours.)

See, also, Words and Phrases, second series, under word, "invitation," and the cases therein cited.

[8] It is true that the complaint discloses that the defendant by its agents and officers had knowledge of the fact that children were accustomed to playing in the cemetery, and that they were permitted by the defendant, its agents, etc., to go in and upon the paths and byways of the cemetery to play therein and thereon. But mere knowledge by the defendant that children habitually went into the cemetery and therein indulged in their childish sports would make them, at the most, mere licensees, to whom the defendant owed no duty or obligation. Means v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 144 Cal. 473, 478, 479, 77 Pac. 1001, 1 Ann. Cas. 206; Kennedy v. Chase, 119 Cal. 642, 52 Pac. 33, 63 Am. St. Rep. 153; Grundel v. Union Iron Works, 141 Cal. 564, 75 Pac. 184; Herzog v. Hemphill, 7 Cal. App. 118, 93 Pac. 899; Schmidt v. Bauer, 80 Cal. 567, 22 Pac. 256, 5 L. R. A. 580.

Mr. Thompson, in his treatise on Negligence (section 303), says:

"We have found no support for any rule which would protect those who go where they are not invited, but merely with express or tacit permission, from curiosity or motives of private convenience, in no way connected with business or their relations with the occupant."

In the Means Case, supra, the plaintiff was injured while in the freight shed of the defendant by the bursting of a tank of sulphuric acid situated in said shed. The plaintiff had gone into the freight shed to see a party in connection with some matter personal to himself. His action for damages was defeated in the trial court, a motion for a nonsuit having been granted, and the judgment thereupon entered affirmed on appeal. The Supreme Court, referring to the facts, said:

"If the plaintiff was not technically a trespasser in entering the freight house of the defendant, he was at best but a licensee, entering thereon subject to the rule determining the measure of responsibility of the owner of premises to a mere licensee. He was not upon the premises by the invitation, express or implied, of the defendant, nor for any business purpose connected with defendant, nor in relation to any business for which the freight house, in which he was injured, was used. He went there of his own volition, uninvited, concerning a matter which was personal to himself, in which the defendant had no interest."

The foregoing observations have peculiarly pertinent application to the facts of this case. As we have shown, the complaint discloses that the appellant's son went to the cemetery on the day of his unfortunate death for the purpose of gratifying his childish desires and fancies, and was there in connection with a matter in no way germane to the business of the defendant or the purpose for which it maintains the cemetery, or the purpose for which it extends to the public an invitation to visit the cemetery.

[9] It follows from the foregoing considerations that if the appellant is entitled, upon the facts stated in his complaint, to prevail herein, he must show that the said facts bring the case within the rule of the turntable cases. This he has failed to do, as we will now proceed to show.

We have previously stated the principle of law and the reasons supporting the rule applied in cases of injury sustained by trespassing children of immature judgment in playing on and about dangerous machinery to which they have been allured by the peculiar natural attractiveness thereof to childish minds. We may here further say upon that subject that, while the rule is applicable in all cases of attractive machinery in playing with which children have been injured, the leading cases have particularly to do with turntables, which, as is commonly known, are contrivances maintained by railroad companies at certain of their stations for the purpose of turning engines and cars in directions in which the exigencies or requirements of their traffic compel them to go. And those cases, in portraying the natural attractiveness of turntables to infant minds, have described them, as they naturally would appear to the mind of a child, as a sort of "merry-go-round," a contrivance which, as is equally well known, is maintained for the amusement of children and which always, very naturally, arouses to a high pitch their childish predilection for sport and fun. Naturally enough, then, a child would readily be tempted to attempt to play and ride on turntables, machines of lurking and unobservable danger to a child, and hence the rule that the person maintaining them must so safeguard them (as by locking them when not in use so that they cannot be turned) as will, in a large measure, protect children playing on or about them against injury. The case here, however, presents an entirely different situation. A pond of water, it may be conceded, is always attractive to youngsters; but the dangers connected with and inherent in a lake or pond of water, natural or artificial, are obvious to everybody—even to a child old enough to be permitted by its parents to go about and play unattended upon the streets or in the public parks. It would not conform to the dictates of common reason to say that a child of the age of eight years, or even much younger, does not know and fully realize that a fall into a pond of water or a deep reservoir would result in injury to him, if not in his death. But there is no necessity for abstract reasoning upon the proposition, for we think it thoroughly settled by the decisions that a pond of water, whether natural or artificial, is not to be included in the same class with turntables and other complicated machinery, the inherent dangers of which are not obvious to a child.

In Peters v. Bowman, supra, a pond of water had formed on defendant's land from surface water gathering thereon in certain seasons of the year as the result of the grading of a street upon which the land abutted and so closing a gully through which said surface water had theretofore been accustomed to flow and pass from the land. The plaintiff's son, aged 11 years, while riding a raft on the pond, fell off and into the water and was drowned. Judgment upon the verdict of the jury went for the defendant, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment and the order. Among other things, the court therein said, referring to the turntable doctrine, which the plaintiff in that case undertook to invoke:

"But the rule of the turntable cases is an exception to the general principle that the owner of land is under no legal duty to keep it in a safe condition for others than those whom he invites there, and that trespassers take the risk of injuries from ordinary visible causes; and it should not be carried beyond the class of cases to which it has been applied. And the cases to which the rule has been applied, so far as our attention has been called to them, are nearly all cases where the owner of the land had erected on it dangerous machinery, the consequences of meddling with which are not supposed to be fully comprehended by infant minds. It has also been applied to a few other cases where the owner, by some affirmative act, has caused some artificial danger to exist on his premises, as in the case of Branson v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193, cited by appellant, where the defendants had 'stacked a large quantity of lumber in one large and irregular pile, so negligently and badly done that as the deceased, an infant, was playing near it, one of the timbers fell upon and killed him.' It is not contended by appellant that the rule of the turntable cases has ever been applied to facts like those in the case at bar; his contention is that the reasoning and philosophy of the rule ought to extend it to a case like the one at bar. But the same reasoning does not apply to both sets of cases. A body of water—either standing, as in ponds and lakes, or running, as in rivers and creeks, or ebbing and flowing, as on the shores of seas and bays—is a natural object incident to all countries which are not deserts. Such a body of water may be found in or close to nearly every city or town in the land; the danger of drowning in it is an apparent open danger, the knowledge of which is common to all (italics ours); and there is no just view consistent with recognized rights of property owners which would compel one owning land upon which such water, or part of it, stands and flows, to fill it up, or surround it with an impenetrable wall. * * * No case has been cited where damages have been successfully recovered for the death of a child drowned in a pond on private premises who had gone there without invitation, while it has been repeatedly held that in such a case no damages can be recovered. It was * * * so held in Klix v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271 [32 N. W. 223], 60 Am. Rep. 854, in Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422 [6 S. W. 74], 3 Am. St. Rep. 557, in Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1, in Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365, and in the recent case of Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467 [63 N. W. 915]."

In denying a petition for a rehearing of Peters v. Bowman, the late Chief Justice Beatty said, among other things:

"A turntable can be rendered absolutely safe, without destroying or materially impairing its usefulness, by simply locking it. A pond cannot be rendered inaccessible to boys by any ordinary means. Certainly no ordinary fence around the lot upon which a pond is situated would answer the purpose; and therefore, to make it safe, it must either be filled or drained, or, in other words, destroyed. But ponds are always useful, and often necessary, and, where they do not exist naturally, must be created in order to store water for stock and for domestic purposes, irrigation, etc. Are we to hold that every owner of a pond or reservoir is liable in damages for any child that comes uninvited upon his premises and happens to fall in the water and drown? If so, then upon the same principle must the owner of a fruit tree be held liable for the death or injury of a child who, attracted by the fruit, climbs into the branches and falls out. But this, we imagine, is an absurdity, for which no one would contend, and it proves that the rule of the turntable cases does not rest upon a principle so broad, and of such rigid application, as counsel suppose. The owner of a thing dangerous and attractive to children is not always and universally liable for an injury to a child tempted by the attraction. His liability bears a relation to the character of the thing, whether natural and common, or artificial and uncommon, to the comparative ease or difficulty of preventing the danger without destroying or impairing the usefulness of the thing, and, in short, to the reasonableness and propriety of his own conduct, in view of all surrounding circumstances and conditions. As to common dangers existing in the order of nature, it is the duty of parents to guard and warn their children, and, failing to do so, they should not expect to hold others responsible for their own want of care. But, with respect to dangers specially created by the act of the owner, novel in character, attractive and dangerous to children, easily guarded and rendered safe (italics ours), the rule is, as it ought to be, different; and such is the rule of the turntable cases, of the lumber pile cases, and others of a similar character. But the owner of a thing dangerous and attractive to children is not always culpable, and therefore is not always liable for an injury to a child drawn into danger by the attraction."

It would seem to be hardly necessary to cite other authorities than the above to show that the facts of this case do not bring it within the principle of the turntable and other like cases. Special attention is, nevertheless, invited to the cases referred to in Peters v. Bowman, supra, and also to the following cases: Loftus v. Dehail, 133 Cal. 214, 65 Pac. 379; Cooper v. Overton, 102 Tenn. 211, 52 S. W. 183, 45 L. R. A. 591, 594, 73 Am. St. Rep. 864; Arnold v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 173, 53 S. W. 900, 48 L. R. A. 291, 75 Am. St. Rep. 447; Stendal v. Boyd, 73 Minn. 56, 75 N. W. 735, 42 L. R. A. 288, 72 Am. St. Rep. 599; Sullivan v. Huidekoper, 27 App. D. C. 154, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 7 Ann. Cas. 196.

The above-named cases, notably the case of Peters v. Bowman, fully answer every point made by the plaintiff in his attempt to fasten upon the defendant responsibility for the death of his son, and clearly negative the proposition, earnestly pressed by the appellant, that the case at bar is to be differentiated from that of Peters v. Bowman upon the ground that in the latter case the alleged nuisance which caused the damage therein complained of was brought into existence by a natural cause or not by the act of the defendant; whereas, in the case at bar the reservoir which caused the death of plaintiff's son was brought into existence solely by the act of the defendant. The clear and concise exposition of the turntable doctrine by Chief Justice Beatty, above quoted herein, does not support the proposition that the mere fact that the dangers are specially created by the act of the owner or occupier of the land on which they are maintained is itself sufficient to render the owner liable in the case of injuries to a child resulting therefrom or thereby. There are other elements superadded which are essential to fix upon the owner such liability, viz.: That the machinery must not only be novel in character and attractive to children, but "easily guarded and rendered safe." In other words, the machinery or other thing may be attractive and dangerous to children, and yet the owner of the machinery or thing would not be culpable if the dangers of the machinery or thing (which is intended for a useful purpose) cannot be removed without destroying or impairing its usefulness for the purpose it was designed to subserve.

We have found nothing in the cases cited and relied upon by the appellant in conflict with the above views or the conclusion which we have reached upon the facts as stated in the complaint. We are convinced that the complaint fails to state a cause of action for damages against the defendant, and that therefore the demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

Accordingly, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

JENNY v. JENNY. (S. F. 8256.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊜283(1)—SUPPORT AND MAINTENANCE—RIGHT OF ACTION.

Where a husband and wife separate by mutual consent, pursuant to a void antenuptial agreement, the wife is not entitled to separate maintenance and support while such separation continues by mutual consent.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action for support and maintenance by Willa Ida Jenny against Rudolph R. Jenny. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. C. Wright, of San Francisco, for appellant. James W. Henderson, of Eureka, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment rendered against her in an action for support and maintenance against her husband, the defendant. The marriage occurred about 4 or 5 o'clock p. m., and at 5:20 on the same day, September 25, 1915, the parties separated and never thereafter lived together as husband and wife. The defendant alleges and testified and the court found that this separation was by mutual consent. As was said in Mayr v. Mayr, 161 Cal. 134, 140, 118 Pac. 546, 549:

"A wife living separate and apart from her husband cannot, in the absence of special agreement therefor, compel him to support her while living so separate and apart, unless such separation is caused by misconduct on his part."

The testimony of the husband, and indeed the conduct of the parties, support the finding by the court that the separation was by consent. It is claimed, however, by the appellant, that such separation by consent was a result of a prenuptial agreement between the parties, by which it was arranged that they should be married, but should never live together; that the plaintiff should not assume defendant's name; that each should retain their own property and all their future earnings and acquisitions, and that in the future the plaintiff would "grant a divorce to the defendant"; that such an agreement was void and as against public policy, and that therefore the agreement of separation after the marriage, in pursuance of such void agreement before marriage, was also void; and that plaintiff is entitled to support and maintenance. If, as insisted by appellant, everything that flowed from the prenuptial agreement to marry, separate, and thereafter secure a divorce was void, the marriage would be also void, and yet marriage is the basis of plaintiff's action. The agreement made the evening before the marriage, it is conceded, was void. The marriage which followed was valid, and created all the mutual obligations which the law attaches thereto. Plaintiff was under no obligation to consent to a separation, and might have insisted upon living with her husband, and charged him with desertion upon failure so to do. She did in fact consent to their separation, and that consent deprived her of her right to separate maintenance and support so long as the separation continued by mutual consent.

The judgment is affirmed.

SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT LAND CO. et al. (L. A. 4576.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT ⊜712—EVIDENCE—DECREE IN PARTITION — LOCATION OF DISPUTED POINT.

In action involving dispute as to point in a boundary line, a decree in partition is competent evidence to aid in fixing the disputed point, although none of the parties to the action were parties in the partition suit.

2. BOUNDARIES ⊜37(1)—DISPUTED POINT IN BOUNDARY LINE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action involving controversy as to point in a boundary line, evidence held to sustain court's finding as to location of the disputed point.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company against the Industrial Development Land Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Gurney E. Newlin, of Los Angeles (W. W. Hyams, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff sued to enjoin the defendants from erecting a brick building upon land alleged to belong to the plaintiff and to be necessary for the operation of its railway, the title whereof was claimed by defendant Land Company. The court gave judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

[1] Plaintiff and defendant Industrial Development Land Company are the owners of adjoining land in Los Angeles, in the block bounded by Macy, Alameda, Aliso, Lyon, Avila, and Ramirez streets. The real controversy between the parties is as to the location of a part of the boundary line between their properties, and this in turn depends upon the location of one of the stations in that boundary line of the lands formerly owned by Mrs. C. A. De Sepulveda. The land thus brought in question is triangular in form, with a base at the disputed point of about 2½ feet and an altitude of about 800 feet. After plaintiff and defendant had introduced in evidence the deeds constituting their respective chains of title, the defendants offered in evidence a decree of partition of lands belonging to the heirs of G. Tononi, to the south and east of the property belonging to the parties. Appellant claims that the introduction of this decree was erroneous, for the reason that neither of the parties to this action, nor their predecessors, were parties to the partition suit. The decree, however, was received in evidence, not for the purpose of binding the parties by its terms, but for the reason that one of the corners referred to in this decree is the disputed point, and is referred to in the mesne conveyances under which plaintiff claims title, which reference is as follows:

"Said point being the northeasterly corner of the lands of Mrs. C. A. De Sepulveda and a common corner with the lands of the heirs of G. Tononi as the same existed prior to the execution of the deed by said Mrs. C. A. De Sepulveda and her husband to the party of the first part herein, * * * to which said deed reference is hereby made; said point of commencement being further described as being on the southerly line of what is known as the Los Angeles Orphan Asylum Tract," etc.

In view of this reference to a common corner of the lands of plaintiff's predecessors and to the heirs of G. Tononi in the decree in partition, it was competent evidence to aid in fixing the disputed point. This corner was thus described in the decree of partition:

"* * * A post 4"x4" marked C. A. and G. T. in the northeasterly corner of the land of C. Apablasa, * * *" who was a predecessor of defendant.

[2] It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding of the trial court, which was to the effect that the corner in dispute was located as claimed by the defendants. The evidence to support this finding is so abundant that it need not be set forth in detail. Suffice it to say, it included evidence of fences and buildings existing along a large portion of the 800 foot line in controversy for more than 20 years, and the location of the 4x4-inch redwood posts at the corner, as claimed by the defendants, with other evidence abundantly sustaining the conclusion of the trial court. It is claimed by the plaintiff that the evidence shows that the property in question has been occupied and was in the possession of the plaintiff for more than 5 years preceding the institution of the suit in question. The evidence is directly to the contrary, and is to the effect that the land in dispute was not actually occupied by plaintiff's tracks. Plaintiff claims that the line as fixed by the defendant was within 8 feet 6 inches of the center line of the plaintiff's railway track nearest the boundary, and thus did not allow the clearance required by the rule of the Railroad Commission of 8 feet and 6 inches. This claim, however, is directly disputed by one of the defendants' witnesses, who thus fixed the line claimed by the defendants with reference to the tracks:

"The distance between the northerly line and the center of the track of the Southern Pacific Railway Company lying to the north is 8 feet 9 inches."

The judgment is affirmed.

GEORGE v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 8750.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸417(3¼)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS—QUESTIONS FOR COMMISSION.

In proceeding to obtain workmen's compensation, whether claimant was engaged in horticultural work, and therefore not subject to the act when injured, was for the commission, whose decision was beyond review by certiorari.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸363 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.

Where one seeking workmen's compensation was hired as janitor, whose duty extended to care of the grounds and trimming of the trees, and who was injured when trimming tree left unsightly by a former attempt to trim it so as to admit light to the building, determination that he was engaged in horticulture, and not entitled to compensation, was not unreasonable.

In Bank. Certiorari by Arthur George to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission and others. Order affirmed.

B. V. Sargent and Vincent Surr, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. McCutchen, Olney & Willard, of San Francisco, for certain respondents. C. M. Bradley, of San Francisco, and J. M. Mannon, Jr., of San Francisco, for other respondents.

SLOSS, J. Certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, dismissing the application of Arthur George for an award of compensation. The commission found that "at the time of the injury the applicant was engaged in horticultural labor, and that this commission is without jurisdiction in this proceeding." Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 284) § 14. The petitioner contends that the finding just quoted is without support in the evidence.

George was employed as janitor and gardener by Miss Mary E. Wilson, who conducted a school for girls at Berkeley. The school buildings stood on a tract of about two acres, much of which was under cultivation. It was George's duty to look after the grounds and to clean the schoolrooms. In August, 1917, Miss Wilson ordered him to trim an acacia tree which interfered with the entry of light to a schoolroom. George cut off portions of two limbs of the tree. The tree was unsightly after the operation, and in October Miss Wilson directed George to remedy this condition. George accordingly cut off the stump of a large limb which projected over the roof of the schoolhouse. By means of a rope he lowered to the roof the limb thus removed. He then, according to his testimony, untied the rope, which slipped out of his hand quite suddenly, whereupon he fell to the ground, sustaining the injuries upon which he bases his claim.

[1, 2] Whether or not George, at the time of his injury, was engaged in horticultural labor was a question of fact to be determined by the commission. Its finding thereon, if supported by any rational view of the evidence, is beyond review here. On the testimony in the record, it cannot be said that the conclusion of fact drawn by the commission was an unreasonable or improper one. George's employment was dual in character. In so far as he acted as a gardener, his work was horticultural and beyond the purview of the Compensation Act. In so far as his duties were those of a janitor, his employment was not exempt from the terms of the act. His claim is that the work in which he was engaged had for its primary purpose the improvement in the condition of the schoolroom with respect to light, and that he was therefore acting as janitor, rather than as gardener. It may be doubted whether the premise justifies the conclusion. Be that as it may, the removal of the obstruction to light was completed when George first trimmed the tree in August. His injury occurred a couple of months later, in the course of a further cutting, the purpose of which was to improve the appearance of the tree. It is certainly a gardener's work to trim ornamental trees and keep them sightly, and this is the work in which the petitioner was engaged at the time he was hurt. Even though the necessity for it may have arisen from something done by him in another capacity, we cannot doubt that it was open to the commission to find, as it did, that he was engaged in horticultural labor when carrying out the later instructions of his employer.

The order is affirmed.

HESLER v. CALIFORNIA HOSPITAL CO. et al. (S. F. 7816.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 23, 1918.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⟸14(1)—DEGREE OF SKILL AND CARE REQUIRED.

The law requires that a physician shall have the degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by physicians of good standing practicing in that locality, and that he shall exercise reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in treating the patient.

2. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⟸14(1) — SKILL AND CARE REQUIRED.

The law does not require that a physician's instructions and advice should be at all events and beyond question proper, or that his treatment should be such as to obtain an approximately perfect result.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1064(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for malpractice, it cannot be determined whether the jury followed the proper instructions clearly and accurately, stating the skill and care required of physicians, or a conflicting and erroneous instruction that the law requires skill adequate to the performance of the undertaking, the error must be considered prejudicial to the defendant.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by John W. Hesler against the California Hospital Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Myrick & Deering, of San Francisco (James Walter Scott, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants. E. J. Mize, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appeal is from the judgment. After the appeal was taken the plaintiff died, and Effie Johnstone, as administratrix of his estate, has been substituted as plaintiff.

Briefly stated, the complaint alleges that both defendants were engaged in the practice of medicine; that in July, 1913, the Hospital Company agreed to provide for the plaintiff all necessary medical and surgical treatment, the same to be given by some physician in its service, and all necessary medicines and hospital service during the period involved in this action; that defendant Dunn was one of the physicians employed by said company; that in November, 1914, plaintiff contracted a cold and needed medical treatment therefor; that the Hospital Company thereupon assigned Dr. Dunn to the case, and Dunn undertook to give plaintiff the necessary treatment for his condition; that Dunn failed to use ordinary diligence, care, and skill in treating plaintiff, and that by reason of such failure plaintiff's sickness progressed unfavorably, he became unable to work, was confined to his room, and continued to grow worse until he became afflicted with pulmonary tuberculosis; and that he was put to great expense in procuring subsequent treatment therefor, and otherwise damaged in the sum of $5,644. There was a trial by jury, which resulted in a verdict and judgment for $2,500.

The principal contention of the appellants in support of the appeal is that errors were committed in the court below, in giving, refusing, and modifying instructions to the jury. Error is also predicated upon certain rulings in the admission of evidence. The court gave the following instructions:

"5. To sustain an action it is not necessary to establish gross culpability; mere evidence of want of proper or ordinary care or attention and advice in the discharge of duty by a physician is sufficient to take the case to the jury.

"6. Civil malpractice may be either active or passive. It is active when a certain course of treatment is adopted and followed which is not sustained by authorities; it is passive when those things in treatment are omitted which should have been done in order to obtain a result approximating to perfectness.

"9. As a general rule, he who undertakes for a reward to perform any work is bound to use a degree of diligence, attention, and skill adequate to the performance of his undertaking; that is, to do it according to the rules of the art.

"10. The physician must give proper instructions to his patient how to take care of himself, and what diet to adopt; and in case physician fails to give these instructions he is liable for any injury that results from such failure."

The law on the subject of care and skill required of physicians in the treatment of patients is well settled:

"A physician and surgeon, by taking charge of a case, impliedly represents that he possesses, and the law places upon him the duty of possessing, that reasonable degree of learning and skill that is ordinarily possessed by physicians and surgeons in the locality where he practices, and which is ordinarily regarded by those conversant with the employment as necessary to qualify him to engage in the business of practicing medicine and surgery. Upon consenting to treat a patient, it becomes his duty to use reasonable care and diligence in the exercise of his skill and the application of his learning to accomplish the purpose for which he was employed. He is under the further obligation to use his best judgment in exercising his skill and applying his knowledge." Pike v. Honsinger, 155 N. Y. 209, 49 N. E. 762, 63 Am. St. Rep. 655.

"The difficulties and uncertainties in the practice of medicine and surgery are such that no practitioner can be required to guarantee results, and all the law demands is that he bring and apply to the case in hand that degree of skill, care, knowledge, and attention ordinarily possessed and exercised by practitioners of the medical profession under like circumstances." Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 330, 153 N. W. 695.

"It is never enough to show that he has not treated his patient in that mode, nor used those measures, which in the opinion of others, even medical men, the case required, because such evidence tends to prove errors of judgment, for which the defendant is not responsible, as much as the want of reasonable care and skill, for which he may be responsible." Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 474, 59 Am. Dec. 388.

[1, 2] Instruction 5 is to the effect that a physician is liable in damages if he fails to give "proper" advice to his patient. Instruction 10 reiterates this doctrine. Instruction 6 gives the jury to understand that a physician is guilty of malpractice, and liable in damages, if, in treating a patient, he fails to do anything necessary to obtain an approximately perfect result. The law, as above stated, does not require that the instructions and advice given by a physician to a patient should be at all events and beyond question "proper," or that his treatment should be certainly such as to obtain an approximately perfect result. It requires only, first, that he shall have the degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by physicians of good standing practicing in that locality; and, second, that he shall exercise reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in treating the patient and in applying such learning and skill to the case. The law takes cognizance of human weakness and liability to err in the application of skill and learning and it requires only the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care and diligence to avoid error. These instructions require more; they require that the advice given shall be "proper," which implies that no error shall be committed; they require that the physician shall do everything necessary to be done to produce an approximately perfect result; that he guarantees that his treatment shall be of that quality; whereas, the law only demands that he use reasonable care to attain such approximate perfection. Instruction 9 declares that the physician is bound to use, and of course to have, a degree of skill "adequate" to the performance of his undertaking; the law requires that he have the degree of skill ordinarily possessed by reputable physicians practicing in that locality. This may or may not be "adequate" to the performance of his undertaking, according to the meaning to be given to the word "undertaking." If it was intended to mean that he undertakes a cure, or to produce a result approximating perfection, as stated in instruction 6, or that he undertakes to use the highest possible degree of skill, the standard is higher than the law requires. The instruction is uncertain on this point, and it may have misled the jury.

[3] The court below in other instructions stated the rule by which the defendants were bound accurately and clearly. There is a clear conflict in the instructions. We are unable to determine which set of rules the jury followed. The case of the plaintiff on the merits, at best, is not strong. We cannot say that these instructions were not injurious to the defendant, and did not improperly control the deliberations of the jury in rendering a verdict.

A number of objections were made to rulings upon evidence which it is unnecessary to discuss.

The judgment is reversed.

Ex parte PATTON. (Cr. 2194.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 1, 1918.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS ⊜54—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

It is incumbent on an inmate of the penitentiary seeking his release on habeas corpus to allege facts showing illegality of his imprisonment.

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⊜52—CONCLUSIONS.

Allegations, in application for writ of habeas corpus, that credits for good behavior have never been "lawfully or justly forfeited" by the board of prison directors, are insufficient, as facts showing illegality should be alleged.

In Bank. Application by William L. Patton for a writ of habeas corpus. Application denied.

Wm. L. Patton, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] It is fairly inferable from the petition itself that the board of prison directors did declare forfeited all credits earned and to be earned by petitioner, which they would have the power to do under certain circumstances. As to this he alleges that his credits "have never been lawfully or justly forfeited." No attempt is made to specify or suggest wherein the action of the prison directors was illegal or unauthorized by law. If his credits were lawfully declared forfeited, his term has not expired. It is incumbent on him, in order to make out a case for habeas corpus, to allege facts showing the illegality of his imprisonment. It is proper to note that the return to the writ issued on his application by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, to which proceeding he refers in this application, shows that the records of the board of prison directors contain a record of a proceeding against him before such board resulting in a declaration of forfeiture of his credits for a violation of the terms of his parole, and, moreover, that in such proceeding he pleaded guilty to the charge.

The application for a writ is denied.

1. WAREHOUSEMEN ⊂⊃34(6)—CONVERSION OF GOODS—EVIDENCE.

In railroad's action against warehouseman for conversion of carload of butter, where evidence showed former had notified latter by telephone to hold car subject to its order, evidence as to a custom of confirming such telephone notification by letter was immaterial.

2. WAREHOUSEMEN ⊂⊃24(1) — RAILROADS — RIGHTS OF BAILOR.

Where a railroad, to whom a carload of butter had been delivered for shipment, delivered the carload over the switch of another railroad to a warehouseman, the latter, in the absence of directions to the contrary, should have held the car subject to order of former railroad, who was bailor.

3. WAREHOUSEMEN ⊂⊃34(6)—RAILROAD'S ACTION AGAINST WAREHOUSEMEN — ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In railroad's action against warehouseman for conversion of carload of butter, latter had delivered to party purporting to be consignor's agent without requiring presentation of bill of lading, evidence of a custom whereby bill of lading was not required, where car was on an open shipment, held inadmissible.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company against the Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sidney J. Parsons and Horace Wilson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Fred E. Pettit, Jr., of Los Angeles (A. S. Halsted, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment rendered against it in an action for the conversion of a carload of butter, consigned from North Dakota to Los Angeles to shipper's own order, via the plaintiff's railway; the bill of lading, together with draft for the value of the butter, having been forwarded to a Los Angeles bank for delivery to one Backer upon payment of draft. If it is not admitted by the pleadings, the evidence clearly shows and the court finds that the butter was delivered over a Southern Pacific switch by the plaintiff to the defendant as a warehouseman. Plaintiff, through its own agents, and also through the agent of the Southern Pacific Company, notified defendant by telephone of the arrival of the car, and of its delivery upon the tracks at its warehouse, and that said car was to be held subject to the order of the plaintiff. In view of the finding of the court in favor of the plaintiff, the fact that this telephonic communication was denied by the defendant's witnesses cannot be considered.

[1-3] Defendant attempted to prove that, in case of a delivery of a car consigned as this was, it was the custom to notify the defendant thereof by telephone, "confirmed by letter as to the facts," and that in this case no letter was sent. In view of the evidence as to actual notification by telephone, evidence of the custom would be immaterial, if otherwise admissible. In the absence of directions to the contrary, defendant should have held the butter subject to the order of the bailor, the railway company, and in this case direct orders were given and received to that effect. There was no error in ruling out the evidence as to the business custom claimed by the defendant, by which, "when a car was on an open shipment, the presentation of the bill of lading was not required, and any responsible commission merchant claiming the goods would be allowed to take them." The butter was actually sold from the premises of the defendant, the proceeds of such sale received by the defendant, and applied to a pre-existing indebtedness due from one Lambourn to defendant. The only title of Lambourn to the butter was derived from a sale to him by Backer, purporting to act as agent of the consignor; but he had no authority to deliver the butter without payment of the consignor's draft. The claims of the defendant constitute an explanation, rather than a defense, and amount to this: That no one in the employ of the defendant remembered the telephonic communication, that no note thereof was made as was customary, and that no letter was received in accordance with what defendant claimed to be the custom, and therefore the defendant believed that the butter in its custody was subject to delivery "to any responsible commission merchant," and that it was so delivered.

The judgment is affirmed.

KROTZER et al. v. CLARK. (L. A. 4481.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜70(½) — JUDGMENTS APPEALABLE—INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, specifying interlocutory judgments from which an appeal can be taken, a judgment, decreeing that plaintiff should tender deed and certificate of title and upon defendant's failure to make payments provided for by a contract plaintiff should have judgment, is not appealable.

2. CONTRACTS ⊜354—FINDINGS.

In contract action, proof of valid excuse for nonperformance will not support a finding of performance.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜135(1)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—"EASEMENT"—"INCUMBRANCE."

A pipe line crossing one corner of a piece of land is an "easement" constituting an "incumbrance" within contract provision whereby party buying land was entitled to a perfect title free and clear of all easements or incumbrances.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Easement; Incumber.]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜93—RESCISSION.

Before the vendor can terminate the right of purchase because of purchaser's failure to pay, he must allege and prove, either that he has performed on his part, or that, for reasons not attributable to his fault, he is unable to perform.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Henry Krotzer and another against Stephen A. D. Clark. Judgment for plaintiffs, and, from an interlocutory judgment made prior to entering of final decree and from order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Appeal from the judgment dismissed. Order denying new trial reversed.

J. Wiseman Macdonald and Thomas A. Berkebile, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. C. A. Stice and Chas. S. McKelvey, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. After the trial the interest of Henry Krotzer, the original plaintiff, was assigned to Sidney Luther, who has been added as a respondent. We shall discuss the case as if Krotzer were the sole plaintiff.

On June 11, 1912, Krotzer made a written agreement for the sale of a parcel of land in Los Angeles county to the defendant, Clark, for $4,100, of which $50 was paid in cash, and the balance was to be paid in installments. One of the terms of the agreement was that the land was to be conveyed free and clear of all roads, easements, or incumbrances, "which shall be shown by an unlimited certificate of title, made by the T. I. and T. Co. [Title Insurance & Trust Company], of Los Angeles, California, showing the measurement of the land, names, and width of all streets, and roads touching the same, and a perfect title." The second amended complaint, upon which the plaintiff went to trial, was framed on the theory that the title was defective in that one of the conveyances in plaintiff's chain of title contained certain restrictions relative to the buildings to be placed upon the land, the drilling for oil, and the sale of liquor thereon; that plaintiff was unable to remove such restrictions, and had offered to restore to defendant $50, being all of the purchase price paid. The prayer of the complaint was that the contract be set aside and annulled, and that plaintiff's title be quieted. While the action was pending, the parties endeavored to effect a compromise, and in the course of the negotiations the restrictions in question were removed by the voluntary action of the grantor named in the deed in which they were embodied. Supplemental amendments to the plaintiff's complaint were filed by leave of court, and findings in his favor followed. Upon these findings the court entered an interlocutory judgment decreeing that the plaintiff should within a limited time tender the defendant a deed and certificate of title, and providing that, if defendant should for 20 days thereafter fail to make the payments provided for in the contract, the plaintiff should be entitled to have his title quieted. Tender was made and refused, whereupon the court entered its final decree quieting title.

[1] The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he now appeals from the order of denial. This is the only appeal which can be considered. There is, in the record, a notice of appeal from the interlocutory judgment, but it is not effectual for any purpose. The Code authorizes appeals from interlocutory judgments in certain cases only. Code Civ. Proc. § 963. This is not one of such cases, and the court is therefore without jurisdiction of the attempted appeal. Ill. Trust & Savgs. Bk. v. Alvord, 99 Cal. 407, 33 Pac. 1132; Grey v. Brennan, 147 Cal. 355, 81 Pac. 1014; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Cal. Dev. Co., 159 Cal. 484, 114 Pac. 838. The defendant did not appeal from the final judgment.

The second amended complaint alleges "that plaintiff has performed all the terms and conditions of the said agreement to be by him performed," and then goes on, somewhat inconsistently, to set forth his inability to give a title free and clear of the restrictions above referred to. The answer denies all of these allegations. By his supplemental amendments, plaintiff alleges that he has removed from the title all clouds and defects existing against it. It is further alleged that plaintiff had not, before the commencement of the action, tendered to the defendant an unlimited certificate of title or the deed required by the contract, and that his failure to do so was the result of the defendant's statement that he would not accept title in the form in which it then existed.

[2] All of these allegations are found by the court to be true. The defendant assails some of the findings as unsupported by the evidence. The contract provided, as above stated, that plaintiff was to furnish a certificate of title showing the names and widths of all streets and roads touching the land. Concededly there was no compliance with this condition. The respondent points to certain evidence which, as he claims, tends to show that the performance of this term of the contract was not possible for the reason that the names and width of the streets were not shown by any instrument of record, and that the Title Insurance & Trust Company, which was to furnish the certificate, would not certify to any matter not appearing in the public records of title. This circumstance may or may not have constituted a sufficient excuse, in law, for plaintiff's failure to furnish the certificate called for by his contract. But certainly it did not warrant a finding that he had fully performed. It is thoroughly settled in this state that in an action upon a contract the plaintiff must allege and prove either performance or a valid excuse for nonperformance. "One is not the same as the other." Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 114, 24 Pac. 867; Roche v. Baldwin, 135 Cal. 522, 65 Pac. 459, 67 Pac. 903; Est. of Warner, 158 Cal. 441, 445, 111 Pac. 352; Peek v. Steinberg, 163 Cal. 127, 133, 124 Pac. 834. Accordingly, proof of a valid excuse for nonperformance will not support a finding of performance. Est. of Warner, supra.

[3] It may well be questioned whether the finding under discussion was sustained in other respects. The record indicates, if it does not show explictly, that the plaintiff's title was subject to an easement for a pipeline across one corner of the property. Such an easement constitutes an incumbrance, and the defendant was, under his contract, entitled to a perfect title, free and clear of all easements or incumbrances. In the absence of evidence that plaintiff had offered or, at least, was able, to convey such a title, a finding that he had fully performed all of the terms of the agreement cannot be sustained.

[4] It may be asked whether, if the plaintiff cannot make a good title, the defendant is in any way injured by a decree terminating the contract and restoring the parties to their original rights. But the findings, and the judgment finally given, are not based upon the theory that the plaintiff is unable to perfect his title. It is found that the plaintiff has done all that he is required to do, and that the defendant is in default. The defendant, throughout the litigation, seems to have taken the position that he was ready and willing to complete the purchase, upon receiving the perfect title for which he had contracted. Until such title had been tendered, or its tender excused, the defendant was not in default, and was entitled to retain whatever rights he had under the agreement. Before the plaintiff can terminate the right of purchase, he must allege and prove, either that he has performed on his part, or that, for reasons not attributable to his fault, he is unable to perform.

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed. The order denying a new trial is reversed.

GOMEZ v. REED et al. (S. F. 7112.)

1. VENUE ⊂⊃5(1)—REAL PROPERTY—WRONGFUL OUSTER.

Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that actions for recovery of possession of, quieting title to, and enforcement of liens on, real estate, must be brought in county in which property is situated, does not include action for damages for wrongful ouster from land in which recovery of possession could not be had.

2. TRESPASS ⊂⊃40(1)—OUSTER FROM LAND—PLEADING.

A complaint, alleging lawful possession of land and ouster therefrom without right resulting in injury to property thereon, held to state a cause of action.

3. ACTION ⊂⊃45(3) — MISJOINDER — DAMAGES FROM TRESPASS.

In an action for damages to property on land resulting from wrongful ouster by a single trespass, that complaint asks damages of several kinds as loss of mesne profits, injury to personal property, and the like, does not show a misjoinder of causes of action.

4. DAMAGES ⊂⊃142 — SPECIAL DAMAGES — PLEADING.

Where complaint was based on a single trespass ousting plaintiff from land and alleged damages to live stock, and other personal property, expense of moving, mesne profits, etc., in addition to general damage clause, expunging the special damages pleaded was error.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. T. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Joe Gomez against W. H. Reed and others. From a judgment for defendant after overruling of demurrer to complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Charles M. Cassin, of San Jose, and Jeremiah F. Sullivan and Theo J. Roche, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Edward F. Fitzpatrick, Ross & Ross, and A. Kincaid, all of Redwood City, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment. A demurrer of the defendants to the complaint was sustained, leave was given to the plaintiff to amend, and, upon his failure to do so, judgment was given in favor of the defendants. The action is for damages to personal property and to recover alleged profits which plaintiff would have received from the use and occupation of certain lands during the year 1912 if defendants had not ousted him therefrom in December, 1911.

The complaint alleges that on December 1, 1911, the plaintiff was in the lawful and peaceable possession of 146 acres of land in San Mateo county, which he was engaged in farming and upon which he was carrying on a dairy and keeping a number of horses, cattle, hogs, potatoes, hay, and grain; that on that day and the following day the defendants, without right, entered upon said land, drove the plaintiff's cattle, horses, and hogs off the premises during a violent rainstorm, forcibly took possession of the premises and buildings, and compelled him to leave his residence thereon and to remove his hay, grain, potatoes, and other goods therefrom; that his said stock was accustomed to shelter and were then sheltered in the barns, sheds, and yards on the premises, and by reason of their being exposed to said storm four of his cows died and the milk-producing quality of his remaining cows was impaired, and seven of his horses became diseased; that he was compelled to expend large sums of money in moving his said property to another place and for storage thereof; that the net profits of his said dairy during the year 1912 would have been $2,300, of which profits he was deprived; that he was compelled to pasture his stock on other lands at an expenditure of $250; that the difference between the value of the use and occupation of the land from which he was ousted for one year, for which he had rented said land, and other lands which he was obliged to rent to continue his business as farmer and dairyman, was $700; that he was compelled to expend $300 in removing his property to said other lands; that the value of his horses and cows other than the four which died was depreciated to the amount of $1,000; and that he lost $6,000 which he would have earned as net profits from his farming operations during the year 1912 if he had not been excluded from the said tract of land by the defendants. He asks damages in the sum of $21,390.

On motion of the defendants, the court below struck from the complaint all the allegations of special damages above detailed. As thus altered, the complaint contained a statement of the ouster, the enforced removal of his property from the premises, and a general allegation that the plaintiff had suffered damages by reason thereof, in the sum of $21,390.

The causes of demurrer specified were that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, because the land described in the complaint is situated in San Mateo county and the action was begun in the superior court of San Francisco; that several causes of action were improperly joined, and that the respective causes of action were not separately stated. The court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

[1] The claim of lack of jurisdiction is based on the provisions of section 5, art. 6, of the Constitution, providing "that all actions for the recovery of the possession of, quieting the title to, or for the enforcement of liens upon real estate," must be begun in the county in which the real estate, or some part thereof, is situated. This complaint does not state a cause of action either to recover the possession of real estate or to quiet the title thereto. It does not allege that defendants claim any title to or interest in the land. It does not allege that the plaintiff was entitled to possession at the time the action was begun, and it does not ask for the recovery of possession. The allegation is that plaintiff was in lawful and peaceable possession on December 1, 1911, but no facts are stated upon which the plaintiff could found a claim of right to possession of the property after the year 1912. The allegations of the complaint all imply that the period of occupation for which the plaintiff claims damage had expired before the action was begun. The complaint states a cause of action for damages to personal property and for damages from the loss of the use and occupation of lands for a specified period which had expired. Such an action may be commenced in any county in the state, and the right to have a trial in the county where the land lies, if such right exists, can only be enforced by an application to change the venue. Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836; Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 73, 99 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 39.

[2] The contention that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for damages is without any merit whatever. The allegations that the plaintiff was lawfully in possession of the premises, that he had his property thereon, and that he was without right ousted therefrom by the defendants, and that damages to his property resulted from such ouster, constitute a statement of a good cause of action.

[3] There was no misjoinder of causes of action. But one cause of action is stated in the complaint, that is to say, a cause of action for damages for a wrongful ouster of the plaintiff from land of which he was lawfully and peaceably in possession, a single trespass on lands. The fact that the trespass caused damages of several kinds, such as the loss of mesne profits, injury to personal property by reason of the removal, expenses of removal, and the like, does not make more than one cause of action.

[4] We think, also, that the court erred in sustaining the motion of the defendants to strike out the allegations of damages aforesaid. Damages which are the necessary consequence of the wrongful act can be recovered under the general allegation of the amount of damage inflicted. Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 579, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175. But where there are different elements of damage flowing from the wrong and the amount of damages from each element is capable of exact statement, "the defendant has the right to be informed of the amount of the claim for each, so that he might be prepared with evidence at the trial to meet the claim." Mallory v. Thomas, 98 Cal. 647, 33 Pac. 757; Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 690, 39 Pac. 56. And if damages ensue because of some particular circumstances existing at the time, though the natural consequence of the wrongful act in connection with the special circumstances, the facts must be specially alleged. Treadwell v. Whittier, supra. Under these rules, it was proper for the plaintiff to state the fact of the exposure to the rainstorm and the particular damage arising therefrom, and also the amount claimed for each element of the damage caused by the act. We are not prepared to say that plaintiff was entitled to recover all of the items of damage alleged. The defendants do not discuss the question, and we therefore deem it inadvisable to consider that subject.

FITZGERALD v. SMITH, County Clerk.

(L. A. 5805.)

ELECTIONS ⇐126(2) — PRIMARY ELECTIONS — PLACING NAMES ON BALLOT.

Where officer resigned at such a time that notices of offices to be filled could not be published as required by Direct Primary Law, § 4, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1344, § 3, no candidate for such office could be nominated at the primary, but nominations must be made in the manner prescribed by Pol. Code, § 1188.

In Bank. Application for an order by Boyce R. Fitzgerald concerning the placing of names on an official primary election ballot by F. E. Smith, County Clerk of the County of Kern, and ex officio Registrar of Voters of the County of Kern. Names ordered omitted from the ballot.

Foster & Barnhart, of Bakersfield, for petitioner. Anderson & Borton, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The respondent is about to place on the official primary election ballot to be used in Kern county at the primary election to be held on August 27, 1918, as candidates for the office of judge of the superior court of Kern county for the unexpired term of Hon. Milton T. Farmer, resigned, the names of three candidates who have filed nomination petitions in form as required by the direct primary law. The resignation of Judge Farmer as judge of the superior court of Kern county was not filed until July 11, 1918, on which date it was by the Governor duly accepted. Concededly an election for the unexpired term must take place at the next general election to be held in November, 1918, but it is claimed that under the circumstances of this case candidates for such office may not be voted for at the August primary.

We are of the opinion that this claim is well based. The direct primary law requires, for the purpose of acquainting the electors with the names of the offices for which candidates may file nomination petitions and be voted for at the primary election, that certain notices shall be given—the first at least 70 days before the date of the primary, by the secretary of state to the county clerks and registrars, designating all the offices, except township offices, for which candidates are to be nominated at such primary election; and the second one given by the county clerk or registrar in each county and city and county by publication in a newspaper or newspapers published in such county or city and county, commencing within 10 days after receipt by him of such notice from the secretary of state, which notice shall include a designation of all the offices for which candidates are to be nominated at such primary election. Section 4, Direct Primary Law (St. 1913, p. 1382, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1344, § 3). These notices were given prior to the resignation of Judge Farmer, and, of course, they did not and could not include any designation of this office as one of the offices for which candidates were to be nominated.

We are satisfied that a proper construction of the Primary Law requires the conclusion that candidates may be nominated at the primary for such offices only as may properly be included in the notices thus provided for. It is the condition existing at the time prescribed by the law for the giving of the notices that controls, in so far as the primary is concerned. For the purposes of the primary the situation here is the same as it would have been if Judge Farmer had not resigned until the time for the filing of nomination petitions had expired. Under the circumstances no candidate for this office can be nominated at the primary, with the result that the candidates to be voted for, for such office, at the general election in November, must be nominated in the manner prescribed by section 1188 of the Political Code.

It is ordered that the respondent omit from the official primary election ballot to be used at the primary election of August 27, 1918, all mention of the office of judge of the superior court for the unexpired term of Judge Farmer, and of all names of any persons who have filed nomination petitions therefor.

ALLEN v. WILSON et al. (L. A. 4528.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃252—PASSAGE OF TITLE—"VENDOR'S LIEN."

Where an owner of land sells it under a contract payable by installments, title not to pass until the property was fully paid for, at which time he is to execute a deed, the seller does not retain a "vendor's lien"; such lien existing only when the owner of property, under the agreement selling it, parts with a legal title to it, and has only a claim to the unpaid amount of the purchase price therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Vendor's Lien.]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂⊃16—PROPERTY SUBJECT—INTEREST OF OWNER.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, providing for mechanics' liens, makes the interest of the owner or other person having or claiming any interest in the land, whatever it may be, subject to the mechanics' lien law; there being no limitation as to the interest so subject.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂⊃78—PROPERTY SUBJECT—NOTICE OF NONRESPONSIBILITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1192, authorizing mechanics' liens, an owner or person having an interest in the property, who has knowledge of an improvement being constructed thereon, may relieve himself from liability by giving notice of nonresponsibility.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂⊃137(1)—STATEMENT OF CLAIM—SUFFICIENCY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, prescribing the statement in the claim for mechanics' liens, does not require the claim to name the owner or reputed owner of the property, when not known.

5. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂⊃142—STATEMENT OF CLAIM—TERMS OF CONTRACT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, prescribing the statement in the claim for mechanics' liens, does not require the claim to state when the work was to be done, nor when the price was to be paid, when not agreed upon.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by O. P. Allen against W. J. Wilson and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hocker, Morris & Austin, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Frank L. Borden, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Defendant on February 25, 1914, being the owner of a tract of land in Los Angeles, entered into a written contract to sell it to E. L. Barrett on the installment plan, with provisions for default in the payments and foreclosure. There were three small houses on the tract. Barrett was put in possession of the property, and shortly afterwards employed the plaintiff, without notice to or the knowledge of defendant, to wreck the three houses and from the materials thereof and new material to erect a larger house on the lot. Plaintiff completed the construction of the house, and, Barrett having failed to pay him the contract price, he filed a mechanic's lien on the premises and afterwards brought this action to foreclose it. On the trial a witness—Mr. Griffin—testified that he called at the office of the defendant Wilson about the time the cement basement for the new house on the lot was completed, and told him about its construction, and within a few days afterwards he again visited the office of defendant and informed him that they were tearing down the old buildings for the purpose of using the materials in the construction of a new one on the cement foundation. Defendant denied having any conversation with Griffin, or that he had any knowledge of any improvement made on the lot until long after it had been finished; but the court found that he knew the building was being erected and that defendant Barrett intended to erect said building. He further testified that he had not caused or authorized Barrett to make this improvement, and this was not contested by the plaintiff. Judgment decreeing a lien and foreclosure thereof was entered in favor of plaintiff against the lot, and from this judgment defendant appeals.

The liability of the property of the defendant to a mechanic's lien is based on the terms of sections 1183 and 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, particularly the latter section, which provides that every building constructed upon land with knowledge of the owner, or person having or claiming any interest in the land, shall be held to have been constructed by the owner or such other person, and be subject to a lien for such construction, unless the owner or person shall, within 10 days after obtaining knowledge of said construction, give notice that he will not be responsible for the same by posting a written notice on the property and recording a verified copy of it with the recorder. The principal contentions of the appellant for a reversal are that the sections referred to have no application to him, because he was not the owner of the property when the improvement was made; that under the contract between himself and Barrett the latter became in equity the owner of the land, defendant only retaining a vendor's lien on it; that the plaintiff had notice before he commenced the erection of the building of the existence of these facts; and that, whether he had such knowledge or not, the vendor's lien which existed in favor of the defendant was paramount to any mechanic's lien which the plaintiff might attempt to assert. It is further contended that the claim of lien filed is defective.

[1] While it is true that for some purposes under a contract of sale of land the vendee is treated as the owner of the land, and the vendor as having but a lien upon it as security for the unpaid portion of the purchase money, this rule has no application, so as to defeat the assertion of a lien under the mechanic's lien law of this state. Nor is it true, as claimed by appellant, that, having contracted for the sale of the property to Barrett, he held but a vendor's lien upon it. On the contrary, he had no such lien. Under his agreement for the sale of the property to Barrett, he retained the title, and was not to part with it until the property was fully paid for, when he was to execute a deed. Under these circumstances a vendor's lien does not exist. Such a lien exists only when the owner of property, under the agreement selling it, parts with the legal title to it, and has only a claim to the unpaid amount of the purchase price therefor. It is clear that under the terms of the contract and sale here defendant parted with no title, and he could not be the owner of the property and at the same time have a lien upon it.

[2] Several cases, involving the construction of sections 1183 and 1192 as to the liability of the owner where improvements were made upon property under contract of sale by a third party at the instance of a vendee, without the actual consent of the vendor, but with his knowledge of their being made, and without notice of nonliability posted and recorded, are cited, in which it was held that the interest of the owner is subject to a lien, unless after knowledge of the improvements notice of liability is given. In those cases no such distinctions as appellant endeavors to draw now were presented, but exemption from liability on other grounds somewhat similar were made and denied. Ah Louis v. Geung Hong, 140 Cal. 500, 74 Pac. 41; Gentle v. Britton, 158 Cal. 328, 111 Pac. 9; Pacific Lumber Co. v. Wilson, 6 Cal. App. 561, 92 Pac. 654. The important ruling in these cases is that the liability does not exist by virtue of any general rule of agency, but by virtue of the terms of sections 1183 and 1192, which make the person in charge of the improvement the agent of the owner for the purposes of liability under the lien law, unless the owner gives notice of nonliability after knowledge of the improvement. Independent, however, of these cases, and taking the proposition as presented now for the first time, we think it entirely without merit. In the Code section there is no limitation as to the interest which shall be subject to the lien. The section is general and comprehensive, making the interest of the owner or other person having or claiming any interest in the land, no matter what that interest may be, whether legal or equitable, subject to the mechanic's lien law. We perceive no legal reason why this construction of the section is not proper.

[3] It is contended by appellant that, if the sections are to be construed as making the person in possession of the property or the reputed owner the agent of the real owner, the sections are to that extent unconstitutional, citing the case of Santa Cruz Rock, etc., Co. v. Lyons, 117 Cal. 212, 48 Pac. 1097, 59 Am. St. Rep. 174. That case is not in point, either as applied to the sections here under consideration or in principle. If, as in the Santa Cruz Case, the Legislature had simply declared that the person in charge of the improvement was to be deemed the agent of the owner to authorize the creation of a lien against the interest of the real owner, there would be ground for contending that the section was unconstitutional, as depriving the real owner of his property against his will. But the sections in question here do not so provide. They declare that an owner or person having an interest in property, who has knowledge of an improvement being constructed on his land, and who permits the improvement to be made and receives the benefit of it, must pay for it. If he does not desire the improvement, having knowledge that it is being made without his authority, he can relieve himself from all liability by giving notice of nonresponsibility as provided in the sections. This involves only a matter of good conscience and fairness, and if the actual owner does not give that notice when he has knowledge of the improvement being made to the benefit of his property, he is deemed to have authorized it and will be liable for its value to the extent of his interest in the land. The law does not interfere with any substantial right of the actual owner. It simply adopts and applies the just and equitable rule of estoppel.

[4] It is further contended by appellant that the court failed to find on the issue joined by him as to the knowledge of the plaintiff of the existence of the vendor's lien in favor of the defendant on the property. But the complete answer to this contention of appellant is that he did not have a vendor's lien, and necessarily the court could not find on the subject.

[5] The last point made by appellant is as to the validity of the claim of lien which was filed. This requires but short notice. The objection of appellant is that the claim of lien names no one as the owner or reputed owner of the property, nor does it state when the work was to be done nor when the price was to be paid. Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure only requires a statement in the claim of lien as to when the work was to be done and when the price was payable, if they were agreed on, and the insertion of the name of the owner or the reputed owner only when it is known to the claimant. It does not appear from the evidence that there was any agreement as to when the work was to be done, or payment for it to be made, or that, when he filed the claim of lien, the plaintiff knew the name of the owner or reputed owner of the lot. "The plaintiff is only required to state names mentioned [owner, etc.], if known. If the names are not known, the claim filed is sufficient if it is silent on the subject." West Coast, etc., v. Newkirk, 80 Cal. 277, 22 Pac. 231. "The name of the owner, or reputed owner, is not presumably within the knowledge of the claimant." Corbett v. Chambers, 109 Cal. 178, 185, 41 Pac. 873. "Where the time of payment is not stated, 'the presumption of the law is that no time was given.'" McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 132, 137, 61 Pac. 273, 63 Pac. 182, 622.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

HARE v. McGUE. (L. A. 4568.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ⟸111 — VALIDITY — PUBLIC POLICY — CONTRACTS IN DEROGATION OF MARRIAGE RELATION.

A contract having for its object the securing of a divorce is void, being contrary to good morals.

2. CONTRACTS ⟸129(3)—VALIDITY — PUBLIC POLICY—PROCURING SPECIFIED EVIDENCE.

A contract whereby one agrees to procure testimony of certain facts which will successfully support or defeat a lawsuit, or which provides that payment to the one procuring such testimony is to be contingent upon the result of the lawsuit, is void, being calculated to induce false charges and perjured testimony.

3. CONTRACTS ⟸129(3)—VALIDITY—PROCURING TESTIMONY—DIVORCE ACTION—INVESTIGATING WIFE'S HISTORY — SHADOWING WIFE.

A contract whereby husband, who was threatened with divorce action, employed parties to investigate wife's past history, to shadow the wife, to ascertain her habits and companions, and to locate and ascertain names of witnesses to testify in husband's behalf, is not contrary to public policy, where compensation was not contingent, and there was no agreement to procure testimony as to particular facts.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by D. W. Hare against A. L. McGue. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Valentine & Newby, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Thomson & Spencer and A. P. Thomson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought by plaintiff, in his own behalf and as assignee of one John M. Robinson, to recover the value of personal services rendered by both to defendant and for money expended by plaintiff in his behalf. Differences had arisen between defendant and his wife, and, she threatening an action for divorce, he, with a view of making a defense thereto, employed plaintiff and Robinson, the former to look up the acts and conduct and past history of the wife, and her conduct and life during his employment, and to locate, interview, and secure witnesses to testify on behalf of defendant; also to advise and consult with defendant concerning said action and to direct certain of his business affairs. Robinson was employed and directed to watch and shadow the wife of defendant, to ascertain her conduct, habits, and companions, and to secure the names and whereabouts of certain witnesses defendant desired to testify in his behalf in said divorce action. The court made findings of fact as above recited, and entered a judgment in favor of plaintiff, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

While in the transcript there are various assignments of error, the sole point urged here by appellant for a reversal is that the contracts made the basis of the cause of action, and as found by the court, are contrary to public policy and void, and no recovery should have been had upon them. In elaboration of this proposition of law appellant asserts that any contract between parties which has for its object the dissolution of the marriage relation, or facilitating that result, is contrary to good morals and void; that, further, any contract having for its object the procurement of testimony for the purpose of securing a divorce is illegal and void.

[1, 2] There can be no question about the legal proposition asserted by appellant. We must accept as clearly established that the law is extremely solicitous about the maintenance of the marriage relation, and will not tolerate or sanction any contract which by its terms or obvious tendency has for its object the securing of a divorce. The further proposition, extending, however, not particularly to divorce suits, but to all kinds of litigation, is equally true, that a contract is void whereby one agrees to obtain or procure testimony of certain facts which will successfully support or defeat a lawsuit, or which provides that payment to the party procuring such testimony is to be contingent upon the result of the action for which he is engaged to procure it. It is the element of payment contingent on the success of the litigation in which the evidence is to be produced, or the fact that the agreement is to procure evidence, not of facts as they exist, but of particular facts necessary to the success of the party litigant, who contracted for their production, which vitiates the contract. It is the contingency on the one hand, and the agreement to furnish a given set of facts essential to a successful litigation on the other, and both of which in their nature are calculated to induce false charges and the production of perjured testimony, to subvert the truth and pervert justice, through fraud, trickery, and chicanery at the hands of unscrupulous private detectives or other conscienceless persons, which has impelled the law, with wisdom, to declare such contracts illegal. Patterson v. Donner, 48 Cal. 369; Lyon v. Hussey, 82 Hun, 15, 31 N. Y. Supp. 281.

Now, while appellant sets forth quite extensively in his brief cases (in addition to the above) in support of these principles, he does not point out how the particular contracts entered into between the plaintiff and appellant here, and with Robinson, are brought under the ban of the rule, and our examination of the findings and the evidence show no analogy between the facts as recited in the cited cases and the case at bar. Certainly there is no rule of law which precludes a party in a divorce action or in any other action, from employing a person to do detective work, or in a divorce action itself to search for witnesses or to procure existing testimony either to support or defend such an action, or to acquire information of the past conduct or life of either spouse, or to set a watch upon the personal acts or associates of either. Any one has a right, when threatened with litigation, or desiring himself to sue, to employ assistance with a view of ascertaining facts as they exist, and to hunt up and procure the presence of witnesses who know of facts and will testify to them; and this is true whether the action be one of divorce or of any other character. Neece v. Joseph, 95 Ark. 522, 129 S. W. 797, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 278, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 655; Quirk v. Miller, 14 Mont. 467, 36 Pac. 1077, 25 L. R. A. 87, 43 Am. St. Rep. 647. Any other rule would leave the parties in a divorce suit, and every other suit, restricted to their own individual efforts to obtain existing evidence which would be absurd.

[3] Examining, now, the contracts by the defendant with plaintiff and Robinson, there was no element in either of them contravening public policy. The compensation of neither was contingent. They were to be paid, whether they ascertained facts or procured witnesses to testify to them or not. There was nothing contingent on the result of the divorce suit. Neither did they agree, nor were they asked by appellant, to procure witnesses to testify to any particular state of facts, but only to obtain from witnesses information of what they knew, and report the matters to the attorneys for appellant. They were not informed on their employment of the names of the witnesses, nor what they were expected to testify to, and only ascertained both these things while working under their employment. Particular stress is placed by appellant on testimony of plaintiff as to the seeking out and production of a certain witness designated "a red-headed dressmaker." As to this witness, however, all that plaintiff agreed to do was, at the express request of appellant, to attempt to find her. The assumption that plaintiff was to obtain particular evidence of certain things from her is unwarranted. It clearly appeared that plaintiff did not know this person. He did not agree to get her to testify to any particular facts, or in truth to testify at all. His mission was only to find her, the defendant saying that, if he could find her, he (defendant) could get evidence from her himself. Plaintiff found her, and she was taken in charge by defendant. This is all there was to that matter. Taking the case in its entirety, there was nothing agreed to be done, and nothing actually done, under the contracts of plaintiff and Robinson with defendant, which was not entirely proper and legitimate and the trial court correctly so held.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. Railroads ⟸278(5) — Trespasser on Freight Car — Contributory Negligence.
Where 15 year old boy riding without permission on a freight car, while holding on to the iron ladder on the side of the car, let go or lost his hold because brakeman was stamping near his fingers and threatened to stamp upon them, he was not guilty of contributory negligence in loosening his hold or in not waiting for a more safe place to alight.

2. Negligence ⟸85(2)—Contributory Negligence—15 Year Old Boy.
A 15 year old boy is not expected to use that degree of judgment and discretion which would be expected and required of an adult.

3. Appeal and Error ⟸1066 — Harmless Error—Instructions.
In action for death of 15 year old boy, who while riding on freight car released his hold of iron ladder and fell in front of freight engine, defendant railroad was not prejudiced by failure to base instruction on contributory negligence on theory that boy jumped, where, if boy jumped because of fear that his fingers would have been stamped on, he would not have been contributorily negligent.

4. Appeal and Error ⟸932(1) — Review — Verdict.
The fact that jury gave parent a verdict for only $1,000 for death of 15 year old boy does not raise inference that jury did not wholly believe testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, the parent being entitled by law to only compensatory damages for pecuniary loss.

5. Trial ⟸140(1) — Credibility of Witnesses—Question for Jury.
The credibility of the witnesses was exclusively for the jury.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward Judson Brown, Judge.

Action by Nettie Bowdoin against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hocker, Morris & Austin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment after verdict for $1,000 in an action brought by plaintiff to recover for the death of her son, Lindsay, 15 years of age, alleged to have been caused by the negligent and willful misconduct of a brakeman of the defendant, in ejecting him from an iron ladder on the side of a freight car upon which he was riding without permission, by means whereof he fell in front of a passing switch engine and was killed. Cecil Sanders, a companion of deceased, testified: That he saw the brakeman climb down the ladder and smash decedent's fingers. That he heard the brakeman say something to him, but could not distinguish what it was. That he "stomped where Lindsay was holding on to the ladder. * * * Lindsay fell off. He seemed to light on his left foot, * * * seemed to lose his balance, and fell in front of the east-bound switch engine and was run over." In its answer the defendant denied negligence and alleged contributory negligence. The brakeman and others in charge of the train testified, denying all knowledge of the presence of the deceased, and any knowledge of the means by which he was thrown in front of the switch engine. The jury were instructed fully on the subject of negligence, and no complaint is made of such instructions. Defendant, however, complains of the following instruction, given at plaintiff's request:

"If you find that the deceased in this case was a boy of 15 years of age, you are instructed that he would not be expected to use that degree of judgment and discretion which would be expected and required of an adult; and if you find that from the commands or acts, if any, of the brakeman in charge of the train, the boy had reason to believe that force would be used, or if you find that force was used to eject him from the train, and even if you find that the boy jumped from the train by reason of such belief, he cannot under such circumstances be charged with contributory negligence for not having waited for a more safe place to alight."

[1-3] It is claimed that this instruction is erroneous for the reason that it is based upon a theory not involved in the evidence. If we accept the testimony on behalf of plaintiff as true, the hold of decedent was released by reason of the fact that his fingers were stamped upon, or that he lost his hold, or let go his hold, because the brakeman was stamping near his fingers and threatening to stamp on his fingers, it could not be said that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in loosening his hold under such circumstances. There is no evidence that he jumped. Under the circumstances, he could not be charged with negligence in not choosing a safe place to alight. Upon the question of the negligence of the deceased it was proper for the jury to be instructed "that he would not be expected to use that degree of judgment and discretion which would be expected and required of an adult," and the effect of the instruction was that the boy in jumping from the train, if he did jump, was not guilty of contributory negligence, if as a boy of his discretion he had reason to believe that his fingers would be stamped on, or if they were stamped on. Defendant was not prejudiced by an instruction upon the theory that the deceased jumped.

[4-6] The point is made that, notwithstanding the conflict in the evidence, this court should take into consideration the fact that the verdict for $1,000 was a very light verdict, and therefore infer that the jury did not wholly believe the testimony of the plaintiff's witness. The defendant cannot complain that the verdict was too small, and, in view of the rule of law that parents are only entitled to compensatory damages for pecuniary loss, we cannot say that the jury rendered a verdict for less than they thought was proper under the measure of damages as given it by the court. The credibility of the witness was exclusively for the jury, and the verdict based upon sufficient testimony cannot be overturned by this court.

The judgment is affirmed.

BUSCH v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION (two cases). (L. A. 4529.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 17, 1918.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⊜117(5)—OPERATION—LEFT-HAND TRACKS.
It is not, as a matter of law, negligence to operate a street car west on the south track of a double track line.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜930(1)—PRESUMPTIONS.
Where verdict was for defendant street railway, its evidence as to care in operating its cars must, on appeal, be taken as true.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1002—REVERSAL—CONFLICT IN EVIDENCE.
That the evidence is conflicting is not available for reversal, when the verdict resolved the conflict; the verdict being conclusive on appeal.

4. STREET RAILROADS ⊜114(13) — COLLISIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.
In action for personal injuries and damage to automobile in collision with street car, evidence held to sustain verdict of contributory negligence.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜171(3)—SCOPE—INSUFFICIENT PLEADINGS.
In action for personal injuries and damage to automobile in collision with street car, where plea of contributory negligence was not attacked, and trial proceeded on theory that it was sufficient, plaintiffs on appeal could not obtain reversal on ground that plea was insufficient.

6. STREET RAILROADS ⊂⊃112(2)—COLLISIONS —RES IPSA LOQUITUR DOCTRINE.

In action for personal injuries and damage to automobile in collision with street car, maxim "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply.

7. TRIAL ⊂⊃191(8) — COLLISIONS — INSTRUCTIONS.

Instruction that motorman, operating street car at reasonable speed with due care, may assume that others on the street will exercise ordinary care, and will see that which is plainly to be seen, was not objectionable, as assuming that the street car could be plainly seen.

8. STREET RAILROADS ⊂⊃85(1)—COLLISIONS —RIGHT OF WAY.

It is duty of drivers of automobiles along street upon which there is laid street car track to yield right of way to street cars, when they can reasonably do so.

9. STREET RAILROADS ⊂⊃81(1)—OPERATION—CARE REQUIRED.

Though it is unusual to operate a westbound street car on a south track, the railroad need use only reasonable and ordinary care under the circumstances, and not special and particular care.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Two actions, consolidated, by Reinhardt J. Busch and by Mary E. Busch against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. Judgment for defendant, and order denying motions for new trial, and plaintiffs separately appeal. Affirmed.

Gray, Barker & Bowen, H. Perk, Jr., N. Blackstock, and Wheaton A. Gray, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant is operating two double track street railways in the city of Los Angeles; one along Pasadena avenue, and the other on Avenue 20, which crosses Pasadena avenue. Reinhardt J. Busch and his wife, Mary E. Busch, were traveling easterly along the south side of Pasadena avenue in an automobile driven by the said Mary E. Busch and owned by her. A street car operated by the defendant was going westerly on the south track of the Pasadena Avenue line between Avenue 21 and Avenue 20, and at a point near Avenue 20 the automobile and the car collided, whereby Reinhardt J. Busch sustained personal injuries and the automobile was materially damaged. To recover these damages the two parties respectively began actions against the defendant. The two causes were consolidated and tried together, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant. From this judgment, and from an order denying their respective motions for a new trial, the two plaintiffs have taken separate appeals to this court.

[1] Plaintiff's first point is that the railroad company was negligent in its methods of operating its cars and laying its tracks in this: That usually street cars travel on the right-hand track in the direction in which they are going, and that this car was going west on the left-hand track. No law or ordinance is pointed out by appellants which required the defendants to operate its cars in either mode. It was therefore lawful to run them in either direction. Running a car west on the south side track cannot be said to be negligence in law.

[2, 3] It is claimed that the evidence showed that the defendant was negligent in the manner of operating the car in this: That inasmuch as the car was going in the opposite direction from that usually taken by cars upon that railroad, it was the defendant's duty to use more than usual care to warn persons of the fact, so as to avoid danger of collision, and that the defendant failed to sound any gong or otherwise give signals of warning. There was evidence that the defendant did sound the gong, and also that the injury occurred about dusk, that the inside car lights were lighted, that a headlight was burning brightly, and that the car was not going more than about four miles per hour at the time of the collision. The verdict of the jury having been for the defendant, this evidence must be taken as true. The fact that the plaintiffs' evidence contradicted it is not available for reversal in such a case. It was a question for the jury to determine, and its verdict on that subject is conclusive here.

[4] Plaintiffs further claim that there was no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of Mary E. Busch, who was driving the automobile. There was evidence to show that as she crossed Avenue 20 going east, just before the collision, she observed another automobile near the curb line, going as she first believed in the same direction, but which in fact had stopped, or was about to stop; that, seeing this to be so, she undertook to pass the automobile on the left-hand side, being the side next to the street car track; that in doing so she swerved considerably to the left at the instant when the car came opposite to the standing automobile, and thereby she drove her automobile against the side of the street car; that at that time the lights on the street car were burning, so that with ordinary care she could have seen it in time to stop her car, or guide it so as to avoid the collision. A verdict finding the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence upon these facts cannot be said as a matter of law to be contrary to the evidence.

[5] Plaintiffs further contend that there was no sufficient pleading of the contributory negligence of the defendant in the answer, within the rule stated in Crabbe v. Mammoth, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 Pac. 714. The Crabbe Case was decided after the answers in this case were filed. The trial was conducted throughout upon the theory that contributory negligence of the plaintiffs was properly alleged and that the fact was in issue. Under these circumstances the well-settled rule prevails that the parties cannot on appeal claim a reversal on the ground that the plea was insufficient. It is unnecessary to cite cases on the subject.

[6] The court instructed the jury as follows:

"The fact that there was a collision between the automobile in which the plaintiffs were riding and the street car of the defendant does not raise a presumption of negligence against the defendant."

We see no error in this instruction. The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply in such cases.

[7] Another instruction was to the effect that a motorman, who is operating a street car at a reasonable rate of speed and with due care along and upon a public street, "has a right to assume that other persons who are using the street will exercise ordinary care in doing so, and will see that which is plainly to be seen." The objection made to this instruction is that the evidence showed that it was impossible for the plaintiffs to have seen the street car. On the contrary, as we view the evidence, it would seem to have been impossible for her not to see it, except by shutting her eyes or looking the other way. The instruction does not assume that the car was plainly to be seen, but says that if it was plainly to be seen the motorman had a right to expect that she would see it. The jury were left to determine from the evidence whether or not it was plainly to be seen.

[8] There was no error in instructing the jury that it is the duty of drivers of automobiles along a street upon which there is laid a street car track to yield the right of way to the street cars, when they can reasonably do so.

[9] The instruction that, when running a car in a direction the opposite to that usually taken on the south track, the motorman must use "special and particular care" to avoid collision with vehicles going in the other direction, was properly refused. Reasonable and ordinary care, under the existing circumstances, is the standard required of a street car company lawfully operating its cars on the street.

The instructions on all the questions in the case were full and clear. The appellants make other criticisms of instructions given, and complain of the refusal of others. We will not discuss them further. We are satisfied that the rulings were either correct, or that they were not sufficiently prejudicial as to have caused a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

GLIDDEN v. DIAMOND 66 CATTLE & DAIRY CO. et al. (L. A. 4517.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 25, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⊂=211(3) — STOCKHOLDER SUIT—COMPLAINT—DEMAND.
Complaint of stockholder suing on behalf of corporation, to avoid transfer of its property, should show demand on it to sue, and refusal, or uselessness of demand.

2. CORPORATIONS ⊂=211(7)—SUIT BY STOCKHOLDER—COMPLAINT—SPECIAL DEMURRER.
Defect of complaint of stockholder, suing on behalf of corporation, not alleging demand on it to sue, but leaving uncertain whether any demand would be effectual, can be availed of only by special demurrer.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=230 — MATTERS AVAILABLE IN SUPPORT OF NONSUIT — DEFECTIVE COMPLAINT.
Defect of stockholder's complaint in not showing demand on corporation to sue, and its refusal, or certainty that demand would have been useless, is not available in support of nonsuit granted; it not having been urged till defendant's evidence showed demand would have been futile.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=236(2) — MOTION PRESENTING OBJECTION—PLEADING.
A defect in a complaint not made ground of motion will not be considered on appeal.

5. CORPORATIONS ⊂=204 — SUIT BY STOCKHOLDER—PENDING SUIT BY CORPORATION.
A stockholder's action to avoid a transfer of its property, as unauthorized, is not defeated by fact of the corporation having already sued to have the contract upheld, and violation of it restrained, and the property accounted for according to contract; the suits being entirely dissimilar.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by D. F. Glidden against the Diamond 66 Cattle & Dairy Company and others. From an adverse judgment and order, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

D. F. Glidden and Will H. Holcomb, both of San Diego, for appellant. Hendee & Rodabaugh and F. F. Grant, all of San Diego, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit and from an order denying the plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The action is one commenced by the plaintiff as a director and one of the stockholders of a corporation known as the Diamond 66 Cattle & Dairy Company against said corporation, the other four directors, and two other defendants named H. H. Peterson and R. H. McGinness; the latter two being the respondents herein. The purpose of the action as set forth in the complaint was to have set aside a certain bill of sale purporting to transfer all of the property of the corporation to the defendant Peterson, the plaintiff alleging that said purported transfer was illegal because attempted to be authorized at a special meeting of the other four directors of the corporation held without proper notification, of the holding of which meeting said plaintiff was given no notice and at which he was not present; that the property of the corporation had thus been transferred to the defendant Peterson for a sum far less than its actual value; and that as a consequence the said corporate property was being dissipated, and the plaintiff's stock, which had theretofore been worth $10 per share, rendered valueless. The defendant R. H. McGinness was made a party defendant because of a subsequent arrangement between himself and Peterson by which he was to assist in selling off the property, receiving therefor a share in the excess of profits above its purchase price. The defendant corporation and its four directors who were responsible for this transaction were duly served with process, but defaulted. The defendants Peterson and McGinness did not demur to the complaint, but answered, specifically denying all of its material allegations, but, after doing so, set up affirmatively certain averments in which the due execution of the bill of sale to Peterson was alleged and sought to be justified. The cause came to trial upon the issues as thus made up. The plaintiff proved the averments of his complaint as to the illegality of the meeting of the four directors of the corporation at which the transfer of its property had been sought to be authorized. He also proved by practically uncontradicted evidence that the said property of the corporation was worth several thousand dollars more than was agreed to be paid for it by Peterson.

During the cross-examination of the plaintiff, it developed that three days prior to the filing of his complaint the corporation, at the instance evidently of its other four directors, had commenced an action against the defendants Peterson and McGinness, wherein the same agreement for the transfer of the property of the corporation was set up and averred to be legal, but in which it was also averred that the said defendants were failing and refusing to comply with its terms, by reason of which an accounting was prayed for and further sales of said property sought to be restrained. A copy of said complaint was offered and admitted in the evidence by said defendants as a part of the plaintiff's cross-examination. The plaintiff having rested his case, the defendants Peterson and McGinness moved the court for a nonsuit upon the following grounds:

"That the action by D. F. Glidden, stockholder, is shown by the evidence to have been unlawfully brought, that is, not according to law, in that the corporation itself had filed a suit three days prior to the filing of the suit by the plaintiff stockholder in this case; second, that the ultimate prayers of both complaints, I mean both the corporation's complaint and the stockholder's complaint, are the same, the relief prayed for being the same."

The court granted said motion, and also later denied the plaintiff's motion for a new trial, whereupon he prosecuted these appeals.

[1-4] The contention of the respondents upon these appeals is that the plaintiff as a stockholder of the corporation was not entitled to maintain this action on its behalf in the absence of either pleading or proof of a demand upon the corporation that it should institute the action, with which demand it had refused to comply. There can be no doubt that under the well-settled rules of law applicable to this class of cases the plaintiff's pleading is defective in this regard: Although there are some averments in the complaint to the effect that the four directors of the corporation who were in control of its affairs acted fraudulently in authorizing and making said transfer of its property, which might make it uncertain as to whether or not any demand on plaintiff's part to have the corporation, still controlled by these directors, repudiate its former action, would have been effectual. The defect would thus become a mere uncertainty, which could only be taken advantage of by special demurrer. The difficulty, however, with the respondents' present contention, is that they not only did not either by demurrer or answer direct attention to the defect, but that they did not make its existence a ground of their motion for nonsuit either specifically or through their vague objection that the action of the plaintiff was "shown by the evidence to have been unlawfully brought." Having thus failed to urge this objection to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint until such time in the progress of the case as the evidence presented at their own instance showed that such a demand would have been futile, and having also failed to make the point as a ground of their motion for nonsuit, and thus given the plaintiff an opportunity to correct the defect and thus avoid the force of the motion, the respondents cannot now be heard to urge the point upon this appeal.

[5] The second ground which the defendants specified upon their motion for nonsuit was that the evidence showed that three days before the plaintiff had brought his action the corporation had itself commenced an action against the same defendants in which practically the same relief was sought. Had this been shown to be the case, it would have furnished a sufficient reason why the plaintiff should be nonsuited and his action dismissed; for, aside from the matter of pleading, the plaintiff was bound to prove his right to maintain his action on behalf of the corporation by showing that the corporation had itself failed, refused, or neglected to take the necessary steps for the protection of the interests of itself and its stockholders, which, as one of the latter, he was seeking to take on its behalf; and hence a showing that the corporation had itself done previously what he was seeking to do on its behalf would necessarily have been fatal to the plaintiff's action. But the difficulty with the respondents' contention in this regard lies in the entire absence of similarity between these two suits. The plaintiff in his action seeks to have the alleged unauthorized and hence illegal transfer of the entire property of the corporation to a stranger set aside and the property or its value restored to the corporation. The corporation, on the other hand, seeks in its action to have the contract between itself and the defendant Peterson upheld and the said defendant and his associate, McGinness, restrained from violating it and required to account for the residue of the property received by them according to its terms. The institution of such a suit by the corporation furnished as above stated, sufficient proof of its determination to stand by its illegal contract to have made a demand that it bring suit to set aside such contract unnecessary, and hence to have justified rather than defeated the plaintiff's action.

It follows from the foregoing considerations that the defendants' motion for a nonsuit should have been denied, and hence, also, that the plaintiff's motion for a new trial predicated upon this error should have been granted.

Judgment and order reversed.

In re HURLEY'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8706.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 8, 1918.)

WILLS ⇐133 — OLOGRAPHIC WILL — EXECUTION — SIGNATURE.

Olographic will, containing name in the exordium, but no conclusion or signature or punctuation mark at end, held insufficient to be entitled to probate; there being no inference that testatrix intended name in the introduction as the executing signature.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Margaret E. Hurley, deceased. Petition by Catherine E. Kane and others to have order admitting will to probate revoked, opposed by W. J. Hynes, administrator, and others. From an order refusing to revoke the previous order, petitioners appeal. Reversed.

David L. Levy, Walter Shelton, and George K. Ford, all of San Francisco, for appellants. Ervin S. Best, Louis H. Brownstone, and Cullinan & Hickey, all of San Francisco, and Edward R. Eliassen, of Oakland, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The appeal is taken from an order refusing to revoke a previous order admitting to probate a certain document as the last will of Margaret E. Hurley, deceased. The petition for revocation alleged as grounds therefor that the will so admitted was not signed by the hand of the deceased, nor subscribed at the end thereof by the deceased, and is not her last will. The following is a copy of the document as set forth in the record:

"San Francisco June 6th 1902

"I Margaret E. Hurley being of sound mind and body do make this my last will and testament I be-queath to Lavinia Giesting one thousand dollars to Irma Giesting one thousand dollars to Gertrude Giesting one thousand dollars to Mrs. Nash and her sister Mrs. Hanig five hundred dollars each to Miss Nelly White five hundred dollars to Edgar Gillern of Alameda five hundred dollars to Mrs. Blanchard of 1366 Ellis St five hundred dollars to Mrs. Titcomb five hundred dollars to Mrs. Skelly of Alameda five hundred dollars to Lilian and Bertha Morris five hundred each"

The rule in this state regarding the place of the signature and the essentials thereof to an olographic will, is settled by the two decisions in Estate of Manchester, 174 Cal. 417, 163 Pac. 358, L. R. A. 1917D, 629, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 227; and Estate of McMahon, 174 Cal. 423, 163 Pac. 669, L. R. A. 1917D, 778. The first case was decided by Department 1 and the second by Department 2, but the entire question was carefully considered by the whole court in deciding the two cases. In Estate of Manchester the document proposed as a will began in a manner similar to that of the document here in question, and it terminated without any signature other than the one at the beginning. There was nothing on the face of the will to indicate that the testatrix intended to adopt the signature in the introduction as the signature to the will. It was held that the will was not signed, and did not constitute a will. In Estate of McMahon the signature appeared in the opening clause, and there was no signature at the close of the will or elsewhere therein; but the concluding clause contained the statement: "I do hereby publish and declare the foregoing, entirely written, dated and signed by my own hand, to be my last will and testament." (The italics are ours.)

This was held to be a sufficient declaration of the intention of the testatrix to adopt the signature written by her in the exordium of the will as her signature in execution of it, and accordingly the order admitting the will to probate was affirmed. In Estate of Manchester, on this subject, the court said:

"The true rule, as we conceive it to be, is that, wherever placed, the fact that it was intended as an executing signature must satisfactorily appear on the face of the document itself. If it is at the end of the document, the universal custom of mankind forces the conclusion that it was appended as an execution, if nothing to the contrary appears. If placed elsewhere, it is for the court to say, from an inspection of the whole document, its language as well as its form, and the relative position of its parts, whether or not there is a positive and satisfactory inference from the document itself that the signature was so placed with the intent that it should there serve as a token of execution. If such inference thus appears, the execution may be considered as proven by such signature."

This rule was followed in Estate of McMahon with the result above stated. In the present case the signature appears in the opening statement of the paper, but there is nothing in the document or in the closing paragraph to indicate that the testatrix intended to adopt that signature as the executing signature of the will. Indeed, the contrary may be inferred from the fact that the will terminates without even a punctuation mark, thereby indicating that the testatrix ceased writing before she had completed declaring her intention and that she did not regard the document as a completed will. But the contrary inference need not appear. In the absence of anything on the face of the will to raise the inference that the name in the exordium was intended as a signature in execution, the olographic document cannot be deemed a valid will.

For these reasons, we think the court erred in admitting the will to probate, and that the application to revoke the same should have been granted.

The order is reversed.

SIMMONS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2671.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⟸160(4)—NOTICE OF APPEAL—FILING OF NOTICE.

Notice of appeal, deposited with justice on certain date and indorsed as filed of that date, was filed on such date, although fees required by Code Civ. Proc. § 981, to be paid justice for transmission of papers to superior court, were not paid on such date, but were paid within period in which to perfect appeal.

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⟸159(10)—UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL—TIME FOR FILING.

Where undertaking on appeal and notice of appeal were deposited on certain day with the justice, who indorsed the notice as having been filed on that day although fees for transmission of appeal papers to superior court, required to be paid by Code Civ. Proc. § 981, were not paid at such time, the bond was filed within five days after the filing of notice, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 978a, despite nonpayment of fees until later, but within time in which to perfect appeal.

3. JUDGMENT ⟸745—MATTERS CONCLUDED—FILING OF APPEAL NOTICE.

Court's decision, on petition for writ of prohibition, that a notice of appeal was filed on a certain date, is conclusive on the court, on subsequent certiorari proceedings involving question of whether undertaking was filed within five days after filing of such notice, where such question depended upon date upon which notice was filed.

Certiorari by Martha B. Simmons against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of San Diego and another, to review order denying motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice of the peace. Affirmed.

See, also, 30 Cal. App. 252, 157 Pac. 817.

Albert J. Lee, of San Diego, for petitioner. Theodore Stensland, of San Diego, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Certiorari. On November 11, 1915, in a certain case wherein petitioner was plaintiff and one Elizabeth G. Clarke was defendant, a judgment was rendered in the justice's court of San Diego township in favor of plaintiff. On November 20th defendant served upon plaintiff's attorney a notice of appeal to the superior court, wherein it was further stated:

"You will further take notice that an undertaking on said appeal was this day filed in said justice's court."

This notice, together with the undertaking on appeal, was on the same day deposited with the justice of the peace, who indorsed thereon:

"Filed November 20, 1915.
"J. Edward Keating, Justice of the Peace."

At the time of depositing and filing these documents the appellant did not pay the justice of the peace the fees provided by law to be paid to the county clerk for filing the transcript on appeal and placing the action on the calendar in the superior court. On December 10th, however, which was within the time specified by law for perfecting the appeal, she did pay to the justice of the peace such fees, which were transmitted to the county clerk, together with the papers on appeal. Thereafter, upon the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to try the case, plaintiff moved to dismiss the appeal, which motion by order of court being denied, petitioner by this proceeding seeks to have the same annulled.

[1, 2] Her contention is that no undertaking on appeal was filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal, as required by section 978a, Code of Civil Procedure. As we have stated, the notice was duly served on November 20th, on which day it was deposited with the justice, who indorsed it as filed of that date. It is conceded that an undertaking in due form was filed within five days thereafter. Petitioner insists, however, that the filing of the undertaking was ineffectual, for the reason that the notice of appeal must be deemed to have been filed on December 10th, at which time the fees were paid. In the case of Simmons v. Superior Court, 30 Cal. App. 252, 157 Pac. 817, wherein this petitioner sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from proceeding with the trial of the case, upon the ground that, since the fees were not paid at the precise time of filing the notice of appeal, the filing thereof was ineffectual for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon the superior court, this court, in considering such question, said:

"The purpose of the enactment of section 981 of the Code of Civil Procedure was to provide for the payment of the clerk's fees at the time of transmitting to the superior court the papers on appeal; and where the fees, though not paid to the justice at the time of presenting for filing the notice of appeal, are nevertheless paid within the thirty days allowed for taking the appeal, so as to enable him to transmit the fees, together with the papers on appeal, it is, in our opinion, a sufficient compliance with the statutory provision."

We adhere to the conclusion reached in that case, viz., that the notice of appeal was filed on November 20th when deposited with the justice and indorsed as filed of that date, from which it follows that, since the undertaking on appeal was filed within five days thereafter, it constituted a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 978a, Code of Civil Procedure.

"The provisions conferring the right of appeal and prescribing the procedure are remedial and should not be unduly hampered with constructive restrictions which will cast doubt upon the jurisdiction of the appellate court." Rigby v. Superior Court, 162 Cal. 339, 122 Pac. 958.

[3] It is true that, in the opinion in the case referred to, this court, in response to one line of argument urged by the petitioner therein said:

"Assuming, as claimed by petitioner, that the notice of appeal could not be deemed filed until payment of the fees in question was made, then, since it was left with the justice whose duty it was to file it upon payment of the fees, it should be deemed filed as of the date on which the fees were paid."

It is clear, however, that the decision was not based upon the correctness of petitioner's contention, but even if well founded, the court held it insufficient to warrant the relief asked. The statement based upon the assumed correctness of petitioner's claim was unnecessary to the decision, which was clearly founded upon other grounds, which must be deemed conclusive as to the question involved in the instant case.

Since the notice of appeal, as held in Simmons v. Superior Court, supra, was filed on November 20th and the undertaking on appeal, as conceded, was filed within five days thereafter, it necessarily follows that such act constituted a full compliance with the provisions of section 978a, Code of Civil Procedure.

The order sought to be annulled is affirmed.

WILSON v. FULLER. (Civ. 2242.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 28, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ⟸198(6)—CONSTRUCTION.
Contract by which well digger agreed to sink well to minimum depth of 150 feet, but not to exceed 500 feet, providing that he might stop drilling after reaching the minimum depth, permitted the digger to stop drilling at any time after reaching 150 feet.

2. CONTRACTS ⟸354—BREACH—DAMAGES.
Where well digger agreed to drill a well to minimum depth of 150 feet and maximum of 500 feet, but stopped digging when he reached 174 feet, but through his negligence the last 24 feet were worthless, and the landowner employed another digger to redig the last 24 feet and complete the well, but the court's findings, in action for agreed price by the original digger, failed to show what portion of the amount paid by the owner to the second digger was for the 24 feet, and what portion was for digging the well, he could not recover any compensation for the redigging.

3. CONTRACTS ⟸231(2)—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.
Where plaintiff's assignor agreed to dig well to minimum depth of 150 feet, the contract permitting him to stop digging after reaching such depth, and he did stop, plaintiff could recover the full amount earned, notwithstanding the contract required only half payment at the reaching of each 100 feet in the digging.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by J. H. Beck against Clifford A. Fuller, wherein J. M. Wilson, as plaintiff's assignee, was substituted as plaintiff. From the judgment rendered, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Foster and Chas. A. Barnhart, both of Bakersfield, for appellant. W. W. Kaye, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. By the findings of the court in this case the following facts appear: By agreement in writing plaintiff's assignor, J. H. Beck, agreed to drill a well for the defendant for which the defendant agreed to pay the sum of $1.50 per foot for the first 100 feet, and an increase of 25 cents per foot for each additional 100 feet; one-half the contract price to be paid at the completion of each 100 feet, "and the balance at completion of well." The contractor agreed "to sink such well to a minimum depth of 150 feet, but in no event to exceed a maximum depth of 500 feet." The contract also provided that "after the minimum depth has been reached first party may stop drilling, and must stop drilling if requested by second party." By supplementary agreement made before the commencement of the work, it was arranged that the work should be done by Wilson under the supervision of Beck. After Wilson ceased work, as hereinafter stated, Beck assigned to Wilson all his interest in the contract.

When the well had been drilled to a depth of 174 feet, Wilson ceased work thereon. The defendant failed and refused to pay to Wilson or to Beck the one-half of the contract price for the drilling of the well upon the completion of 100 feet, and failed and refused to pay any sum of money upon the completion of the drilling of the well to said depth of 174 feet. The contract provided that, in the event of default by the defendant in making any payment and the institution of suit to collect the same, defendant would pay a reasonable sum as attorney fees. It became necessary for the plaintiff to prosecute this action, and a reasonable attorney fee therein is the sum of $50. The well was properly constructed to a depth of 150 feet. By reason of the carelessness and negligence of Wilson in not carrying the casing down with the hole as the same was being drilled, sand and débris from the walls of the well filled it up 24 feet from the bottom, whereby the work done by Wilson in putting down the last 24 feet was valueless. The defendant was obliged to employ another driller, one Schutz, to complete the drilling of the well, and was obliged to pay and did pay Schutz the sum of $150 for moving his drilling rig and setting the same up over the said well for the drilling thereof, and for the redrilling of said well below the depth of 150 feet to 174 feet, as well as other sums paid to said Schutz for completing the well to a depth below 174 feet.

Upon the facts found the court determined that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the defendant in the sum of $237.50, the price agreed upon in the contract for drilling the well to the depth of 150 feet, together with interest from the date when the work ceased to the entry of judgment herein, and for the sum of $50 as attorney fees. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

[1] The plaintiff's right to recover the sum allowed depends upon the construction to be given the terms of the contract. Appellant contends that the contract is a contract to drill a well to the depth of 500 feet, and that the only time that the contractor could stop drilling would be at the depth of 150 feet. We do not so understand the meaning of the contract. There was a minimum depth of 150 feet, to which depth the contractor was bound at all events to prosecute his work. Then he was given the privilege to stop drilling, not merely "at" the depth of 150 feet, but "after the minimum depth has been reached."

[2] Since the last 24 feet in depth of the well as drilled by Wilson was, by reason of Wilson's negligence, without value, he was not entitled to recover any compensation therefor. But the defendant may not receive any additional allowance as damages on that account, since the findings do not show how much of the money paid by him to Schutz was for redrilling, nor that the amount so paid was a reasonable sum. A part of the $150 paid to Schutz was for moving his drilling rig and setting it up over the well. But this work was also done for the purpose of carrying the well to a lower depth, the expense whereof is not chargeable to the plaintiff. No suggestion is made by appellant that the findings are defective or erroneous.

[3] The appellant further contends that at all events the judgment could not exceed $75, because by the terms of the contract only one-half of the contract price should be paid at the completion of each 100 feet. We think that, under a fair construction of the contract as a whole, the contractor was entitled to recover the entire amount which had been earned by him at the time when, in accordance with the privilege given him by the terms of the contract, he ceased work. It is very clear that this would have been so if, as specified in the contract, he had stopped drilling on request of the defendant; and we see no reason why the same result does not follow when the contractor, acting within his rights as given by the contract, stopped the work without such request.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN ALEN et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2696.)

MORTGAGES ⊂⊃469—APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER—"EX PARTE ORDER"—BOND—MORTGAGES.

Where a complaint in a mortgage foreclosure contained no allegations that a receiver be appointed, and no notice was given defendants of the application for a receiver, defendants having defaulted, the application was an ex parte one, under Code Civ. Proc. § 566, and was void where no bond was given.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ex Parte.]

Petition for writ of prohibition by Egbert Van Alen, Eugenia D. Porter, and Charles L. Evans, against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, Grant Jackson, Judge of said Court, and E. L. Kinney. Writ issued.

Charles L. Evans, of Los Angeles, for petitioners. D. H. Parke, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. In a certain action in the superior court, brought for the foreclosure of a mortgage, in which the petitioners here were defendants, an order was made, after decree of foreclosure, appointing the respondent Kinney a receiver to take possession of the property mentioned in the decree. The receiver endeavored to take possession, but the petitioners refused to surrender it, and were cited to show cause, in the superior court, why they should not be punished for contempt. They are here on a petition for a writ of prohibition preventing the respondent court from so punishing them.

It is contended by the petitioners that the order appointing the receiver is void on various grounds, but one only of them need be considered. The petitioners defaulted as defendants in the foreclosure action, but there were no allegations in the complaint upon which a receiver could have been appointed. No notice was given the petitioners of the application for the appointment of a receiver. Therefore, considering the form of the complaint, and notwithstanding the default of the petitioners, the application was an ex parte one. Section 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"If a receiver is appointed upon an ex parte application, the court, before making the order, must require from the applicant an undertaking, * * * to the effect that the applicant will pay to the defendant all damages he may sustain by reason of the appointment of such receiver. * * *"

In the present instance no such bond was required or given, either before or after the appointment of the receiver. The order was void. Stoff v. Erken, 172 Cal. 481, 156 Pac. 1033.

A peremptory writ of prohibition will issue, restraining the respondent court from punishing the petitioners for contempt.

CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1206(3)—SENTENCE—OFFENSE BEFORE INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW—STATUTE.

A determinate sentence was properly imposed for a crime committed prior to the passage of Pen. Code, § 1168, as added by St. 1917, p. 665, relating to indeterminate sentences.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Joe U. Pope was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

S. Luke Howe and C. H. Crocker, both of Sacramento, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was accused by information of the crime of rape alleged to have been committed on the ——— day of May, 1917, his victim being of the age of 11 years. He was convicted by a jury, and the court sentenced him to serve the term of 15 years in the state prison at San Quentin. The crime was alleged and shown to have been committed on May 3, 1917, and prior to the passage or adoption of the new section 1168 to the Penal Code (as added by St. 1917, p. 665), relating to indeterminate sentences, and hence the sentence was properly imposed. Ex parte Lee, 171 Pac. 958.

The transcript was filed January 18, 1918, and was placed upon the June calendar. No brief has been filed by defendant, and he made no appearance at the call of the calendar. On motion of the Attorney General, the cause was submitted on the record. Although not required to do so, we have examined the transcript of the evidence and rulings of the court, with the result that the verdict is shown to have support and that no prejudicial rulings appear.

PACIFIC RYS. ADVERTISING CO. v. LION CLOTHING CO. (Civ. 2193.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 29, 1918.)

CONTRACTS ⊂⊃322(3) — ADVERTISING — EVIDENCE.

In action by street railway advertising company for compensation under street railway advertising contract, evidence held not to support general finding of nonperformance.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Railways Advertising Company against the Lion Clothing Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. P. Cary, of San Diego, for appellant. A. J. Morganstern, of San Diego, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written agreement whereby the former bound itself to carry certain advertising matter for the defendant in all cars of certain street and interurban railway lines in and about San Diego; the contract specifically providing that the advertisement should be carried in "end frames in all cars equipped with same." These end spaces for advertising matter are more valuable to advertisers than spaces on the sides of cars, as they come more readily within the range of vision of passengers. The defendant, believing that the plaintiff was committing a breach of the agreement in not giving a proper amount of service in the matter of advertising in the end spaces, gave notice that the contract was at an end and refused to make certain monthly payments provided for in it. The plaintiff sued to recover the amount of these and other installments, judgment went for the defendant, and the plaintiff apeals.

The trial court found that the appellant had not performed its agreement; that, in the month preceding that in which the respondent had attempted to cancel the contract, one of the street car companies mentioned in it "changed its street cars, and the new cars put upon said lines contained no end frames, and therefore no display in end frames of the advertising of this defendant was had"; and that, in the same month in which the cancellation was attempted, "the street car lines covered by said contract had so changed and altered practically all of their cars that end frames were no longer used therein for the display of advertising matter." The appellant contends that these findings are not supported by the evidence. There was but one witness, the president and manager of the respondent, who was sworn in its behalf. The record shows that on his direct examination he stated that, after a certain date, "I think our ad was not displayed in end frames at all"; but on his cross-examination he said upon this question, "If I said that the Lion Clothing Company got no end displays at all after" the date mentioned, "I was mistaken." On his direct examination he also said, referring to a time before the attempted cancellation of the agreement:

"In some of the cars with end frames the Lion Clothing Company advertisements were not displayed, although I don't know just how many there were."

On being cross-examined upon this particular phase of his testimony, he said:

"I can't state when it was that I noticed some cars in which our advertisement was not in the end frames, only it was before the cancellation of the contract. It was probably two dozen times that I saw this, but I'm not positive."

This witness was recalled to the stand later, and, after examination by counsel as to other matters, made the following statement in response to questions by the court:

"A good many times my ad was not in the end spaces. It's very hard for me to give the number of times. It might have been 30, and it might have been 50."

On cross-examination, immediately after this statement, he said:

"I might have said 24 times a little while ago, because I am not certain."

This is the only evidence which tends, even in slight degree, to support the general finding of nonperformance. We may at once dispose of the special findings above quoted by the assertion that they show no breach of the agreement and therefore do not support the judgment.

The question remaining, then, is: Does the evidence give substantial support to the finding of nonperformance? The witness is so uncertain in his testimony that he ranges the times when he noted the absence of the respondent's advertising matter in end frames from 24 to 50. He kept, as far as his testimony shows, no check or account of either dates or car numbers. He says he is unable to tell when he noticed the omissions. The contract was, in effect, from the commencement of operations under it to the date of the attempted cancellation, during a period of a little more than 2 years. If we take even 50 omissions, the greatest number stated by the witness, we cannot fail to note the trifling and unsubstantial character of the breach proven. He may have noted the omission on one and the same car once on each of 50 days out of a total of the 730 days going to make up the 2 years, while the undisputed evidence produced by the appellant shows that 86 cars, or thereabouts, equipped with end frames, were in service on the city streets the greater portion of the 2 years, and that there were never less than 50 such cars in service at any time. When we contemplate a multiplication of the number of cars in service by the 730 days of the 2 years, that product to be multiplied by the number of trips made by each car over the streets each day—whatever the number may have been, for the record does not disclose it—there is brought home to our minds the worthlessness of the evidence as a substantial support to the finding of nonperformance. If we have regard to the statement of the witness first made, as to the number of omissions of advertisements, that number being 24, we note that it, like the statement of larger numbers, is based on no data whatever. The circumstance that the witness stated these various numbers, taken together with the tone and tenor of his entire testimony, is plainly indicative of the fact that his statement of numbers is based on no definite recollection and does not rise above the dignity of a guess. Upon the evidence in the record the court could not have made the finding of nonperformance of the contract without the aid of an excursion into the realm of conjecture.

There is a question whether the general finding of nonperformance amounts to a finding of fact, or whether it is but the statement of a conclusion of law (9 Cyc. 732, and cases cited); but we merely mention the point in passing, without deciding it, as the judgment is manifestly erroneous upon the ground above discussed.

The judgment is reversed.

to filling in a blank form; no title having been actually conveyed to the wife because of nondelivery of the deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by D. C. Dutton against William Locke-Paddon and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. L. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant. Snook & Church, of Oakland, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from the judgment in an action brought to recover the amount of a deficiency arising under a sale of real property by virtue of a deed of trust given to secure the payment of a certain promissory note. Very briefly, the essential facts of the case are these:

In the month of April, 1915, A. W. Morey owned a certain piece of real property, which stood in the name of M. McDonough. At that time Morey was or became indebted to the plaintiff, D. C. Dutton, in the sum of $1,250, whereupon, at the instance of Morey, McDonough gave to plaintiff his promissory note in that amount, secured by a deed of trust to said property. Thereafter, at the request of Morey, McDonough signed and acknowledged a deed conveying said property to Ella B. Morey, the wife of A. W. Morey, and wherein there was a covenant to the effect that the grantee assumed payment of said note. Ella B. Morey was not informed of the execution or existence of this deed, and it was never delivered to her. Shortly after it was made Morey agreed to a trade of the land with William Locke-Paddon, the appellant herein; but, instead of causing a new deed of the land to be made, he, with the consent of McDonough, altered this deed made to his wife by inserting in place of her name the name of appellant, and, as so altered, he delivered the deed to the appellant. The note secured by the deed of trust not being paid when due, the trustee sold the land under the terms of the trust, and after payment of the expenses of the trust the balance received from the sale was credited by plaintiff upon his note, leaving a deficiency, to recover which this action was brought.

[1] The evidence abundantly supports the finding of the court that the appellant agreed to assume payment of the obligation secured by the deed of trust. From the circumstance that a covenant to that effect appears in his deed he is presumed to have had knowledge of its existence from the time he accepted that instrument. It was also shown that he had actual knowledge that such covenant was contained in his deed, and that the holder of the obligation intended to look to him for its payment. He not only accepted the deed burdened with this covenant, but on several occasions treated with the plaintiff concerning phases of the transaction on the basis that this covenant was contained in the deed. In a word, and as before stated, the evidence shows clearly by the conduct of appellant that he assumed the payment of the note for which the trust deed had been executed.

[2] In an action like this it is not necessary that there should be a formal promise on the part of the grantee to pay the obligation incumbering the land conveyed, in order to render him liable therefor, if his obligation so to do appears from a consideration of the entire conveyance. "The obligation may be made orally or in a separate instrument, it may be implied from the transaction between the parties, or it may be shown by the circumstances under which the purchase was made, as well as by the language used in the instrument." Hopkins v. Warner, 109 Cal. 133, 41 Pac. 868. See, also, Lick v. Anderson, 29 Cal. App. 491, 156 Pac. 70.

[3] The only other point in the case seriously urged by the appellant is one concerning the effect of the alteration of the deed whereby the name of the appellant was substituted for the name of Ella B. Morey. As to that point, while it may be said that the method pursued was unusual, it cannot for that reason be said that the deed is void. The paper, not having been delivered to Mrs. Morey, conveyed no title to her, and was, considered as a conveyance of real property, no better than a blank form. The erasure of Mrs. Morey's name, and the insertion in its place of that of the appellant, was not the alteration of an instrument, since the instrument had not yet been created. It was merely equivalent to filling in a blank form, although one a little more complete than is usually the case. Morey, the real owner of the property, delivered the deed to appellant, with the intention thereby to pass title, and in our opinion it had that effect. As to whether or not there should have been a reacknowledgment of its execution need not here be considered, as that question refers to its status considered from the point of view of its right to recordation, with which we are not at present concerned.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Henry Heitman against Alice M. Cutting. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Treat, of San Francisco, for appellant. Gerald C. Halsey and Halsey L. Rixford, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover $1,000, which sum, it is claimed, was received by defendant in trust for plaintiff. Judgment was for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals.

The facts are as follows: Plaintiff was for many years the gardener and coachman of one Francis Cutting, deceased, and was unintentionally omitted by Cutting from any benefits under his will. On September 27, 1913, Mrs. Francis Cutting telephoned to her stepson, F. P. Cutting, that his father was ill in bed and desired to see him. Francis Cutting at this time was blind, 79 years old, and had been ill for some months. Upon the son's arrival, Mrs. Cutting informed him that his father was very much distressed because he had not remembered his coachman, Henry Heitman, in his will. After greeting his sick parent, there was a short conversation between father and son, in which Francis Cutting, the father, ordered his son to draw the sum of $1,000 from the bank "and give it to her for him." Appellant was in the room at the time, close to her husband's bedside. The son was instructed to attend to it at once, and promised to do so. For some weeks prior to the death of Francis Cutting, and owing to his blindness, the son had a power of attorney authorizing him to sign checks on the American National Bank of San Francisco in the name of his father. After receiving these instructions, F. P. Cutting went to San Francisco the same morning, and drew a check in the name of Francis Cutting on the American National Bank in the sum of $1,000. and mailed the same to the First National Bank of Oakland, together with a letter containing instructions to place the same to the account of Mrs. Cutting. That evening he informed her of what he had done. The check was credited to the account of Mrs. Cutting, and a day or so after, on October 1, 1913, Francis Cutting died. Upon these and other facts hereinafter stated the trial court found that the defendant, Alice M. Cutting, received to the use of plaintiff the sum of $1,000, to be paid to plaintiff when Francis Cutting should die, and gave judgment accordingly.

[1] It is the claim of appellant that the judgment cannot be sustained upon the theory of a gift, either causa mortis or inter vivos, nor upon a trust imposed upon appellant for the benefit of respondent. In this behalf it is argued that the facts do not show a gift causa mortis. for the reason that there is no evidence that decedent was in fear or contemplation of death; and as there was no direction when the gift was to take effect, it could neither constitute a gift inter vivos nor a trust imposed upon appellant for the benefit of respondent. It is true that there is no evidence to support the finding that the money was to be paid "when Francis Cutting should die." This portion of the finding, however. is not material, and cannot be made the basis of a reversal. The facts show that the intention of deceased was to make a transfer of a present immediate and indefeasible title to the money for the benefit of Heitman. The transfer was full and complete by the payment of the check, and passed from the donor the legal power, dominion, and title over the money beyond his recall or control, and vested in Heitman an immediate title to the fund, with the right to reduce the same into his possession by enforcing the obligation according to its terms.

[2, 3] Nor does the evidence support the claim that the trust was never accepted by appellant. Aside from the fact that equity will never allow a trust to fail for want of a trustee, appellant by her conduct indicated her willingness to act, and the evidence further shows that the relation she assumed was subsequently acknowledged by her. The absence of positive testimony that the trust was accepted can avail her nothing. Her silence was a tacit agreement to comply with the request. To stand mute under such circumstances is equivalent to consent. Becker v. Schwerdtle, 141 Cal. 386, 74 Pac. 1029.

From what we have said. it follows that the evidence clearly shows the character of obligation imposed upon appellant regarding the money and the purpose for which it was given, and fully supports the conclusion of the trial court that she received the sum for the use and benefit of plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

MITCHELL v. WOOD. (Civ. 2245.)

1. PLEADING ⊂=214(8)—DEMURRER—SCOPE OF ADMISSIONS.

In an action by a chattel mortgagee against a third person for conversion of the mortgaged property, an automobile, an allegation in the complaint "that said automobile was at said time and ever since has been in the possession of the defendant" was not, when considered on demurrer and the admissions incident thereto, inconsistent with the mortgagor's right to execute the mortgage, where the complaint also alleged that defendant had no title or claim to the property, since it must be assumed that defendant was in possession as agent or trustee.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⊂=17 — TITLE OF MORTGAGOR.

The owner of personal property may execute a valid mortgage thereon, though the property at the time is in the actual possession of another.

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⊂=170(1) — CONVERSION OF PROPERTY BY THIRD PERSON.

Where at the execution of a chattel mortgage the property is in the possession of a third person, the act of such person in refusing to deliver the property to the mortgagee after default constituted a conversion as of the date of the demand; his prior possession being immaterial.

Action by Robert Mitchell against F. G. Wood. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Slosson & Mitchell, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hyman Schwartz, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action for the conversion of mortgaged property. The appeal is from a judgment of dismissal entered upon sustaining defendant's demurrer to the complaint.

It appears from the complaint that on July 1, 1915, one Bertha M. Dailey was the owner of an automobile of the value of $850, which she mortgaged to the plaintiff to secure payment of her promissory note in the sum of $300; that at said time, and ever since, the automobile was and has been in the possession of defendant, who at all times mentioned had no right, title, or interest in the same and was not entitled to its possession; that after default in the payment of the note plaintiff, by a writing sufficient in form and substance, demanded delivery of the possession of the chattel, which demand was by defendant refused. By the terms of the mortgage, the plaintiff, on default by the debtor, was entitled to possession of the mortgaged property.

[1-3] One who converts personal property which is subject to a chattel mortgage, is liable to the mortgagee for the full amount due under the mortgage. De Costa v. Comfort, 80 Cal. 507, 22 Pac. 218. Respondent, while conceding the correctness of this proposition, insists that as an authority it is inapplicable to the instant case for the reason that, as shown by the complaint, the conversion by defendant occurred prior to the time of the execution of the mortgage. This contention is based upon the allegation "that said automobile was at said time, and ever since has been, in the possession of the defendant." There is nothing in the fact so stated inconsistent with the mortgagor's right, as alleged owner, to mortgage the same. We must assume, since, as alleged, defendant had no right, title, claim, or interest therein, that he held the automobile as agent or trustee of the mortgagor. The owner of property may execute a valid mortgage thereon, notwithstanding the fact that the chattel may be in the actual possession of another. Until the mortgagor made default in the payment of the note, she, in person or through her agent, was entitled to possession of the automobile. The act of defendant after default in the payment of the note, when, having no right, title, or interest therein, he refused upon written demand of plaintiff to deliver the same to him, constituted a conversion of the property, and under the allegations of the complaint, if true, rendered him liable to plaintiff for the amount of the mortgage.

The ruling of the trial court, as we gather from respondent's brief, was based upon the assumption that the conversion occurred prior to the execution of the mortgage; whereas, it appears from the complaint that Dailey at the time of the execution of the mortgage was the actual owner of the automobile which at the time was in the possession of defendant who had no right, claim, or title thereto, and the conversion occurred when he refused on demand to deliver the same to plaintiff who, under the terms of the mortgage, was entitled to the property.

The judgment is reversed.

APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=629—FILING TRANSCRIPT—EXCUSABLE NEGLECT.

Where an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, which granted an extension of time for filing a brief, but before the expiration of such time ordered the appeal transferred to the Court of Appeals, ex parte, on the ground that the action was not one in equity, the appellant was not bound by the decision of the Supreme Court, except for the purpose of the transfer, where the defense of the appellant turned on the question of whether the action was one in equity, and he should be allowed to file his brief, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, relating to mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect; the appellant believing in good faith that the action is one in equity.

Action by Harriet H. Paramore and Helen Montgomery Paramore against Hayward Colby. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal by respondents, and counter motion by appellant for relief from default. Motion to dismiss denied, and motion for relief from default granted.

Victor T. Watkins, of Los Angeles, and Sims & Church, for appellant. Groff & Van Etten, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This case now comes before the court upon a motion of respondents for dismissal of the appeal, and a motion of appellant for an order permitting him to file his opening brief on appeal.

The defendant appealed to the Supreme Court from the judgment entered against him. The action was brought to recover from the defendant a certain sum, less than $2,000, claimed as the balance due on a contract for the sale of land between the plaintiffs' testator as vendor and the defendant as vendee. If, as claimed by the defendant, the action is a suit in equity, his appeal was properly taken to the Supreme Court. If, as claimed by the plaintiffs, it is merely an action at law for money due on a contract, the appeal should have been taken to the Second District Court of Appeal. The transcript on appeal was filed in the Supreme Court February 19, 1918. Under rule 2 of the Supreme Court, appellant's brief was due on the 21st day of March. On March 19th the Supreme Court made an order extending appellant's time for filing said brief to and including April 20th. On the 8th day of April the Supreme Court made its order transferring the cause to this court. Appellant's brief has not yet been filed, but on the 22d day of April it was tendered to the clerk of this court for filing, in accordance with appellant's motion, of which notice had been duly given.

The respondents claim that the appeal was wrongly taken to the Supreme Court; that therefore the Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to make the order extending time, but could only make an order transferring the case to this court, unless it (the Supreme Court) first made an order transferring the cause to the Supreme Court. These contentions are based upon the provisions of section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution. Whatever our opinion of these contentions may be, it is not necessary to make decision thereon, since at all events we think that the appellant's motion for relief from his alleged default should be granted. That motion is made under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the ground of mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect, arising from the fact that in good faith appellant believed and still believes that the action is one in equity and that the appeal was properly taken to the Supreme Court. It is true that the Supreme Court has made its order transferring the cause to this court upon the stated ground that the case is not one within its jurisdiction. But the decision thus made ex parte by the Supreme Court should not be regarded as binding upon appellant, except for the purpose of the transfer. An inspection of the pleadings as set forth in the transcript shows that the defense made by the defendant turns upon the question as to whether the action is in fact of an equitable nature. That is the very matter which will be discussed in the briefs, and upon that matter appellant should have a hearing.

Respondents' motion for dismissal of the appeal and for an order vacating said order extending time is denied. Appellant's motion for relief from default is granted, and it is ordered that his brief be filed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

FERGUSON v. MARSH et al. (Civ. 2173.)

1. CONTRACTS ⇐321(1)—CONSTRUCTION.

Under contract for hauling gravel from cars by which the hauler agreed to save the contractor harmless from demurrage charges, and the contractor agreed to pay for all the gasoline and grease used in the hauling, where the hauler defaulted after permitting demurrage to accrue and contracting a bill for oil and gasoline, the contractor could retain first, out of sums due the hauler, the amount of the demurrage charges, the balance, if any, to be paid to the holder of the claim for oil and gasoline.

2. CONTRACTS ⇐187(2)—RIGHTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

Under contract for hauling gravel from cars, by which the hauler agreed to save the contractor harmless from demurrage charges, and the contractor agreed to pay for all the gasoline and grease used in the hauling, where the hauler defaulted after permitting demurrage to accrue and contracting a bill for oil and gasoline, the agreement to pay for oil and gasoline was not, within Civ. Code, § 1559, a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person, and the seller of the oil used could not enforce it.

3. EVIDENCE ⇐165(1)—PAROL EVIDENCE AS TO WRITTEN CONTRACTS.

It is incompetent for witnesses to state orally what were the terms of a contract, when the terms were expressed in writing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. E. Barber, Judge.

Action by D. E. Ferguson, doing business as the Mission Garage, against John D. Marsh and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Reversed.

J. Vincent Hannon and T. G. Dalton, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. W. J. Hittson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The judgment in this case was in favor of the plaintiff. Defendant John D. Marsh has appealed therefrom.

In the year 1913 the defendant Marsh was the contractor named in a contract made with the state of California, which provided for the construction of certain road work on a public highway in the county of Los Angeles. In the prosecution of this work it was necessary that there should be used a large quantity of rock and sand. Appellant arranged for the procurement of the rock and sand, which was to be delivered in cars at several stations in the vicinity of the highway on which the work was to be done. Appellant then contracted with three persons, Anway, Bente, and Miller, to haul the rock and sand, as it arrived at these different stations, to the places where the same might be needed. This contract last mentioned was in writing, providing that Anway, Bente, and Miller should do all the work and furnish the tools, implements, motor trucks, and labor necessary for the expeditious handling of the cars and the delivery of the rock and sand. The contract also provided that Anway, Bente, and Miller should "save said first party [appellant, John D. Marsh] harmless against any demurrage charges by reason of said cars remaining unloaded upon the track after delivery; it being expressly understood and agreed that said second parties shall, upon the placing of said cars by the railroad at the said stations, or either of them, immediately proceed and with all due diligence accomplish the unloading of said cars, and expeditiously and with all due diligence deliver said rock and sand on the job as hereinbefore outlined. * * *" The contract further contained the agreement that Marsh "covenants and agrees to pay for all gasoline and lubricating oil used by said second parties in the operation of the motor trucks in the performance of this contract, deducting the amounts so paid by said first party for such gasoline and lubricating oil from the said contract price, and such payment to be considered as a payment on account of said contract price. * * *" Anway and his two associates entered upon the work of unloading and hauling the rock and sand, and, after proceeding with this work for some days, they ceased their labors and abandoned their contract. During the time that they had been at work under the contract they incurred a debt of more than $300 for oils and gasoline which they purchased from the plaintiff. The plaintiff, before furnishing the majority of the merchandise to the truck owners, saw the contract as made between appellant, Marsh, and Anway, Bente, and Miller. Failing to receive payment from the debtors, Ferguson presented his demand to Marsh, and requested payment of the same. He also presented a written order, made by Anway and Miller, requesting Marsh to pay the bill. The plaintiff here testified that, when he presented the order and made demand, Marsh stated that Miller and Anway owed him (Marsh) for demurrage on cars amounting to $500 or $600. This witness testified that Marsh said that, if there was any money left, he would settle the oil and gasoline bill. The plaintiff was asked the question: "Well, he told you he had money on hand belonging to Miller and Anway?" to which he replied, "Yes, sir, $500 or $600, but he was going to take that out and pay this demurrage."

[1] While no date is fixed as that upon which the order was given, or this conversation had, it seems indicated from the testimony that the bill was not presented until after Anway and his associates had ceased work under the contract. The trial judge made his findings all in favor of the plaintiff, determining that at the time the demand was made upon the appellant, Marsh, there was sufficient money owing from the appellant to the hauling contractors to satisfy plaintiff's demand. This finding cannot be sustained on the evidence, unless it is to be determined that Marsh, in ascertaining the amount of money due to the hauling contractors, had not the right to offset demurrage charges; this because the testimony was uncontradicted to the effect that the demurrage charges, as claimed by the railroad company and as finally paid by Marsh, more than consumed the amount which was chargeable against Marsh by the haulers for work performed. A construction of the contract which would deprive Marsh of the right to adjust the debt of Anway et al. to him, in ascertaining the state of the account, would be most absurd and unjust. The contract expressly and particularly covered the matter of demurrage charges in favor of Marsh. Those demurrage charges constituted a necessary and proper item of credit, which Marsh was entitled to deduct from the earnings of Anway et al. No term of the contract provided that the number of cars delivered should be limited or regulated in any particular manner, but the obligation of the haulers was to expeditiously remove the rock and sand from the cars when they arrived. The witness Miller did testify that a great many cars arrived on one day, and that he could not get the cars moved. It does not appear from the contract that Marsh assumed any duty as to the moving of the cars after they arrived, or the handling of them in any way. That was a matter that the haulers had exclusively in their charge, any inconvenience in the doing of which was to be endured by them.

[2] That term of the contract, whereby Marsh agreed to pay for oil and gasoline used by the haulers, may not be said to be "a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person, * * *" which under section 1559, Civil Code, may be enforced by the person in whose favor it exists. It has been repeatedly held that, while the particular party for whose benefit such a contract is made need not be named therein, it must appear by direct terms of the contract that it was made for the benefit of some particular party, and that this will not be implied from the fact that if the parties perform the contract strictly, it may operate incidentally to the benefit of the third person. Chung Kee v. Davidson, 73 Cal. 522, 15 Pac. 100, second appeal in same case 102 Cal. 188, 36 Pac. 519. See, also, Thomson v. Bettens et al., 94 Cal. 82, 29 Pac. 336; Hamilton v. Bates, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 371, 35 Pac. 304. In order to sustain the judgment it would be necessary to determine here, either that the contract to pay for oils and gasoline was a contract made expressly for the benefit of the plaintiff, or that when the order was presented by the plaintiff to Marsh requesting payment of the bill there was money resting to the account of the drawers of the order which Marsh would be required to pay. As a matter of law, the first proposition cannot be maintained; and, as we have indicated, the evidence was insufficient to sustain the finding of the court in the last particular.

[3] There were errors committed by the court in its rulings upon the introduction of evidence. It was incompetent for witnesses to be required to state orally what the terms of the contract were, because the same were expressed in writing, and the obligations of the parties should have been ascertained from the writing itself which was very clear and explicit. Were the latter errors alone to be considered, however, it might perhaps be said upon the whole case that no prejudice resulted; hence we have given particular attention to those matters only which are most vital to a determination of the appeal. In our examination of the case we have not had the benefit of brief or oral argument from counsel who represents the respondent.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

DAVIDSON v. RAFAEL et ux. (Civ. 2410.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 16, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂1161—DISPOSITION—CONFESSION OF ERROR.

Where, on appeal from judgment refusing interest on note sued on, contrary to Civ. Code, § 1918, defendant's attorney confessed the error, the judgment must be reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by M. Davidson against M. Rafael and wife. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

William G. Weiss, of San Francisco, for appellant. M. H. Wascerwitz, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff brought suit upon a promissory note executed by the defendants, husband and wife, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month. Defendant C. Rafael filed her answer, in which she set up the defenses of payment, want of consideration, and false pretenses used in obtaining her signature to the obligation. The court found all these issues in favor of the plaintiff, but also found that the contract to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month was unreasonable, unconscionable, and usurious. Accordingly, in arriving at the amount due to the plaintiff, the court allowed interest on the principal of the note at the rate of 2 per cent. per month from the time interest was payable; and it appearing that the defendant had paid, during a period of about two years, interest at the higher rate, the court credited three-fifths of the sum thus paid as interest, namely, 3 per cent. per month, on the principal of the note, and entered judgment for the plaintiff for the balance.

The note in suit being unsecured, and there having been no showing in the court below that the plaintiff was a personal property broker, and therefore subject to the provisions of the act limiting the interest allowed to be charged by such brokers to 2 per cent. per month, it is urged by the appellant that the method of calculation adopted by the trial court was incorrect; that, the parties having agreed upon the rate of interest, it should have been allowed in accordance with the terms of the agreement until the entry of judgment. Civ. Code, § 1918. Counsel for the respondent, while pointing out that the interest already paid by his client amounts to a sum greater than the principal of the note plus 7 per cent. interest per annum, concedes that legally the plaintiff was entitled to his pound of flesh and confesses error.

Accordingly it is ordered that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

TULLOH v. BOYCE et al. (ALSTON et al., Interveners). (Civ. 2441.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 11, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 6, 1918.)

MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂268—CONTINUANCE OF LIEN—NOTICE OF PROCEEDING—RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1190, specifying the continuance of a mechanic's lien, implies that when proceedings to foreclose the lien are commenced within the time designated, the lien continues, rendering it unnecessary to file a notice of such proceedings to charge and hold the property against purchasers pendente lite.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Action to foreclose a mechanic's lien by William A. Tulloh against E. J. Boyce and others, with intervention by Bernice Alston and another. Judgment for interveners against plaintiff, and from an order denying his motion to vacate the judgment and conclusions of law and to enter a different judgment and conclusions, he appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Frank W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for appellant. W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The appeal is from the judgment in favor of the interveners and against the plaintiff, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment and conclusions of law, and to enter a different judgment and conclusions of law upon the same findings.

The plaintiff was the contractor and lien claimant. The defendants were the owners of the property when the work was done, the lien filed, and the action commenced. The interveners were the purchasers of the property pendente lite. The claim of lien was filed, as provided in section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure in due time in the recorder's office, the action to foreclose the same being commenced within 90 days thereafter; and the sole question presented on the appeal is, Does a party who in due time records a sufficient and valid mechanic's lien have to record a notice of lis pendens upon the foreclosure of that lien in order to charge and hold the property against purchasers pendente lite? Section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure, specifying the time of continuance of a mechanic's lien, in part reads:

"No lien provided for in this chapter binds any" building, mining claim, improvement or structure "for a longer period than ninety days after the same has been filed, unless proceedings be commenced in a proper court within that time to enforce the same."

By implication this provision plainly means that when proceedings to foreclose the lien are commenced within the time designated the lien continues, rendering it unnecessary to file a notice of the pendency of the action.

The authorities sustain this view. In the case of Empire Land & Canal Co. v. Engley, 18 Colo. 388, 392, 33 Pac. 153, 155—where the statute providing for the filing of a mechanic's lien and its foreclosure is similar to ours (reading that the lien should not hold the property longer than six months after filing the claim unless an action to enforce the same be commenced within time)—it was held that a purchaser or incumbrancer of property upon which a mechanic's lien has been filed is charged with notice thereof by virtue of the mechanic's lien statute itself, without the filing of a notice of lis pendens. Upon this point the Colorado court said:

"Considering the design of these statutes, we are of the opinion that it is not necessary to file a notice of lis pendens in an action brought to enforce a mechanic's lien. The mechanic's lien statute prescribes the kind of notice to be filed by the claimants of such liens, and no additional notice is necessary. * * * It is true that the statute provides that such lien shall not hold the property for a longer period than six months, unless an action shall, within that time, be commenced to enforce the same. But this is equivalent to an affirmative declaration that the lien shall hold the property for a longer period than six months, where an action is commenced within that time to enforce the same."

In Bolsot on Mechanic's Lien, § 593, p. 620, the author states:

"It is not necessary, in the absence of express statutory direction, to file a notice of lis pendens in order to preserve the lien as against purchasers pending suit."

And in Bloom on Law of Mechanic's Liens, p. 601, § 658, we read:

"Contrary to the general rule, it has been held that a purchaser or incumbrancer of property upon which a claim of mechanic's lien is filed and suit is brought to foreclose the same is chargeable with notice by virtue of the mechanic's lien without the necessity of filing a lis pendens."

It results from the foregoing that the trial court was in error in entering judgment in favor of the interveners and in denying plaintiff's motion above described. The judgment and order are therefore reversed.

CLARK et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2718.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 5, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 3, 1918.)

1. ATTACHMENT ⟸268—DISSOLUTION—NONSUIT.

Where nonsuit was granted and entry thereof duly made under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, the attachment previously levied was thereby dissolved, and it became at once the sheriff's duty to enter satisfaction thereof, under Pol. Code, § 4157, subd. 7.

2. ATTACHMENT ⟸275 — DISSOLUTION—NONSUIT—REINSTATEMENT.

Where attachment levied was dissolved by entry of nonsuit, subsequent vacation of the nonsuit order could not revive the lien of the attachment, since, in the absence of appeal from the order within five days under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 553, 946, it became a final judgment, extinguishing the attachment.

Original proceeding for writ of mandate by Rex B. Clark and others against the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County and another. Alternative writ made peremptory.

Perry F. Backus and Herbert W. Kidd, both of Los Angeles, for petitioners. Arthur C. Vaughan, J. M. Love, and Charles R. McCarty, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an original proceeding wherein an alternative writ of mandate was issued out of this court, directed to James C. Byers, as sheriff of San Diego county, requiring him to release of record a writ of attachment levied upon certain real estate in said county, or show cause why he should not do so. It appears that in a certain action wherein Marvin Lathrop was plaintiff and petitioners, Frank C. and Jennie L. Woodford, were defendants, a writ of attachment was issued and by the sheriff of San Diego county levied upon the real estate in question; that thereafter in a trial of said action, had on December 7, 1917, defendants, under subdivision 5 of section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, moved the court for a nonsuit, in response to which motion the court made the following order:

"Cause called, J. M. Love, Esq., appearing as attorney for the plaintiff and Perry F. Backus, Esq., appearing as attorney for defendants. Cause argued by counsel; motion of attorney for defendants for a nonsuit granted."

This order was entered upon the minutes of the court, and on the same day the clerk of the court made a note thereof in his register of actions, all as provided in section 581 supra. Whether these entries were made on December 7th, as claimed by petitioners, or on December 15th, as claimed by respondents, is immaterial, since, as shown, no appeal was at any time taken from the order.

[1, 2] The claim of petitioners is that the effect of the granting of the nonsuit was to dissolve the attachment, and in this contention we think they are correct. "An attachment is a creature of statute, and its existence and operation in any case can continue no longer than the statute provides it may." Loveland v. Mining Co., 76 Cal. 562, 18 Pac. 682; Hamilton v. Bell, 123 Cal. 93, 55 Pac. 758. Section 553, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that if defendant recovers judgment against the plaintiff and no appeal is perfected and undertaking executed as provided in section 946, Code of Civil Procedure, the order of attachment shall be discharged and the property released therefrom. As stated, no appeal was at any time perfected from the order granting the nonsuit. That this order constituted a judgment in favor of defendants from which an appeal might have been prosecuted admits of no doubt. As declared by the statute, such orders, when entered in the minutes and by the clerk noted in his register of actions, are effective for all purposes. Brown v. Sterling Fixture Co., 166 Pac. 322; Hamilton v. Bell, supra. The effect of the entry of the order and notation thereof made by the clerk, in the absence of an appeal therefrom within five days as provided in sections 553 and 946, Code of Civil Procedure, was to ipso facto dissolve the attachment; and thereupon it was, as declared in subdivision 7 of section 4157, Political Code, the duty of the sheriff of San Diego county to release the same of record. It is true the court on December 29th made an order granting plaintiff's motion to set aside and annul the order of nonsuit. But such order could not, in the absence of statutory provision therefor, revive the lien of the attachment which had theretofore been dissolved by the judgment in favor of defendants, and which, in so far as concerned the attachment, had become final.

It is ordered that the alternative writ of mandate heretofore issued to James C. Byers, as sheriff of San Diego county, be and the same is made peremptory.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

COHN v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 2271.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 11, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 5, 1918.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸131(1)—SEPARATE PROPERTY OF WIFE — CONVEYANCE — PRESUMPTION OF GIFT.

Lots having been acquired with husband's money in name of wife were presumptively her separate property, a presumption not conclusive, court being entitled to consider competent evidence tending to disclose manner of acquisition of property, and, from conduct of husband, determine whether transaction constituted gift.

2. ESTOPPEL ⟸78(3)—OBLIGORS IN CONTRACTOR'S BOND — DENIAL OF LIABILITY TO OWNER.

Where husband contracted for construction of buildings as owner of land and as owner expended his money, giving of contractor's bond was part of inducement to him, and obligors named should not be heard to deny his title to land and thereby escape liability.

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟸119—SURETIES ON CONTRACTOR'S BOND — POSSESSION OF PREMISES BY OWNER—STIPULATION—"NOTICE IN WRITING."

Stipulation between owner's architects and contractor for building, unsigned by contractor and owner, held substantially notice in writing to contractor within contract that if he did not furnish items within three days, owner, through architects, would complete same, so that sureties on contractor's bond were not released by owner's taking possession and ejecting contractor.

4. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟸82(2)—CONTRACTOR'S BOND—LIABILITY OF SURETY—ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Reasonable amount paid by owner of building under construction to his attorneys for their services in securing release of property from lien claims by proceedings in court was direct damage from breach of contract by contractor for building, and of covenants thereof, for which contractor's bond with sureties was security.

5. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟸82(2)—CONTRACTOR'S BOND—LIABILITY OF SURETIES — ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Fact that part of attorneys' fees, for which compensation has been allowed in judgment recovered by owner of building under construction against contractor's sureties, has not been actually paid by owner does not affect right to recover therefor; he having been compelled to employ attorneys to release premises from lien claims.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Nathan Cohn against Carlin G. Smith and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. Wiseman MacDonald, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Kenton A. Miller and Fred. W. Smith, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff, as owner of two lots in the city of Los Angeles, entered into a contract with the defendant, Carlin G. Smith, as contractor, for the construction of a building on said lots. At the same time the contractor as principal, and the other two defendants as sureties, executed a bond to the plaintiff as owner. The conditions of the bond were that the contractor "shall keep and strictly perform all the covenants and agreements of the contract by him to be kept and performed and shall on or before 35 days after the acceptance of said building on completion of said contract cancel and release the said building and premises from all claims of liens that may have accrued against the same in and from the performance of said contract, and shall save said owner free and harmless from all damage therefrom, all as in said contract provided." The judgment covers items allowed as damages for delay in completion of the building, and compensation on account of attorney's fees and costs incurred by the plaintiff in actions brought for the foreclosure of certain liens growing out of the performance of the contract. From that judgment the defendants appeal.

The defendants in their answers alleged that the plaintiff was not at the time said bond was given, nor was he at any time subsequent thereto up to and including the time of bringing this action, the owner of the land on which the buildings were constructed, or of the buildings erected thereon. The court found that these allegations were not true. Appellants contend that this finding is not supported by the evidence, and that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and therefore is not entitled to maintain this action. At the trial of the case it was stipulated that during all of said time the record title to the property described in the contract was, by virtue of a deed from a third person, in the name of Fannie Cohn, wife of the plaintiff. The plaintiff testified that when the lots were purchased he gave his personal check for the price paid, and that his wife did not pay anything for them, and did not pay anything to the plaintiff for them when the property was placed in her name; and that he did not intend to give the property to her. He further stated that he paid for everything connected with these two buildings, and that she did not pay anything for their construction.

[1] It is our opinion that the court's finding is sustained by the evidence. The lots, having been acquired in the name of Fannie Cohn, were presumptively her separate property, but this was not a conclusive presumption. The court was entitled to receive and consider any competent evidence which tended to disclose the manner of acquisition of the property, and from the acts and conduct of the husband determine whether the transaction whereby the property was conveyed to the plaintiff's wife constituted a gift to her. Killiam v. Killiam, 10 Cal. App. 312, 101 Pac. 806.

[2] We are further of the opinion that the defendants are estopped to deny plaintiff's ownership of said property. The plaintiff entered into the contract as owner, and as owner expended his money for the buildings. The giving of this bond was part of the inducement to him for entering into the contract. The obligors named in the bond should not now be heard to deny his title and thereby escape their liability. As to them he should conclusively be presumed to be the real party in interest.

[3] The building contract contained the following paragraph:

"Sixth: Should the contractor at any time during the progress of said works, refuse or neglect to supply a sufficiency of materials or workmen, the owner shall have the power to provide materials and workmen (after three days' notice in writing given) to finish the said works, and the reasonable expenses thereof shall be deducted from the amount of said contract price."

The court found that the contractor at a stated time abandoned said buildings, and thereafter refused to furnish material or labor therefor, and that the work was completed by the owner after due notice to the contractor in accordance with the contract. Appellants claim that the notice required by the contract was not given, and that without giving notice to the contractor the plaintiff wrongfully took possession of the premises and ejected the contractor therefrom; that thereby the sureties on the bond were released from their obligation. Edelman and Barnett were the architects named in the contract, under whose direction and supervision and subject to whose approval the work was to be done. Mr. Barnett testified that at the time the contractor ceased to work, Barnett, acting for the owner, served upon the contractor a written notice, notifying him to finish the buildings. The so-called notice was produced in evidence by the plaintiff; not the paper served on the contractor, but the copy retained by the architects. This copy, which was signed by the contractor only, purports to be a stipulation between Edelman and Barnett, architects, and Smith, contractor, and sets forth certain items of work which must be done before the architects will accept the buildings. The stipulation then states that:

"If the hereinabove mentioned items are not finished within three days, then the said architects shall have the privilege of completing the same, paying the necessary expenses thereof," etc.

The copy retained by the contractor was not signed. About one week later, the contractor having failed to proceed with the work, the architects, under instructions from the owner, proceeded to complete the buildings. Upon these facts appellants base their contention as stated. We think that the stipulation was in substance a notice in writing within the terms of the contract. Although not signed by the owner, it was given by his authority, and was accepted by the contractor as the equivalent of a signed notice and as being in fact a notice in writing. Under these circumstances the mere failure of the owner to sign the written notice does not operate to prevent it from being a notice in writing. The acts of the owner, in proceeding upon the theory that such notice had been given as required by the contract, did not constitute any substantial alteration of the obligations, rights, or remedies of the parties. Therefore we hold that there was nothing in the facts shown which operated to exonerate the sureties from the obligations of their bond.

[4] It is next suggested by appellants that the plaintiff was not justified in paying attorney's fees in defending actions to recover upon lien claims filed against the premises on which these buildings were constructed, and that such expenditures do not fall within the terms of the bond. As found by the court, lien claims were filed by numerous laborers and materialmen, and actions were prosecuted to foreclose those liens. The contractor having failed to defend the actions, or to release, cancel, or discharge the liens, it became necessary for the plaintiff to employ counsel, and he did employ counsel to defend said actions. The amount of money in the hands of the owner applicable to the contract price was less than the amount of these lien claims. In order to secure a determination of the amount that he must pay in order to release the liens, the owner had to prove how much he had reasonably expended for the completion of the buildings after the abandonment of the contract by the contractor, and he was entitled to have the rights of the lienors established by decree of court. "The contractors failing to perform their covenant, plaintiff's only course of safety was to secure a release of his property by proceedings in court. To accomplish this result it was necessary to employ an attorney to represent him in such actions as were brought to enforce the liens." The reasonable amount paid to his attorneys for those services was a direct and proximate damage resulting from the contractor's breach of his contract, and of a covenant thereof for which the bond was security. Klokke v. Raphael, 8 Cal. App. 1, 96 Pac. 392; Tally v. Ganahl, 151 Cal. 418, 90 Pac. 1049; Bird v. American Surety Co. of N. Y., 166 Pac. 1009. If, as claimed by appellants, Alcatraz, etc., Association v. United States Fidelity, etc., Co., 3 Cal. App. 338, 85 Pac. 156, and Growall v. Pac. Surety Co., 21 Cal. App. 185, 131 Pac. 73, are in conflict with the Supreme Court decisions cited above, they must yield to the superior authority of those decisions.

[5] The fact that a part of the attorney fees for which compensation has been allowed in the judgment has not been actually paid by the plaintiff does not affect his right to recover therefor. Henne v. Summers, 23 Cal. App. 763, 139 Pac. 907.

The judgment is affirmed.

ALSAGA v. HART. (Civ. 1766.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 12, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1918.)

1. SALES ⟸197—EXECUTORY CONTRACT.
In view of Civ. Code, § 1661, defining executed and executory contracts, and sections 1140, 1141, as to when title to personal property passes, under agreement to sell and deliver six head of cows at a future date, where no particular property was identified, and no possession was given or offered, no title passed; the agreement being an executory and not an executed contract.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(3)—PRESUMPTIONS—FINDINGS.
On appeal from judgment roll alone, the court, having no record of the evidence before it, will presume that evidence justified and supported the findings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Baptista Alsaga against Charles F. Hart. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. A. Kelley, of Berkeley, for appellant. Grover C. Julian, of Susanville, for respondent.

HART, J. The action here is in claim and delivery. Judgment passed for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals therefrom, on the judgment roll alone.

The complaint is based on a transaction between the plaintiff and one J. F. Swan, in which the former sold to the latter eight head of horses "at an agreed price of $510," of which amount Swan paid the plaintiff $150 in money, "leaving a balance of $360," for the satisfaction of which the said Swan "agreed to sell and deliver to plaintiff, on the last day of April, 1917, six head of cows, but instead of delivering said cows to plaintiff as so agreed, J. F. Swan sold said cows to one Charles F. Hart, who now has the possession of all of said cows, and wrongfully withholds the possession of all said cows, against the consent of plaintiff." Then follow the usual allegations in an action in claim and delivery that the plaintiff demanded of the defendant, Hart, possession of said cows, and that the defendant still "unlawfully withholds and detains said cows from the possession of this plaintiff, to his damage in the sum of $360." The prayer is for the recovery of the possession of the said cows, or, in case delivery of such possession cannot be had, for the recovery of the above-mentioned sum, together with $150 as damages and for costs of suit. The complaint is unverified, and the issues as to the ownership and the right of possession of the cows were made by a general denial of the averments of the complaint. The court found that the plaintiff and Swan entered into the transaction and agreement as alleged in the complaint, but that the cows were thereafter sold by Swan to the defendant, Hart "who now has the possession of said cows," and that the defendant is the owner of said cows and is entitled to the possession thereof. Judgment followed as above indicated.

The appellant argues, in support of this appeal, that the transaction between the plaintiff and Swan involved an executed contract—that is, that it constituted an agreement by which Swan sold to the plaintiff the six head of cows in dispute. The complaint, however, pleads no such an agreement between the plaintiff and Swan. "An executed contract is one, the object of which is fully performed. All others are executory." Civ. Code, § 1661. And "title is transferred by an executory agreement for the sale or exchange of personal property only when the buyer has accepted the thing, or when the seller has completed it, prepared it for delivery, and offered it to the buyer, with intent to transfer the title thereto, in the manner prescribed by the chapter upon offer of performance." Civ. Code, § 1141. See, also, section 1140, Civ. Code, as to when the title to personal property passes.

[1] The contract pleaded involves nothing more than an agreement by Swan to sell and deliver the cows to the plaintiff. In other words, according to the contract pleaded by plaintiff, Swan merely obligated himself to sell the cows to the plaintiff at some future time. There was no agreement of sale, but only an agreement to sell. So far as Swan was concerned, it was purely an executory contract, his part of the same being still unperformed. No title passed, no possession was given or offered, and no present transfer agreed upon and the particular property identified. If the plaintiff has any right of action at all growing out of the transaction, it would be against Swan for the breach thereof, and not against the defendant. It is not expressly charged, nor even impliedly, so far as the defendant is concerned, that there was fraud as against the plaintiff in the transaction between Swan and the defendant. Indeed, so far as said transaction is explained by the complaint, the defendant was a purchaser of the cows in good faith and for a valuable consideration.

[2] But, supposing that what was intended to be alleged in the complaint was that Swan by the agreement had transferred to the plaintiff the title to the cows in question, but had postponed delivery of the possession thereof to a future time, and that thus a completed sale had been effected, still the judgment on the record before us cannot be disturbed. The court found that the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant was precisely as it was made to appear on the face of the complaint—that is to say, that the said Swan, as a part of the consideration for the horses sold to him by plaintiff, "agreed to sell and deliver to plaintiff on the last day of April, 1917, six head of cows," etc. As above shown, the appeal here is on the judgment roll alone, there being no record of the evidence before us. The presumption is therefore that the evidence justified and supports said finding—that is, that the agreement between Swan and the plaintiff, as the complaint alleges, was one by which Swan agreed to sell at a future time the cattle to the plaintiff, and therefore not one whereby an absolute sale of the cows was effected. Moreover, so far as we can know from the record, the cows sold to the defendant may not be the same cows which Swan agreed to sell and deliver to the plaintiff.

The appellant has cited a number of cases which we have found, upon examination, do not support his position upon the record in this case. It is not necessary to review those cases herein. The appeal here is absolutely destitute of merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BOOTH. (Cr. 446.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 26, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃993—INDETERMINATE SENTENCE—RESENTENCE.

A judgment imposing an indeterminate sentence in a case wherein the sentence was unauthorized was in legal effect no judgment at all, and the court did not thereby lose jurisdiction to pronounce a valid judgment, after accused was committed and ordered returned to court for that purpose.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Ernest G. Booth, imprisoned under an indeterminate sentence for forgery, wrote the judge, complaining of his sentence, and was ordered returned into court, that legal judgment might be pronounced and entered. He was thereupon sentenced for a term of five years, and he appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. On the 20th day of September, 1917, the defendant was charged by information filed by the district attorney of Butte county in the superior court of said county with the crime of forgery, alleged to have been committed on or about the 8th day of the preceding month of June. On the said 20th day of September, upon being duly arraigned upon said information, the defendant entered a plea of guilty to the crime therein charged, and the court thereupon fixed Monday, September 24, 1917, at 10 o'clock a. m., as the time for the pronouncement of judgment of sentence, and on the day last mentioned the court, after due proceedings, sentenced the accused to be punished by imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin "for the indeterminate term of 1 to 14 years." The defendant was thereafter and in due time delivered by the sheriff to the custody of the warden of the state prison at San Quentin.

On the 18th day of March, 1918, and after serving 6 months in the state prison, the defendant addressed to the judge of the superior court of Butte county a letter in which he called the attention of the judge to the case of Ex parte Lee, 171 Pac. 958, on habeas corpus, and declared that, under the ruling in that case, the judgment sentencing him (defendant) to an indeterminate term was voidable, inasmuch as the crime for which he had been sentenced was committed before section 1168 of the Penal Code, authorizing indeterminate sentences, went into effect; the Supreme Court holding in the Lee Case that the said section, as to defendants whose offenses had been committed prior to its enactment, was ex post facto, and therefore unconstitutional and void. Upon receiving and reading the said letter, the court, recognizing that error had been committed in the matter of pronouncing judgment of sentence against the defendant, made an order for the return of the prisoner into court, to the end that a legal judgment might be pronounced and entered in the case. In pursuance of said order, the defendant was, on the 22d day of March, 1918, brought into court by the sheriff, and, after due proceedings, the court sentenced the defendant to serve a term of 5 years in the state penitentiary at San Quentin. The defendant thereupon in open court gave notice of an appeal from the judgment so pronounced and entered.

The case was placed on the calendar of the June term of this court, and all the parties duly notified thereof. When the case was called in the regular order for argument, no one appeared for the defendant, and, as no brief had been filed (and it may be added none has since been filed) in support of whatever point or points the defendant intended to rely upon, the Attorney General submitted the case on the record, and so it now stands for our consideration. We would have been justified in affirming the judgment without presenting, as above we have, a history of the case; but it appears from the record that the defendant has at all times been without the aid of counsel, and we conceived that it was only just to him to reproduce herein the facts as to the proceedings in the case, and thus show that there is no legal merit whatever in his appeal. The purported judgment originally pronounced was in a legal sense no judgment at all. Of course, it will not be contended that the court, under the circumstances indicated herein, lost jurisdiction to pronounce a valid judgment of sentence against the defendant.

PEOPLE v. KAWANANAKOA. (Cr. 724.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 4, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 1, 1918.)

LARCENY ⊂=15(3)—BY CARETAKER—DISTINGUISHED FROM EMBEZZLEMENT.

Pen. Code, § 508, providing that clerks, agents, or servants fraudulently appropriating property coming under their control or care by virtue of such employment shall be guilty of embezzlement, does not apply to a mere caretaker, and his theft of the property is "larceny."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Larceny.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Leo Kawananakoa was convicted of grand larceny, and, from the judgment of conviction and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Jay Monroe Latimer, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was charged by information with the crime of grand larceny. He was tried, convicted and sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law. He now appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information charged the defendant with having, on or about November 10, 1916, at the city and county of San Francisco, feloniously taken an electric lamp, one lot of silverware, one lot of cut glass, certain pictures, a sewing box, and one lot of linen; the same being the personal property of C. E. Blanchard.

Defendant makes no point on this appeal other than that of the sufficiency of the evidence. As to this he claims that the evidence is insufficient in four respects, namely: (1) That there is no proof that the property in question was that of the complaining witness; (2) that the evidence failed to show that the property was stolen by defendant from Blanchard; (3) that the evidence was insufficient to show that the value of the articles stolen was more than $50; (4) that there is a variance in that the crime proven is that of embezzlement and not larceny.

An examination of the record discloses that there is no merit in points 1, 2, and 3. As to the fourth, appellant's contention is that the defendant was shown to be a servant who fraudulently appropriated property which had come into his care by virtue of his employment as such servant, and that this brought him within the provisions of section 508 of the Penal Code. But in making this contention counsel overlooks the fact established by the complaining witness' testimony, that the defendant was a mere caretaker of his premises, whose principal duty was to see that no one took anything out of the house. Quoting the record:

"A. He was not hired for a servant. He was hired for a caretaker. Q. And as a caretaker what were his duties? A. To look after the house and see that it was kept clean, and that nobody took anything out of it, principally."

Counsel erroneously assumes that, because the defendant was possibly a custodian of the property, the same was in his possession; but he overlooks the distinction between possession and custody. This distinction is quite appropriately pointed out in Bishop's New Criminal Law, vol. 2, p. 486:

"Sec. 824. 1. Possession and custody are in this branch of the law widely distinguishable. There can be no trespass against the custody; it is always against the possession, and it can be committed as well by the custodian as by any other person. For example—

"2. Servant.—When a master's goods in possession come within the handling of the servant, the latter has in law no more than a custody of them, the possession remaining in the former. Therefore the servant may commit larceny of them, as, if a clerk in a store feloniously remove goods from it, this is larceny. * * *

"3. Custodian Generally.—Where any person, whether servant or not, has the bare charge or care of another's effects, 'the legal possession,' observes East, 'remains in the owner; and the party may be guilty of trespass and larceny in fraudulently converting the same to his own use.'"

Thus it was held in the case of People v. Belden, 37 Cal. 51, where a livery stable owner had employed the defendant as caretaker of his livery stable, and although the owner was absent and the defendant was in charge at the time the latter asported certain horses, the defendant was guilty of larceny and not embezzlement. The court there said:

"The defendant occupied only the relation of servant to McComb, and, although he had labors and duties to perform in respect to the horses, he was not intrusted with them in the sense of the statute."

This fourth contention of the appellant must therefore, be disallowed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PIMENTEL. (Cr. 438.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 27, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=1163(1) — APPEAL — PRESUMPTION—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

The presumption, on appeal from a conviction, is that no prejudicial error was committed, and that the verdict is amply supported.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Frank Pimentel was convicted of robbery, and from the judgment, and order denying motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

B. M. Bainbridge, of Stockton, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted of robbery, and from the judgment, and the order denying his motion for a new trial, he brings this appeal.

No appearance in his behalf has been made in this court, and we have been furnished with no statement of any reason for disturbing the verdict found against the defendant. Of course, the presumption is that no prejudicial error was committed, and that the verdict is amply supported. We may add that we have sufficiently examined the record to be convinced that the defendant was justly convicted.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MAGEE v. W. J. BURT MOTOR CAR CO. (Civ. 2182.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 5, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 3, 1918.)

SALES ⊂=479(14) — CONDITIONAL SALES — RIGHT TO RESELL.

Under a conditional sale contract making time of payment of the essence, where the seller took possession of the automobile sold, after buyer's default, and buyer made no reasonably prompt tender of performance, the seller had the right to resell, which right was not lost by accepting partial payments after the entire contract became due.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. A. Raker, Judge.

Action by D. I. Magee against the W. J. Burt Motor Car Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

James W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Gilbert & Levy and James R. Jaffray, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant appeals from the judgment. The record has been prepared under the alternative method. Counsel in their briefs have complied very slackingly with the provisions of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. So far as shown by those portions of the record which are set out in the printed briefs, or stated by counsel on one side and definitely admitted by counsel on the opposing side, the facts of the case are as hereinafter stated. Matters not so presented will not be discussed.

Respondent brought this action to recover damages for the conversion of a certain automobile. On July 29, 1914, appellant delivered to the respondent the said automobile under a conditional sale agreement, pursuant to which respondent paid appellant $150 and gave to appellant 22 promissory notes, the first of which matured one week after that day and the remaining ones at the rate of one each week thereafter until the 30th day of December, 1914. The notes represented weekly payments of $100, except the last payment, which was to be $80. The first of said notes was as follows:

"$100.00 Los Angeles, Cal., July 29, 1914.

"One week after date, without grace, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of W. J. Burt Motor Car Company one hundred dollars, payable in gold coin of the United States of America, with interest thereon in like gold coin, from date until paid, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. And in case a suit or action is instituted to collect the money above mentioned, or any portion thereof, I promise to pay ten per cent. on the sum first aforesaid, additional to said amount, as attorney's fees, in such suit or action. The above note is given upon and for the consideration that the said W. J. Burt Motor Car Co. have agreed and promised that upon the payment of said note and all other notes outstanding of even date herewith, principal and interest, at maturity (time being the essence of this contract), they will sell and transfer to the undersigned, at the price of said principal and interest, the one white, six cylinder, Auburn touring car, factory number 11539, fully equipped, which said W. J. Burt Motor Car Company have this day intrusted to the care of the undersigned. It is admitted and agreed that said property so intrusted is the property of said W. J. Burt Motor Car Co., and the legal title thereof is in the said W. J. Burt Motor Car Co., and shall remain in them until they shall make the aforesaid sale and transfer after the principal and interest aforesaid shall be paid.

"And the undersigned agrees to return and deliver the said automobile to the said W. J. Burt Motor Car Co., if requested at any time before said sale and transfer, in good order.

"Principal and interest payable in U. S. gold coin at First National Bank, Los Angeles, Cal.

"D. I. Magee."

It was stipulated that the note above set forth constituted the entire and only contract between the parties to this action; which means, presumably, that all of the notes were alike in form.

Respondent paid 12 of these notes, the last of the 12 being paid February 11, 1915, at which time all of the notes were past due. Respondent paid $100 additional in three checks, of which one was dated February 2d and the others February 11, 1915, and by his own admission he still owed $880, with interest. On the 11th day of May, 1915, appellant took possession of the automobile under a claim and delivery action in the superior court of Los Angeles county, and surrendered in court all the unpaid notes. At the time of retaking the automobile its value was about $800. Appellant paid out and expended in repairs on the automobile the sum of $458, and on the 27th day of December, 1915, sold it for the sum of $1,400. Respondent claimed, and by the judgment herein was awarded, the difference between the unpaid portion of this contract and the amount of the resale, which difference was found to be $429.55.

Appellant contends that, upon its taking possession of the automobile, all obligations under the contract between it and the respondent were thereby terminated. The rule relied upon was stated in Pacific Carbonator Co. v. Haydes, 26 Cal. App. 607, 147 Pac. 988, to the effect that:

"A vendor of property which has been delivered to his vendee under a conditional-sale contract has the option in case of default either to recover payments provided to be made under the contract, or to retake the property and put at an end all further obligation on the part of either party."

In that case, the vendor did not elect to retake the property, but prosecuted its action to recover the full contract price. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The contract in that case differed from the one now before us, in this, that the contract there expressly provided that, in the event of default as to any payment agreed to be made by the vendees, repossession of the machinery sold might be had by the vendor, and in that event all payments theretofore made should be deemed to have been payments made for the use of the machinery. In the present case the contract authorizes the vendor to demand and have possession of the property "at any time before said sale and transfer" (independently of any default of the vendee), and provides further that time is of the essence of the contract. "It has been held in this state that where the vendor, in case of a conditional sale, retakes possession pursuant to the terms of the contract, the defaulting vendee may still complete the purchase and perfect his right to receive the property by paying the balance due. Miller v. Steen, 30 Cal. 407 [89 Am. Dec. 124]. This upon the theory that a mere delay in the payment of money is ordinarily "capable of exact and entire compensation," and will not, unless time has expressly been made of the essence of the obligation, bar the right of the party in default to tender payment, with interest, at a later date, and demand performance of whatever obligation was due him upon such payment." Liver v. Mills, 155 Cal. 459, 462, 101 Pac. 299, 300. But even so, in the absence of any reasonably prompt tender of performance by the delinquent purchaser, the vendor cannot be held guilty of conversion when he sells the property to a third person. Nor is the vendor's right to resell the property lost by accepting partial payments from the conditional vendee after the entire contract price became due. In the case at bar the respondent did not pay or offer to pay anything on account of his contract at any time after February, 1915. Appellant obtained possession of the automobile in May, 1915, but did not sell it until the following December. Under the same conditions, and under a very similar contract, it was held that the vendor, in making a resale, acted within his rights. Benedict v. Greer-Robbins Co., 26 Cal. App. 468, 147 Pac. 486. So here the plaintiff being in default, and the defendant being the owner of the automobile, and lawfully in possession thereof, the defendant cannot, by reason of making such sale, be held guilty of an unlawful conversion thereof to its own use.

The judgment is reversed.

DONNELLY v. WETZEL et al. (Civ. 2435.)

(District Court of Appeal. First District, California. July 6, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 3, 1918.)

PARTITION ⊂⊃83 — PERSONAL JUDGMENTS — DISCLAIMER.

Where A. purchased land jointly with B. and C. but paid more than her share, and B. and C. conveyed their interest to D., A. was entitled to a personal judgment against B. and C. for the excess she paid over her share, in an action for partition, although B. and C. filed a disclaimer of any interest in the property, and contended that they were not proper parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by Minnie E. Donnelly against Edwin C. Wetzel, Eva L. Wetzel, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the two named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Henderson, of Eureka (J. G. Reisner, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants. J. P. O'Brien, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This was primarily an action in partition. In addition to a judgment that the property involved be sold and the proceeds divided, as will hereinafter appear, the court also gave a personal judgment of $600 in favor of the plaintiff, Minnie E. Donnelly, and against the defendants, Edwin C. and Eva L. Wetzel, his wife, and from this money judgment against them the Wetzels appeal. The authority of the court to render this personal judgment in this action is the only question in the case.

The plaintiff and the Wetzels purchased the property from H. C. Petray for $4,500, payable $1,500 in cash and the remaining $3,000 to be secured by a mortgage on the premises to Petray. The plaintiff paid $1,100 of the initial payment, and the Wetzels paid only $400 thereof. It appears, therefore, that Miss Donnelly paid $600 of the purchase price which the Wetzels should have paid. Pursuant to this, the payment of the $1,500 and the execution of the mortgage to him of the $3,000 by the purchasers, Petray, the owner on the 27th day of June, 1911, conveyed the property to the plaintiff and the Wetzels. On February 14, 1914, the Wetzels, without paying the plaintiff the $600 which she had advanced upon their part of the purchase price, conveyed an undivided two-thirds interest in the property to the defendant Honey. On February 21, 1914, Petray, the mortgagee, assigned the mortgage to the defendant Gazzola.

It was conceded at the trial and found by the court that the property could not be divided, and the court therefore adjudged that it be sold. It was decreed that the plaintiff and Honey were tenants in common of the property, a one-third undivided interest therein belonging to Miss Donnelly, and the remaining two-thirds to Honey; that $2,000 and certain interest was still unpaid on the mortgage; and the court thereupon directed the application of the funds which should result from the sale of the property to the settlement of the mortgage, the costs, etc., and that the balance be divided between Miss Donnelly and Mr. Honey in the proportion of one-third to her and two-thirds to him, and, as hereinbefore stated, in addition to this judgment, the propriety of which is unquestioned, gave Miss Donnelly a personal judgment for $600 against the Wetzels. On this appeal the Wetzels claim that the court had no jurisdiction in this partition suit to decree a personal judgment in Miss Donnelly's favor against them, but should have left her to her action at law. In the complaint the plaintiff alleged on information and belief that Honey had acquired the property with full knowledge of her overpayment. The court, however, found that Honey acquired the property without notice or knowledge of this. The Wetzels answered, filing a disclaimer of any interest in the property, and contended that they were not proper parties at all to the partition suit on the ground that they had parted with their interest before it was begun; but the allegation that Honey acquired the property with notice of Miss Donnelly's claim for the $600 against the Wetzels made the Wetzels proper, if not necessary, parties to this action. Their disclaimer could not relieve them from the position in which they were placed as parties to this suit in equity who appeared therein; and, once being parties to the action and personally before the court, the trial court, as a court of equity, had authority to adjust all of the claims arising out of the transaction which might exist between the parties. This it did.

The judgment is affirmed.

RAVN v. PLANZ. (Civ. 2418.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 5, 1918.)

DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60(2)—FAILURE TO BRING ACTION TO TRIAL.

Code Civ. Proc. § 583, providing that an action shall, where not brought to trial within five years, be dismissed unless parties have stipulated in writing that time may be extended, being mandatory, that trial was postponed several times without plaintiff's consent upon defendant's motion is a matter of no significance.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by J. L. Ravn against Theodore Planz. From an order dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Brewster F. Ames, William A. Nunlist, and Frank J. Golden, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order dismissing the action because not brought to trial within five years after the defendant filed his answer.

Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an action "shall be dismissed * * * on motion of the defendant after notice to plaintiff, or by the court on its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended." This action was not brought to trial within the designated time, and it is not claimed that the parties entered into a stipulation in writing extending the time within which it might be tried. To save this case from the operation of the statute, the plaintiff shows that on several occasions the trial of the action was postponed upon the motion of defendant, and that upon a date within about six months prior to the expiration of the five years after the case was at issue, it being then upon the calendar for trial, he appeared in court with his counsel and witnesses ready to proceed; but, upon motion of the defendant and over his objection, a further postponement of the trial was granted. Later the case was again called for trial, when a motion to dismiss was made by the defendant and granted.

The provision of section 583 above set forth is mandatory. Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 Pac. 1002; Larkin v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 719, 154 Pac. 841, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 670. The circumstance, therefore, that the trial of the cause was postponed several times without plaintiff's consent, one of those occasions being a relatively short time before the date when the defendant would be entitled to require the court to dismiss the action, is a matter of no significance. Courts are, of course, loth to deny to a litigant a trial upon the merits; but the section of the Code of Civil Procedure above recited directs in plain terms that it shall be done when a case falls within the conditions stated, and the present is such a case. The trial court had no discretion. The motion being made, its duty was to dismiss. To relax the rule to cover hard cases would be to set at naught the express will of the Legislature.

As to the suggestion of counsel for the plaintiff that to construe this statute as mandatory will result in extraordinary anomalies, it may be said that other statutes are subject to the same criticism; many of our statutes, whether relating to procedure or other matters, are not ideal, and often are but compromises, and sometimes work injustice. But in the present case it may be said that if the plaintiff, at the time of the last postponement of the trial, had called the court's attention to the consequence which would flow from it, he could readily have secured an earlier date for the trial, or possibly a stipulation from opposing counsel waiving the benefit of the statute. As to the hardships suggested by counsel in supposed cases, it is not necessary to consider them at this time. It is sufficient to decide the case presented.

In view of what has been said and of the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the cases above referred to, it follows that the portion of the decision of this court in Mazitelli v. Crane, 169 Pac. 721, at variance with the conclusion here arrived at, must be deemed overruled.

The order is affirmed.

KAUFFMAN v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2697.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 16, 1918. On Motion for Rehearing, June 12, 1918. Denied by Supreme Court July 15, 1918.)

On Motion for Rehearing.

MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸398 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — "FURTHER DISABILITY."

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 16, subds. (a), (b), and (c), as amended by St. 1915, p. 1085, providing that proceedings for collection of compensation for "further disability" are not barred within six months, proceedings cannot be commenced after six months from the date of an injury, in any case whatever, where no proceedings were commenced nor payment of indemnity, or agreement therefore, made for the original injury within the six months.

Proceeding by Frank I. Kauffman under the Workmen's Compensation Act, to obtain compensation for personal injuries, opposed by the Federal Drilling Company, a corporation, the employer, and the London & Lancashire Indemnity Company of America, insurer. Compensation was denied, and petitioner applies for a writ of review. Denied.

Alfred Siemon, of Bakersfield, for petitioner. R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, for respondents Federal Drilling Co. and London & Lancashire Indemnity Co. of America.

PER CURIAM. Petition for writ of review denied.

On Motion for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner has applied to this court for an order setting aside the order by which the court denied his application for a writ of review.

On December 6, 1917, petitioner filed with the Industrial Accident Commission an application for adjustment of his claim against Federal Drilling Company, a corporation, and London & Lancashire Indemnity Company of America, a corporation, by which he sought to obtain compensation for disability resulting from an injury received by petitioner on the 10th day of March, 1916, while in the employ of Federal Drilling Company. No application had been filed by petitioner within six months from the date of the injury; but he claimed, and now claims, that at the time of filing his application he was still entitled to make an original application for "further disability" caused by and suffered from the original injury, upon the ground that such original injury had in fact caused further disability within the meaning of the provisions of the statute to which we shall refer.

Section 16 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, approved May 26, 1913 (St. 1913, p. 287), as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1085), so far as applicable to this proceeding, reads as follows:

"(a) Unless compensation is paid or an agreement for its payment made within the time limited in this section for the institution of proceedings for its collection, the right to institute such proceedings shall be wholly barred.

"(b) The periods within which proceedings for the collection of compensation may be commenced are as follows:

"(1) Proceedings for the collection of the benefit provided by subsection (a) of section fifteen or for the collection of the disability indemnity provided by subsection (b) of said section fifteen must be commenced within six months from the date of the injury, except as otherwise provided in this act.

"* * * (c) The payment of the disability indemnity * * * or any part thereof, or agreement therefor, shall have the effect of extending the period within which proceedings for its collection may be commenced, six months from the date of the agreement or last payment of such disability indemnity * * * or any part thereof; provided, however, that nothing contained in this section shall be construed to bar the right of any injured employé to institute proceedings for the collection of compensation within two hundred [and] forty-five weeks after the date of the injury, upon the grounds that the original injury has caused further disability; and the jurisdiction of the commission, in such cases, shall be a continuing jurisdiction at all times within such period."

By the findings of fact of the Industrial Accident Commission, set forth in its order as amended by the commission upon rehearing, it appears that the applicant sustained his injury on March 10, 1916, the injury consisting in his left eyeball being penetrated by a minute piece of steel. At that time and for some time thereafter, the injury appeared to be very slight, and it was not known until the following September that there was any foreign substance in said eye. The piece of steel was removed in September, 1916. The disability increased gradually from that time until about the time of the filing of the application for adjustment of claim on December 6, 1917. Within the six months immediately preceding the filing of the application there was no substantial change in the applicant's condition, nor in the character of his disability, except that the vision continued to decrease slowly and gradually as before. Upon the facts the commission held that the claim was barred by the period of limitations contained in the statute as above set forth.

The question here presented depends upon the meaning of the words "further disability" in the proviso contained in subdivision (c) of section 16. What is the additional disability intended by the use of the words "further disability"? The answer must be found in the preceding portions of section 16. We there find that within six months from the date of the injury the employé may commence proceedings before the commission for the collection of a disability indemnity. Or there may be payment of the disability indemnity, or some part thereof, or agreement therefor; and if there be such payment or agreement, the period within which proceedings for its collection may be commenced is extended for a period of six months from the date of the agreement or last payment of such disability indemnity, or any part thereof. Taking into consideration these provisions of the statute, together with the proviso concerning the right to institute proceedings for the collection of compensation for "further disability," it seems clear that this additional disability may reasonably be defined as referring to any disability in addition to that for which proceedings were commenced within six months from the date of the injury, or that for which disability indemnity has been paid or agreed to be paid. If there have been no proceedings commenced within six months from the date of the injury, and if there has been no payment of disability indemnity or agreement therefor, the employé is not entitled to institute proceedings grounded upon "further disability" after the expiration of six months from the date of the injury.

Following our usual custom in cases where the application for an original writ is denied, we made our former order without filing any written opinion. In this case, however, the applicant in his petition for rehearing has urgently requested a written statement of the grounds of decision; and this opinion is our answer to that request.

The application for a rehearing is denied.

WAHL et al. v. YORI. (Civ. 1687.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 13, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1002 — REVIEW — JUDGMENT ON VERDICT—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence before the court on appeal is conflicting, the judgment on the verdict cannot be disturbed.

2. WITNESSES ⟸398(2)—CONTRADICTION.

Where a witness testifies as to conversation with defendant, it is permissible for latter, although no foundation for impeachment has been laid, to testify as to statements defendant had made, to show statements were not as testified to by the witness.

3. EVIDENCE ⟸271(12) — DECLARATIONS — PRESENCE OF ADVERSE PARTY.

In action for purchase price, where defendant claimed cattle had been sold to him by plaintiffs' father and not by plaintiffs, defendant's testimony as to statements by father, not made in the presence and hearing of plaintiffs, held inadmissible for purpose of showing title of cattle to be in father.

4. EVIDENCE ⟸151(1) — MOTIVE — SELLER'S ACTION.

In seller's action for price of cattle, where buyer claimed cattle had not been sold by plaintiffs but by plaintiffs' father, evidence as to the deposit to father's account of a check drawn by buyer and payable to father held inadmissible for purpose of showing defendant's motive in making the payment where plaintiffs did not receive the money and did not know about deposit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Willey Wahl and another against H. Yori. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for appellant. Guy R. Kennedy and Jerome D. Peters, both of Chico, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiffs commenced the action to recover the sum of $830, which it is alleged defendant agreed to pay for 12 head of cows at the agreed price of $65 per head, and two calves at the agreed price of $25 per head, sold and delivered by plaintiffs to defendant, on or about November 13, 1915. A second count is for the like number of cattle of the reasonable value of $830. The answer is a specific denial of the averments of the complaint, except that defendant admits nonpayment. The cause was tried by a jury, and plaintiffs had the verdict for the amount claimed, and judgment was entered accordingly. The appeal is from the judgment under the alternative method, and is here on the judgment roll and the evidence taken at the trial.

The defense on the merits of the case made at the trial was that the cattle in question were purchased by defendant from Albert Wahl, the father of plaintiffs, and hence defendant was not indebted to plaintiffs in any sum. Neither the number nor the value of the animals is controverted.

[1] Plaintiffs were engaged in the business of farming and stock raising near the city of Chico, Butte county; their father, Albert Wahl, was also engaged in the same business in a different part of the county. Defendant was a tenant of Albert's and had purchased some cattle from him previous to the present transaction. He desired to make further purchase, and applied to Albert, who told him his sons, plaintiffs, had cattle for sale. There was testimony that Albert took defendant to plaintiff's farm, where the latter examined and picked out the animals referred to in the complaint and agreed upon the price to be paid; that the cattle belonged to plaintiffs, and that the sale was made and cattle delivered by plaintiffs to defendant. Witnesses for defendant testified that the sale was made by Albert, and that plaintiffs took no part in the transaction. Upon the question of ownership of the cattle and as to the person who sold them to defendant the evidence was conflicting. The jury accepted the evidence submitted by plaintiffs as true, and so found by their verdict. Under the rule the judgment on the verdict cannot be disturbed by the reviewing court.

The trial court sustained certain objections to evidence offered by defendant, "and," says defendant's brief, "the chief point preserved on this appeal is that the court committed prejudicial error in the exclusion of evidence offered by defendant."

Albert Wahl had testified to the transaction and that the negotiations were between Henry Wahl, one of the plaintiffs, and the defendant, and that he, Albert, had nothing to do with it and did not own the cattle nor did he sell them to defendant.

Defendant was called as a witness in his own behalf. He was asked to state the conversation he had at that time with Albert Wahl, in the presence of Henry Wahl. Objection was made that the question was self-serving, and might be in Henry Wahl's presence and not in his hearing. The witness stated that he did not know whether Henry heard the conversation. Objection sustained. He was then asked if he had any conversation with Albert Wahl in regard to buying the cattle which were delivered to him "by the men of Henry Wahl, or the cattle that came from Henry Wahl's place." Objection that it was irrelevant, incompetent, self-serving, and not in the presence of either of the plaintiffs and not binding on them. "Mr. Goldstein: We allege here we bought no cattle from the plaintiffs and we bought the same cattle from Albert Wahl. The Court: The objection will be sustained. You can show whom you bought the cattle from, if you bought it from a different person." He was then asked what conversation he had with Henry Wahl and replied that he "didn't have a conversation with Henry Wahl at all; the only conversation was with Albert Wahl. Q. You spoke to Albert Wahl? A. Yes, sir; I spoke to Albert Wahl all the time. Q. When did you have a conversation with Albert Wahl? A. One time I come to Chico, he said it would be a good thing to pay something for the cattle; he said I was making good money, and he said I should pay something for the cattle that I bought last time in Dayton," referring to the purchase in question. Objection was made as self-serving and not in the presence of plaintiffs. Sustained, and the last answer stricken out. The record shows that defendant consented to the ruling in this instance.

Defendant seems to treat Albert Wahl as the agent of plaintiffs, and hence his declarations would bind them. There was no evidence tending to show that Albert was acting as plaintiffs' agent. In fact, defendant's contention is that Albert was the principal—that he owned the cattle and sold them to defendant. The cattle were on plaintiffs' premises and bore their brand. It did not appear that any declarations made by Albert or any of the conversations sought to be brought out were in the hearing of plaintiffs.

[2, 3] In his cross-examination Albert Wahl had said something about a conversation he had with defendant—nothing definite or specific, nothing resembling a proper foundation for impeachment. The purpose of defendant's counsel in asking defendant, as a witness, to state the conversations he had with Albert was doubtless to show that he made statements to defendant contradictory to those to which he had testified. This is permissible sometimes without laying the foundation for impeachment. Doudell v. Shoo, 20 Cal. App. 424, 449, 129 Pac. 478. We incline to think for that purpose alone the questions were permissible. But defendant did not ask them at the trial, nor does he now urge that they should have been allowed on that ground. His contention is that they should have been permitted to show title in Albert and not in plaintiffs. For that purpose declarations made by Albert, not in the presence and hearing of plaintiffs or either of them, would no more be admissible than the declarations of a stranger. As already suggested, Albert's statements could not bind plaintiffs on the theory of agency, for there was no agency established. Nor were they admissible on the ground of estoppel, for upon no principle would plaintiffs be bound or estopped by conversations between Albert and defendant, of which they were ignorant or to which they did not consent and did nothing and said nothing to lead defendant to believe that they had knowledge thereof or consented thereto. But if error be conceded there were other witnesses besides Albert Wahl who testified to plaintiffs' ownership of the cattle, and that the sale, as well as the delivery, was made by them, upon whose testimony the verdict of the jury may rest. Besides, defendant and other witnesses in his behalf were permitted to testify, and did testify, fully as to the transaction and what took place at the time of the sale. This testimony was to the effect that the barter was entirely between Albert Wahl and defendant, and that Henry Wahl had nothing to do with it. Unfortunately for defendant, the jury did not accept this testimony as satisfactory or convincing.

Henry Wahl, witness for plaintiffs, was cross-examined as to a conversation he had with defendant in January, 1916, after this sale of the cattle. He testified that he asked defendant for some money. His attention was then called to meeting defendant in Chico on January 24, 1916, and was asked if he did not then ask defendant "for money to be paid on these cattle. A. He gave me $200 or a $200 check to Albert Wahl, and not to me." He testified that he had asked his father for money, and was told "that probably Mr. Yori could dig up some"; that he asked defendant for money he had agreed to give his father; that they went into the Butte County National Bank, and witness wrote the check and defendant signed it, "Pay to Albert Wahl or bearer"; that he asked for the money for Albert Wahl; that he did not ask him for money for himself, and did not tell him he wanted the money for the cattle he had sold defendant; that defendant told witness to make the check payable to Albert Wahl; that he did not know why it was made payable to Albert unless it was "his indebtedness to Albert Wahl." Further answering: "The only reason was that I would pay the money to my father, and if I could borrow it from my father, I went to him to collect it for him, to borrow it"; that no money was deposited in the bank for plaintiffs' stock.

It appeared from witness' testimony on redirect that defendant was indebted to witness' father, and that he wrote the check at defendant's request and as directed by him and delivered the check to Albert Wahl.

[4] In his testimony defendant testified fully to what occurred at this meeting in January, 1916, when this check was given, and that it was made payable to Albert because he owed him, and not Henry, for the cattle. At this point a check for $250 was shown defendant, and he was asked what he did with it. He answered that it was deposited in bank to the account of Albert Wahl. Defendant then sought to show that it was deposited in part payment for the cattle sold by plaintiffs. Objection was sustained. It is not claimed that plaintiffs got this money or knew anything about the deposit. Albert Wahl knew that the deposit was made, and testified that it was on account of defendant's indebtedness to him for rent. The evidence might have had some tendency to contradict Albert's testimony, but it was not offered for that purpose. The object was to show by defendant's act that he purchased the cattle from Albert. In the absence of any knowledge by plaintiffs of the payment or its purpose, we cannot see that they would be bound by defendant's motive in making the payment.

We are unable to discover any prejudicial error in the rulings upon these two checks.

The judgment is affirmed.

FEDERAL CONST. CO. v. KNEESE, Superintendent of Streets. (Civ. 2466.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 26, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸293(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENT — REFERENCE TO STREETS.

Under St. 1911, p. 733, § 3, providing that the streets to be improved may be referred to in the resolution of intention by the name whereby they are commonly known, the resolution need not mention the official names.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸293(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENT — UNCERTAINTY OF RESOLUTION.

Where resolution of intention to improve city streets, pursuant to St. 1911, p. 730, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1464, is uncertain in some particulars, but plans and specifications accompanying resolution make lines certain as to location, uncertainty of resolution is no objection to improvement.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸293(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENT—EXCEPTION OF RESOLUTION—"TO BE CONSTRUCTED."

A city's resolution of intention to improve certain streets, pursuant to St. 1911, p. 730, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1464, excepting a certain strip of vitrified brick pavement "to be constructed," is not uncertain in that it cannot be determined whether the strip is in existence or to be hereafter constructed; "to be constructed" implying future action.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸298—STREETS —CHANGE OF GRADE—NOTICE OF HEARING OF PROTESTS.

Proceeding for change of grade of city street, pursuant to St. 1909, p. 1018, was not futile because of failure to give notice of hearing of certain protests, where all persons who signed protests actually did appear, presented protests, and were heard, except that one protestant appeared by his son.

Petition for writ of mandate by the Federal Construction Company, a corporation, against George Kneese, as Superintendent of Streets of Daly City. Judgment for petitioner that a peremptory writ issue as prayed.

Raymond Benjamin, of San Francisco, and A. C. H. Hart, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. George Appell, of San Francisco, for respondent. Frank H. Powers, of San Francisco, for intervener Lange.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The Federal Construction Company petitions for a writ of mandate to compel the superintendent of streets of Daly City to sign a contract for the improvement of certain streets of that municipality pursuant to proceedings taken by its board of trustees under the improvement act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 730) in conjunction with the act amendatory thereof of 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 1464). The case is an amicable one instituted for the purpose of determining the validity of the proceeding involved to the point which they have reached.

[1] The first objection to the proceedings is that the streets involved are not mentioned by their official names in the resolution of intention. It is provided in section 3 of the improvement act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 733) that the streets to be improved may be referred to by the names by which they are commonly known, and this was done.

[2] The next objection is that the resolution of intention is uncertain in some particulars. The plans, however, which accompanied the resolution of intention, and the specifications that are referred to therein, if we understand counsel correctly, answer these objections by making the lines, which it might be impossible to locate if the resolution of intention stood alone, quite certain as to location.

[3] Another objection to the resolution is that it cannot be determined therefrom whether a certain strip of vitrified brick pavement excepted from the work to be done is in existence or to be hereafter constructed. It is plainly said in the resolution that this pavement is "to be constructed." This can only mean that it is to be constructed in the future, of course.

Other criticisms are aimed at the resolution and plans and specifications; but with all respect to counsel, who have so ably presented this matter as to lighten the labor of the court, we think them inconsequential. The reference in the resolution of intention embraces matters concerning which the resolution may properly refer to the plans and specifications for a more particular description of the work, and the reference itself is sufficient for this purpose. This disposes of criticisms aimed at the resolution of intention. It seems to be sufficient.

[4] As we understand the next contention of counsel opposing the issuance of the writ, it is that the improvement is to be to a grade attempted to be established by a proceeding for change of grade had under chapter 677 of the statutes of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1018), and that the attempt in that proceeding to change the grade was futile because of the failure to give notice of the hearing of certain protests against the change of grade that were filed in that proceeding. It is stipulated by all the parties to this proceeding that the resolution of intention to change the grade was duly passed as provided by chapter 677 of the Statutes of 1909 and that notice thereof was given in the manner provided by section 2 of that chapter. The protests which were filed were made by owners of less than a majority of the property fronting on the streets where the change of grade was proposed to be made. The act under which the proceeding was had provided that the board of trustees should fix a time for hearing such protests, and give notice thereof in the manner therein specified to be given; and it was further provided that the board of trustees should hear said protests at the time and place appointed, or at any time to which the hearing thereof might be continued, and pass upon the same, and that its decision thereon shall be final and conclusive. While no notice was given of the hearing, the persons signing the protests did actually all appear before the board of trustees and present their protests, and were heard upon the same, except that in one instance the protestant did not appear personally, but did appear by his son, who, it is stipulated, represented him in the matter. It is now contended that this son did not have authority to represent this protestant, his father; but the stipulation is broad and can mean nothing if it does not mean that the son had such authority.

It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that the appearance by the protesting property owners before the board of trustees, and the hearing then given them, was all that was necessary to give the board jurisdiction to proceed with the work; that the reason for the publication of the notice was simply to apprise the protestants of the time and place of the hearing of their protests, and the notice was not addressed to any other person; and that, they having been heard and their protests denied, the board thereupon acquired jurisdiction to proceed. On the other hand, the contention is made by the respondent that the purpose of the publication of the notice was to give notice to all persons owning property fronting upon the streets the grade of which it was proposed to change, whether protesting or not protesting; and therefore the fact that the actual protestants appeared before the board and were heard does not give the board jurisdiction, as it is said, to proceed with the work although the protests were denied.

With this latter contention we are unable to agree. Throughout the whole of section 3 of the act under which the proceeding for change of grade was taken, in mentioning who were to be heard upon the protests the Legislature has used the words "such protests," and "said protests," referring definitely to the protests filed and to no other persons or objections whatever. No other construction can be given to the language of that lengthy section than that the protests to be heard were the protests which were filed, and none other. One reason for the adoption of the method of publication or posting instead of a personal service of notice of the hearing is the common one, that it was easier to meet the difficulty of serving a large number of persons by this substituted method—if it may be so called—than by seeking out the persons protesting at their various residences or places of business, and personally serving them there. Perhaps it might also have been considered less expensive and more certain, and its proof less open to the infirmities of oral testimony, than a personal service. There is another sentence of section 3, however, which seems to us to conclusively point to the intention of the Legislature as to who should be heard upon these protests. After providing for the nature and contents of the protests, it is said that "any protest not complying with the foregoing requirements shall not be considered by said city council." This, if the contention of the superintendent of streets be correct, would exclude from hearing an informal protest actually filed, and at the same time permit hearing a person who had not protested at all. That the Legislature intended such a result is not reasonable to suppose. It is settled in Farley v. Reindollar, 174 Cal. 706, 165 Pac. 19, that property owners not protesting cannot object to the disposition of protests to which they are not a party. It follows that, if the nonprotesting property owners could not object to the disposition of the protests, the notice was not for their benefit. Gray v. Burr, 138 Cal. 109, 70 Pac. 1068, relied upon by the respondent in this case, is not in point, because in that case the protest was by the owners of a majority of the frontage, and the resolution ordering the work was passed without giving the protesting owners any opportunity to be heard at all.

Other cases relied upon by respondent are Creed v. McCombs, 146 Cal. 449, 452, 80 Pac. 679; So. Construction Co. v. Howells, 21 Cal. App. 330, 131 Pac. 756; Girvin v. Simon, 127 Cal. 491, 59 Pac. 945; People v. O'Neill, 51 Cal. 91; and Mahoney v. Braver-man, 54 Cal. 565. All these were cases where the notice which was not given was a notice of a hearing on an assessment for street work. Typical of the language of those cases is that of Mr. Justice James, of the Second appellate district, in Southern Construction Co. v. Howells, as follows:

"The city council, when it proceeds to give a hearing on an appeal against a street assessment under this act, cannot assume jurisdiction to make any order of determination therein until all property owners affected by the assessment, whether parties to the appeal or not, have been given notice of the hearing; there is but one way provided by the statute for the giving of this notice, and that is that it shall be published for five days."

There is, however, a fundamental distinction between the notice required in a proceeding for change of grade under the statute followed in the proceeding under review, and the notice of an assessment in a street improvement case. The protest of the protesting party in the case of an assessment, if granted, to the extent of either reducing his assessment or relieving him altogether from payment of that portion of the cost of the work assessed against his property, necessarily has the effect of raising the assessments of all the other property owners whether they have protested or not. Therefore they will be affected injuriously if the protest is granted. On the other hand, the change of grade act of 1909, under which this proceeding was begun, provides for only two results upon the hearing of a protest on the change of grade. One of those results is the denial of the protest, following which the entire grade of the street would be changed as provided in the resolution of intention and the plans and specifications. On the other hand, if the protest is granted the whole proceeding stops. There is no middle course. The proposed grade is either abandoned or adopted in toto as planned and in accordance with the resolution of intention. Therefore nonprotesting property owners lose nothing of which they have not had previous notice by not being given an opportunity to be present at the hearing of the protests against the change of grade. We think the change of grade so established by the proceeding under examination was valid.

Judgment for plaintiff that a peremptory writ issue as prayed.

CEREMONY v. DRUMMOND et al.

(Civ. 2263.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 5. 1918.)

1. PLEADING ⟸279(3) — SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY OF PLEADING.

In an action on a contractor's bond, if the complaint as originally filed was not sufficient in that it failed to show that at the date of the commencement of the suit plaintiff had actually paid out money, it could not be helped out by supplemental complaint filed thereafter.

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟸155 — CONTRACTOR'S BOND—ACTION—PLEADING.

In an action on a contractor's bond, an allegation that certain enumerated claims were made for materials furnished to be used and actually used in the construction of the building was a sufficient allegation that the claims were bona fide.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(2)—FINDINGS OF FACT—REVIEW.

Where no evidence was brought up on appeal and no point made as to its sufficiency, it will be presumed, in support of the findings of fact, that there was evidence to sustain them.

4. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟸75—CONTRACTOR'S BOND—ACCRUAL OF SURETY'S LIABILITY.

Where the condition of a contractor's bond was that contractor would pay all claims for labor and material, where the contractor failed to pay claims for material, owner could maintain an action on bond without actually satisfying such claims, since liability on the bond accrued when the contractor failed to pay the claims.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Action by Peter Ceremony against F. L. Drummond and the Pacific Coast Casualty Company, a corporation. Judgment in favor of plaintiff, and the Casualty Company appeals. Affirmed.

V. J. Cobb, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Miguel Estudillo, of Riverside, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The defendant casualty company appeals from a judgment entered in this action favorable to the plaintiff. A contract having been made between the plaintiff as owner and defendant Drummond as contractor, the appellant casualty company became surety for the contractor that the contract would be faithfully performed. The general obligation of the surety was expressed in that clause of the undertaking which guaranteed that the contractor would pay in full the claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in the work. Plaintiff in his complaint alleged that the contractor neglected and failed to comply with the terms of his contract and failed to pay for labor and materials in excess of the contract price (specifying names of claimants and amounts), which labor and materials it was further alleged "were furnished to be used and were used in the construction of said building." Allegations followed to the effect that the contractor's debtors mentioned had filed claims of lien against the property of the plaintiff and were threatening to foreclose the same.

[1] Two objections are made as against the judgment: First, that the complaint did not in its allegations show that the claims made against the property of the plaintiff on behalf of Drummond's debtors were valid or enforceable; second, that no recovery could be had on the bond given by appellant until payment of the claims had actually been made by the plaintiff. It may be here stated that in the course of the trial a supplemental complaint was allowed to be filed which showed that the plaintiff had satisfied the demands of the lien claimants. Of course, it is clear that if the complaint as originally filed was not sufficient, in that it failed to show that at the date of the commencement of the suit plaintiff had actually paid out the money reimbursement of which was sought in the action, it could not be helped out by supplemental complaint filed thereafter. So, then, the case is to be viewed as though no supplemental complaint had been filed.

[2] The condition of the bond of appellant was that the contractor would pay all claims for labor and material. It is alleged in the complaint that this was not done, but that certain enumerated claims were made for materials alleged to have been furnished to be used and actually used in the construction of the building. We think the allegations of the complaint were sufficient to show a breach of the contract. We think that the effect of the allegations in the complaint respecting the claims made is that the claims were bona fide and for actual labor and materials furnished.

[3] As no evidence is brought up and no point made as to its sufficiency, we must presume, in support of the findings of fact, that there was evidence to sustain them.

[4] The second point urged—that plaintiff could not maintain an action on the bond until he had actually satisfied the claims of claimants—viewing the contract of the surety, we think should not be sustained. Contracts of this nature are now generally held to be contracts of indemnity against liability, rather than indemnity against loss sustained and paid. As we have before noted, the surety under its contract guaranteed that the building contractor would pay all claims for labor and materials furnished. The contractor's default in this regard created a breach of the obligation of the surety towards the owner. Almost identical conditions in a bond on a building contract were considered by the Supreme Court of Washington in Friend v. Ralston et al., 35 Wash. 422, 77 Pac. 794, where the court said:

"The covenant in the building contract on the part of the contractors with Mrs. Friend is, as between them, equivalent to a direct promise to pay for materials used in the construction of the building, and a breach of the contract occurred when the contractors suffered the obligation to become a charge on her property. At least, she was entitled to treat the same as a breach. It may be true that she was not obligated to do so; that she could have waited until the lien had become fixed and determined by judgment against her property, and treated that as the breach of the bond, thus escaping the onus of establishing at the trial the validity of such lien and the amount of the indebtedness. But she was not obliged to delay action in that behalf. She could treat the failure of the contractors to keep her property free from such incumbrance as a breach of the contract. Therefore the position of appellant's counsel that this action was prematurely brought is untenable."

HORNLEIN v. BOHLIG et al. (Civ. 2403.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸36 — ENGINEERING DESIGNER—STATUTE—"PERSONS BESTOWING SKILL."

One who furnished engineering designs for a building, actually used in its construction, at the instance of the owner's architect, was entitled to a lien under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing "persons bestowing skill" in construction at instance of owner or any authorized person are entitled to a lien.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸113(2) — MONEYS DUE CONTRACTOR — EQUITABLE GARNISHMENT BY LIENOR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, as amended in 1911, does not, save at the owner's option, secure to persons claiming lien and giving the requisite notice an equitable garnishment upon moneys due or to become due to the contractor.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸291(1) — FORECLOSURE—JURISDICTION.

In action to foreclose mechanic's lien, where owner's wife was sued and made party under fictitious name, was never served with summons, and did not appear or participate, trial court had no jurisdiction to foreclose lien against portion of property in which she had interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Belle E. Hornlein, as executrix of the will of A. E. Hornlein, deceased, substituted as plaintiff in place of said deceased, against J. H. Bohlig and others, copartners doing business under the firm name of Hladik & Thayer, and Lotta Bohlig. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

W. T. Kearney, of San Francisco, for appellants. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff against the defendants for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien filed by plaintiff upon the property of defendants J. H. Bohlig and Lotta Bohlig. Bohlig, the sole owner of a portion of the real property subjected to the lien, entered into a contract with Hladik & Thayer, architects, whereby said architects agreed to furnish all plans, specifications, architectural work, and superintendence employed in the construction of a building to be erected, and which was erected, upon Bohlig's land and partly upon land owned by Bohlig and his wife, Lotta Bohlig. Thereafter plaintiff entered into a contract with Hladik & Thayer, whereby plaintiff agreed to furnish the engineering designs of the building for which he was to receive $620. The court found that plaintiff duly performed his part of the contract, that the engineering designs so furnished by plaintiff were actually used in the construction of the building, that defendants Hladik & Thayer paid on account the sum of $270, and that $350 remained unpaid. From these findings the court deduced the conclusion of law that plaintiff was entitled to judgment against defendants for the sum of $350, and that said sum constituted a lien upon the real property.

[1] Appellants contend that the furnishing of engineering designs was not a service of the character contemplated by section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides, inter alia, that architects and all persons of every class bestowing skill or other necessary services to be used in the construction of a building are entitled to a lien, whether at the instance of the owner or of any other person acting by his authority or under him as contractor, and further that every architect having charge of the construction, either in whole or in part, of any building, shall be held to be the agent of the owner for the purposes of the lien law. It follows that the employment of plaintiff by the architects is equivalent to his employment by the owner. An engineering expert, employed for a single and specified purpose in the construction of a building, even though he may not be classed as an architect, comes, we think, within the provisions of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, as one bestowing skill to be used in the construction of the building. In view of the finding of the trial court that the services of the plaintiff were actually used in the construction of the building and the plain language of the Code, it seems clear to us that plaintiff was entitled to a lien.

[2] The judgment, in so far as it orders that a writ of execution issue against the owner, Bohlig, as to any moneys in his possession payable to Hladik & Thayer, must be modified. Evidently that phase of the judgment is based upon the finding that plaintiff served upon Bohlig a notice to withhold moneys in his hands payable to Hladik & Thayer at a time when Bohlig had in his hands more than $400 payable to them. Section 1184, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1911, does not, save at the option of the owner, secure unto persons giving the requisite notice an equitable garnishment upon the moneys due or to become due to the contractor (Hubbard v. Jurian, 170 Pac. 1093), and therefore plaintiff is not entitled to a personal judgment against the owner, but must rely upon his lien.

[3] Lotta Bohlig was sued and made a party defendant in the action under a fictitious name, and it is conceded that she was never served with summons, and that she in no wise appeared or participated in the defense of the action. This being so, the trial court was without jurisdiction to render judgment foreclosing the lien against that portion of the property in which she had an interest. Gray v. Hawes, 8 Cal. 562; Ford v. Doyle, 37 Cal. 346; People v. Harrison, 107 Cal. 541, 40 Pac. 956.

Modified in accordance with these views, the judgment stands affirmed.

HOLLAND–MEISELL CO. v. KELLY.

(Civ. 2349.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 22, 1918. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1918.)

1. ESTOPPEL ⊂⊃77—DEALING WITH AGENT—CAPACITY TO SUE.
Defendant, in action on account for goods sold by plaintiff as agent, is estopped to assert absence of right in plaintiff to sue, having bought with knowledge that by plaintiff's agency contract he guaranteed payment within a certain time.

2. SALES ⊂⊃23(1)—SALE OR ORDER SUBJECT TO CONFIRMATION—EVIDENCE.
Correspondence held to show only the placing of an order with an agent subject to approval of principal, and not a sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the Holland-Meisell Company, a corporation, against J. A. Kelly, doing business under name and style of Valley Paper Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

U. Grant Hayden, of Fresno, for appellant. Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The Holland-Meisell Company had judgment against Kelly for $635.25 on October 1, 1917, from which Kelly appeals. The plaintiff was the agent of the Grand Lake Company, a paper manufacturing concern of the state of Maine, under an agreement—the terms of which were known to Kelly—by which the Holland-Meisell Company was held responsible for the solvency of all credit extended by it in the state of California upon sales of goods of the Grand Lake Company. By the terms of this contract the plaintiff guaranteed the payment of all accounts for goods of the Grand Lake Company sold by it within 75 days from the date of sale, and agreed to pay for all goods taken from consigned stock of the Grand Lake Company within 75 days whether or not it had received payment therefor from the customer. Kelly had been a member of the Holland-Meisell Company when this contract was entered into, and, as we have said, was familiar with the obligations of the Holland-Meisell Company to the Grand Lake Company under the contract. The complaint was upon an account for paper sold and delivered from stock in the possession of the plaintiff under its contract with the Grand Lake Company. Kelly answered the complaint with a cross-complaint, in which he set up that the plaintiff was the agent of the Grand Lake Company in all the transactions set forth in the complaint, and that as such agent it had sold to him a carload of paper, which the Grand Lake Company had refused to deliver to his damage in a sum considerably larger than the amount of the judgment afterwards given against him.

The defense may be treated as an answer to the plaintiff's claim, upon the ground that the Holland-Meisell Company is not the true party in interest, and that the action should have been begun in the name of the Grand Lake Company, and, upon the cross-complaint, as an assertion of a claim for damages to offset the demand sued upon.

[1] Upon the first phase of the defense it may be said that as Kelly was thoroughly informed as to the obligations assumed by the Holland-Meisell Company upon the sale to him of the goods declared upon in the complaint, and knew that when that company sold him these goods it became obligated to the Grand Lake Company to pay for the same whether he paid the Holland-Meisell Company or not, he is clearly estopped from asserting that the plaintiff had not the right to sue him on this claim.

[2] The carload sale was first discussed between Kelly and the plaintiff on or about the 16th day of November, 1915, and a verbal understanding seems to have been reached between them at that time that a carload of paper should be purchased by Kelly from the Grand Lake Company, to be delivered some time in February of the following year. The price of the carload was such that a verbal agreement to purchase the same, in the absence of delivery of a part thereof or part payment of the purchase price, would have been invalid under the statute of frauds. The trial court was therefore placed in the position where it was necessary for it to deduce the contract, if one was entered into, from the correspondence of the parties embraced in a great many letters which were introduced in evidence. It would be necessary, in order to understand the position in which the trial court was placed in construing these letters, to embrace practically the whole series in this opinion, and in the interest of brevity we do not feel justified in so doing. It seems sufficient for us to say on this point that, reading the letters as a whole, it was evident that Mr. Kelly and Mr. Holland undertook to secure a carload of paper for Kelly from the Grand Lake Company for delivery in February at the price of the goods as it existed at the time of their conversation in November. This is shown sufficiently for present purposes by four or five quotations from letters that passed between the parties. On November 15, 1915, Kelly wrote to the plaintiff cautioning it to be sure to protect him against the bag prices as they existed at that time. In answer to this letter the plaintiff informed Kelly: "We are placing with the Grand Lake Company a car of bags at present price, to be delivered to you in February." On December 2, 1915, the plaintiff again wrote to Kelly, saying:

"The writer placed your order with the Grand Lake Company something over a week ago with the old price. I say old price because we received an advance of 10.5 per cent. Monday. As to their acceptance we will advise you as soon as we get word if the car of bags are accepted by the Grand Lake Company," etc.

On December 15, 1915, the plaintiff also wrote to the defendant, saying that they did not believe there would be any question but that Kelly would be protected on the price, as the order was placed before the advance, and the Holland-Meisell Company did not see any chance of the Grand Lake Company repudiating it.

In the agreement between Holland and Kelly there had been no exact specification of the varieties of paper ordered by Kelly, and in response to a suggestion made by the plaintiff in a letter dated December 6, 1915, Kelly sent to the plaintiff a blanket order for a 40,000-pound car of grocers' bags. This order specified that Kelly confirmed the verbal order given to Holland on November 16th, and said that specifications for the car would follow in a week or so.

Practically this illustrates the character of the correspondence between these parties. The Holland-Meisell Company now contends that it had no authority to sell a carload of paper except subject to confirmation of the manufacturers, and that all they undertook to do was to order the goods from the Grand Lake Company subject to confirmation by the latter. It appears from the contract that carload orders were to be taken by the Holland-Meisell Company subject to credit regulations of the Grand Lake Company. We have read all this correspondence with care, and are unable to say that the construction placed thereon by the trial court was not correct. It seems to us indeed that Mr. Holland, a former partner of Mr. Kelly, was endeavoring to secure for the latter a carload of paper at the prices as they existed in November, when the prices were gradually rising, and that Mr. Kelly, having found that the Holland-Meisell Company was unable to do this, laid the foundation for his cross-complaint in this action. Indeed, the verity of this view seems apparent from one of his letters to plaintiff, a portion of which is as follows:

"It seems taking quite an unfair advantage of your firm, but it will put you in a much better shape to go to the Grand Lake Company and insist upon them filling this order when you can show them that we are withholding practically $500 from your firm as a guaranty that you will live up to your contract. We, of course, expect that you will deduct this from your report to the Grand Lake Company so it will not seriously interfere with your own affairs."

This last quotation seems to us conclusive as to the intention of the parties, and it does not appear to us that the plaintiff ever undertook to make to Kelly, or that he ever understood that it was making to him, an outright sale of the carload of goods, but rather that it was simply placing an order subject to confirmation by the Grand Lake Company.

The judgment is affirmed.

FASSIO v. WOOLFREY et al. (Civ. 2437.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 9, 1918.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸224 — ACTIONS — JOINDER—SERVICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, it is not sufficient to merely name the husband as a party defendant in an action against his wife, but he must also be served with summons.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸913 — ACTIONS — JUDGMENT.

The rule that every reasonable presumption is to be indulged in favor of a judgment does not justify the presumption on appeal that a wife was sued separately from her husband within one of the exceptions of Code Civ. Proc. § 370, subds. 2, 3, where the complaint states the relation of defendants as husband and wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by V. Fassio, doing business as the Mission Concrete & Mosaic Company, against John B. Woolfrey, Esther Nathan, and others. From a judgment by default against her, the defendant Esther Nathan appeals. Reversed.

George A. Connolly and W. W. Sanderson, both of San Francisco, for appellant. I. M. Peckham and Edwin H. Williams, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from the judgment taken upon the judgment roll alone. The appellant, Esther Nathan, is one of the defendants in the action. Her husband is also joined as a defendant under the name of John Doe Nathan "for the reason," as stated in the complaint, "that he is the husband of Esther Nathan." A judgment by default was entered against her. Her husband was never served with summons.

[1] It is clear that under the provisions of section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is not sufficient to merely name the husband as a party defendant in an action against his wife, but he must also be served with summons. It was so held in the case of McDonald v. Porsh, 136 Cal. 301, 68 Pac. 817. There, as here, the status or relation of the defendants as husband and wife was set forth in the complaint, and upon the appeal, it appearing that the husband had not been served with summons, the court said:

"Under the express provision of the statute, the husband is a necessary party defendant in all cases where the wife is sued; and this implies that he must not only be named in the complaint, but served."

[2] The respondent does not seriously dispute that this is the settled rule. He argues, however, that, as every reasonable presumption is to be indulged in favor of a judgment, it must be presumed on this appeal that the case falls within one of the exceptions enumerated in subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which a wife may be sued alone. But here the complaint itself alleging, as it does, that the husband is joined because he is the husband of appellant, negatives the idea that the case falls within either of those exceptions to the rule requiring the husband to be joined; hence the presumption mentioned cannot be entertained.

The judgment is reversed.

MUELLER v. MOUREN. (Civ. 2545.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 11, 1918.)

TRIAL ⟸395(1)—FINDING—SUFFICIENCY.

In action for $983.90, the reasonable value of nursing defendant's intestate at his special request, where the answer denied that that amount was the reasonable value, and that anything was unpaid, a finding that plaintiff nursed intestate at $35 a week, without any finding as to full payment, did not sustain a judgment for plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by Ottilie C. Mueller against Neavas Mouren, as administratrix of the estate of Peter Mouren, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. G. Ritter, of Los Angeles, and Sarau & Thompson, of Riverside, for appellant. John Munro and H. S. Laughlin, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff who sought to recover for services alleged to have been rendered by her as a trained nurse for defendant's intestate at his special instance and request, the reasonable value of which services she alleged to be $983.90, all of which it is alleged remained unpaid. The answer, among other things, denied that the reasonable value of the services alleged to have been performed by plaintiff was $983.90, or of any value whatsoever, and denied that the same or any part thereof remained unpaid.

Upon the pleadings the reasonable value of the services rendered plaintiff was one of the chief issues which the court was called upon to determine. No finding, however, was made thereon, other than that she "worked * * * nursing * * * at the rate of $35.00 a week." Hence we are left without information as to the "reasonable value" of her services. Neither is there any finding as to whether plaintiff had been fully paid, as alleged in the answer. Since, in our opinion, the findings do not support the judgment, it is unnecessary to discuss the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings, as to which there seems to be some merit in the contention made by appellant.

The judgment is reversed.

MANWELL et al. v. DURST BROS. et al.
(Sac. 2369.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1918. Rehearing Denied Sept. 13, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⊂=108(2)—PLEADING.
A complaint for negligence must allege what was done, and that the same contributed to the injury; but, to show that there was negligence in what was done, it is sufficient to allege that it was negligently done.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=258(3)—PLEADING — UNDERTAKING DANGEROUS WORK — MOBS.
Negligence in the matter of employment of one murdered while assisting in clearing premises of a dangerous mob is not shown by a complaint showing no responsibility for the existence of the mob, and no omission to disclose the situation, or failure to protect the deceased in the service.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=137(1)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DANGEROUS WORK.
Employers have the right to employ persons to assist them in clearing their premises of a dangerous mob, though the service to be rendered is a dangerous one.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by Ellen Gertrude Manwell and others against Durst Bros. and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

F. H. Dam, of San Francisco, for appellants. W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This action is by the surviving wife and children of Edmund T. Manwell, deceased, to recover from the defendants the sum of $150,000 damages alleged to have accrued to plaintiffs from the death of said Manwell; the claim being that the complaint shows that such death was caused by the negligence of defendants. The lower court sustained a demurrer which was interposed, with leave to plaintiffs to amend. Plaintiffs having failed to file an amended complaint within the time allowed therefor, judgment of dismissal was entered. We have here an appeal by plaintiffs from that judgment.

[1] It is claimed that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, in that it fails to allege any negligence on the part of defendants proximately contributing to the death of Mr. Manwell. Of course, allegation of such negligence was essential to the statement of a cause of action. The complaint is not assisted in this respect by the general allegation contained in paragraph 5 that "the death of said Edmund T. Manwell, on said 3d day of August, 1913, was caused by the gross negligence of the defendants." While it is true, under the rule in force in this state and in most jurisdictions, that negligence may be charged in general terms, that rule simply means, as has been stated many times, that, "what was done being stated, it is sufficient to say it was negligently done, without stating the particular omission which rendered the act negligent." See Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 370, 113 Pac. 663; Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 99, 27 Pac. 29. And it must appear from the facts averred that the negligence caused or contributed to the injury. Smith v. Buttner, supra. The cases cited by counsel for appellants fully illustrate the meaning and application of this rule. What was done, with the charge that the same caused or contributed to the injury, must be alleged; but to show that there was negligence in what was done, which is likewise essential, it is sufficient to allege that it was negligently done, without stating more particularly what the matters constituting such negligence were. As said in Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 147, 34 Pac. 620, 36 Pac. 407: "Negligence is not the act itself, but the fact which defines the character of the act, and makes it a legal wrong." (Italics ours.)

No rule of which we have knowledge warrants a conclusion that this allegation assists the complaint in the slightest degree. This was apparently recognized by the pleader, for the allegation is immediately followed by the language, viz.: "And more particularly in the manner and form and under the circumstances hereinafter stated," and this is followed in paragraphs 6, 7, and 8 by the allegations upon which plaintiffs must rely for a showing of negligence.

[2] So far as material, these paragraphs allege the following facts: On August 3, 1913, what was known as the Durst Ranch in Yuba county was in the possession and under the control of defendants, who were using the same for growing hops. They had thereon in their employment as hop pickers some 2,500 or more persons, men, women, and children, of different nationalities, who were living on said premises. Through a committee of 12 these employés presented certain written demands to defendants on said premises for a higher rate for picking hops, and for certain specific improvements in the sanitary conditions of the premises and in the conditions under which the employés were living and working. The defendants refused the demand for a higher wage, but promised to make some improvement in the sanitary, living, and working conditions. These promises were not satisfactory to said employés. Thereupon defendant Ralph Durst, who was the general manager of the business, in the presence of the committee of 12, stated to one Ford, the spokesman of the committee, that he (Ford) was discharged and must leave the premises immediately, and, without justification, struck Ford in the face with a pair of gloves in such a way that the committee understood the act to be intended as an affront to the committee and to Ford. Thereupon said Durst, in the presence of said employés, caused an attempt to arrest Ford to be made by an officer, without first having procured a warrant for such arrest, and Ford, with the assistance of others of said employés, resisted the attempt and prevented the arrest. Thereupon the employés were embittered and incensed "because the defendants refused to grant certain of their demands," and "because" the premises were in an unsanitary condition, and "because" defendants "negligently had omitted" to take such measures as would have prevented such conditions, and "because" the promises for the improvement of the conditions were not satisfactory to them, and "because" of the conduct of said Ralph Durst toward Ford. They thereupon threatened they would go "on a strike" until all their demands were granted. Thereupon 1,000 or thereabouts of the employés held a meeting on the premises at which addresses were made by certain of their number. The employés then and there resolved to insist upon their demands, making open expressions and demonstrations of opposition and hostility against defendants. They "then and there became and were in a bad temper and in a state of excitement and agitation, and then and there became and were in such an angry frame of mind" that they "were indifferent to and heedless and reckless of the personal safety of any one acting in aid and assistance of defendants in opposition to" their will and wishes. By reason of these things, it was unsafe and dangerous and hazardous for any one to act in aid and assistance of defendants in opposition to the will and wishes of said employés. All of this said Ralph Durst well knew, nevertheless he thereupon "requested and solicited and employed said Edmund T. Manwell * * * to accompany the said defendant, Ralph H. Durst, and the sheriff and certain deputy sheriffs of said county of Yuba, from the said town of Wheatland to the said meeting of said employés of defendants, * * * and then and there to act in the lawful aid and assistance of said defendants in any matter which should then and there arise." The service so requested of Manwell was, "under the circumstances of the case as aforesaid," unsafe and dangerous and hazardous to Manwell, and "said defendants then and there had reason to believe, and by the exercise of reasonable care might have anticipated and foreseen, that such employment" might result in serious injury to the person of Manwell. Thereupon Manwell, pursuant to such request and employment, accompanied said Ralph H. Durst and said sheriff and five deputy sheriffs to said meeting of said employés on said premises, and while he was there so engaged in such service, "without fault or misconduct on his part, and negligently solicited and induced thereunto by the defendants, as aforesaid," he was then and there willfully, wantonly, and tortiously shot and wounded with a revolver in the hands of one of said employés of defendants, and thereby instantly killed.

It seems clear to us that the only possible basis for a claim that these allegations show any negligence contributing to the murder of Mr. Manwell is in the matters charged as to the employment by Durst of Manwell for a service known to the former to be dangerous and hazardous to the latter, or which by the exercise of reasonable care might have been so known to the former. As to the allegations relative to the causes that operated to make the employés on the Durst property a dangerous mob, "indifferent to and heedless and reckless of the personal safety of any one acting in aid and assistance of defendants in opposition to its will and wishes," there is no sufficient allegation of negligence on the part of the defendants, or of facts consistent only with the theory of such negligence. A demand for a higher rate for hop picking was made, and the defendants refused to grant it. There is nothing to show that the demand was not properly refused. Certain specific improvements in sanitary and other conditions were demanded, and some improvement in these conditions was promised, and there is nothing to show that every proper concession in this respect was not made. That the concessions made "were not satisfactory to said employés" establishes nothing in this regard. In so far as the complaint shows, Durst was entirely justified in discharging Ford and directing him to leave the premises. It is not even affirmatively made to appear that Durst was not justified in striking Ford. The allegation that he did so "without justification" is the statement of a mere conclusion of law. Nor is it affirmatively made to appear that there was anything negligent or improper in causing "an attempt to arrest said Ford to be made by an officer without first having procured a warrant for such arrest." Under certain circumstances either a peace officer or a private person may arrest a person without a warrant. Pen. Code, §§ 836 and 837. The subsequent statement that thereupon the employés "became and were embittered," etc., "because" of certain (reasons specified, is not an allegation that defendants were in fact negligent in any of the matters specified as reasons for the feeling of bitterness. In other words, there is no issuable allegation therein that the premises were in fact in an unsanitary condition, or that defendants negligently had omitted to make such provision as would have removed an unsanitary condition, etc. The thing alleged is that the employés then and there became and were embittered and incensed against defendants, and all the rest is a mere recital of their reasons for so becoming embittered and incensed, and not an allegation of any act or omission on the part of defendants. In so far as the complaint shows, therefore, it does not appear that the defendants were legally responsible, by negligence or otherwise, for the existence of the mob on their premises. It is therefore unnecessary to discuss the question presented by counsel for appellants as to the effect of such responsibility in this case, had the same been shown by the complaint.

We come, then, to a consideration of the facts alleged as to the employment of Mr. Manwell. The allegations as to the dangerous nature of the employment are full and complete, as are those as to the knowledge or imputed knowledge of the defendants thereof. But it is not suggested, even by implication, that Durst concealed anything pertaining to the conditions from Manwell, or did not inform him fully in regard thereto, or that Manwell was not cognizant of the entire situation and the danger incident to the employment. Indeed, in so far as the complaint shows anything in this regard, it indicates from the very terms of the employment notice to Manwell of the possible danger. He was employed to accompany Durst "and the sheriff and certain deputy sheriffs * * * to the said meeting of said employés," then and there to act in aid and assistance of the defendants "in any matter which should then and there arise," and he went with the defendant and the sheriff and five deputy sheriffs. [3] It must, we think, be conceded that defendants had an absolute right to solicit and employ these people to assist them in clearing their premises of this dangerous mob, the existence of which is so specifically alleged, even though the service to be rendered was one dangerous to those rendering it. Many necessary employments are notoriously hazardous in the very nature of things, and certainly it is not the law that the mere fact of employing one to render such a service constitutes negligence. Of course, in such a case, the employer must use what is reasonable care under the circumstances to protect his employé from injury in the rendition of his service; but there is no allegation of any omission in this regard, as there was in McCalman v. Illinois Central R. Co., 215 Fed. 465, 132 C. C. A. 15, cited by appellants. And where the danger is not obvious from the very terms of the employment and the nature of the service prescribed, it may freely be conceded that it is the duty of the employer to acquaint the employé with the facts of which he has actual or imputed knowledge, and that if he fails to do this he is guilty of negligence. In such a case it is the employment without informing the employé of the danger that constitutes the negligence. This is clearly shown in one of the cases cited by appellants (Baxter v. Roberts, 44 Cal. 187, 13 Am. Rep. 160), where the charge was that the defendant employed the plaintiff to perform a service which he knew to be perilous, without giving the employé any notice of its perilous character. The conclusion that the defendant was liable was based upon the fact, impliedly found by the jury, that the knowledge of the defendant as to the perilous nature of the employment, due to special circumstances of which the employé was ignorant, was not communicated to, but was withheld by him from the employé. In Pigeon v. Fuller, 156 Cal. 691, 105 Pac. 976, the allegation was that:

"Defendant negligently failed at the time it employed this plaintiff to warn him or inform him in any way of the danger of said employment, and defendant at all times herein mentioned negligently omitted to warn plaintiff of said danger."

In Holshouser v. Denver Gas & Electric Co., 18 Colo. App. 431, 72 Pac. 290, cited by appellants, the negligence charged was the failure to disclose the situation to the employé. In the case at bar, as we have seen, there is no allegation whatever in this regard, and without such an allegation we cannot see that the complaint stated negligence in the matter of the employment of Manwell. Some force in this regard is sought to be attributed by appellants to the statement that "while he (Manwell) was there so engaged in such service, without fault or misconduct on his part, and negligently solicited and induced thereunto by the defendants, as aforesaid," he was murdered by one of said mob; but obviously this cannot be construed as an allegation, general or specific, of any negligence on the part of defendants in the matter of the employment. It is purely by way of recital rather than allegation, and is, even as a recital, limited in its effect by the facts theretofore alleged, and to which it refers by the words "as aforesaid," which facts, as we have seen, are barren of any showing of negligence.

From what we have said, it follows that the complaint did not state a cause of action against defendants, and it is unnecessary to notice the points made in support of other grounds of demurrer.

The judgment is affirmed.

STENIAN v. TASHJIAN. (Sac. 2622.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 1, 1918.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃97—PURCHASE OF LAND—MEMBER OF ASSOCIATION—SECRET PROFITS.

One who negotiates a purchase of land for the benefit of himself and others is the agent of his associates, and as such bound to the utmost good faith with them, and can make no secret profit for himself.

2. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃18—EXISTENCE — AGREEMENT.

The question of whether there is a partnership is one of fact, depending on an agreement to that effect.

3. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃12—AGREEMENT — SHARING PROFITS AND LOSSES.

To constitute a partnership, there must be a joint undertaking to share in the profits and losses.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Partnership.]

4. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃47 — EXISTENCE — EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to warrant a finding of the existence of a partnership in the purchase of land.

5. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃125—MEMBER AS AGENT OF PARTNERSHIP.

Each partner is the agent of the partnership as to all others coming within the scope of the relationship.

6. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⊂⊃69(1)—RIGHT OF AGENT TO PROFIT.

An agent may not make any profit for himself.

7. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃97—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY—SECRET PROFITS—ACCOUNTABILITY OF ACTING MEMBER.

When parties enter into an agreement of partnership or association for purchase of property for the common benefit, each partner or associate occupies a fiduciary relationship to the others in all matters pertaining thereto, and is precluded from making any secret separate profit, and if he does so, is accountable therefor in law or equity.

8. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃97—PURCHASE OF LAND—NEGOTIATION BY PARTNER — ACCOUNTING FOR PROFITS.

A partner who negotiates a purchase of land for the benefit of himself and his copartner, concealing from the latter the commissions he is to receive for making a sale, is accountable for one-half the secret profits thus made, Civ. Code, § 2330, providing that an agent represents his principal within the scope of actual or ostensible authority, and that rights accruing to him from transactions within such limits, entered into on his own account, accrue to the principal.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Manoug M. Stenian against Harry Tashjian. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. Clack, of Visalia, for appellant. A. P. Michael Narlian, H. H. Rose, and Arekalian M. Astor, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. The court found, in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, that plaintiff and defendant in 1912 by verbal agreement became partners in the purchase of a tract of land in Tulare county; that prior to the purchase, which was made by the partnership at the solicitation of the defendant, he had entered into a written agreement with the owners of said land to pay him $2,000 as a commission in case he made a sale of the property, which fact, however, defendant, for the purpose of deceiving plaintiff, concealed from him; that plaintiff did not discover the fact of such agreement for a commission till a couple of years subsequent to the purchase of the property by plaintiff and defendant as such partners and subsequent to the termination of the partnership and division of the property between them. The decree of the court was that plaintiff recover from defendant one-half of the money already paid to him under the contract for commissions by the prior owners of the property and half of all moneys to be paid defendant thereunder in the future when a mortgage on the property executed by plaintiff and defendant was paid. Defendant appeals from the decree.

[1-4] Appellant, as grounds for a reversal, makes but two points which have any appearance of merit. He insists, first, that the evidence does not sustain the finding that a partnership was entered into between plaintiff and defendant for the purchase of the land, but that the evidence simply shows that defendant, who had the land for sale as agent for the owners, approached the plaintiff and one Ogaspian with the proposition that the three of them purchase the land for the sum of $15,000, of which they would pay cash $2,000 (one-third by each) and give a note and mortgage for the balance of $13,000. The negotiations for the purchase by them was conducted by the defendant and a conveyance made to the three of them of the tract of land undivided as tenants in common, so the defendant contends. Plaintiff and Ogaspian testified that the parties formed a partnership preliminary to the purchase of the land to make such purchase; that the understanding was that they were to purchase the property together, improve it together, put one half of it in grapes and the other half yearly in barley. Subsequently Ogaspian became dissatisfied with his purchase, and his interest was bought out by plaintiff and defendant. Defendant testified that there was nothing said about the partnership when the purchase was made; that each simply took an equal undivided interest. It appears, as all the parties testified, that defendant took charge and management of the land from the beginning, leasing portions of it, and had other portions sown to barley. No crops, however, matured, and his share of the loss of the venture, consisting of the expense of cultivation and the purchase of seed—some $500—was paid defendant by plaintiff. It is the claim of appellant that this evidence does not show a partnership, but at most a tenancy in common in the purchase of the property. As far as the alleged deceit of the defendant, as found by the court, is concerned (assuming it was proven) in concealing from his associates the fact that he was obtaining a secret advantage over them through commissions to be paid him for the sale and purchase of the property, it would be immaterial whether such sale and purchase was made for a partnership embracing the defendant as a member thereof or as a tenancy in common with defendant as one of the cotenants. In either event the defendant in negotiating the purchase for the benefit of his associates would be the agent of such associates, and as such bound to the utmost good faith with them, and could make no secret profit for himself at their expense. Now, while this rule of the liability of the agent for deceit practiced upon his associates is no different either in law or equity whether the sale or purchase of the property is for a partnership or whether as a tenancy in common, appellant claims that the distinction is quite material here because plaintiff in his complaint relies solely on a partnership, and must recover, if at all, by proof of the partnership and nothing else. Conceding this point of appellant as well taken, we are not so certain that if necessary we could not hold that the complaint, aside from its allegations of partnership, was also so framed that relief might be given to plaintiff upon the theory of defendant that the proof established simply a purchase by tenants in common. But this is unnecessary. The question of whether there is a partnership is one of fact. In order to constitute it there must be an agreement to that effect—a joint undertaking to share in the profits and losses. There was evidence tending to show that this was the intention of the parties in their transaction in reference to their purchase of the property. The partnership did not last for more than a couple of years, nor did it involve many transactions. But that was not essential. What little was done with the property was in line with a partnership, as the plaintiff and Ogaspian declared was the intention when the purchase was made. It was managed by the defendant for the benefit of all. That there were no profits is of no consequence. There was an endeavor to make them, but the effort resulted only in a loss of which plaintiff, in line with his partnership obligation, paid his share. Under this evidence we think the court was warranted in finding the existence of a partnership in the purchase of the land.

[5-8] It is next insisted by appellant that there is no averment or proof of fraud perpetrated by defendant on plaintiff in the sale to the partnership of the property. Taking the attitude of appellant seriously, he must be understood as claiming that there is no sufficient evidence to establish that he was to be paid a commission for making a sale to the partnership, and not that the facts as alleged and found by the court, if supported by the evidence, do not show fraud towards his partners in obtaining a commission for making the sale and purchase. The evidence shows that at the time the defendant entered into negotiations with plaintiff and Ogaspian for the purchase by the partnership of the property he then had a written contract with the owners to pay him $2,000 if he made a sale of it. Both plaintiff and Ogaspian testified that, while discussing with the others the subject of the contemplated purchase, both asked him pointedly if he was to get a commission, and he said that he was not, declaring that partners could not make a commission in selling to each other. After the sale defendant made another contract with the former owner of the property, whereby he was to be paid his commission in installments as certain payments on the purchase price were made. Opposed to this was the testimony solely of defendant, who testified that, while the others asked him if he was to get a commission, he simply answered them that it was none of their business. The court accepted the evidence on the part of plaintiff.

The law as applied to such a situation is well settled, and no extended discussion of it is necessary. Each partner is the agent of the partnership as to all matters coming within the scope of the relationship, and it is an elementary principle of equity that an agent may not make any profit for himself in a transaction in behalf of his principal. Where parties enter into an agreement of partnership or association for the purchase of property for the common benefit, each partner or associate occupies a fiduciary relationship to the others in all matters pertaining to the partnership enterprise. In the purchase of the property for the partnership or association each one of the partners or associates is precluded from making any secret separate profit out of the transaction, and, when one of them does make such a secret profit, it constitutes a fraud upon the others, and he is accountable in a suit at law or in equity, as the transaction requires, for such profits. The facts as found by the court here show just such conduct on the part of defendant as these rules apply to, and he was properly held accountable by the court for one-half of the secret profits made by him in the transaction. Section 2330, Civ. Code; King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628; Barry v. Bennett, 45 Cal. 80; Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 Pac. 486; Lomita Land & Water Co. v. ## PEOPLE v. LAWSON. (Cr. 2117.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 10, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=1023(13)—APPEAL ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL.
No appeal lies from orders denying motion for new trial.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=1023(8)—APPEAL ORDER DENYING MOTION IN ARREST.
No appeal lies from order denying motion in arrest of judgment.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1159(2) — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—REVIEW.
Evidence which furnishes sufficient legal support for the conclusion of the jury cannot be rejected by an appellate tribunal as being untrue, the question of its weight being solely for the jury and the trial judge.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1034 — NEW TRIAL — TIME FOR PREPARING AFFIDAVITS.
Although defendant at time of making a motion for new trial asked for 10 days in which to prepare and present affidavits, he cannot be heard to complain that court allowed him only 6 days, where court stated that any further application for continuance would receive consideration at time set for hearing, and defendant made no further request for a continuance.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜956(2) — MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—AFFIDAVIT.
Suggestion of defendant's counsel after court made order denying motion for new trial that he could produce newly discovered evidence was properly disregarded, it not being accompanied by any affidavit.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜981(2) — PRONOUNCEMENT OF JUDGMENT—INSANITY OF DEFENDANT—DETERMINATION.
The sole object of a proceeding under Pen. Code, §§ 1191, 1367, et seq., is to determine, not whether defendant was insane at the time of the commission of the crime, but whether he was insane when arraigned for judgment.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜981(2) — INSANITY OF DEFENDANT—DETERMINATION.
Defendant held to have been allowed sufficient opportunity to procure evidence as to his mental condition in proceeding under Pen. Code, §§ 1191, 1367, et seq., for determination of question of sanity after verdict of guilty, but before judgment.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜981(2)—SANITY OF DEFENDANT—BURDEN OF PROOF.
In proceeding under Pen. Code, §§ 1191, 1367, et seq., to determine defendant's sanity after verdict of guilty, but before judgment, defense had burden of showing that defendant's mind was in such condition that he did not rightly comprehend his own condition with reference to the proceedings against him, and that he was then unable to present in a rational manner any defense.

9. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1177 — ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION—HARMLESS ERROR.
Whether court, in proceeding to determine sanity of defendant after verdict, erred in instructing that three-fourths of the jury might render a verdict as to sanity will not be determined; it affirmatively appearing that all 12 jurors concurred.

10. JURY ⊜136(2)—PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES—NUMBER—SANITY OF DEFENDANT—"SPECIAL PROCEEDING."
Proceedings under Pen. Code, § 1367 et seq., and section 1221 et seq., to determine defendant's sanity, are "special proceedings" of a civil nature, to which Pen. Code, § 1070, relative to number of peremptory challenges, does not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Proceeding.]

11. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜822(9) — ERRONEOUS CHARGE.
In proceeding to determine sanity of defendant, an instruction that verdict of guilty establishes beyond question defendant's sanity at time of commission of offense, while inapplicable, held without prejudice, when read with other instructions bearing on the subject.

12. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜981(2) — SANITY — INSTRUCTION.
Instruction that defense of insanity should be examined with great care was applicable in a proceeding to determine defendant's sanity after verdict, but before judgment.

13. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1172(6)—ABSTRACT INSTRUCTION—HARMLESS ERROR.
Instruction that "it is a presumption of law that an unlawful act was done with an unlawful intent," although having no proper place in proceeding to determine defendant's sanity, was without prejudice; instruction being a mere abstract statement.

14. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜981(2)—INSANITY—DETERMINATION—EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE.
In proceeding to determine sanity of defendant after verdict of guilty, but before judgment, evidence given by defendant on trial was admissible.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Urban R. Lawson was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals from the judgment, the order denying his motion for a new trial, the order denying his motion in arrest of judgment, and the adjudication of sanity made before judgment. Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed, and other appeals dismissed.

Benjamin F. Wulff, of Oakland, and Karl F. Kennedy, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Ezra W. Decoto, Dist. Atty., and F. P. Wittshen, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. [1, 2] The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree. His motion for a new trial was subsequently denied, as also was a motion in arrest of judgment. Upon being arraigned for judgment it was suggested that he was then insane, and that judgment should therefore be deferred. The trial court ordered the question of his sanity tried (sections 1201 and 1368–1370, Pen. Code), and a trial by jury was had. The jury returned a verdict finding him to be sane, whereupon judgment of death was pronounced. Defendant appeals from the judgment, the order denying his motion for a new trial, the order denying his motion in arrest of judgment, and the adjudication of sanity made before judgment. No appeal lies from either of the last two orders.

[3] Upon the trial for murder, the defense of insanity was not interposed. Apparently there was no suggestion that defendant was not sane, and the defense was that the homicide was committed either in self-defense or under such circumstances as to be excusable as a homicide committed by accident and misfortune. The principal claim on this appeal in so far as the conviction is concerned is that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict of guilty. A careful examination of the record forces us to the conclusion that this claim cannot be held to be well based, and that we have here simply the ordinary case of a conflict in the evidence which has been resolved against the defendant by jury and trial judge. The evidence of Mrs. Margaret Wood is not of such a nature that it can be rejected by an appellate tribunal as being untrue. It furnishes sufficient legal support for the conclusion of the jury. The claim of appellant in this connection really is that her testimony was so thoroughly discredited as to certain parts, and was so inherently improbable as to other parts, that it should be disregarded. In the light of the record we cannot say that her testimony as to what occurred at the time of the fatal encounter was inherently improbable, and it should be needless to say that the question of the weight to be accorded this evidence was one solely for the jury and trial judge.

[4] The verdict was rendered October 3, 1917. At the request of defendant's counsel October 5, 1917, was fixed as the time for judgment. At this time defendant made a motion for a new trial on various grounds, including that of newly discovered evidence, and asked for 10 days in which to prepare and present affidavits as to this ground. After considerable discussion the court allowed defendant 6 days for this purpose, continuing the hearing to October 11th. In so doing the court substantially stated that any application for a further continuance would receive consideration at that time. On the last-named date, when the matter came on for further hearing, no request whatever for further continuance was made, and there was no suggestion that further time was desired to procure any affidavits. Neither on that day nor before was there any suggestion as to the name of any witness who would give newly discovered evidence, or the nature of any such evidence. Counsel for defendant stated that they had no affidavits to present, and the motion was submitted for decision. It is now claimed that the court erred to the prejudice of defendant in granting only 6 days instead of 10 within which to present his motion for a new trial. Under the circumstances it is clear that in the absence of any request for a further continuance on October 11, 1917, defendant cannot be heard to complain of the action of the trial court in this regard.

[5] On October 19, 1917, after the verdict of sanity, hereinafter discussed, was rendered, the trial court again made an order denying the motion for new trial. The suggestion of counsel, made after the making of this order, to the effect that he could produce, if given the opportunity, newly discovered evidence going to the question of the sanity of defendant at the time of the commission of the crime, was not accompanied by any affidavit whatever, and the trial court was not called upon to pay any attention whatever thereto.

On October 5, 1917, after the making of the motion for a new trial, on the mere suggestion of counsel for defendant that there was some doubt as to the present sanity of the defendant, the trial court ordered the question of his sanity to be submitted to a jury. Pen. Code, §§ 1191, 1368, et seq. The record is somewhat uncertain as to whether it was the opinion of the court that there was doubt as to defendant's sanity, but we will assume that this was so in view of its order. The court fixed October 8, 1917, for the commencement of the insanity hearing, and on that day the trial was commenced. On October 19, 1917, the trial was concluded, the jury rendering a verdict that defendant was sane. Thereupon the motion in arrest of judgment was denied, and judgment pronounced. Many errors are alleged in connection with this insanity investigation.

[6] It may properly be stated at the outset that the sole object of this proceeding, in view of our law, was to determine, not whether the defendant was insane at the time of the commission of the crime of which he had been convicted, but whether, when arraigned for judgment, he was then insane, within the meaning of our statute providing that "a person cannot be tried, adjudged to punishment, or punished for a public offense, while he is insane" (section 1367, Pen. Code), and further that, "if * * * when defendant is brought up for judgment on conviction a doubt arises as to the sanity of the defendant the court must order the question as to his sanity to be submitted to a jury; and the * * * pronouncing of the judgment must be suspended until the question is determined by their verdict." Section 1368, Pen. Code. By subsequent sections it is provided that if the jury finds him insane, the judgment must be suspended "until he becomes sane," the defendant committed to a state hospital until that time, and that when he becomes sane he shall be brought to judgment. Sections 1370, 1372, Pen. Code. If the jury finds him to be sane, judgment must be pronounced. Section 1371, Pen. Code. As is shown in Re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 330, 61 Pac. 1120, 50 L. R. A. 378, these provisions are simply a statutory affirmation of common-law rules forbidding proceedings against one who is mentally deranged to such an extent as to be incapable of appreciating his situation and making any legal defense that he may have. In the case just cited this court approved the test declared in Freeman v. People, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 9, 47 Am. Dec. 216, as follows:

"If, therefore, a person arraigned for a crime, is capable of understanding the nature and object of the proceedings * * * against him; if he rightly comprehends his own condition in reference to such proceedings, and can conduct his defense in a rational manner, he is, for the purpose of being tried (or, as here, for the purposes of judgment) to be deemed sane, although on some other subjects his mind may be deranged or unsound."

[7] Complaint is made that the trial court refused to allow counsel for defendant sufficient opportunity to procure evidence as to defendant's mental condition. As we have said, on October 5th the court fixed October 8th for the commencement of the insanity trial, and the trial was not concluded until October 19th. We have read most carefully the record of this trial, and believe it plainly apparent therefrom that every reasonable opportunity was given counsel to make good by proof his suggestions that defendant was insane. It is perfectly apparent from the record that the attitude of the learned trial judge was such that at no time during the trial would he have refused to give counsel an opportunity to produce any substantial evidence bearing on the question of the defendant's then mental capacity, if a proper showing of the existence of such evidence was made. We say this notwithstanding a cursory remark of the judge in one of the numerous colloquies with counsel to the effect that "it is true, we cannot send East and get it" (evidence). At no time was there any proper showing of the existence of any such evidence on the part of any one outside of the state, which could be obtained. The full extent to which counsel went in this behalf was to exhibit a telegram received from the superintendent of the insane asylum at Madison, Ind., in response to an inquiry sent him by counsel on October 6th, saying:

"Lawson defective beyond doubt, unable to give full statement from memory. You consult prison authorities Michigan City."

This statement fell far short of being one to the effect that Lawson's mind was in such a condition that he could be held to be insane within the meaning of the laws declaring an insane person incapable of committing crime, and precluding the pronouncing of judgment upon an insane person. No formal application for the taking of the testimony of the superintendent was made to the court, nor was there at any time any application for a continuance based upon affidavit, upon the ground that if a continuance was granted any specified testimony could probably be obtained. It was quite apparent that counsel had no knowledge of any expert witness who would give evidence favorable to defendant upon the issue to be submitted, and that he was simply groping in the dark, hoping that something might some time be found to assist the defendant. We have no disposition to criticize counsel for his earnest effort to indefinitely postpone execution of the judgment, but we are satisfied that there was no error in the action of the trial court in this regard.

[8] The evidence on the question of insanity was amply sufficient to support the conclusion that the defendant was sane, within the meaning of the law applicable. That he was not perfectly poised mentally may be freely conceded. Such, however, is not the test. There was no substantial showing to the effect that his mind was in such a condition that he did not rightly comprehend his own condition with reference to the proceedings against him that he had been convicted of a crime punishable by death, and was before the court for the purposes of judgment on that conviction, or that he was then unable to present in a rational manner any defense that he might have, either on motion for new trial or to the pronouncing of judgment. Under the well-settled rule in this state it was incumbent on the defense to show this by a preponderance of evidence. The burden of proof was upon him.

[9] On the oral argument complaint was made of the instruction given to the jury, to the effect that three-fourths of the jury might render a verdict in such a proceeding as this. It is needless to determine as to the correctness of this instruction, in view of the fact that the record affirmatively shows that the verdict was concurred in by all of the 12 jurors.

[10] The trial court refused to allow defendant more than 4 peremptory challenges in impaneling a jury for the insanity investigation. Based upon the provision of the Penal Code relating to the formation of trial juries in criminal cases, it is claimed that the defendant was entitled to 20 peremptory challenges, section 1070 providing as follows:

"If the offense charged be punishable with death, or with imprisonment in the state prison for life, the defendant is entitled to twenty and the state to ten peremptory challenges. On a trial for any other offense the defendant is entitled to ten and the state to five peremptory challenges."

Manifestly these sections have reference solely to trials for criminal offenses, by which the question of the guilt or innocence of a party charged with a public offense is to be determined. The proceeding here did not in any way involve the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant of a criminal offense. That question had been determined on the trial, which had resulted in a verdict of guilty. In this proceeding insanity could not be set up as a defense to the charge of murder, but could be urged solely as a reason why further proceedings on the verdict should be stayed pending a restoration to sanity. The proceedings provided by the Penal Code for the determination of the question of present sanity in order to determine whether a defendant possesses sufficient mental capacity to be tried, or having been tried and convicted, to be adjudged to punishment (section 1367 et seq.), or, having been adjudged to suffer death, is sane within the meaning of our law precluding execution of such a judgment upon an insane person (section 1221 et seq., Pen. Code), are special proceedings of a civil nature. They simply provide a lawful method by which it may be ascertained whether the defendant in a criminal cause is so afflicted mentally that the proceedings against him shall be suspended until he is in condition to be tried, or adjudged to punishment or executed. The sole object is to determine his present mental status. Is he now an insane person? Such an investigation has none of the elements of a criminal proceeding. The Legislature has seen fit to provide that when such a question sufficiently arises with reference to a defendant in a criminal proceeding it shall be submitted to "a jury" for determination, and the criminal proceeding arrested until a determination is had. This investigation is entirely collateral to the criminal proceeding. There is nothing in the provisions relative thereto that makes applicable the provisions of the sections of the Penal Code relative to the formation of juries for the trial of persons on charges of having committed a crime, and we are satisfied that they have no application.

As to certain rulings of the trial court, counsel have contented themselves with simply stating in their brief that the court erred, without giving any reason whatever for the claim. We have examined the record as to these, and find no warrant for holding that prejudicial error was committed in any of these rulings. This observation refers to the alleged errors of law numbered 2, 3, 4 and 10.

[11] Having first clearly and at some length correctly instructed the jury that the issue before them was not whether the defendant was insane at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, but whether he was now insane, and as to what constituted the test of insanity by which they were to be governed, the court went on to tell them what the standard of responsibility would have been on the trial for murder, ending this portion of the charge by saying:

"When a verdict of guilty is rendered against a defendant charged with crime, such verdict establishes beyond question, so far as these proceedings are concerned, the sanity of the defendant at the time of the commission of the acts charged against him. And the test for your guidance here is as first above stated."

The statement as to what would have been the standard of responsibility on the trial for murder was, of course, inapplicable in the investigation then being had, but we cannot see that it could have been prejudicial. The jury were plainly enough told that such was not the test by which they were to be governed. The concluding sentence of the portion quoted clearly enough referred to the proper test fully, accurately, and emphatically stated, and there could have been no misunderstanding on the part of the jury as to that. The remainder of the quoted portion, if taken as meaning that in determining the question of present sanity the jury must accept it as established by the verdict that the defendant was in fact sane at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, was, of course, incorrect. The verdict of guilty proved nothing at all in so far as the issue of insanity to be determined by this jury was concerned. It is clear from the context that the court did not intend any such meaning, but that, having stated the standard of responsibility that would have existed on the trial for murder if the defense of insanity had been made, was simply explaining that this jury had nothing to do with that question, i. e., the question whether the defendant was not guilty of the offense of which he had been convicted by reason of insanity, as the question of his guilt or innocence was settled by the verdict on the murder trial. Consideration of the instructions bearing on this matter has satisfied us that the jury could not have been misled by the language we have quoted into failing to give due weight to evidence offered by defendant and admitted by the court to show insanity prior to the commission of the crime, or into regarding the verdict on the murder trial as evidence of defendant's sanity at that time.

[12] The instruction that a plea of insanity was sometimes resorted to in cases where aggravated crimes have been committed under circumstances which render hopeless all other means of evading punishment, and that while such a defense ought to be viewed as a full bar to punishment after conviction when satisfactorily established, it should be examined with great care lest an ingenious counterfeit of the malady furnish protection to guilt, is a cautionary instruction that has been constantly given on trials for criminal offenses in this state, and it has never been held to be cause for reversal. It was equally applicable in this proceeding.

[13] The instruction that "it is a presumption of law that an unlawful act was done with an unlawful intent" had no proper place in the charge, but it was a mere abstract statement of law that could not have been prejudicial to the defendant.

We are unable to attribute to the question asked by the trial judge of Mr. Murphy, a witness for the defendant, as to the apparent attitude of the defendant regarding the shooting, any prejudicial effect whatever. The same is true as to certain observations by the trial court in colloquies with counsel as to the manner in which counsel for defendant had conducted the case on the trial, and one that "There were times when he (defendant) would show animation in what was going on; put his elbows on the table and look at the jury; apparently be sane entirely." The jury were emphatically instructed that if the judge in colloquy with counsel had suggested that certain facts exist or have been proven, they should disregard such suggestions, and be governed solely by the evidence actually introduced, and there is nothing in the circumstances to warrant us in concluding that the jury may have been in any degree influenced by any statement by the trial judge to counsel.

[14] The evidence given by the defendant on the trial was admissible in evidence on this proceeding as tending to show his mental condition at the time of the trial, a matter material to the question of his present sanity. The objections made by defendant to this go solely to the question of the weight to be accorded to the same.

There is no other matter requiring discussion. We have examined the whole record, and find nothing indicating that defendant did not have a fair trial on the question of his present sanity.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed. The other appeals are dismissed.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION CO. v. PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 8513.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1918. Rehearing Denied Sept. 10, 1918.)

1. STATES ⊂=123—USE OF FUNDS.
The provision for a contribution by the state to the exposition made by proviso to Const. art. 4, § 22, as amended in 1910, and the statute and contract in pursuance thereof, must be construed most favorably to the state.
2. STATES ⊂=93—CONTRACTS.
The authority of the Exposition Commission created by the proviso to Const. art. 4, § 22, to make contracts securing to the state a proportionate share in the returns from the exposition, is a qualified power beyond which the commission cannot go in so far as such qualifications are favorable to the state.
3. STATES ⊂=93—CONTRACTS.
The Exposition Commission created by the proviso to Const. art. 4, § 22, did not have power to make a contract which does not entitle the state to share "proportionately with the contributors" to the exposition in the returns, or a contract which would give the state less than its proportionate share.
4. STATES ⊂=123—USE OF FUNDS.
The only contributors to be taken into account in determining the state's proportionate share in the returns from the exposition provided for by the proviso of Const. art. 4, § 22, are those who are themselves entitled to share, those who may lawfully share "with" the state and the exposition company in the returns.
5. STATES ⊂=100—CONTRACTS.
Clause in the contract between the state Exposition Commission and the exposition company requiring all contributions to be counted in ascertaining the proportion, and all of them to be excluded in the division except those of the state and of the company, is void as contrary to the proviso to Const. art. 4, § 22.

Angellotti, C. J., and Sloss, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Company against the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Commission of the State of California. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Brittain & Kuhl, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an agreed case submitted to the superior court for the purpose of obtaining a determination of the proportion to which the state is entitled of the surplus of assets remaining for distribution on the final settlement of the affairs of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The length of the names of the parties and their similarity tends to verbosity and confusion. For the sake of brevity and clearness, we will hereafter call the plaintiff the company and the defendant the commission. The company claims that the state's share of such surplus assets is only five-sixteenths thereof. The commission insists that the state is entitled to five-elevenths thereof. The court below decided that the state's share was only five-sixteenths and gave judgment accordingly. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

For the purpose of aiding in carrying on said exposition, the company, through the subscribers for its stock, contributed, or agreed to contribute, the sum of $6,122,450, of which the sum of $5,594,317.59 has been actually paid in; the state of California contributed out of the state Panama-Pacific International Exposition fund the sum of $4,941,556.26; and the city and county of San Francisco contributed $5,000,000. For the purposes of the decision as to the proportion, the agreement of submission states that the contributions of said parties may be deemed to be $6,000,000 by the company, $5,000,000 by the state, and $5,000,000 by San Francisco, making $16,000,000 in all. The solution of the case depends on the meaning of the Constitution relating to the state contribution, the statute passed in pursuance thereof, and the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant under which the contribution was made.

Section 22 of article 4 of the Constitution provides that:

"No money shall ever be appropriated or drawn from the state treasury for the purpose or benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution not under the exclusive management and control of the state as a state institution, nor shall any grant or donation of property ever be made thereto by the state."

[1] The authority for the contribution of the state to the exposition is found in a proviso added to this section, by an amendment adopted in the year 1910. This proviso declares that a state tax should be levied to raise a fund of $5,000,000 to be used in establishing, maintaining, and supporting the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to be given over for that purpose to a commission consisting of the Governor and four other persons to be appointed by him, who should have the exclusive charge and control of the fund. It further declared that the Legislature should pass all laws necessary to carry out its provisions, including the times, manner, terms, and conditions at and upon which such moneys could be drawn and the disposition to be made of any of the fund or property obtained therewith, remaining at the close of the exposition. The proviso concluded as follows:

"The commission herein created is authorized and directed to make such proper contracts with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of California on the 22d day of March, 1910, as will entitle the state of California to share proportionately with the contributors to the said Panama-Pacific International Exposition in the returns from the holding of said exposition at the city and county of San Francisco."

In matters of this character all intendments are in favor of the sovereign power. The rule of interpretation is that if any ambiguity exist in the language of the proviso or of the laws or contracts enacted and entered into in pursuance thereof, because of uncertainty in the language or of conflicting provisions in the different parts thereof, and two or more interpretations equally reasonable are deducible therefrom, that one is to be taken which is favorable to the state, rather than either of those which are against it.

[2] Where a public commission is granted power over property of the state, and the language of the grant contains terms which qualify the power, the qualifications are to be construed as conditions beyond which the grantee of the power cannot go, in so far as such qualifications are favorable to the state. The last clause of the proviso must be interpreted by the application of these rules.

[3] The commission is directed to make "proper contracts" for a certain purpose; that is, such contracts "as will entitle the state of California to share proportionately with the contributors to the said Panama-Pacific International Exposition in the returns from the holding of said exposition." This language is mandatory (see article 4, § 22), and it requires that such contracts shall be of a character which will secure the object expressed. It limits the power of the commission to that extent. The commission did not have power to make a contract which does not entitle the state to share "proportionately with the contributors," or a contract which would give to the state less than its proportionate share of the return. The company is, of course, entitled to all the returns from the exposition, except so far as the law or its own contracts may have otherwise provided. It is agreed that San Francisco donated its $5,000,000 outright, without exacting the condition that it should have any share of the returns. It was a contributor, but it was not a contributor entitled to a share or interest in the returns. Hence, neither the state nor the company is required to share the surplus with San Francisco. The proviso above quoted makes it necessary as a condition of the proposed donation by the state that the state should share "proportionately with the other contributors" in the surplus. If one person shares "with" another in a fund, both must receive a part of it; otherwise there is no sharing between them, or of one with the other. One cannot share with another when the other neither takes, nor is entitled to take, any part whatever thereof.

[4] If one contributor is not entitled to any share and all the contributions are counted, in ascertaining the proportion, and all the returns except those due to the state by that proportion are paid over to the one other contributor who is entitled to share, the state would be sharing with a part of the contributors, but it would not be sharing with those contributors, "proportionately," and would not be sharing at all with the excluded contributor. It seems necessarily to follow that the only contributors to be taken into account, in determining the proportionate share of the state, are those who are themselves entitled to share, those who may lawfully share "with" the state and the company in the returns. This conclusion is also indicated by a consideration of other attending facts and circumstances. The company was a stock company with an authorized capital of $10,000,000. Its contribution was to be made wholly with money obtained by sales of its capital stock. Its stockholders were the real contributors. When the constitutional amendment was framed and adopted, it was expected that many persons would subscribe and pay for stock of the company, and that by that means a large part of the fund needed for carrying on the exposition would be raised, as, in fact, it was. These subscribers, and they alone of all contributors, would be entitled by law to the surplus returns as dividends. It is reasonable to suppose that, in framing the clause in the Constitution securing to the state a proportionate share in the returns, these things were in mind, and that the only object was to place the state on an equal footing with the stockholders, in the event that there should be a surplus to divide, and that it was these contributors that were referred to as those with whom the state should share.

[5] The statute passed by the Legislature in pursuance of this proviso is not substantially different from the provision of the Constitution. It empowers the commission to make contracts to insure to the state its proportionate share in the returns from the exposition, and to do all things deemed advisable to enable the state to receive such proportionate share. Stats. 1911, p. 273. The contract executed by the commission with the company also provides, substantially in the language of the Constitution, that the state of California shall be entitled to share proportionately with the contributors to the exposition in the returns from the holding of said exposition. But it concludes with the specific provision that:

The state "shall receive in any distribution of property, dividends or surplus and out of any remaining property or assets of said exposition, an amount bearing the same proportion to the total amount of said assets, property, dividends or surplus as the total contributions of the state of California to the exposition shall bear to the sum total of all contributions from all sources to said exposition."

This passage, of course, would require all the contributions to be counted in ascertaining the proportion, and all of them to be excluded in the division except those of the state and of the company. The state would be entitled, in that event, to only five-sixteenths of the total surplus; and, as the company is entitled by law to all the remainder, it would follow that the state would receive five-sixteenths, while the company would receive eleven-sixteenths. The company and the state would not by this method "share proportionately" in the returns, according to their contributions, nor proportionately according to all the contributions. The state would not be sharing with all the contributors, proportionately or otherwise, nor would the company. The effect of this clause of the contract was directly contrary to the provisions of the Constitution as we have interpreted them, and the consequence is that it must be declared void, on the ground that the commission exceeded its power in making it. Our conclusion is that the state is entitled to only five-elevenths of the net returns.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. FOWLER. (Cr. 2136.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 3, 1918.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ⊂=110(17) —MURDER—STATUTORY LANGUAGE.

An indictment for murder is sufficient if it charges the crime in the language of the statute, and it need not set forth the manner and means by which the alleged murder was committed.

2. HOMICIDE ⊂=130—SUFFICIENCY OF INDICTMENT—MURDER IN FIRST DEGREE.

An indictment for murder in the first degree, alleging that defendant did "of his malice aforethought" kill and murder, etc., sufficiently stated that crime was committed with deliberation and premeditation.

3. JURY ⊂=131(15)—EXAMINATION OF JURORS —SCOPE.

An objection to a question by defendant of a juror on voir dire, "Could you give the same credit to his testimony (defendant's) were he to go upon the stand, his interest in the result being taken into consideration, that you could give to any other witness?" was properly sustained.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=532(1) — CONFESSIONS — ADMISSION IN EVIDENCE.

When the question is raised whether confession was voluntarily made, it is duty of judge to hear evidence on the subject before allowing proof of such confession, and to admit the proof only in the event he finds it to have been voluntary.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=1158(4) — ADMITTING CONFESSION IN EVIDENCE — QUESTION FOR COURT.

Where evidence was conflicting on whether confession was voluntarily made, reviewing court will uphold decision of trial judge in admitting confession in evidence.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=781(5)—CONFESSIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In criminal case, where evidence as to whether confession was voluntarily made is not positive and certain, it is error to refuse to instruct jury that they have a right to reconsider evidence given upon the question; the court having admitted the confession.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=824(5)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUEST—CONFESSION.

Where evidence on question of whether a confession was voluntarily made was not positive and certain, failure to instruct jury that they might reconsider evidence on that point was not reversible error, in the absence of a request.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=406(1), 516—"CONFESSION" DISTINGUISHED FROM "ADMISSION"—PRELIMINARY PROOF.

An admission is distinguished from a confession, whose admission depends upon preliminary proof that it was voluntarily made, by fact that the term "admission" relates to matters of fact that do not involve a criminal intent, and a "confession" is an acknowledgment of actual guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Admission; Confession.]

9. HOMICIDE ⊂=151(3)—BURDEN OF PROOF—JUSTIFICATION.

Pen. Code, § 1105, providing that, when in murder case commission of homicide is proved, burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, justification or excuse, devolves upon defendant, does not by reason of an admission that he killed deceased, but did so in self-defense, throw burden upon defendant of proving justification by additional evidence; such admission not being a confession.

10. WITNESSES ⊂=226 — THREATS — SCOPE OF EXAMINATION.

In homicide case, scope of an examination concerning a previous altercation, wherein defendant made a threat, rests largely in the discretion of trial court, as enough of the circumstances must be given to enable the jury to understand the purport and purpose of the threat.

11. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=822(6)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a homicide case, an instruction as to premeditation to constitute murder in the first degree which omitted to state that killing must "be the result of" a concurrence of the will was cured by a statement in another part of the instruction that "the intent to kill must be the result of deliberate premeditation, and must be founded upon a pre-existent reflection, and not upon a sudden heat of passion sufficient to preclude the idea of deliberation."

12. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=767—INSTRUCTIONS.

Under Const. art. 6, § 19, prohibiting charge with respect to matters of fact, court was authorized to state the testimony, if uncontradicted, and declare the law on any subject involved in the case.

13. HOMICIDE ⊂=5 — DEATH — INTERVENING CAUSES.

Where defendant struck deceased with intent to kill him, and left him lying in a public road in the night, the claim that death might possibly have been caused by an automobile running over the unconscious body was not sufficient to exonerate defendant.

14. Criminal Law ⊜825(3)—Instructions —Request.

In a homicide case, where Pen. Code, § 197, was read to the jury on the subject of self-defense, even though the word "mortal" in subdivision 3, is a misprint for "mutual," it cannot be contended that it was erroneous as misleading, where no request was made to explain the meaning of the subdivision.

15. Criminal Law ⊜822(8)—Instructions as a Whole.

An instruction, "In order to justify homicide on the ground of self-defense, the danger * * * must be * * * so urgent that there is no reasonable mode of escape or of preventing the death or injury except to take life, or the slayer must have reasonable grounds to believe that such is the case," was not misleading, where the other instructions relating to same subject did not require defendant, at his peril, to correctly decide that danger was urgent.

16. Criminal Law ⊜822(1)—Instructions.

All instructions relating to same subject must be considered together in determining effect of each.

17. Homicide ⊜156 — Deliberation and Premeditation—Flight.

In a homicide case where defendant was charged with first degree murder, a requested instruction "that the flight of accused does not tend to prove deliberation or premeditation" did not correctly state the law.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; John Hancock, Judge.

A. O. Fowler was convicted of murder in the first degree, and, from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appealed to the District Court of Appeals. Such court being unable to agree, cause was transferred to Supreme Court for decision. Affirmed.

Walter F. Lynch, of Stockton, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and C. P. Rendon, Asst. Dist. Atty., of Stockton, for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant appealed to the District Court of Appeal of the Third District from a judgment of conviction of the crime of murder of the first degree, the verdict fixing his punishment at imprisonment for life, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The justices of that court were unable to agree, and the cause was thereupon transferred to this court for decision.

[1] 1. The information charges that at a time and place stated, the defendant did "willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder one Albert Duree, a human being, then and there being, contrary," etc. The appellant claims that the information is defective for the reason that it does not set forth the manner and means by which the alleged murder was committed. We had supposed that this objection had been so completely disposed of that it never would be raised again. Ever since the decision of People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 200, 208, it has been the established law of this state that an indictment for murder is sufficient in this respect if it charges the crime in the language of the statute. See, also, People v. Alviso, 55 Cal. 230; People v. Hyndman, 99 Cal. 3, 33 Pac. 782; People v. Witt, 170 Cal. 107, 148 Pac. 928. There are many other cases, but it is unnecessary to cite them.

[2] Objection is also made to the form of the information on the ground that it does not state that the crime was committed with deliberation and premeditation. The statement in the information that the defendant did "of his malice aforethought" kill and murder Duree is equivalent to an averment that the act was committed with deliberation and premeditation.

[3] 2. Upon the examination of jurors on their voir dire, counsel for defendant asked a juror this question:

"Could you give the same credit to his testimony (referring to the defendant), were he to go upon the stand, his interest in the result being taken into consideration, that you could give to any other witness?"

The objection that this was not a proper question was sustained. This ruling is assigned as error. The defendant had no right to ask this question of the proposed juror. The defendant's interest in the result was only one of the things to be taken into consideration. His demeanor on the stand, his manner of testifying, the character of his testimony, his appearance and possibly other circumstances were all to be considered in determining the weight of his testimony. The juror could not answer the question properly upon the premises laid in the question. If the defendant wished to ascertain whether or not the juror had any bias against him which would prevent him from giving the defendant a fair trial, he should have gone about it in some other way.

[4, 5] 3. A statement concerning the homicide, made by the defendant in the presence of the sheriff, district attorney, and others, soon after his arrest, was taken down by a shorthand reporter, and was introduced in evidence at the trial. The defendant, assuming that it was a confession, insists that the evidence was not sufficient to show that the statement was voluntary. The claim is that the evidence shows that he was induced to make the statement by a promise that it would be better for him, and by an intimation that he would not be so severely punished, if he would make a statement of his connection with the homicide and clear it up. It is the duty of the judge of the trial court, when the question is raised whether or not a confession of the defendant was voluntarily made, to hear evidence on the subject, before allowing proof of such confession; and to admit the proof only in the event that he finds it to have been voluntary. He had the right to determine the fact from the evidence and to make a ruling accordingly. His decision of the question, where the evidence is conflicting, is subject to the universal rule, applicable to cases on appeal, that the reviewing court will uphold the decision if there is substantial evidence to support it. Here the evidence on the subject was conflicting, and there was substantial evidence to support the conclusion that no inducements were held out to the defendant to elicit the statement that he made, and that it was a voluntary statement. Hence we cannot say that the ruling was erroneous.

[6] 4. The appellant claims that the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury that they had the right to reconsider the evidence given upon the question whether the statement of the defendant introduced in evidence was voluntary or not. The evidence was not so positive and certain on this question that it should not have been left to the jury to reconsider the same, upon their final consideration of the case. If the defendant has properly preserved the question, and the instructions are deficient in that respect, unquestionably there was error in the proceedings below in this particular, if the statement was a confession.

[7] When the court made its ruling admitting the statement in evidence, nothing was said which could have been understood by the jury as a direction that they could not in their final deliberations reconsider the question. Nor was there anything in the instructions given at the close of the trial which purported to take this question from the jury. They were instructed that they were the judges of the value and effect of evidence and of the credibility of the witnesses. So far as the instructions were concerned the matter was left open for their consideration, but there was no instruction explicitly directing them that they could reconsider the question. A complete answer to the objection, however, assuming that the statement was a confession, is that the defendant did not request any instruction on the subject. If he was relying on such reconsideration by the jury and desired an explicit direction to them that they had the power to redetermine the same and reject the statement of the defendant as evidence, if from the evidence on the subject they believed that it was not voluntarily made, he should have asked an instruction to that effect. There are numerous decisions on similar questions holding that, where such an instruction is not asked, the defendant cannot assign the mere failure of the court to give such instruction as error sufficient for reversal. Such decisions have been made with regard to an instruction informing the jury as to the limited purpose for which a particular item of evidence was admitted (People v. Gray, 66 Cal. 276, 5 Pac. 240; People v. Collins, 48 Cal. 278; People v. Northey, 77 Cal. 631, 19 Pac. 865, 20 Pac. 129); the failure to instruct the jury that the venue must be proven (People v. Marks, 72 Cal. 46, 13 Pac. 149); the failure to instruct the jury that they could not consider the defendant's failure to testify, in arriving at a verdict (People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 513, 15 Pac. 102); a failure to instruct that if the jury found the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree they might relieve him from the death penalty (People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 128, 22 Pac. 125); the failure of the court to instruct the jury that they should not consider evidence which had been admitted but which, on motion of the defendant, had been stricken out (People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 482, 24 Pac. 32); the failure to give an instruction defining the meaning of the term "reasonable doubt" (People v. Christensen, 85 Cal. 570, 24 Pac. 888; People v. Ahern, 93 Cal. 518, 29 Pac. 49); the failure to inform the jury that they could find the defendant guilty of the lesser degree of a crime, when the crime includes two degrees (People v. Hite, 135 Cal. 76, 67 Pac. 57; People v. Arnold, 116 Cal. 687, 48 Pac. 803; People v. Bailey, 142 Cal. 434, 76 Pac. 49); and the failure to define the crime of larceny from the person as distinguished from larceny in general (People v. Appleton, 120 Cal. 252, 52 Pac. 582). We find no ground upon which to distinguish the case at bar from the foregoing decisions, and we think the same rule applies.

[8] A confession, in criminal law, is an admission or statement, by a person accused of a crime, to the effect that he is guilty thereof. "An admission is distinguished from a confession by the fact that the term 'admission,' in criminal matters, relates to matters of fact that do not involve a criminal intent, and a 'confession' is an acknowledgment of guilt." 2 Wharton on Crim. Ev. (10th Ed.) § 622a. The author goes on to show that the term "confession" does not include admissions of mere acts of guilty conduct, or of subordinate facts that do not constitute guilt of the offense in question, the reason being that a "confession" is an "acknowledgment, in express terms, by a party in a criminal case, of the truth of the crime charged," and that it is only with respect to confessions, thus defined, that the rule prevails that preliminary proof that they were voluntary must be made before they can be admitted in evidence. Id., § 622b. This doctrine has often been declared and enforced in this state. People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 157; People v. Dennis, 39 Cal. 637; People v. Le Roy, 65 Cal. 614, 4 Pac. 649; People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 86, 45 Pac. 175; People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 32, 50 Pac. 15; People v. Miller, 122 Cal. 87, 54 Pac. 523; People v. John, 144 Cal. 286, 77 Pac. 950; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 339, 86 Pac. 671; People v. Wilkins, 158 Cal. 534, 111 Pac. 612. The matter is well illustrated by the decision in State v. Knowles, 48 Iowa, 598. Defendant was charged with forgery of a promissory note. Evidence was given that he had admitted that he wrote the name constituting the signature thereon. The court said:

"A confession implies that the matter confessed is a crime, and unless the defendant admitted that he wrote the name of Daniel Slack to the note with a fraudulent intent, his statement is not a confession, because he may have intended by such confession to imply that the act was done rightfully."

Also, in State v. Thomas, 135 Iowa, 735, 109 N. W. 900, where the defendant was charged with the murder of another by means of poison and had stated that he had given too much of the poison by mistake—the poison being also a medicine—the court said:

"Defendant's statement was not that he had unlawfully or wrongfully or with bad motive administered poison. The statement itself negatives any unlawful intent, and what is said in regard to the act cannot be separated from the accompanying declaration as to intent, so as to make the admission of the act itself a confession of crime."

See, also, State v. Abrams, 131 Iowa, 484, 108 N. W. 1041. The present case is almost identical with that of Owens v. State, 120 Ga. 298, 48 S. E. 21. The defendants were charged with murder, and, being confronted with the dead body of deceased, one of them said the deceased was himself to blame, and that, "We had to do it to save ourselves." It was held that this was not a confession, the court saying:

"Unless the statement of the defendant is broad enough to comprehend every essential element necessary to make out the case against him, it cannot be said to be an admission of guilt. * * * If the main fact is admitted with a qualifying exclusion of a necessary ingredient of the crime charged, the crime is not confessed. The qualification is a part of the admission, and both must be considered in interpreting the meaning of the statement. It would be manifestly unfair to hold a person criminally bound by a statement which admits the commission of an act and in the same breath legally justifies or excuses the same."

[9] On behalf of the defendant it is claimed that this rule is changed by the provisions of section 1105 of the Penal Code. This section is to the effect that when in a murder case the commission of the homicide by the defendant is proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse devolves upon him, unless the proof of the prosecution tends to show that the defendant was justifiable or excusable, or that the crime only amounts to manslaughter. The section does not help the defendant. Here the admission introduced in evidence constituted the proof offered by the prosecution, and it included a statement that the killing was done in self-defense; that is, that the defendant was justifiable. It did not throw the burden upon the defendant of proving the justification by additional evidence, and no inference of guilt could be drawn from the admission as made.

The so-called confession, as set forth in the brief for the defendant, is in substance an admission of the fact that defendant killed Duree by one or more blows on his head with a club, coupled with the declaration that Duree, at the time, threatened to kill defendant; that the defendant then "thought," that is, believed, that Duree had a pistol in his hands with which he was about to shoot defendant; and that with that belief defendant struck the fatal blow. Thus the statement itself would show that the killing was done by defendant in his lawful self-defense. Such an admission, as we have shown, is not a confession of the crime, or an acknowledgment of guilt thereof. It is a declaration of innocence; that no crime was committed; that the killing of Duree was a justifiable homicide and not murder or manslaughter.

[10] 5. Evidence was given that a short time prior to the homicide the defendant and Duree had a physical altercation, during which, or immediately afterwards, the defendant made a threat of physical violence against Duree. The objection was made that the witness who related the circumstance was allowed to describe too much of the details of the fight which preceded the declaration. In matters of this sort a very large discretion is vested in the trial court. Enough of the circumstances must always be given to enable the jury to understand the purport of the threat and the purpose of the defendant in making it. Witnesses cannot always be restrained to the exact proposition sought to be elicited, especially in describing the circumstances under which a threat was made, where they consist of a preceding fight. We do not think the court below transgressed its discretion in the present case.

[11] 6. Defendant complains of an instruction which he claims violates the rule stated in People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 263, 86 Pac. 187. The part of the instruction containing the objectionable clause is as follows:

"To constitute murder of the first degree * * * the killing must be the result of a deliberate premeditation. It must be formed upon a pre-existing reflection, and not upon a sudden heat of passion sufficient to preclude the idea of deliberation. There need be no appreciable space of time between the intent and the act of killing, and they must be as instantaneous as the successive thoughts of the mind. It is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by a concurrence of the will, deliberation, and premeditation on the part of the slayer, and, if such is the case, the killing is murder of the first degree, no matter how rapidly these acts of the mind may succeed each other, or how quickly they may be followed by the act of killing."

In People v. Maughs, referring to the last sentence above quoted, the court said that it should have been amended so as to read:

"It is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by, and be the result of, a concurrence of the will," etc.

—and that without the italicized words the instruction was erroneous. This case was considered in People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 739, 89 Pac. 450. The instruction there considered contained the same statement that is in the instruction here involved, that "the intent to kill must be the result of deliberate premeditation, and must be founded upon a pre-existent reflection, and not upon a sudden heat of passion sufficient to preclude the idea of deliberation." It was there held that this cured the supposed error in the omission of the italicized words. This construction of People v. Maughs received the approval of this court upon a petition for rehearing, and it sufficiently disposes of the objection here made.

[12] 7. The court gave an instruction as follows:

"In this case it is not denied that the defendant struck the blow by which the deceased received the wound in the head, but it is claimed in his behalf that he was justified in so doing, and that the act was committed in defense of his own life, or to prevent infliction upon him, by the deceased, of great bodily injury."

The claim that the statement that "the defendant struck the blow by which the deceased received the wound in the head" is an instruction on a question of fact upon which the evidence was in conflict is not sustained by the record. The defendant himself testified that he struck Duree a blow on the head with a heavy club; that it felled him to the ground; that he then left him there unconscious, supposing that he was dead. Duree was found shortly afterwards lying as he fell, with the pistol near his hand, as the defendant had arranged it to make it appear that Duree had a pistol at the time he was struck. There was no controversy or dispute at the trial over these facts. The court was authorized to state the testimony, if it was uncontradicted, and declare the law, on any subject involved in the case. Const. art. 6, § 19. The statement was appropriate as an introduction to the instructions on the law of self-defense which immediately followed it. The argument on the point really is that it was an instruction concerning the immediate cause of the death, or one which might have been so understood by the jury. The persons who discovered the body were passing along the public road in an automobile. The body, when found, lay with the head on the grass at the roadside and the feet extending out into the macadamized portion of the roadway. The driver of the automobile, Albert Due, who lived in that neighborhood, testified that the automobile wheel ran over the shoes or feet of the body, as he passed along, and at the time he at first thought it was only a wet spot in the road. It was in the nighttime, cloudy and dark. As he proceeded, it occurred to him that it might have been a man lying there, so he turned back and found him, as above stated. There was no other direct evidence on the subject. The evidence which suggested the automobile wheel theory was that of the physician who performed the autopsy on the body. He testified that there were two severe wounds on the head, caused by the impact of some blunt instrument, and that one of them was, in his opinion, broader than would be caused with the club wielded by the defendant, and that it might have been made by the wheel of an automobile. From this it is argued that the larger wound was probably caused by the wheel of the automobile of Due, or some other person, passing over Duree's head as he lay in the public road, that this wound, and not the blow of the defendant, was the immediate cause of the death, and that the court should not have said to the jury that "the defendant had struck the blow by which the deceased received the wound in the head."

[13] This, of course, would have no bearing on the question of the propriety of the statement as an introduction to the subject of the law of self-defense. The question whether or not the blow was given in self-defense must be determined by a consideration of the circumstances as they existed at the time the blow was struck, without regard to any subsequent injury as the cause of death. To the suggestion that the statement in the instruction may have been understood by the jury to indicate that the court believed that the blow of the defendant was the cause of the death and not the injury, if any, from the wheel of the automobile, the answer is that in that aspect the instruction is not injurious to the defendant. There is no evidence, and no claim, that the automobile was purposely driven over the body. If it was the cause of the death, it was not a felonious cause. If it were, the defendant might not have been responsible for the homicide. It was the natural and probable result of the defendant's conduct in leaving Duree lying helpless and unconscious in a public road, exposed to that danger. This conduct of the defendant would then be criminal or not, according to the character of the blow he gave Duree. If it was done in self-defense, it would be justifiable. If it was felonious, it would be murder or manslaughter, according to the intent and the kind of malice with which it was inflicted. This, as we have said, would depend upon the circumstances attending and preceding the blow, and not on the subsequent passing of the automobile over the body. The case in that event would be similar to many that are given in the books, where the defendant was held responsible for the natural and probable result of his unlawful acts. Thus we have the case of the woman who with homicidal intent left her new-born child in an orchard covered only with leaves, in which condition it was struck by a kite and died thereof. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 635; Hawkins Pleas of the Crown, Curwen's Ed. p. 92. Bishop further says on this subject:

"When an injury was inflicted by a blow which in competent medical judgment rendered an operation advisable, preliminarily to which chloroform was administered, and during its administration the patient died, and but for it would not have died, it was ruled that the blow should be deemed the cause of the death within the law of felonious homicide." 2 Bish. Cr. Law, § 638, subd. 2.

On this subject Mr. Wharton says:

"Even if an injury be given by A. which puts B. in a position in which he receives a fatal wound, this is not homicide in A., unless the wound was the natural and probable result of the act." 1 Whar. Cr. Law, § 340.

And further:

"He who exposes a helpless person on a cold night when a storm intervenes cannot set up as a defense that it was a storm that did the hurt." Id., § 169.

There are numerous cases to the effect that where one with felonious intent inflicts a wound upon another, not necessarily fatal, but by reason of the poor treatment given in in good faith in the attempt to heal it death results, the person who inflicted the wound is responsible for the death, in a criminal prosecution. We cite a few of them: State v. Bantley, 44 Conn. 537, 26 Am. Rep. 486; Commonwealth v. Hackett, 2 Allen (84 Mass.) 136; Denman v. State, 15 Neb. 138, 17 N. W. 347; Kelley v. State, 53 Ind. 311; People v. Lewis, 124 Cal. 557, 57 Pac. 470, 45 L. R. A. 783.

For these reasons we conclude that the instruction was not erroneous, and that the claim that the death might possibly have been caused by the wheel of an automobile was not sufficient to exonerate the defendant from the charge.

[14] 8. On the subject of self-defense the court read the whole of section 197 of the Penal Code. Defendant claims that subdivision 3 thereof, when given without qualification, is misleading. It is there said of a person who commits homicide in defense of himself, or of some of the other persons named in that section under the circumstances there stated, that the person committing the homicide, or the person in whose behalf the defense was made, "if he was the assailant, or engaged in mortal combat, must really and in good faith have endeavored to decline any further struggle before the homicide was committed."

It is suggested that if one assaults another with a deadly weapon, and in such a manner as to indicate an intent to kill, and the other party resists the assault and uses a deadly weapon in his defense, the two would then be "engaged in mortal combat," and yet the assaulted party would not be required to endeavor to decline further struggle, but could rightfully stand his ground and take his adversary's life if it appeared reasonably necessary to do so in order to save his own. This doctrine has been laid down by this court in many decisions. It is necessary to cite but one, in which the law is summarized. People v. Hecker, 109 Cal. 462, 42 Pac. 307, 30 L. R. A. 403. From this it is argued that the instruction must be condemned as erroneous. But the Legislature has the power to declare what the law shall be on this subject. It has done so by this section. If our decisions have laid down a different rule, it is the decisions which must give way, and not the statute. However this may be, it cannot be disputed that error cannot be predicated upon an instruction which states the law as the Legislature has fixed it by statute and which is applicable to the case.

In explanation of the peculiar phrase, it may be observed that the word "mortal" was probably a misprint for the word "mutual." It has long been established that one who voluntarily engages in mutual combat with another must have endeavored to withdraw therefrom before he can be justified in killing his adversary to save his own life. This section was enacted in 1872, and it has remained unchanged to this time. Both before and since that time the phrase "mutual combat" has been in general use to designate the branch of the law of self-defense relating to homicides committed in the course of a duel or other fight begun or continued by mutual consent or agreement, express or implied. 3 Russell on Cri. Int. (Ed. of 1896) p. 57; 1 Michie on Hom. § 118; 1 Bishop's Cr. Law, § 870; People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 27; People v. Hecker, supra. Mr. Bishop laconically states the rule thus:

"Cases of mutual combat are those in which this duty of retreating to the wall oftenest appears. Two men being in the wrong, neither can right himself except by 'retreating to the wall.'"

The clause may have been intended to be limited to cases where both parties voluntarily engage in mortal combat, not to cases where one is the assailant and forces the combat on the other. That such a combat was voluntary might be implied from the word "mutual," but it is somewhat difficult to infer the fact from the word "mortal," considered by itself. In connection with the context and in view of the previously well-established rule above mentioned, perhaps the section may be construed to refer solely to voluntary combats. The court below, however, was authorized to give the instruction in the language of the statute. If the defendant desired the jury to have an exposition of its meaning so as to harmonize it with the above-stated rule, he should have asked an instruction on the subject. If it was refused, we should then be under the necessity of determining whether or not the proposed exposition was correct, but, as none was proposed, the question is not presented, and we express no opinion thereon.

[15, 16] 9. The court below gave the following instruction:

"In order to justify homicide on the ground of self-defense, or the defense of others, the danger of death or great bodily harm must be imminent, present at the time, real or apparent, and so urgent that there is no reasonable mode of escape, or of preventing the death or injury except to take life, or the slayer must have reasonable grounds to believe that such is the case."

The defendant complains of the phrase "and so urgent that there is no reasonable mode of escape." He insists that a rule so arbitrary abridges the right of self-defense by a person unlawfully attacked. The instruction as a whole does not require that the defendant should, at his peril, correctly decide that the danger was so urgent as to afford no reasonable mode of escape other than by killing his adversary. It only requires that he have reasonable grounds to believe that such is the case. The preceding instructions directed the jury that in judging the conduct of the defendant in such circumstances they must consider the circumstances as they appeared to him when he acted on them, and judge him by what a reasonable man, so situated, would do, or might reasonably have done; that the defendant had the right to determine the necessity to kill from the appearances and the actual state of the things apparent to him, and could not be held criminally responsible for a mistake made in good faith, if the occasion was such that other judicious men would have been alike mistaken; that "if the appearances were such as to induce in him a reasonable and well-grounded belief that he was actually in danger of losing his life, or suffering great bodily harm, he was justified in defending himself, whether the danger was real or only apparent."

All the instructions relating to the same subject must be considered together in determining the effect of each. The preceding instructions qualify the one complained of, and in connection with them it means only this: That if the circumstances as they appeared to the defendant would have induced a reasonable man, so situated to believe that there was a reasonable mode available to him to escape from danger of death or great bodily harm, the danger thereof would not be then "imminent," and the killing of Duree at that moment would not be justifiable. So understood, the instruction is correct.

[17] 10. The court refused to give the following instruction asked by the defendant:

"The jury are instructed that the flight of the accused does not tend to prove deliberation or premeditation on his part in killing the decedent, Albert Duree."

In support of his claim that this instruction is correct, appellant cites State v. Foster, 130 N. C. 666, 41 S. E. 284, 89 Am. St. Rep. 876, and Commonwealth v. De Fellippis, 245 Pa. 612, 91 Atl. 1059. In the Foster Case the defendant admitted guilt of murder of the second degree. The court there held that flight did not tend to prove deliberation or premeditation, and could not be considered in determining whether or not the defendant was guilty of murder of the first degree. The case was not by any means a well-considered case, and it seems to be contrary to all other authority on the general subject. In the De Fellippis Case the court held the contrary, and approved an instruction to the effect that flight was a circumstance to be considered, in connection with other evidence, in determining the degree of guilt, on a charge of murder of the first degree. And see State v. Smith, 106 Ga. 673, 32 S. E. 851, 71 Am. St. Rep. 286, where it is said that flight is a circumstance to be considered in determining the guilt of the defendant of a charge of murder, though not of itself sufficient to establish guilt. In People v. Ngow, 54 Cal. 151, 35 Am. Rep. 69, the defendant was convicted of murder of the first degree. It was held that the fact that the defendant fled was a circumstance to be considered as tending to show guilt of the crime, though not of itself sufficient to create a presumption of guilt. These authorities show that the instruction did not state the law correctly, and that the court below did not err in refusing it.

Other points are urged in the defendant's brief, but they are not of sufficient merit to deserve notice. We find no substantial error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

McGUIRE v. MILLER & LUX, Inc.

(L. A. 4604.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 2, 1918. Rehearing Denied Aug. 29, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹408 — INJURIES TO SERVANT — NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Though defendant's tractor oiler was negligent in inserting his hands among moving parts to clean oil nipples, in view of his want of experience, his duty to oil machine, and direction of engineer, his superior, to go ahead and do best he could, question of degree of his negligence, within the meaning of the Roseberry Act, was for jury.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹286(25) — INJURIES TO SERVANT—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Whether defect in oil nipples of tractor was one which company should have discovered in exercise of reasonable care, even before engineer's attention was called to it by oiler, who was injured while attempting to clean nipples, held for jury.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹286(26)—INJURY TO SERVANT—REPAIRS.

Whether employer should have repaired defect in oil nipples of tractor before intrusting the cleaning of such nipples to plaintiff, an oiler, held, a question of fact for the jury.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹258(6)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

A servant's compliant for injuries, alleging negligence on part of defendant company's engineer, and inferentially and by way of recital averring company's negligence caused injuries, sufficiently alleged company's negligence as against general demurrer.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹882(7) — HARMLESS ERROR—RULING ON CROSS-EXAMINATION IN DEPOSITION.

In servant's action for injuries, errors in admitting over employer's objection answers to interrogatories in deposition of employer's engineer on cross-examination by counsel for employer held not sufficiently prejudicial to employer to justify reversal of judgment for servant; form of interrogatory which employer itself had propounded leading to error.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by Fremont McGuire against Miller & Lux, Incorporated. From judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying its motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for appellant. Thomas Scott and J. R. Dorsey, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action for damages for personal injuries and from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. The action was originally commenced in the superior court of the county of Kern. It was removed to the United States District Court upon application of the defendant, Miller & Lux, Incorporated, a Nevada corporation, but was subsequently remanded to the court and county in which it had been commenced for trial. The defendant Livingston, joined with Miller & Lux, Incorporated, as a defendant, for the reason that he was a coemployé of the latter with plaintiff, and as such was in charge of the tractor in connection with which the plaintiff received his injuries, was never served with process and did not appear. The defendant Miller & Lux, Incorporated, answered, denying negligence and pleading contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The cause was tried before a jury. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which motion was denied. The defendant offered no evidence, and the case went to the jury upon the plaintiff's proof; whereupon the jury returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor, fixing his damages at the sum of $5,000, for which judgment was entered. From this judgment, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, said defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The facts essential to a determination of the main questions presented upon this appeal are as follows: The accident out of which the plaintiff's injuries arose happened on January 15, 1912, and the case therefore comes within the provisions of the Roseberry Act (Stats. 1911, p. 796). The plaintiff had entered the employ of the appellant about 2 months before the accident. He had been raised on a cattle ranch, was about 24 years old, and prior to the time of his said employment by the defendant had little experience with machinery. He was assigned to work as an oiler on a caterpillar tractor, which was being used by the defendant at the time of the plaintiff's injuries in transporting products from place to place. Its machinery was rather intricate, and its operation required the services of a mechanical engineer and of an oiler when in use. The codefendant Livingston was the engineer in charge of the machine, from whom the plaintiff was instructed to take his orders. The duties of the plaintiff required him to keep all portions of the machine properly lubricated, and in order to do this it was necessary at times for him to walk by the side of the tractor when it was in motion, applying the oil to its parts as required. On the day before the accident the plaintiff noticed that certain oil nipples through which it was his duty to lubricate the machine had become loose and defective, and informed the engineer in charge of this fact, and that by reason thereof they were failing to supply the machine with oil. The plaintiff was told by the engineer:

"That he would fix them as soon as he could get around to it, it might be a day or so, and to go ahead and do the best he could."

It appears to have been essential that these oil nipples should be kept in place and condition to constantly feed oil to the working parts of the moving machine. On the following day, while the tractor was in action hauling grain from Buttonwillow, the oil nipples again got out of place and order; and the plaintiff, noticing that they were out of place and so clogged as not to be feeding their oil to the moving tractor, undertook to clean them temporarily so that they would function, and to do this while he was walking alongside of the moving machine. In order to clean these nipples he had to reach in a foot or so among the moving parts of the machine, and was in the act of doing this, holding the nipple with his right hand and the wire with which he was trying to open it up with his left, when his jumper sleeve was caught by a moving key, and his hand dragged in between moving parts of the machine and injured as alleged in the complaint. The engineer knew that the plaintiff was accustomed to oil the machine walking along beside it while it was in motion, but is not shown to have known that the plaintiff was doing or attempting to do the particular acts which caused his injuries.

[1] The first contention on the part of the appellant is that the plaintiff upon his own case has shown himself to have been guilty of such gross negligence that as a matter of law he was not entitled to recover, notwithstanding the provisions of the Roseberry Act. We cannot give our concurrence to this contention. It was the duty of the plaintiff to see to it that the working parts of this ponderous and somewhat intricate machine were kept at all times, while it was in action, properly supplied with oil. It is sufficiently shown that it was customary, if not compulsory, that this duty should be done while the oiler was walking alongside of the machine and while it was in motion. He had become aware of the defective oil nipples, which, when they got out of position and became clogged with dust, prevented the oil from being properly fed to the moving parts of the machine. He had called the attention of his superior to these defects, and was directed by him "to go ahead and do the best he could." He was endeavoring to obey that direction when his injuries occurred. Conceding that it may have been an act of negligence on his part to have inserted his hands among the moving parts of the machinery in the manner he did, still in view of his past experience, or rather want of experience, in respect to intricate machinery, and in view of his particular duties and the usual manner of their performance, and in view of the direction of his superior "to go ahead and do the best he could," we think the question of the degree of the plaintiff's negligence, if any, was a question of fact for the jury. This view is fully supported by the following authorities: Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 81 Pac. 521; Lonnergan v. Stansbury, 164 Cal. 488, 129 Pac. 770; Diehl v. Swett, etc., Co., 14 Cal. App. 495, 112 Pac. 561; Great Northern R. Co. v. McDermid, 177 Fed. 105, 100 C. C. A. 525.

[2, 3] A like observation applies to the second contention of the appellant, to the effect that the plaintiff had not made out a case of negligence which as a matter of law entitled him to go to the jury. The machine was admittedly defective in the parts with which the plaintiff was immediately dealing at the time of his injuries. Whether the defect was one which the defendant, through its engineer in charge of its operation, should have discovered in the exercise of reasonable care even before the latter's attention was called to it by the plaintiff, and should have remedied before intrusting the plaintiff with duties which required him to deal directly with the defective parts of the machine, and whether, after the plaintiff had informed the engineer of the defect, it was or was not the duty of the latter to have cured it before again taking the tractor out upon the road, and whether or not his direction to the plaintiff "to go ahead and do the best he could" did not amount to an assumption on behalf of his principal of full responsibility for the further use of a defective appliance are essentially questions of fact, which the trial court correctly determined should be passed upon by the jury, in denying the defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

[4] The appellant urges that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, in that, while it alleges negligence on the part of the appellant's engineer and codefendant in respect to the failure of the latter to repair and keep in repair the tractor, it does not directly aver that the appellant was negligent in these respects. While the complaint is not a model of pleading, it does inferentially and by way of recital aver that the appellant's negligence caused the plaintiff's injuries, and we think does this sufficiently to escape a general demurrer; and as to the defendant's special demurrer it does not direct attention to this specific defect.

[5] The next contention of the appellant is that the court committed certain errors in admitting over the defendant's objection the answers to certain interrogatories contained in the deposition of its codefendant Livingston. This deposition was taken at the instance of the plaintiff, and the interrogatories in question occurred therein in the cross-examination of the deponent by counsel for appellant. Upon the trial the plaintiff read in evidence the direct interrogatories and their answers contained in said deposition. The defendant and appellant herein then announced that it would not introduce its cross-examination; thereupon the plaintiff, over the objection of said defendant, read in evidence the cross-interrogatories and answers contained in said cross-examination. Among these latter interrogatories was one to which the defendant urged the specific objection that the question called for the conclusion of the witness, and this being overruled, and the answer read, moved to strike out such answer, which motion was denied. The rulings of the court in both respects are now assigned as error.

Conceding, for the sake of argument, that the question and answer were improper, and the rulings of the court thereon error, it must be admitted that these were errors into which both the plaintiff and the court had been led by the form of the interrogatory which the appellant itself had propounded. This being so, it should be made very clear that the errors were so gravely prejudicial as to have materially affected the verdict; but no such degree of prejudice appears. The matter involved in the question was one which the jury itself could have determined as well as the witness, with all of the physical facts of the case before it, and which doubtless it did determine from such facts, regardless of the conclusion of the particular witness. We think, therefore, that the error, if any, was not sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal of the case.

As to the appellant's criticisms of certain of the instructions of the court, neither argument nor authority are offered in their support, but upon an examination of the record we are satisfied that the jury was fairly and fully instructed as to the law of the case.

Judgment and order affirmed.

SHERMAN v. HARLEY et al. (L. A. 4575.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⊂=232(1)—SUIT BY CREDITORS—LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.
When at the inception of its enterprise a corporation issues its stock for a consideration in money or property of admitted value less than the par value of such stock, the subscribers are liable for the unpaid portion of the subscription.

2. CORPORATIONS ⊂=232(1) — SUIT BY CREDITORS—LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.
One who extends credit to a corporation with full knowledge of the difference between the par value of stock sold and the value of the property received for it cannot charge the stockholders with any such difference.

3. CORPORATIONS ⊂=274—SUIT BY CREDITORS—LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.
Plaintiff, holder of two judgments against a corporation, was bound to apply any sums received from stockholders for the unpaid portion of their subscriptions to stock, to the payment of judgment for which they were liable.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by W. H. A. Sherman against Percy L. Harley and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stutsman & Stutsman and Maurice F. Enderle, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. William Ellis Lady, G. F. McCulloch, Geo. E. Harpham, and T. R. Wallace, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in the defendants' favor, in an action brought by plaintiff as the holder of two judgments against a corporation known as the Oleum Development Company, to recover from said defendants the several amounts claimed to be due upon their stockholders' liability for the unpaid portion of their subscription to the stock of the said corporation. The facts of the case, as embodied in the findings of the court, may be summarized as follows:

The Oleum Development Company was originally incorporated under the name of the Clark Copper Company and under the laws of the state of Arizona, but for the purpose of doing business in the state of California, with a capital stock of $1,250,000, divided into that number of shares with a par value of $1 per share. Shortly after its organization the corporation purchased six undeveloped mining claims in the county of Inyo, Cal., and as the purchase price thereof issued in one certificate the entire amount of its said capital stock as fully paid up stock, delivering the same to one H. L. Percy, as one of the owners and as trustee for the other owners of said mining claims. The court finds that the actual value of the mining claims was never in excess of $29,333, and that the directors of the corporation knew this fact at the time of their acquisition, but believed in good faith that they could be developed in a value equal to the capitalization of the corporation. Upon their attempted development this did not prove to be the case, as a result of which said Percy returned the certificate of stock, which he had received as the purchase price of said mining claims, to the treasury of the corporation, and they thereafter issued to said Percy and his associates 775,000 shares of said stock to be used as promotion stock. A little later Percy and his associates returned to the treasury 695,000 shares of this issue in order to set at rest some dissatisfaction, and there was presently issued to Percy and his associates 295,000 of these shares, for which they paid into the treasury of the corporation the sum of $40,000. Not long thereafter the corporation sold 165,000 shares of its capital stock then in its treasury to other persons, receiving therefor the sum of 10 cents per share. Out of this somewhat confused series of transactions the court finds that the corporation emerged with an issued capital stock of 460,000 shares. For 295,000 shares it had received in property and money from said Percy and his associates an amount not exceeding 37.5 cents per share, and for the remaining 165,000 shares of stock it had received the sum of 10 cents per share. All of this stock was issued as fully paid up stock by the corporation, and the defendants in this action became the owners thereof, either directly by purchase from the corporation or from Percy and his associates, or mediately through purchase in the open market. In the meantime the name of the corporation was changed to the Oleum Development Company, and under this latter name the corporation, after the above transactions had been consummated, executed and delivered two promissory notes for value received, each approximately for the sum of $10,000, one of said notes being made and delivered to a corporation known as Fairbanks, Morse & Co., and the other being made and delivered to a corporation known as the Fielding J. Stilson Company. Fielding J. Stilson himself was, it appears, the vice president and general manager of the Oleum Development Company. Subsequent to the making and issue of the said last-named note, he caused the said Fielding J. Stilson Company to transfer it to the Fairbanks-Morse Company as collateral security for the first-named note. Neither of these notes was paid, in consequence of which the Fairbanks-Morse Company assigned them to the plaintiff in this action for collection. The plaintiff thereupon brought separate actions upon each of these notes against their maker, and recovered two separate judgments thereon. Judgment upon the note given to the Fairbanks-Morse Company being for the sum of $10,269.17 and judgment upon the note given to the Fielding J. Stilson Company being for the sum of $9,785.70. Executions upon each of these judgments being returned unsatisfied, the plaintiff commenced this action against the stockholders of the Oleum Development Company to recover the amounts alleged to be due from each upon the amount of his unpaid subscription to the capital stock of the said corporation. After the commencement of this action, and before the trial thereof, the plaintiff collected from a considerable number of the stockholders joined as defendants herein, other than the respondents herein, various sums of money upon their liability as stockholders, under section 322 of the Civil Code. Said sums of money so collected aggregated the sum of $6,970.83. The plaintiff, also during the pendency of this suit, collected from various other stockholders other than respondents herein sums aggregating $11,676.95 upon their alleged liability for the balance of their unpaid subscriptions. In making these payments to the plaintiff these stockholders did not make any direction as to how the money so paid by them should be applied upon the two judgments held by plaintiff against this corporation, nor did the corporation itself make any direction as to the application of these payments by its stockholders on account of its obligations, nor did the Fielding J. Stilson Company make any direction or request that the moneys collected on account of the judgment which was based upon the note which it had assigned to the Fairbanks-Morse Company as collateral security for the note, made directly to the corporation, be applied to the payment and satisfaction of the Fairbanks-Morse Company judgment. Accordingly the plaintiff, as these several amounts were collected from the stockholders with whom he settled, applied the same equally on account of the two judgments held by him. The foregoing facts were all found by the court upon the trial of this action, and were based upon sufficient proofs. In addition thereto, evidence was offered on behalf of the defendants, from which the court made a further finding to the effect that at the time the Fielding J. Stilson Company extended the credit to the Oleum Development Company for which the note to it was given, it was fully aware of the transactions regarding the original issue of the capital stock of the Clark Copper Company, as above set forth, and knew that the stock issued by it in the course of said transaction was issued as fully paid up stock, and knew that at the time of its issuance in payment for said unpatented mining claims they were not worth in excess of $29,333, and "that said Fielding J. Stilson Company did not give credit to the Oleum Development Company upon the assumption that its stock issued as fully paid up stock had been paid for in property equal in cash value to the par value of the stock issued therefor, or upon the assumption that said Oleum Development Company had received for the whole issue of its capital stock aught other than six undeveloped unpatented mining claims of a value not exceeding $29,333; that said Fielding J. Stilson Company knew that the defendants bought said Oleum Development Company stock as fully paid up stock." As a conclusion of law from the foregoing findings of fact the court found:

"That plaintiff herein is not entitled to recover from the defendants any sum or sums upon their liability as such stockholders to the said Oleum Development Company, under his said judgment recovered in cause No. 92740, for the reason that the said Fielding J. Stilson Company, a corporation, did not extend credit to the said Oleum Development Company, a corporation, in reliance upon the assumption that full par value had been received by the said last-named corporation for the stock it had issued as fully paid.

"That plaintiff herein, as judgment creditor under causes No. 92740 and 92741, did not have the right to apply any portion of said sum of $11,676.95, collected as above stated, upon the amount due under the judgment obtained in cause No. 92740, and that said plaintiff did not have the right to direct his said attorneys to make application of any portion of said sum so collected in satisfaction of the judgment obtained in said cause No. 92740, for the reason, firstly, that he was not entitled to recover against the stockholders under said judgment; and, secondly, that the relation of debtor and creditor does not exist between defendant stockholders of a corporation and a judgment creditor thereof in an action to enforce the payment by such creditor of the unpaid balance due upon the par value of the capital stock from such stockholders to such corporation, the right to make application by a creditor existing only where such relation exists. And the court further concludes that, because the amount so collected as above exceeds the amount due to plaintiff under his judgment in cause No. 92741, plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything in this action from said defendants, and judgment is accordingly ordered to be entered herein in favor of said defendants and against plaintiff for their costs."

Upon the basis of these findings and conclusions of law the court rendered judgment in favor of the defendants.

The appellant makes two points upon appeal from this judgment, neither of which, we think, can be sustained. The first of these is that as to the so-called Stilson note and judgment the fact that the Fielding J. Stilson Company, at the time it extended credit to and took the note of the Oleum Development Company, was fully aware of the transactions through which the corporation had caused to be issued the large portion of its capital stock as fully paid up stock for a consideration in property and value amounting to less than one-third in value of the par value of its stock heretofore issued, was insufficient to justify a conclusion of law that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, on the Stilson note and judgment, anything from these defendants upon their stockholders' liability for the unpaid portion of their subscription.

[1] It may not be questioned that as a general rule the law is well settled in this state that, when at the inception of its enterprise a corporation issues its stock for a consideration in money or property of admitted value less than the par value of such stock, the subscribers to such stock giving such consideration are liable to the corporation and to its creditors for the unpaid portion of the subscription. Vermont Marble Co. v. Declez, etc., Co., 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143; Herron v. Shaw, 165 Cal. 668, 133 Pac. 488, Ann. Cas. 1915a, 1265; Lucey v. McMullen, 173 Pac. 1000. The basis of this doctrine, as is well stated in the case of Herron v. Shaw, supra, is that credit is given in reliance on the presumption that full par value has been received by the corporation for the stock it has issued as fully paid.

[2] Where, however, it appears, as it does in this case, from the pleadings, the uncontradicted proofs, and the clear and positive findings of the court, that the particular creditor at the time the credit was given extended the credit with full knowledge of the difference between the par value of the stock and the value of the property received for it, an exception to the rule exists. This exception and the reason for it is well stated in 4 Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) § 3983, as follows:

"On principle and authority, a creditor who deals with the corporation with full knowledge of the manner in which its shares have been paid for is not defrauded by the taking of overvalued property as payment of stock, and is estopped to raise that question."

And in Morawetz on Private Corp., § 829, the rule is stated as follows:

"So if the capital of a corporation was declared to be fully paid up in consideration of specific property of less value than the amount of the capital, a person who should voluntarily deal with the company knowing the character and value of the property so transferred to the company would have no claim upon the shareholders for any further contribution of capital. By voluntarily dealing with the company under the circumstances he must be deemed to have consented to the existing arrangement; the company and its shareholders have offered to contract only upon these terms."

In 10 Cyc. 478, title Corporations, the author, in discussing this matter, says:

"On whatever theory the conclusion is based, the rule seems to be that those who extend credit to the corporation with full knowledge of the manner in which its shares have been paid for, if at all, cannot charge its shareholders with any such difference between real value and fictitious value in case of payment in property."

See, also, Finletter v. Appleton, 195 Pa. 349, 45 Atl. 1063; Deadwood, etc., Bank v. Gustin Minerva Con., 42 Minn. 327, 44 N. W. 198, 6 L. R. A. 676, 18 Am. St. Rep. 510; Easton Natl. Bank v. American Brick & Tile Co., 70 N. J. Eq. 732, 64 Atl. 917, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 271, 10 Ann. Cas. 84; Adamant Mfg. Co. v. Wallace, 16 Wash. 614, 48 Pac. 415; Lea v. Iron, etc., Co., 119 Ala. 271, 24 South. 28. It would thus seem that the foregoing exception to the general rule regarding the liability of stockholders for their unpaid subscriptions must be given full application to the case at bar. It follows that the Fielding J. Stilson Company had no right of recourse upon the stockholders of the Oleum Development Company; therefore, that the plaintiff, as the transferee of their note after maturity, had no such right of recovery.

[3] This brings us to the second point made by appellant, wherein it is contended that the trial court erred in refusing to approve the plaintiff's effort to apply the moneys received by him from those stockholders who settled with him on account of their alleged liability for unpaid subscriptions, equally to both of the judgments upon which this action was predicated. The total amount so received by plaintiff on account of his claim against said stockholders for their unpaid subscriptions was the sum of $11,676.95, which would have more than sufficed, had it all been applied to the Fairbanks-Morse judgment, to have fully satisfied the same; that it should have been so applied seems incontrovertible in view of our above conclusion that the holders of the Stilson note and of the judgment based thereon had no right of recovery against any of the stockholders of the Oleum Development Company on account of their unpaid subscriptions. Having no such right of action, the plaintiff could have had no right of direction of any sums paid by such stockholders to the payment of an obligation for which they were not liable, but was bound to apply the whole of such sums so received to the settlement of the obligation and judgment upon which they were liable, namely, upon the Fairbanks-Morse judgment. The court, therefore, rightly directed that such application of all of the sums so received by the plaintiff should be made; and since the effect of such application would be to fully pay the amount of said last-named judgment, and since, as we have already seen, the respondents herein were not liable upon the indebtedness of the corporation evidenced by the Stilson judgment, it follows that the conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover upon either judgment was correct.

Judgment affirmed.

MYERS v. CANEPA et al.

(Civ. 1493.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 17, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 15, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐907(3)—APPEAL ON JUDGMENT ROLL—PRESUMPTIONS.

In an appeal on the judgment roll alone, every intendment possible is in favor of the judgment or order appealed from, and, if error does not affirmatively appear, it will be sustained, if possible.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐901 — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that no judgment shall be set aside for errors as to pleading or procedure, unless after an examination of the entire case the court shall be of opinion that error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice, injury will not be presumed from error, but it must be affirmatively shown.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜917(2)—REVIEW — PRESUMPTION.

On appeal because of a failure to sustain a demurrer to a complaint which improperly united several causes of action, but in itself stated a good cause as far as plaintiff was concerned, a judgment in favor of plaintiff will be affirmed under the presumption that the case was tried on its merits, regardless of the imperfections of the complaint, which will be deemed waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by George R. B. Myers against D. Canepa and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed, and rehearing denied by Supreme Court.

For opinion of Supreme Court on application for rehearing, see 174 Pac. 906.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, and Percy S. King, of Napa, for appellants. Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, and W. W. Kaufman and Wm. P. Hubbard, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The cause is before us on rehearing. The following statement of the case is taken from the original opinion, written by Justice Hart, affirming the judgment:

"The action was brought to recover judgment against the defendants for medical services rendered and for goods, wares, and merchandise furnished to them. After a jury trial and verdict, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $300, from which defendants prosecute this appeal on the judgment roll alone.

"The fourth amended complaint is in two counts. In the first count it is alleged: 'That on the 19th day of December, 1914, said defendants were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $477.50 on account for medical and surgical services rendered to and for said defendants at their special instance and request by the plaintiff, and by Dr. Laurence Welti and Dr. C. H. Bulson, who performed services for plaintiff therein, for and with the consent of the defendants. By way of explanation of the foregoing allegation and to make the complaint more certain, plaintiff further alleges that during the time in which plaintiff was rendering the services sued for herein and with defendants' knowledge and consent, and upon defendants' request, the plaintiff called in said Dr. Laurence Welti and Dr. C. H. Bulson, for consultation and advice therein, and for assistance in the performance of said surgical services, and that the charges of said Dr. Laurence Welti and Dr. C. H. Bulson therefor were made against the plaintiff personally, and not against the defendants, or either of them, and are included by plaintiff in his account, and form part of said account against said defendants, and that of the $477.50 sued for herein as above alleged $100 is on account of the services so rendered by Dr. Laurence Welti, and $2.50 is on account of the services so rendered by Dr. C. H. Bulson, and $375 is on account of the services rendered by plaintiff personally.'

"In the second count it is alleged that, on December 19, 1914, defendants were indebted to D. H. Williams in the sum of $23.05 on account of goods, wares, and merchandise (stated in the briefs to have been medicines) sold and delivered to defendants at their special instance and request, and that said Williams has assigned said claim to plaintiff.

"Defendants demurred to said fourth amended complaint, and also moved for an order striking it from the files. The demurrer was overruled, and the motion denied, and the action of the court in these respects is assigned as error.

"Respondent has filed a notice of suggestion of diminution of the record, setting forth the minute order made on October 18, 1915, at which time a motion for a new trial was denied, said minute order reading as follows: 'The above motion for new trial came on regularly. * * * Motion argued and submitted, and the court orders that the motion for a new trial is granted unless the plaintiff produce within ten days satisfactory vouchers of the payment and release of demands of Drs. Laurence Welti and C. H. Bulson, and if such vouchers are produced to the satisfaction of the court, then, and in that event, the motion for new trial will stand denied. Said release having been produced and approved by the court and filed, the motion for a new trial is hereby denied.'

"A copy of the release signed by said Drs. Welti and Bulson is also contained in said notice of suggestion of diminution of the record.

"The application to have incorporated in the record, upon a suggestion of a diminution of the record, the minutes of the court on the motion for a new trial should be and is denied for the reason that said proceedings are not authenticated by incorporating the same in a bill of exceptions. Code Civ. Proc. § 950; rule 29, Supreme Court. Moreover, the appeal here is from the judgment on the judgment roll alone, and the motion for a new trial and an order denying the motion are no part of the judgment roll. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 670, 963; the amendment of the latter section by the Legislature of 1915—see Stats. 1915, p. 209—so as to destroy the right of appeal from an order denying a new trial, having gone into effect before the appeal here was taken."

In the petition for rehearing much stress is laid upon the erroneously assumed fact that in upholding the judgment "this court in its opinion, considers matters entirely outside of the record." Appellants wholly misconceive the grounds on which the decision is rested. While error was declared in overruling the demurrer, the decision was placed entirely upon well-settled rules of procedure where presumptions and intendments come into play in support of the judgment on appeals on the judgment roll alone. It is with these presumptions and intendments in support of the judgment we are alone concerned, for appellants insist that no presumptions or intendments can deprive them of a right to a reversal of the judgment for the obvious imperfections of the complaint pointed out in their demurrer.

Referring to the demurrer interposed to the complaint: It may be conceded that the effect of the averments of the fourth amended complaint is improperly to unite a cause of action in favor of plaintiff personally with a cause of action in favor of Dr. Laurence Welti and Dr. C. H. Bulson. Neither of the two latter was a party to the action, and neither of them assigned his claim to plaintiff. It is alleged that their "services were rendered to and for defendants at their special instance and request" and this averment is in no wise qualified by the further averment that they "performed services for plaintiff therein." Notwithstanding this improperly uniting of the claims of Drs. Welti and Bulson with that of plaintiff for his personal services, there remained sufficient, after disregarding the averments as to Drs. Welti and Bulson, to constitute a cause of action in favor of plaintiff, and the general demurrer was properly overruled. The demurrer "that several causes of action have been improperly united" should have been sustained. So, also, the demurrer "that several causes of action are not separately stated, namely, a cause of action in favor of plaintiff against said defendants is not separately stated from causes of action in favor of Dr. Laurence Welti and Dr. C. H. Bulson against said defendants," should have been sustained.

There was also a special demurrer interposed, for uncertainty, ambiguity, and unintelligibility on nine different grounds, some of which, if not all, would have justified the court in sustaining the demurrer. Despite its imperfections, however, there was enough in the complaint to confer jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter. Defendants answered, denying specifically the averments of the complaint and by way of cross-complaint, set out what is intended as a cause of action for damages resulting from alleged improper and unskillful treatment of the patient for whom plaintiff was called to prescribe.

The parties went to trial, the result of which was a general verdict by a jury in favor of plaintiff for $300, which was $98.05 less than the amount of plaintiff's individual claim. Upon what theory the case was tried; to what issues the evidence was addressed; whether the jury allowed anything for the services of Drs. Welti and Bulson, or either of them, or allowed anything on the assigned claims; or based their verdict wholly on the claim of plaintiff, which was for $375—we do not know. The record is silent. The case is here on the judgment roll. In such case, certain presumptions and intendments are indulged and come to the relief of the prevailing party, who might otherwise find himself much embarrassed by his failure to observe the rules governing good pleading in bringing his action. The position taken by appellants is thus stated in their petition for rehearing:

"It was not obligatory upon us in an appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone, to incorporate in the record evidence which was taken at the trial. Section 670, C. C. P., and section 950, C. C. P. Having presented the papers necessary upon this appeal, the question is simply one of law; whether the fourth amended complaint was a proper pleading in the face of the demurrer filed by the defendants, and whether or not the order of the court overruling said demurrer affected the substantial rights of the defendants."

[1] The general rule, affirmed in a multitude of cases, is this:

"On appeal all intendments are in favor of the regularity of the action of the court. Error will never be presumed, and the burden is upon the appellant to show that it exists." 2 Hayne's New Trial, p. 1576.

In an appeal on the judgment roll alone every intendment possible is in favor of the judgment or order appealed from, and if error does not affirmatively appear, it will be sustained, if there is any possible ground on which it can be sustained. Id. But, say appellants: The error here is patent and conceded, i. e., the complaint on its face is amenable to the demurrer, and the order overruling it was therefore error which the rule of presumptions and intendments cannot cure or overcome. In short, whatever may be the scope of the rule, admittedly very sweeping, it does not reach an error committed in passing upon the sufficiency of a complaint when the question is raised by demurrer.

[2] Whatever may have been the interpretation put upon section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure prior to the adoption of section 4½, article 6, of the Constitution, it is settled that injury is no longer presumed from error, but must be affirmatively shown. Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 147 Pac. 238. The provision is:

"No judgment shall be set aside * * * for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

How can the court determine that defendants were injured by overruling the demurrer in this case in the absence of the record showing what occurred at the trial? It may have been that appellants consented to the trial upon its merits without objection to the evidence in support of the complaint, notwithstanding its defects. There may be presumptive waiver, which is a species of consent. As was said by Judge Hart in the original opinion:

"In considering an appeal supported by the judgment roll only, all presumptions and intendments are to be indulged favorably to and in support of the judgment. It must, in other words, be presumed that there was evidence sufficient to support the findings or the verdict, and that, whatever might have properly occurred at the trial to cure the defects of the complaint in any vital particular, did actually occur."

As to alleged uncertainty in a complaint challenged by a demurrer, the court said, in Rooney v. Gray Bros., 145 Cal. 753, 758, 79 Pac. 523, 524:

"When a case has been tried and a judgment rendered on the facts, in order to warrant a reversal upon the ground of error in overruling a demurrer interposed on the ground of uncertainty in the complaint, it must appear that some substantial right of the demurrant has been affected, some prejudicial error, as distinguished from abstract error, suffered by him, or he has no room for complaint."

See Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman, etc., Co., 6 Cal. App. 58, 61, 91 Pac. 425.

[3] The answer, as we have seen, put in issue every averment of the complaint. The complaint was sufficient as against a general demurrer. It was entirely proper for the parties to try the case on its merits, if they chose to do so, even though the complaint was ambiguous and uncertain, and there were several causes of action improperly united. In support of the judgment we must presume that the case was tried on its merits regardless of the imperfection of the complaint, which must be deemed to have been waived.

Bearing in mind that the issues were tried on complaint and answer, we think the following statement by Judge Hayne, in his New Trial, page 1576, is true in the present case:

"If the judgment roll does not itself disclose the error complained of, it is incumbent upon the appellant to make a showing dehors such judgment roll. This can be done in no other way than by bill of exceptions, or, in case of a new trial order, a statement. This is the record of which it is said error must be affirmatively shown therein, and it must contain everything necessary to make the error apparent; for if anything should be wanting, the omission would be fatal. The rule of presumption supplies what is necessary to the validity and the correctness of the action of the trial court, but supplies nothing indicative of error."

The judgment is affirmed.

MYERS v. CANEPA et al. (Sac. 2482.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 15, 1918.)

ACTION ⊜38(6)—SINGLE CAUSE OF ACTION.

A complaint, in an action by a physician for services and for medicine furnished, including an alleged indebtedness to two other physicians, who had performed services for plaintiff with defendants' consent, held to state a single cause of action in favor of plaintiff alone.

On application for rehearing. Denied. For opinion in District Court of Appeal, see 174 Pac. 903.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, and Percy S. King, of Napa, for appellants. Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, and W. W. Kaufman and Wm. P. Hubbard, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In denying the application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District, we deem it proper to say that, in our opinion, the allegation in the first count of the fourth amended complaint, as set forth in the opinion, substantially states only a single cause of action in favor of plaintiff alone.

The application for a hearing in this court is denied.

GORDON v. RANSOME-CRUMMEY CO. (Civ. 2420.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 10, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 5, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜485(5) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—POSTING NOTICES.

Street Improvement Act 1911, § 66, providing that issue of bonds is conclusive evidence of the regularity of proceedings leading thereto, at least cures a trifling defect in posting several notices of the resolution of intention along an improvement 309 feet apart, instead of 300 feet, as required by section 5.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜294(8) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT—POSTING NOTICES.

An affidavit as to completion of posting of notice of resolution of intention required by Street Improvement Act 1911, § 5, held to sufficiently describe the location of a certain street improvement and notices.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜294(8) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—POSTING OF NOTICES —COMPLETED.

An affidavit "that affiant posted said notices as herein specified on the 25th day of May, A. D. 1911," was a sufficient statement that the posting was "completed" on such date, under Street Improvement Act 1911, § 5.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜289(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—STATUTES.

Street Improvement Act 1911, § 82, by its own provisions is to be liberally construed to the end that its purposes may be effected, and provisions regarding the posting of notices, and the like, are to be read in the light of the purposes to be accomplished.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action to quiet title by W. R. Gordon against the Ransome-Crummey Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, for appellant. Frank J. Gordon, of Oakland, and Welles Whitmore, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The questions in this case arise out of the sale of certain property of the plaintiff to pay certain street assessment bonds which were issued by the city of Oakland in a proceeding taken by it under the Improvement Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 730). The plaintiff brought an action to quiet title against the defendant, and the defendant answered, admitting that it asserted an interest in the real estate described in the complaint, and filed a cross-complaint, in which it set up all the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the bonds mentioned. Without going further into the pleadings in this case it may be said that the correctness of the lower court's judgment quieting the plaintiff's title to the land depends upon the validity of the street improvement proceedings.

The first point made by plaintiff against these proceedings is that the notice of the passage of the resolution of intention, required by section 5 of the Street Improvement Act of 1911 to be posted at intervals of not more than 300 feet in distance apart along the line of the contemplated improvement, was not so posted, in this, that two of these notices had an interval of 309 feet 4 inches instead of 300 feet between them. Section 66 of the improvement act of 1911 provides that bonds issued under the act, shall by their issuance be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings leading thereto under the act. It is contended by the attorney for the defendant that the defect in the posting of the notices above referred to is cured by the issuance of the bonds in pursuance of section 66 of the act just quoted. On the other hand, the respondent contends that the defect is jurisdictional, and that a strict compliance with the statute as to posting was necessary to give the council authority to take further steps in the proceeding, and that, being jurisdictional, the defect could not be cured by the issuance of the bonds, or affected in any way by the so-called "conclusive evidence" provisions of section 66 of the act. The whole question of the construction to be placed on such curative provisions as section 66 was discussed and, the profession of the law hoped, finally settled, so that no question thereon could ever thereafter be made, by the decision in the case of Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 80 Pac. 81, but it seems that the carelessness of city officials and the ingenuity of counsel will, in spite of the very clear and definite language of that case, still raise plausible objections to the jurisdictional steps taken by city councils in street improvement proceedings; and such has happened in this case. The Supreme Court, in Chase v. Trout, said that:

"The resolution of intention is the first step in the proceeding. It is to be published, and it is by means of such publication, and the notice thereafter given, which refers to it for particulars, that the council acquires jurisdiction. It is a part of the 'due process of law,' required by the Constitution, the want of which cannot be cured or waived by the Legislature."

To this statement of the law, which must be held to apply to the posting of this notice as well as the publication of the resolution of intention, Mr. Justice Shaw, in the opinion of the court, added this significant sentence:

"There must be a substantial compliance with the provisions of the act in regard to this preliminary process."

[1] From that case and the case of Ramish v. Hartwell, 126 Cal. 443, 58 Pac. 920, we understand that where, as here, there is an evident attempt in good faith to comply with the statute, and such substantial compliance therewith that no one has suffered from lack of strict compliance, the issuance of the bonds is conclusive evidence of the regularity of the jurisdictional proceedings. In other words, it cures such a trifling and inconsequential defect in the posting as here appears. This is within the spirit, and, indeed, the letter, of the rule in Chase v. Trout. We will not attempt to formulate a general rule as to what will constitute substantial compliance with the statute upon this matter; but in this case it would be trifling with justice to say that this proceeding, covering as it did a lengthy street improvement, and upon the validity of which thousands of dollars' worth of street improvement bonds may perchance depend, should be set aside because one of the notices was posted 9 feet 4 inches farther away from the next one than it should have been.

[2] The next attack on the proceeding is based on the insufficiency of the affidavit of the completion of posting of the notice of improvement. The law provides that:

"Upon the completion of the posting of the notice of the improvement the superintendent of streets shall forthwith cause to be filed in the office of the city clerk an affidavit stating the fact of the completion of the posting of such notice and the date of such completion, and thereafter all persons shall be deemed to have notice of the date of the completion of the posting."

The affidavit filed in the present case stated that the affiant had actually posted the notice of improvement mentioned in the resolution of intention on Congress avenue, the street to be improved, "from the southeastern line of High street to a line parallel to and distant 70 feet northwesterly from the southeastern line of Cortland avenue, all as described in and in compliance with resolution of intention No. 38,146." The work on Congress avenue was to be done not only to the line thus described 70 feet from Cortland avenue, but also upon other parts of Congress avenue, so that if the foregoing statement in the affidavit were all that it contained, there would be no showing that the notices were posted along the entire line of the contemplated work; but following the above-quoted portion of the affidavit was the statement that affiant "posted said notices conspicuously along the line of said contemplated work or improvement, at not more than 300 feet in distance apart and not less than 3 in all, and when the work was to be done upon an entire crossing or any part thereof, in front of each quarter block liable to be assessed." This latter quoted statement is in the exact language of the statute providing for the posting of the notice. The statements are not inconsistent with the posting on that part of Congress avenue southeasterly from the line of Cortland avenue; both statements may be true; and it seems to us that that part of the affidavit which describes the posting of the notices as having been done to the line 70 feet northwesterly of Cortland avenue must be read in the light of the further statement in the affidavit which, if it stood alone, would be sufficient to show the posting of the notices along the line of the contemplated work as provided in section 5 of the act. This is particularly true in view of the fact that it was the duty of the council, before proceeding further with this work, to find the fact of the posting of these notices, and that it found this fact apparently from this affidavit, thus putting a construction thereon. It seems to us that this finding of the council is by parity of reasoning within the principle laid down in Tilton v. Russek, 171 Cal. 731, 154 Pac. 860, in regard to an affidavit of diligence, in which the Supreme Court held that the sufficiency of such an affidavit being a subject for the determination of the court in which the validity of the proceedings was in issue, the court's conclusion would not be overturned, where it had ruled upon the affidavit and held it to be sufficient.

[3] A further criticism is made of this affidavit. The statute provides that this affidavit must state the fact of the completion of the posting of the notices, and the date of such completion, and that thereafter all persons shall be deemed to have notice of the date of the completion of such posting. The statement in the affidavit bearing upon this subject is "that affiant posted said notices as herein specified on the 25th day of May, A. D. 1911." It will be noted that the affidavit does not state categorically and in the language of the statute that the 25th day of May, 1911, was the date of the completion of the posting, nor does it use the word "completed" in relation to the posting of the notices at all. Counsel for the respondent contends with much earnestness that the property owners, having the right to protest at any time within 15 days after the date of the completion of the posting of these notices against the proposed work, could ascertain the time within which they were to protest in only one way, namely, by an examination of this affidavit, and claims that the information required to enable them to know the time within which they could protest, namely, the date of the completion of the posting, is not contained in the affidavit, so that the time for protest has not yet run, or, in any event, that the council acquired no jurisdiction to proceed further with the work. Construction of documents such as this affidavit must be reasonable and sensible; and it seems to us that no persons reading this affidavit, in which it is stated that these notices were posted on the 25th day of May, 1911, could come to any other conclusion or construe the affidavit as meaning anything else than that the work of posting these notices was completed on that day. The language of the affidavit is equivalent to a statement that the notices were all posted on the 25th day of May, 1911, which could only mean that the posting was completed on that day. It seems to us that the fact of completion appears sufficiently from this. If, then, it be so conceded, it seems to us that the defect, if defect it is, falls within the rule of Chase v. Trout, supra, that a substantial compliance with the statute confers jurisdiction upon the council.

[4] It may be said in passing that this proceeding involving the improvement of a long street, an expensive public work, which has been completed, should not be overturned on account of these defects in the proceeding. The improvement act of 1911 by its own provisions is to be liberally construed, to the end that its purposes may be effected (Stats. 1911, p. 768, § 82); and as with the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147), so with this act, "the provisions regarding the posting of notices and the like are to be read in the light of the purposes to be accomplished." Haughawout v. Percival, 161 Cal. 491, 119 Pac. 649, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 115. No person can doubt that any property owner who may have read the affidavit of posting knew therefrom that his time for protesting began to run at the time stated in that affidavit, namely, on the 25th day of May, 1911; nor can we be persuaded that any property owner was injured by the extra distance of 9 feet 4 inches between two of the notices that were posted along the line of this work.

TUCKER v. HAGERTY, Constable.

(Civ. 1820.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 23, 1918.)

1. REPLEVIN ⊂⊃76—DETENTION OF PROPERTY—INTEREST.

Interest is ordinary measure of damages for wrongful detention of property, but, where property has usable value exceeding lawful rate, such rule has no application, but successful party is entitled to recover value of use of which he has been wrongfully deprived, and value is to be estimated by market price of use.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃934(2) — PRESUMPTION FAVORING COURT BELOW — EVIDENCE AS SUPPORTING JUDGMENT.

Appellate court must assume there was evidence to support judgment in action of claim and delivery on issue of rental value of property as being damages for detention, though rental value allowed amounts to more than value of property.

3. REPLEVIN ⊂⊃76—RENTAL VALUE AS DAMAGES—STATUTE.

In action of claim and delivery for automobile against constable, under Code Civ. Proc. § 667, trial court was authorized to fix damages for detention on basis of rental value, though exceeding value of machine.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Chas. O. Busick, Judge.

Action by J. H. Tucker against T. B. Hagerty, as constable of Sacramento township, county of Sacramento, state of California. From judgment for plaintiff, and from an order that defendant's motion for new trial would be granted unless plaintiff filed written consent to reduce damages, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Shelley & Johnston (J. A. McGilvray, of counsel), for appellant. Frank A. Prior, of Sacramento, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brings the action in claim and delivery. In his amended complaint he alleges that defendant is the duly elected, qualified, and acting constable of Sacramento township, Sacramento county, and that on the 20th day of July, 1917, as such constable, defendant wrongfully took possession of a certain automobile under a writ of attachment in a certain action pending in said township, wherein Vina Hall is plaintiff and P. A. Smittcamp and Sadie M. Smittcamp are defendants; that on July 21, 1917, plaintiff "made a verified demand upon said constable for the release of said automobile from the lien of said attachment, and of the said automobile so attached aforesaid by defendant, but defendant then and there failed, refused, and neglected, and ever since has failed, refused, and neglected, to release said attachment or said automobile, and the possession of said automobile is wrongfully held by said defendant"; that plaintiff at all the times mentioned in said complaint has been and still is the owner and entitled to the possession of said automobile; that the value of said automobile is $650, and that "plaintiff purchased said automobile from Sadie N. Smittcamp and Alice Tanner on the 19th day of June, 1917, and paid therefor the sum of "$350"; that plaintiff paid one Mrs. Hall the sum of $125 to discharge a lien held by her on said automobile; that plaintiff has expended the sum of $153.75 for necessary tires and other equipment of said automobile; that the rental value of said automobile is $10 per day. The prayer is for possession, "or for its value if delivery cannot be had, with damages for the detention of said automobile, and for costs of suit." The complaint is duly verified.

Defendant, in his answer, justifies under the attachment referred to in the complaint; denies plaintiff's alleged ownership or right of possession; denies that plaintiff made demand for the release of said attachment; "denies that the value of said automobile is the sum of six hundred and fifty dollars," but does not aver the value; denies that plaintiff purchased the automobile from the persons as alleged or for the sum as alleged "or any other sum"; admits the payment of $125 to Mrs. Hall as alleged, but denies that it was secured by lien on said automobile; denies that plaintiff has expended the sum of $153.75 for repairs or otherwise on said machine, or any sum whatever; denies that the rental value of said automobile was $10 per day "or any other or greater sum than four dollars per day."

The cause was tried by the court without a jury. By a minute order the court ordered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the return of the automobile, "or, in lieu thereof, plaintiff is to receive the sum of $450 from defendant as the price of said automobile; and it is further ordered that plaintiff do have and recover from defendant damages for the detention of said automobile at the rate of $5 per day from the 21st day of July, 1917, to the date hereof, amounting to the sum of $585." Findings were waived and judgment was entered in accordance with said minute order.

Notice of motion for a new trial was served and filed, and at the hearing the court, on December 3, 1917, ordered that the "motion will be granted unless plaintiff files in court his written consent within five days to accept $4 per day, as damages in lieu of the damages heretofore ordered." Such consent was duly filed, December 8, 1917, but the motion for a new trial was not denied until December 31, 1917. Defendant served notice of appeal, December 12, 1917, from the order made on December 3, 1917, and from the judgment, but did not appeal from the order of December 31, 1917, denying motion for a new trial. There is no bill of exceptions or statement in support of the motion. The case is here on the judgment roll alone and without findings of fact, which were waived.

The only question presented by appellant relates to the measure of damages. His contention is that damages for the detention of the property, in the absence of circumstances of aggravation or malice, "is legal interest on the value of the property detained, within a reasonable time after the property was taken."

The judgment is "that plaintiff have and recover of said defendant the sum of $450, the value thereof; and that plaintiff do have and recover of said defendant damages for the detention of said automobile at the rate of $5 per day from the 21st day of July, 1917, to the date hereof (November 15, 1917), amounting to the sum of $585, together with plaintiff's costs."

Respondent's contention is that appellant is seeking to apply the rule in conversion, whereas "in an action for claim and delivery the rule is different, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for possession of the personal property, or the value thereof, and damages for the detention, which damages for the wrongful detention may be fixed by the court in a certain sum."

It is quite clear that the court fixed the damages on the basis of the rental value per day of the automobile. The admission of defendant justifies the fixing of this value at $4 per day, but it does not necessarily admit that it was the proper measure of damages in the case.

[1] The ordinary measure of damages for the wrongful detention of property is interest. Where, however, the property has a usable value which exceeds the lawful rate of interest this rule has no application. In such a case the successful party is entitled to recover, as damages for the detention, the value of such use during the period that he was wrongfully deprived thereof. And this value is to be estimated by the ordinary market price of the use of such property. 34 Cyc. 1562–1564. There are exceptions to this rule, but, as there is neither evidence nor findings from which it may be ascertained whether or not the case falls within any of the exceptions, we must apply the rule as above stated.

It is to be observed that we have a statute specifically defining the measure of damages in actions for the conversion of personal property, viz.:

"The value of the property at the time of the conversion, with the interest from that time, or, where the action has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, the highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and the verdict, without interest, at the option of the injured party." Civ. Code, § 3336.

The rule in claim and delivery (or replevin) is as follows:

"In an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession or the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had, and damages for the detention." Code Civ. Proc. § 667.

The reason for the rule in replevin is that interest or the value of the property does not furnish adequate compensation for the wrongful detention. In some of the cases it is correctly said that the wrongdoer who had had the use of the property would make a profit out of his own wrong, which the law does not tolerate, and that it would deny to a plaintiff damages which naturally and certainly follow from a wrongful invasion of his rights. In the notes to the text (34 Cyc. 1563) the rule as above given is shown to have been applied in the case of household furniture, to buggies, boats, milk cows, threshing machines, in the latter case holding that "the measure of damages for such detention is the fair rental value of the machine, less the damages which would result to it from the extra wear and tear caused by the use of it while so rented." Peerless Machine Co. v. Gates, 61 Minn. 124, 63 N. W. 260.

The reason for the distinction between trover or conversion and replevin is well stated in Farrar v. Eash, 5 Ind. App. 238, 31 N. E. 1125:

"In replevin the plaintiff never ceases to claim the property as his own, but seeks to obtain it rather than its value. In such case the plaintiff, being entitled to the use of the property of which he has been unlawfully deprived, and not having waived the title thereof, has a right to recover the value of such use in damages. In trover, on the other hand, plaintiff concedes a change of title by the act of conversion and recognizes ownership in the defendant. In that case damages for detention are waived, and it would be absurd to give the plaintiff compensation for the use of the property." 34 Cyc. supra.

[2] It may be that damages which cannot be ascertained with reasonable certainty, or which are contingent or speculative, cannot be allowed in an action of replevin. But here we have a distinct claim in the complaint for the rental value, $10 per day, for the machine, and a denial that the rental value was any greater than $4 per day. We must assume that there was sufficient evidence to support the judgment upon this issue of rental value as being the damages for the detention. There is nothing so startling in the fact that the rental value allowed by the court amounts to more than the value of the machine as to compel a reversal of the judgment.

We have examined the cases cited by appellant in support of his contention. He cites also section 3336 of the Civil Code, which, as we have seen, by its terms is made applicable to cases of conversion. Some of the cases cited by appellant were in conversion; others were in trespass. Phelps v. Owen, 11 Cal. 25, grew out of an attachment and subsequent sale of the property (stock of goods). The complaint in the action claimed no other damages than for the taking and conversion. The rule in that case was held to be that which governs in trespass where the levy by the sheriff was made without any motive of oppression, or wanton disregard of the duties of his office or the rights of the owner. The rule there was the value of the property with interest. Dorsey v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 553, was a case where the sheriff seized certain three horses and sold them to satisfy an assessment for state and county taxes. The action was in trespass. The plaintiffs were allowed to prove that they sustained, in addition to the loss of the property taken, certain injuries resulting consequentially and witnesses were allowed to testify to the amount of the damages. The defendant justified as sheriff, but the trial court excluded from the jury all evidence relating to the assessment on the ground that the assessment was illegal. This placed the defendant before the jury in the position of a naked trespasser, and the result was a verdict for plaintiff for $2,000 in damages. The value of the horses taken was $350. On appeal the judgment was reversed, and the rule in Phelps v. Owen, supra, was held applicable. Obviously these cases do not govern the present case. Page v. Fowler, 39 Cal. 412, 2 Am. Rep. 462, was an action in claim and delivery for certain hay which plaintiff sold after getting possession under the writ. He failed in the action to establish his right to the hay, and, of course, defendants were entitled to recover the value of the hay taken and disposed of by plaintiff. It was sold in San Francisco, in 1863, at $12.50 per ton, the highest price that could have been obtained. The market value of the hay was $2,500. Defendants were allowed to prove that hay had sold during the year 1864 for $40 per ton, and the trial court instructed the jury that they might find the highest market value since the hay was taken by the plaintiff, with interest. The jury brought in a verdict for $25,763.23. The trial was in November, 1869, six years after the taking. The judgment was reversed. The opinion is by Mr. Justice Temple and presents a very full analysis of the cases. The rule deduced was "that in cases affecting property of fluctuating value, where exemplary damages are not allowed, the correct measure of damages is the highest market value within a reasonable time after the property was taken, with interest compounded from the time such value was estimated." The opinion states: "We are not called upon to inquire whether a different measure of damages should be adopted where the property has been retained and can be returned in specie."

Freeborn v. Norcross, 49 Cal. 313, was claim and delivery and the appeal was on the judgment roll alone. The jury rendered a verdict for the value of the property, with "legal interest" thereon from the time of the seizure by the sheriff to the date of the verdict, and damages in the sum of $50. At that time section 200 of the Practice Act authorized the recovery of damages for the detention of personal property, as section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure now does. It was held that plaintiff could not recover both interest and damages; that interest is given in such case as damages, and, if allowed in addition to a gross sum for damages, it would amount to double damages. The cause was remanded, with directions to modify the judgment "so that plaintiff shall recover the sum of $375, with interest thereon (the rate specified in section 1920 of the Civil Code) from the date of the judgment." Why the court allowed interest instead of the $50 as the damages does not appear. Nor does the case decide that damages other than interest, if proven, may not be allowed. The evidence was not brought up. The report of the case is brief and it does not appear whether the interest allowed was more or less than the gross damages of $50.

In Kelly v. McKibben, 54 Cal. 192, interest was allowed in the judgment upon the value of the property from the time it was taken from the possession of defendant. The court said: "As no other damages for the detention are found or included in the judgment, we think that such interest may be regarded as damages for said detention. Freeborn v. Norcross, 49 Cal. 313." Upon rehearing the court pointed out the distinction between common-law actions of detinue and trover, holding that in replevin damages were given under section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure and not under section 3336 of the Civil Code. See Harris v. Smith, 132 Cal. 316, 64 Pac. 409; Hickey v. Coschina, 133 Cal. 81, 65 Pac. 313; Morris v. Allen, 17 Cal. App. 684, 64 Pac. 409, 121 Pac. 690.

Livestock Co. v. Union, etc., Co., 114 Cal. 447, 46 Pac. 286, was an action in replevin. The trial court found that "the plaintiff has not suffered any damages by reason of the detention of said personal property * * * nor have the defendants been guilty of oppression or fraud or malice." Plaintiff was allowed the value of the property with costs of suit. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was granted, and defendant appealed. The record showed without conflict that plaintiff had been damaged in a very considerable sum. The motion was granted on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision. The Supreme Court, in affirming the order, said:

"Under such proof (oppression, fraud, or malice) plaintiff might have been awarded exemplary damages (Civ. Code, § 3294), but without it was entitled to such damages as would compensate him for all the detriment proximately caused by the wrong complained of (Civ. Code, § 3333)."

[3] We think the trial court was authorized to fix the damages for the detention of the property, under section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the basis of the rental value.

The judgment is affirmed.

BAKEMAN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2699.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 22, 1918.)

1. CONTEMPT ⇐57—RESPONSE TO ORDER TO APPEAR AND SHOW CAUSE—PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

In response to order to appear and show cause why she should not be adjudged in contempt for disobedience of order to deliver notes and stock certificates to clerk of superior court, party was not required to appear personally; appearance by attorney being sufficient.

2. CONTEMPT ⇐63(4) — ORDER AS BASIS FOR PUNISHMENT—INSUFFICIENCY.

Order of superior court adjudging a defendant in contempt for failure to deliver to clerk notes and stock certificates was void as basis to impose punishment, where it did not appear that it was within defendant's power to deliver them.

3. PROHIBITION ⇐5(3)—CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS.

Superior court, on application for writ of prohibition to the appellate court, should be prohibited from further proceedings, in relation to alleged contempt in civil cause, which must necessarily be based on void orders.

Petition for writ of prohibition by Jean H. Bakeman against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the county of Los Angeles and Hon. Grant Jackson, Judge thereof. Alternative writ made peremptory.

H. S. Laughlin and Muhleman & Crump, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner. L. B. Stanton, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Prohibition. It appears from the petition, and the return made in response to the alternative writ issued herein, that in an action wherein J. F. Brumund was plaintiff and petitioner and others were defendants the court made an order requiring petitioner, within the time therein specified after service of the same, to deliver to the clerk of the court certain promissory notes and stock certificates, the right to the possession of which was claimed by plaintiff, the same to be held by the clerk pending further orders of the court. Upon an affidavit filed, setting forth the fact of the making of the order, due service thereof, and petitioner's neglect to comply therewith, she was, by an order of court made on February 9, 1918, cited to appear on the 11th day of March, 1918, and show cause why she should not be adjudged guilty of contempt for disobedience of the order, which citation was duly served on February 15, 1918. On March 11, 1918, the matter coming on for hearing, petitioner, in obedience to the order, appeared, not in person, but by attorney, and filed an affidavit wherein she averred that prior to the commencement of the action she had transferred the notes and stock to a resident of San Francisco, since which time she had had no control thereof, and that petitioner was and at all times had been without power to comply with the order of the court. At this hearing no evidence, other than petitioner's affidavit showing her inability to comply with the order, was received. Nevertheless, the court made an order as follows:

"In matter of order of Jean H. Bakeman to appear and show cause in re contempt, which comes on now to be heard, said defendant not being present in court is adjudged in contempt and a bench warrant is ordered to issue returnable forthwith."

Thereafter, on April 10th, petitioner appeared in court personally with her counsel, whereupon the court continued the hearing of said contempt proceedings to the 12th day of April, 1918, at which time the court made an order as follows:

"In the matter of order to show cause in re contempt, which comes on now for hearing, L. B. Stanton appearing as attorney for plaintiff, and H. H. Laughlin appearing for defendant, Jean H. Bakeman is sworn and examined, and Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1 is filed. Thereupon the hearing is continued to April 29, 1918, and defendant is ordered to produce at that time the stock described in the complaint."

At the hearing on the 29th of April the court made an order as follows:

"The defendant having failed to obey the order, hereinbefore made, directing her to bring into court certain certificates of stock in her possession, and at her request in open court the matter having been continued to this time, and she not appearing, she is now adjudged guilty of contempt of court; a bench warrant is ordered to issue for her arrest, but the service thereof is withheld until May 28, 1918, to which date this matter is continued."

It is alleged in the petition that Hon. Grant Jackson, as judge of said superior court, has announced his intention to, and will, unless prohibited from so doing, punish petitioner for her disobedience of said order and for her nonappearance in person upon the hearings of the orders to show cause hereinbefore set forth; and in its return the court asks to have the alternative writ discharged, "to the end that respondent may further proceed in the said cause of Grumund v. Bakeman," which further proceeding we assume is the pronouncing of judgment based upon and in accordance with the orders wherein petitioner was adjudged guilty of contempt.

[1] In response to the order made February 9, 1918, to show cause, petitioner was not required to appear personally. Ex parte Gordan, 92 Cal. 478, 28 Pac. 489, 27 Am. St. Rep. 154; Gordan v. Buckles, 92 Cal. 481, 28 Pac. 490. A sufficient appearance was made by her attorney, who, in response to the order to show cause, presented her affidavit showing that she was then, and since prior to the commencement of the action had been, unable to comply with the order, which fact, as to the notes, is shown by the complaint in the action wherein it is specifically alleged:

"That said Jean H. Bakeman has transferred to a party or parties unknown to this plaintiff, but well known to said Jean H. Bakeman, said and each and all of said notes so executed by said plaintiff as aforesaid. * * * Said transferee has and had at the time of said transfer full knowledge of the transactions between said plaintiff and said Jean H. Bakeman."

Hence the first order made on March 11th, adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt for failing to appear in person, was, upon the authorities cited, unwarranted and in excess of the jurisdiction of the court.

[2] The order made April 29th purports to adjudge petitioner guilty of contempt for failure to produce and deliver the certificates of stock in accordance with the direction made on April 12th requiring her so to do, and for such failure it was further ordered that a warrant issue for her arrest upon which, as admittedly appears, judgment would be pronounced, committing her to jail or subjecting her to a fine. The question, therefore, is whether this last order, made on April 29th, is sufficient to warrant the imposition of the threatened punishment. In our opinion it is not, for the reason that petitioner could not, upon the showing of cause made by her affidavit, be in contempt, in the absence of a finding or adjudication to the effect that she was then able to comply therewith. There is an absence of any recital or finding, in the order or elsewhere, that the petitioner had the ability to comply with the order of court referred to therein. An order adjudging one guilty of contempt for failure to perform an act directed by the court is void as a basis for the imposition of punishment, unless it appears therefrom that it is within the power of such person to perform the act. Ex parte Silvia, 123 Cal. 293, 55 Pac. 988, 69 Am. St. Rep. 58; In re Cowden, 139 Cal. 244, 73 Pac. 156; Egilbert v. Superior Court, 6 Cal. App. 190, 91 Pac. 748; Ex parte Cohen, 6 Cal. 319; Galland v. Galland, 44 Cal. 475, 13 Am. Rep. 167.

[3] Had petitioner sought a review of these orders adjudging her guilty of contempt, it would have been the duty of this court to annul the same for want of recital or finding that she was able to comply with the orders. This being true, it follows that the court upon this application should be prohibited from further proceedings which must necessarily be based upon orders which, for the reasons stated, are void.

The alternative writ of prohibition, heretofore issued, is made peremptory.

BUICK et al. v. BOYD et al. (Civ. 1834.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 13, 1918.)

JUDGMENT ⟸590(5)—RES JUDICATA.

Husband and wife having, pending divorce suit, by agreement withdrawn adjustment of property rights from court, decree determining nothing more than that property be awarded to the respective parties in accordance with such agreement would not be res judicata within Code Civ. Proc. § 1911, so as to bar an action by the wife to reform description in agreement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; James G. Estep, Judge.

Action by Mary Isabelle Buick and others against Benjamin F. Boyd and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Braynard & Kimball, of Redding, for appellant. Orr M. Chenowith, of Redding, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant Benjamin F. Boyd appeals from a judgment reforming the description of real property in a written contract. Plaintiff Mary Isabelle Buick was formerly Mary Isabelle Boyd, wife of defendant Benjamin F. Boyd, and the mother of plaintiffs Alfreida Elinor and Malcolm Glenn Boyd, infant children of the marriage. Defendants Eugene Boyd and Edna Boyd are also children of the said marriage and are made defendants because their consent to be joined as plaintiffs could not be obtained and because united in interest with plaintiffs. Plaintiff John H. Buick is joined with plaintiff Mary Isabelle Buick, being her husband at the commencement of the action. On February 11, 1909, plaintiff, Mary Isabelle Buick, then Mary Isabelle Boyd, commenced an action for a divorce in the superior court of Shasta county on the ground of extreme cruelty. Pending the action, on March 4, 1909, she and her then husband entered into a written agreement settling their property rights, her claims for alimony, counsel fees, and costs. Final decree in the action was granted the plaintiff, May 3, 1910. The concluding paragraph of the interlocutory decree reads as follows:

"And it further appearing that the rights of the respective parties in and to the property described in said complaint have been equitably adjusted by an agreement between the parties, it is determined that the said property be awarded to the respective parties in accordance with said agreement, dated the 4th day of March, A. D. 1909."

This agreement was intended to make disposition of all the property which either of the parties claimed to own, some belonging to each being separate property and some the property of the community. It not only purports to adjust all claims to property, but it adjusts all matters of alimony, counsel fees, and the support and maintenance of the minor children. Reciting the pendency of the action, it declares that:

"The parties hereto are desirous of settling said dispute of claims to the property in controversy and withdrawing the same from the consideration of the court, and whereas, the parties hereto are desirous of making provision for the support of the said minor children and for the son and daughter of the party of the first part herein (Benjamin F. Boyd), Eugene Boyd and Edna Boyd: Now, therefore, it is hereby mutually covenanted," etc.

The contract then awards to the second party (Mrs. Boyd) the ownership and possession of the homestead (describing the lot) theretofore declared. "Also a certain tract of land adjoining said lot, piece or parcel of land being the W. ½ of the N. W. ¼ of the N. E. ¼ and the N. E. ¼ of the N. W. ¼ of the N. W. ¼ of section 11, township 30 north, range 7 west; also the water ditch and water right belonging to said premises" (describing the ditch). The alleged mistake was in the call "N. E. ¼ of N. W. ¼ of N. W. ¼, section 11," which should have read "N. E. ¼ of N. W. ¼, section 11." It is further provided that second party "may continue to own, hold, occupy, possess and use" (a certain lot in the town of Redding, describing it, and declared by the agreement to be her separate property), "to have and hold the same, together with the rents, * * * during her lifetime or so long as she shall remain single and unmarried, for the better maintenance, support, care and education of herself and the two said minor children," and to go to said four children, Eugene, Edna, Alfreida, and Malcolm should she remarry. Then follows a clause by which the first party "does hereby grant all of his right, title and interest in and to said land and premises unto the said party of the second part to her use and to the use of said four children, * * * upon the conditions mentioned herein." Certain live stock, the separate property of second party, "shall continue to be and remain the property of the party of the second part herein as her separate and individual estate; and in consideration of the waiver of her right to alimony the said party of the first part hereby agrees to pay to the said party of the second part the sum of $53.50 for costs and attorney's fees herein." It is then provided that certain real property (describing it) "shall continue to be and remain" the separate property of first party. Follows also a provision that, in consideration of the grant to her as provided in the agreement, the second party "waives any claim for maintenance and support against the party of the first part, and hereby waives any right or title in and to any of the property of the party of the first part, except as expressed in this agreement." The instrument was duly acknowledged by the parties on the day of its date before Francis Carr, a justice of the peace in and for Redding township, Shasta county.

By appropriate averments in his answer, appellant claims:

"That plaintiffs are and each of them is precluded or estopped from suing upon the alleged cause of action set forth in said amended complaint herein for the following reasons": that the said court, on May 3, 1910, "made and rendered its final decree of divorce" dissolving the marriage which had theretofore existed between said Mary Isabelle and Benjamin F. Boyd, and "that no motion for a new trial was made or appeal taken from said final decree and said decree is now in full force and effect"; that said written agreement "was and now is merged in the said final judgment of divorce, and the said plaintiffs in the above-entitled action are and each of them is precluded or estopped from suing upon the alleged cause of action set forth in the said amended complaint."

Appellant's contention is stated as follows:

"The title to the property involved having been adjudicated in the divorce action, the final decree of divorce is res adjudicata and is a bar to the present action."

The court found as facts, among others:

"That the said plaintiff and the said defendant intended to set forth and describe in said agreement the west half of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 11, township 30 north, range 7 west, M. D., M., in the county of Shasta, state of California, but by mutual mistake in drawing and writing said agreement, said property intended to be described was incorrectly and by mistake described by the persons employed to draft and write said agreement, as the west half of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter, of section 11, township 30 north, range 7 west, M. D. M. That said mistake in description was and is a clerical mistake made in writing and drafting said agreement. * * * That said mistake was not discovered by plaintiff Mary Isabelle Buick, formerly Mary Isabelle Boyd, until the month of June, 1912, in the following manner: That on or about December, 1910, plaintiff Mary Isabelle Buick, formerly Mary Isabelle Boyd, rented the real property described in said declaration of homestead, which included the west half of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 11, township 30 north, range 7 west, M. D. M., in the county of Shasta, state of California, to one W. W. Sublett, and the said W. W. Sublett thereafter paid rent for the same to said plaintiff; that in the month of June, 1912, the said defendant Benjamin F. Boyd, notified the said W. W. Sublett that he, the said defendant, was entitled to the rent for the said northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 11; that said W. W. Sublett immediately thereafter informed said plaintiff that said defendant claimed the rent for the said northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 11, and claimed title to the same; that immediately thereafter said plaintiff examined said agreement, and discovered that the mistake in description hereinabove set forth had been made in said agreement. That prior to the said month of June, 1912, said plaintiff was not aware, and had no knowledge, that the aforesaid mistake in description had been made in said agreement."

It is not seriously contended that the evidence was insufficient to support these findings. If there was any evidence to the contrary, it was appellant's duty to point it out in his brief, which he has not done. Section 953c, Code Civ. Proc. We have read the record of the evidence and find it amply sufficient to sustain the findings.

It appeared that the parcel of land misdescribed did not, when the agreement was entered into, belong to either of the parties, while the parcel which the court found was intended to be described was a part of the homestead declared by defendant in 1902 while the northwest one-quarter of the northwest one-quarter of said section, which included the misdescribed parcel awarded to defendant, was deeded to him by the Central Pacific Railroad Company in July, 1909. The evidence showed that the intention of the parties was that the property described in the homestead should go to plaintiff in the divorce action.

The only controverted question in the case is presented in appellant's proposition above quoted.

The rule, as stated in the Code of Civil Procedure, § 1911, is as follows:

"That only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto."

It was competent for the parties in the divorce action to adjust their property rights without the intervention of the court, and in doing so they expressly declared their object to be the settlement of "disputed claims to the property in controversy, and withdrawing the same from the consideration of the court." The court in its decree determined nothing more than that the "property be awarded to the respective parties in accordance with said agreement." There was no longer any issue as to the property, nor was it necessary for the court to make any determination of the matter. The action of the court did not, in our opinion, amount to such an adjudication as in contemplated by the statute; nor did it constitute a bar to the present action. It added nothing to the validity or force of the agreement. There were in fact but two questions remaining for the court to determine, to wit: Whether plaintiff was entitled to the decree of divorce, and to whom the custody of the minor children should be awarded. "A former verdict is conclusive only as to facts directly and distinctly put in issue and the finding on which is necessary to uphold the judgment." 1 Freeman on Judgments, § 257. Where the record on its face shows that an issue before the court was withdrawn from consideration, the presumption that it was adjudicated no longer applies. Coburn v. Goodall, 72 Cal. 498, 506, 14 Pac. 190, 1 Am. St. Rep. 75. If a question is not in issue, it is immaterial that it is passed upon in the opinion of the court rendering the judgment. 15 R. C. L. p. 919.

That the court and the parties treated the agreement as withdrawing the property rights from the court is shown by the fact that the agreement disposed of certain cattle to the plaintiff in the action and certain real property to the defendant of which no mention is made in the decree. This issue of property rights having been withdrawn, the present action cannot fairly be said to be an attack upon the judgment of divorce. "The rule undoubtedly is," as said by Mr. Justice Lorigan in Southern Pacific Co. v. Edmunds, 168 Cal. 415, 418, 143 Pac. 597, 598, "that a former judgment between the parties to an action is conclusive in all subsequent actions involving the same question, not only as to the matters actually decided in the former controversy, but as to all matters belonging to the subject of the controversy and properly within the scope of the issues which also might have been raised and determined." But as to matters which might have been litigated and decided as within the scope of a former suit, but which were not actually or expressly in issue and adjudicated, the learned justice said, "only a presumption is indulged in that they were decided. This presumption is, however, a disputable one and may be overcome by showing that, although a particular matter was involved in the former action, it was by consent of the parties withdrawn from consideration at the trial and did not at all enter into or constitute any part of the verdict of the jury or final determination of that action." In point of fact, and it so appears from the face of the record, the property described in the complaint in the divorce action, and in the agreement and referred to in the decree, did not include the parcel now involved, and the disposition of the latter was therefore not an issue in the original action, and, on the face of the record, the judgment would appear not to be a bar, for there was no adjudication as to it. If the rule be invoked that this parcel was a matter "belonging to the subject of the controversy and properly within the scope of the issues which also might have been raised and determined," the answer is that neither party discovered the mistake in the description of the property and both parties by mutual mistake assumed the description to be correct. The present action is different from the original action, and the rule is that in such case the judgment in the first action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters actually litigated and determined and not as to matters which might have been litigated. In Freeman v. Barnum, 131 Cal. 386, 389, 63 Pac. 691, 692 (82 Am. St. Rep. 355), Mr. Justice Temple stated the rule to be that:

"If the point or matter of fact has by them (the parties) or those to whom they are privy in estate been once distinctly put in issue and solemnly found against them, they are precluded from contending to the contrary. But this estoppel in actions upon a different cause of action only extends to matters actually litigated and determined, and not to questions involved and defenses which might have been, but were not made."

In the case of More v. More, 133 Cal. 489, 65 Pac. 1044, 66 Pac. 76, plaintiff Wallace More executed a deed purporting to convey to Thos. More all the interest of the former in the estate of A. P. More, deceased, and he also addressed a letter to the judge sitting in probate and to the administrator of said estate authorizing the distribution of said interest to said grantee. Accordingly, the court determined the rights of the parties under section 1664, Code of Civil Procedure. The suit was brought to annul the deed from Wallace to Thomas More. The judgment in the superior court was pleaded as an estoppel. Said the court:

"Assuming the court to have jurisdiction, its judgment would be conclusive only as to the matter actually litigated. (Citing cases.) In the case at bar the matter now involved was not before the court." (Fraud in obtaining the deed from Wallace More was the issue.) "The judgment was entered on the written order or stipulation of Wallace More, obtained along with the deed of April 27, 1894, and tainted with the same fraud. It added nothing to the force of that document and the accompanying deed. Hence it is immaterial whether the court had or had not jurisdiction to determine the questions now under consideration. It is sufficient that those questions were not submitted to it."

We can see no reason why the rule should not apply in a case of mutual mistake as well as where the issue is fraud. Relief in both cases addresses itself to the equity side of the court. It is very clear that in the present case the question of the alleged mistake was not before the court in the divorce action and was not litigated. Speaking of the identity of causes of action, Mr. Freeman says:

"The cause is the same when the same evidence will support both actions, or rather, the judgment in the former action will be a bar, provided the evidence necessary to sustain the judgment for plaintiff in the present action would have authorized a judgment for him in the former." Freeman on Judgments, § 257.

Had the evidence of the mistake been before the court, or had it been known when the agreement was made, it is quite clear that a correct description of the land would have found its way into both the decree and the agreement. It would, to our minds, work a miscarriage of justice to allow the rule of res adjudicata to step in here and defeat the action. Neither the facts nor the exigencies of the case would justify the court in permitting this to be done.

The judgment is affirmed.

37 Cal. App. 778

PEOPLE v. ROSSI. (Cr. 443.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 16, 1918.)

1. INFANTS ⊂⊃20—LEWD ACTS WITH FEMALE CHILD.
Where defendant committed lewd acts upon body of 9 year old girl calculated to arouse her sexual passions, but made no attempt to have intercourse, he was guilty of violating Pen. Code, § 288, punishing such acts when not constituting any other crime provided for in part 2 of Penal Code.

2. INFANTS ⊂⊃20—LEWD ACTS WITH FEMALE CHILD—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
Evidence held to warrant conviction of committing lewd and lascivious acts upon and with the body of a female child under the age of 14 years, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1159(2)—REVIEW—VERDICT.
Verdict warranted by the evidence will not be disturbed by appellate court.

4. CRIMINAL LAW 730(12)—REMARKS OF PROSECUTOR—CURE BY INSTRUCTION.
In prosecution for committing lewd acts upon body of 9 year old girl, prosecutor's reference to defendant as "debaucher," if improper, was rendered harmless by instruction that, if words had been employed in sense that defendant had had intercourse with the child, evidence did not justify their use.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃719(2)—ARGUMENT OF PROSECUTOR.
Prosecutor may build up theory of case as it is made by evidence, and often in so doing may give expression to thoughts drawn from realms of his imagination.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃719(1)—ARGUMENTS OF PROSECUTOR—EVIDENCE.
Prosecutor, in his argument, must not bring into case facts vitally bearing upon the charge or defendant's alleged connection therewith which have no foundation in the evidence.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃722(3)—COMMENTS OF PROSECUTOR—CHARACTER OF ACCUSED.
Where evidence warrants belief that defendant is guilty, prosecutor, in his argument, may assume his guilt and characterize him according to the nature or degree of turpitude of the crime of which he is accused.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃720(5)—TRIAL—COMMENTS OF PROSECUTOR—CREDIBILITY AND CHARACTER OF WITNESSES.
Prosecutor in his argument may assail credibility of witnesses, when impeached by direct evidence, or by inconsistency or incoherence, manner of testifying, appearance upon the stand, or circumstances.

9. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃991(3)—LEWD ACTS UPON BODY OF CHILD—INDETERMINATIVE SENTENCE.
In view of Indeterminate Sentence Act, court was unauthorized to impose maximum penalty of 20 years' imprisonment for violation of Pen. Code, § 288.

10. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1184—JUDGMENT—UNAUTHORIZED SENTENCE.
Trial court's error in imposing maximum sentence, where it had no authority to do so, does not nullify entire judgment, but judgment may be modified by appellate court imposing proper sentence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Roffi Rossi was convicted of having committed lewd and lascivious acts upon and with the body of a female child under the age of 14 years, and he appeals. Affirmed, as modified.

K. D. Robinson, of Auburn, Cal., and A. J. Harder, of Roseville, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was charged by an information with, and convicted by a jury in the superior court of Placer county of, having committed lewd and lascivious acts upon and with the body of a female child under the age of 14 years, and prosecutes these appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information is based on section 288 of the Penal Code which reads:

"Any person who shall willfully and lewdly commit any lewd or lascivious act other than the acts constituting other crimes provided for in part two of this Code upon or with the body, or any part or member thereof, of a child under the age of fourteen years, with the intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of such person or of such child shall be guilty of a felony and shall be imprisoned in the state prison not less than one year."

The information charges the offense as follows:

"The said Roffi Rossi, on or about the 17th day of January, A. D. 1918, at the said county of Placer, in the said state of California, and before the filing of this information, did then and there willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and lewdly kiss, embrace, hug, and place his hands under the clothes and on and between the legs of one Lucille Orsolini, a female child under the age of fourteen years, with the intent of then and there arousing, appealing to, and gratifying the lust and passion and sexual desires of said child, all of which is contrary to the form, force, and effect," etc.

The point first made by the defendant is that if the defendant was shown by the evidence to have been guilty of any crime at all, it was that of an attempt to commit rape, and not that defined by section 288 of the Penal Code. It is hence argued that the verdict cannot stand, because the acts proved come within those "constituting other crimes provided for in part 2 of the Penal Code." The point is without merit.

The child upon whom the alleged lascivious act was committed by the defendant is the daughter of a Mr. and Mrs. Orsolini, residents of Roseville, Placer county, and was, at the time of the commission of said act (the 17th day of January, 1918), a little more than 9 years of age. The alleged crime was committed in the early morning of the day named at the home of the parents of the child in Roseville, after the father had gone to his work as a machinist in the railroad shops at Roseville and the mother had gone to the city of Sacramento to spend the day. A family by the name of Trott was occupying the house temporarily with the Orsolinis, and Trott was the only person left in the house with the child; Mrs. Trott having also gone to Sacramento that day. Trott was in bed, and the little girl was in the kitchen engaged in preparing her own breakfast, when the defendant, for the purpose, so he claimed, of delivering to Trott a key to a house in Roseville which the latter contemplated leasing for use by himself and family, made his appearance at the Orsolini home. Trott was aroused from a semisleeping condition by the noise of persons talking and "rustling around" in the adjoining room, and finally heard a child's voice say, "Don't do that—stop that—it hurts." Trott thereupon went to the bathroom door, from which he could see into the adjoining bedroom, and there he saw the defendant sitting upon the bed, but did not then see the child. Trott then returned to his own room, and went back to bed, and within a few minutes thereafter again heard similar noises to those which he had previously heard, and again he arose and went to the bathroom door, and, looking into the adjoining bedroom, saw the defendant sitting on the bed holding the child between his legs, with the back part of her clothes up and his left hand under her clothes, while his right hand was around her body. Trott said that the defendant was moving himself "up and down" and holding the child on his lap. Trott addressing the defendant, asked, "What in hell are you doing there?" Whereupon the child broke away from the embraces of the defendant and ran into the adjacent room, exclaiming, as she ran out, "You dirty thing; I told you not to do that." When the child thus got away from the defendant, Trott observed that the latter's private parts were out of his pantaloons and exposed.

There was no testimony that the defendant had sexual relations with the child. In fact, the girl testified that he did not insert his private parts into hers, but kissed and hugged her, and had his hand under her dress and upon her person. She explained that when she said to the defendant, "Stop that, it hurts," etc., she had reference to his hugging her or pressing her body to his with such force as to make it painful to her.

[1-3] It requires no argument to demonstrate that, under the facts as they are above briefly detailed, the defendant's acts were those denounced as a crime by section 288 of the Penal Code. It may be true that his intention was to have sexual relations with the child; but there is no evidence that he did have such relations with her nor is there any proof that he attempted to insert his private parts into hers. But, as is obvious from the above statement of the testimony, there is ample evidence showing that he committed acts of lewdness upon her body—acts which very naturally are calculated to excite the sexual passions of a child—and it it just such reprehensible conduct that section 288 was designed to punish. If it had been so clearly shown that the defendant attempted to insert his private parts into those of the child that no other conclusion would have been justified by the jury than that he attempted to commit the crime of rape upon the infant, then this court might be required to agree with appellant's counsel that the act committed was one of those "acts constituting other crimes provided for by part 2 of the" Penal Code, and therefore within the exception prescribed by section 288. But, as in effect heretofore stated, there is evidence which warranted the verdict returned by the jury, and we are in consequence not at liberty to interfere with the result at which they arrived. See People v. Dabner, 25 Cal. App. 630, 144 Pac. 975.

[4-8] The next and last point urged by the appellant for a reversal is predicated upon certain alleged misconduct of the district attorney during the course of his argument to the jury. That officer, several times in his address, referred to the case as one in which the "little girl" had been "debauched" by the defendant, and also declared that the latter was a "debaucher." Counsel for the defendant objected to the use of those words by the district attorney, and the court thereupon suggested that the prosecutor omit their use in his argument, saying that, if the words were employed by the district attorney in the sense that the defendant had actually had sexual intercourse with the child, the evidence did not justify their use. This statement by the court was itself sufficient to overcome the effect of any damage which the defendant might have otherwise suffered from the use of those words by the prosecutor. But we do not think the district attorney went far afield when he described the defendant as a "debaucher." The evidence, of which we have herein given a statement in substance, discloses the defendant's revolting and beastly acts upon the child, and, even though he did not succeed in having actual sexual relations with her, it is fairly and reasonably to be assumed from the evidence that he was not above doing so, and might have carried his lechery that far, but for the appearance of the witness Trott in the room at a timely moment.

We are, however, not so sure that one doing as the defendant was shown by the evidence to have done in this case may not with propriety be termed a "debaucher." His acts with the child were obviously such as to instill into her childish mind thoughts of the most degrading character and tendency, and which are naturally calculated to lead an adolescent, presumably without fixed or correct notions of the principles of morality or a proper appreciation of the appalling significance of the loss of chastity by a female, to the commission of acts of unspeakable depravity. A man responsible for such a state of mind in a young female, who may be assumed, from her immature years, to be mentally irresponsible or without the ability to appreciate the terrible consequences to her of immoral conduct, is, although himself never having been criminally intimate with such child, no less a debaucher than one who has committed upon the child the sexual act itself.

A district attorney, however, has the right in argument to build up a theory of his case as it is made by the evidence, and often in doing so he may give expression to thoughts which have been drawn from the realms of his imagination. If thus he keeps within the general character of the case as it is made by the proofs, then he remains within the sphere of legitimate argument. Of course, the prosecutor should not be permitted, in argument, to bring into the case facts vitally bearing upon the charge, or the defendant's alleged connection therewith, which have no foundation in the evidence; but where the evidence, as here, is such as clearly to warrant the belief that the defendant on trial committed the crime charged, then the prosecuting officer is authorized in argument to assume his guilt and to refer to and characterize him according to the nature or degree of turpitude of the crime of which he is accused. As was said in People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 160, 72 Pac. 965, 967, in reply to an objection that the district attorney abused his rights in his argument to the jury, so it may with equal propriety be said here:

"A defendant on trial for murder is not entitled as of right to be spoken of as if he were an innocent man in an argument by the officer who is endeavoring to show * * * his guilt."

Hence it has been well said that, in his address to the jury, a prosecuting officer may descant upon the facts proved or admitted, arraign the conduct of the parties or the witnesses, "impugn, excuse, fortify, or condemn motives, as far as they are developed in the evidence, and assail the credibility of witnesses, when impeached by direct evidence, or by the inconsistency or incoherence of their testimony, their manner of testifying, their appearance upon the stand, or by circumstances. His illustrations may be as varied as the resources of his genius, his argumentation as full and profound as his learning can make it, and he may, if he will, give play to his wit, or wings to his imagination." Tucker v. Henniker, 41 N. H. 323. See, also, People v. Molina, 126 Cal. 505, 59 Pac. 34; People v. McMahon, 124 Cal. 436, 57 Pac. 224; People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 12, 87 Pac. 1016; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 Pac. 671; People v. Wheeler, 65 Cal. 77, 2 Pac. 892; People v. Yee Foo, 4 Cal. App. 730, 741, 742, 89 Pac. 450.

[9] No other points are made by the defendant, but the Attorney General has called our attention to an error in the judgment of sentence of which notice herein should be taken. The crime of which the defendant was convicted was, as above shown, committed in the month of January, 1918. The Legislature of 1917 passed what is known as the "Indeterminate Sentence Act," which went into operation in August of said year (see Stats. 1917, p. 665), said law being now section 1168 of the Penal Code.

Section 288 of the Penal Code, of the alleged violation of whose provisions the defendant was convicted, fixes a minimum penalty of not less than one year for the offense defined therein, but does not prescribe or limit to a specific number of years a maximum penalty therefor, so that the punishment may in such a case run from not less than one year to life. The court below, in sentencing the defendant and in its judgment of sentence, fixed the maximum term of imprisonment at 20 years. Such a sentence in this case the court was without authority to impose, since section 1168 of the Penal Code was in operative effect at the time the crime of which the defendant was convicted is alleged to have been committed. People v. Gonzales, 173 Pac. 407. In that case the defendants were convicted of the crime of robbery, committed after section 1168 of the Penal Code became operative, and the court, in sentencing them, fixed the maximum penalty in each case at a specific number of years. The punishment for the crime of robbery is exactly the same as that prescribed for the offense of which the defendant here stands convicted, viz. "by imprisonment in the state prison not less than one year." This court, in the case above named, among other things, said:

"We can see no merit in the claim that the law does not prescribe the maximum penalty for the crime of robbery. The maximum penalty 'prescribed by the law' is the extreme penalty that the law authorizes to be imposed; that is, life imprisonment in the present case, as we have seen."

The judgment was reversed, "with direction to the lower court to pronounce judgment in accordance with said indeterminate sentence law of 1917." A petition for the hearing of the case by the Supreme Court after judgment here was denied, and the case is therefore controlling upon the question here.

[10] The Attorney General, however, upon a point of practice in a matter of this kind, has called our attention to the case of the People v. Mendosa, 173 Pac. 998, in which the defendant, having been convicted of burglary of the second degree, committed after the indeterminate sentence law became operative, was sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one nor more than five years. The maximum punishment for burglary of the second degree is imprisonment for five years in the penitentiary, no minimum penalty being prescribed for said offense. The appellate court of the First district, while holding that the trial court erred in fixing the minimum penalty at one year, further properly held that the error so committed did not have the effect of nullifying the entire judgment, but instead of remanding the case for the purpose of having a proper sentence imposed modified the judgment of sentence by striking therefrom the portion thereof purporting to fix the period of imprisonment. That case was not called to our attention in the Gonzales Case, nor does it in any way conflict with the conclusion reached in the latter case upon the vital question therein decided, but harmonizes therewith. We do not, however, perceive any reason for holding that the course adopted by the appellate court in the Mendosa Case is not in such a situation perfectly proper, legally, and certainly it is the better, or at least the less inconvenient and troublesome, course to follow. We shall, therefore, adopt it in this case, in preference to returning the case to the court below for the imposition of a proper sentence.

Accordingly, the portion of the judgment of sentence herein which attempts and purports to fix the maximum penalty at 20 years is stricken from said judgment, and, as so modified, the judgment appealed from, as well as the order, likewise attacked here, denying the defendant's motion for a new trial, are affirmed.

DUTWILER v. KLUNK et al. (Civ. 2283.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 23, 1918.)

1. SALES ⟸1(4) — CERTAINTY — CARLOAD OF IRON.

A contract whereby one party was to obtain a carload of iron and manufacture the iron into stoves, with dies to be furnished by other party, who was to purchase the stoves, was not void for uncertainty, although parties did not agree on the amount of iron in carload, or maximum or minimum amount thereof.

2. SALES ⟸370 — PERFORMANCE — BREACH — DAMAGES.

Where stove dealers agreed to furnish manufacturer with dies, and to buy all stoves manufactured with such dies out of a carload of iron, but after part performance took dies away from the latter and refused to return them, latter's right to recover damages was not defeated by fact that he had loaned part of the iron, where loan did not interfere with performance of contract, and where dealers knowing of loan, did not object, and treated contract as in force.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸757(1) — RECORD — BRIEFS.

On appeal under the alternative method provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a et seq., the court will not consider error in ruling on admission of evidence, where no part of the record upon such question has been printed in the briefs, as required by section 953c.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by M. E. Dutwiler against A. J. Klunk and another, copartners. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. Barstow, Rohe & Jeffers, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendants were engaged in selling a certain kind of patented camp stove. In order to obtain a supply of stoves for the market they agreed with the plaintiff that the plaintiff would obtain a carload of iron and manufacture that iron into stoves, for which the defendants would pay to the plaintiff 75 cents per stove. The stoves were to be made in accordance with certain dies, which the defendants were to furnish and did furnish. After a part of the stoves had been delivered and paid for, the defendants, with plaintiff's consent, shipped the dies to Chicago for the purpose of using the same in manufacturing a quantity of stoves there, but with a promise to return the same to the plaintiff to complete his contract. These dies never were returned to the plaintiff. Of the iron remaining in the plaintiff's hands, a part had been blocked out for stoves and a part was untouched. The judgment, which was in favor of the plaintiff, covers a sum allowed for depreciation in value of the iron which had been blocked out, and a sum covering the profits which the plaintiff would have made if the contract had been fulfilled. The defendants appeal from the judgment.

The principal grounds of appeal urged by the defendants are the following: (1) The contract was void for uncertainty in the attempted specification of the quantity of iron authorized to be ordered, and was therefore unenforceable in so far as uncompleted stoves were concerned. (2) The evidence does not support the finding that defendants agreed to purchase more than the number of stoves to be made from a minimum car of 40,000 pounds, to wit, approximately 3,500 stoves. (3) The judgment for depreciation in value of the cut-up iron and loss of prospective profit was unwarranted, because the contract was not performed, nor was performance prevented by defendants. On the contrary, plaintiff himself breached the contract and abandoned the same, when he loaned or sold a part of the metal ordered for the performance of his contract. (4) The court erred in declining to allow defendants an opportunity to procure the original freight bill of the car in question and thus prove the weight of the metal delivered.

[1] We have not been favored with a printed copy of the court's findings, but from the evidence produced in the brief we infer that the weight of the iron in that carload was found to be 49,618 pounds. There was evidence tending to show that such was the true weight. Appellants claim that their order was limited to a minimum carload, and that a minimum carload of iron would have weighed only 40,000 pounds. The evidence was amply sufficient to support the court's conclusion that the contract simply provided for a carload of iron, without limiting the quantity to any specified weight. Taking this to be the fact, we think that the contract was enforceable, notwithstanding the fact that the parties in making their agreement did not state how much iron should constitute a carload, and did not attempt to provide what should be either the minimum or maximum amount of iron in such carload. In the case of a contract for nine carloads of lumber it was held by the Appellate Court of Indiana that the parties might contract for nine carloads without specifying the capacity of the cars. Indianapolis Cabinet Co. v. Herrman, 7 Ind. App. 462, 34 N. E. 579.

[2] On cross-examination of the plaintiff he admitted that after the carload of iron came into his possession, and before the dies were taken away by the defendants, the plaintiff loaned 30 bundles of the iron to another corporation. After about six weeks this iron was returned by the borrower to the plaintiff. During that period of six weeks the defendants took away the dies for the stated purpose of sending them away temporarily for the special purpose stated above. They were informed at that time that these 30 bundles had been loaned to another establishment, but they made no objection thereto. On the contrary, the defendants treated the contract as still in force and promised that they would return the dies within a stated time. Our attention has not been called to any evidence tending to show that the act of the plaintiff in lending these 30 bundles of iron, amounting to about 4,500 pounds, caused any delay, or in any manner interfered with the plaintiff's performance of his contract. These facts, therefore, do not furnish any valid ground for appellants' claim that the judgment for depreciation in value of the cut-up iron and the loss of prospective profits was unwarranted.

[3] The last point argued in appellants' brief relates to an alleged error in ruling upon the admission of evidence. No part of the record upon this question has been printed in that brief or in the brief of the opposing party. They disagree about the facts, and the matter in dispute is not properly before us for determination. Where the record on appeal has been prepared in typewritten form under the alternative method provided by sections 953a et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, the parties must "print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." Code Civ. Proc. § 953c; Barker Bros. v. Joos, 171 Pac. 1085.

The judgment is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA VEGETABLE UNION v. CROCKER NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 2440.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 8, 1918.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING ⊂⊃148(3) — FORGED CHECKS—NEGLIGENCE OF DEPOSITOR.
Where depositor did not examine monthly statements from a bank, and thus an employé of the depositor forged successive checks throughout a year, depositor was not entitled to recover money so paid out, especially where monthly notices required depositors to report discrepancies within 15 days.

2. BANKS AND BANKING ⊂⊃154(2) — FORGED CHECKS.
Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, requiring depositor to bring action against bank for payment of forged check within one year, begins to run on presentment and payment of the check, and not upon discovery of forgery.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the California Vegetable Union, a corporation, against the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco, a national banking association. From a judgment in its favor granting only a part of the relief demanded, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Walter R. Bacon, of San Francisco, for appellant. Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco (J. F. Shuman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The California Vegetable Union is a Los Angeles concern having a branch house in San Francisco. Of this branch house during the period in which we are interested H. F. Ardery was the manager and Fred B. Weeks the cashier. During the years 1911 and 1912 and until the end of the year 1913 the plaintiff's branch house in San Francisco was a depositor of the defendant bank. The bank was instructed to pay checks of the plaintiff when signed by Fred

B. Weeks, its cashier, and H. F. Ardery, its manager. Weeks became an employé of the plaintiff about the 1st of May, 1912, and continued in that employment until about September 1, 1913, when he "departed these quarters for parts unknown, leaving behind him a trail of forged checks." Between September 18, 1912, and August 28, 1913, Weeks forged the name of Ardery to 136 separate checks, all drawn upon the plaintiff's account in the defendant bank, and aggregating $3,972.65. The bank cashed these checks, and charged their amount to plaintiff's account. The checks went through the bank during the various months of this period, and at the end of each month the forged checks paid during that month, together with all the valid checks of the plaintiff, were returned to it, with a list of all checks paid by the bank during that month. The statement accompanying the vouchers also showed the balance to the credit of the plaintiff at the end of the preceding month in each instance, the amounts of all deposits made by it during that month, and separately all checks of plaintiff paid by the bank during the current month, and the balance to the credit of the plaintiff on the defendant's books at the end of the month. These returned checks and these accounts for all of the months from August, 1912, to August, 1913, although regularly received in the course of business at the end of each month during that period, were never examined by the plaintiff, nor by its manager Ardery, until some time in September, 1913, after Weeks had absconded. During the period in which the forgeries were perpetrated Mr. O'Neal, the president of the plaintiff company, visited the San Francisco branch on several occasions. He had opportunity to examine the account of the plaintiff in the bank and the returned checks and vouchers, but he never did it. He did, however, see the general statement showing the bank balance of the branch house during that time. Other officials of the company visited the office in San Francisco during the period but none of them ever examined or paid any attention whatever to the bank balances or to the written statements of the business of the branch with the bank. The plaintiff also employed an auditor in its Los Angeles office, whose duty it was to examine its bank balances and check up month by month the canceled checks and vouchers, but no examination of the checks and vouchers of the branch in San Francisco was ever made by this auditor during that time, nor by any one performing similar duties.

Mr. O'Neal testified that he knew it to be a custom of banks to furnish to their depositors monthly statements showing their balances, together with the vouchers and canceled checks that had been paid and charged to the account during the month; that he never asked Mr. Ardery if he was having that done in San Francisco; that the checks were made up in blocks of 100 each; that a check register was kept numbered to correspond with the various numbers of the checks, and ruled so that the purpose of the check is stated in the cash book or check register; that the regular system of the plaintiff was that every time a check went out the company had a list or memorandum of the check in the office, and that it was possible when the checks came back from the bank at the end of each month to compare them with the check register by numbers and amounts, but this was never done. Had any of these precautions been taken Weeks' rascality would have been discovered. Weeks was not without considerable skill in these forgeries. The forged signatures of Ardery were strikingly similar to his true signature. Several officers of the defendant bank, all skilled in the detection of forgeries, testified that this was so. Mr. Ebner, the assistant cashier of the bank, who has had 33 years' experience in examining signatures on bank checks, said that if the bank were to refuse payment of checks bearing signatures agreeing as closely with the authorized signature in the bank as did the forged signatures of Ardery, the result would be a refusal of payment of about half the checks presented at banks.

Ardery excused his remissness in paying no attention to the bank account by the curt statement that it was none of his business; that "Weeks was under bond to take care of that end of the work." Generally speaking, the method of these parties in doing business may be said to have corresponded with the customs of metropolitan banks and their depositors in transacting business with each other; and it appears from the evidence that had Mr. O'Neal or Mr. Ardery or their auditor given any attention whatever to the returned checks or to the state of plaintiff's bank balances they would have known that from the beginning of his transaction of business with the bank Weeks was forging the name of Ardery to checks, cashing them and converting the money to his own use.

The court gave judgment for the plaintiff for $40, this being based on two checks of $20, each forged and uttered by Weeks prior to his disappearance on the last day of August, and paid by the bank in September about a week after it had been notified by Ardery of the other forgeries.

[1] The principal problem in this case may be stated in the language of the Supreme Court in the case of Otis Elevator Co. v. First National Bank, 163 Cal. 31, 124 Pac. 704, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529, and is as follows:

"The claim made by the" appellant "was that * * * the evidence presented the simple case of a forgery * * * to which is to be applied the well-settled rule that as between the bank and its customers the payment of forged or altered checks by such bank is made at its peril, and cannot be charged against the depositor's account. This, of course, is the general rule, and it is applied stringently in cases of simple forgery which involve no other elements than that the purported check of the depositor which was paid was a forged one. But this rule is not applied unqualifiedly. It has its limitations and exceptions, as general rules usually have, and is modified to the extent that when some negligent act * * * of the customer has contributed to the payment by the bank, or the facts in a particular case surrounding the forgery of a check and its presentation and payment are of such character as call for the application thereto of some general principle of law or equity, they may be relied on by the bank as an estoppel against the customer, precluding him from denying the correctness of the payment."

The exact question here involved has never been squarely decided in the courts of this state so far as we have been able to discover. An instruction in accordance with the contention of the appellant was expressly disapproved in the case of Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 1100, 14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82, which instruction read as follows:

"In considering the fact that Mr. Janin's bank book was balanced, and that the bank's statement of the balance was apparently acquiesced in for a considerable length of time, I instruct you that the plaintiff was under no contract to the bank to examine with diligence his returned checks and bank book. In contemplation of law, the book was balanced and the checks returned for the protection of the depositor, not for the protection of the bank; and when Mr. Janin failed to examine it, the only consequence was that the burden of proof shifted. Mr. Janin then became bound to show that the account was wrongly stated. This right he has preserved so long as the claim was not barred by the statute of limitations." "This instruction," says the court in the opinion, "although apparently supported by the authority of Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731, is not in our opinion entirely correct, and is in conflict with the other instructions referred to. When considered in connection with a portion of another instruction given, to the effect that it 'was sufficient to give notice when the forgery was discovered,' this instruction clearly implied that the plaintiff could not be charged with negligence in not examining his checks within a reasonable time, and that the jury were only to inquire whether he was guilty of unreasonable delay in giving notice after he made the examination and discovered the forgery. This is not the true rule. * * *"

The court thus disapproved of the exact contention which counsel for appellant makes in this case, although it must be said that it did not reverse the case for that reason, but on other grounds, holding that in view of the undisputed evidence in the case the giving of this erroneous instruction did not justify a reversal of the judgment. This case and the case of Otis Elevator Co. v. First Nat. Bank, supra, are the only cases that we have been able to find in this jurisdiction, where this rule has been considered by the court; and in neither of those cases, it must be admitted, were the facts exactly those of this case; nor did the Supreme Court in either of those cases finally base its decision upon the propositions of law here involved. However, those cases appeal to us as sound expressions of the legal principle which must apply to the facts of the case at bar; and our conclusion in that respect is in accord with the weight of authority in the United States.

The principle embodied in the case of Otis Elevator Co. v. First Nat. Bank, supra, and the general rule above stated, find emphatic approval and application in the leading case of Leather Manufacturers' Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 6 Sup. Ct. 657, 29 L. Ed. 811, in which the court, treating the presentation of a bank book written up accompanied by the canceled checks of the depositor to him as an account stated, says:

"Where a party to a stated account, who is under a duty, from the usages of business or otherwise, to examine it within a reasonable time after having an opportunity to do so, and give timely notice of his objections thereto, neglects altogether to make such examination himself, or to have it made, in good faith, by another for him, by reason of which negligence the other party, relying upon the account as having been acquiesced in or approved, has failed to take steps for his protection which he could and would have taken had such notice been given," the depositor is estopped by his conduct to question the conclusiveness of the account stated which arises out of the presentation to him of the account and his failure to examine it and detect the frauds contained therein, and give the bank notice thereof in order that it may protect itself against future frauds of a similar character.

In addition to the rule laid down very clearly after an able and exhaustive discussion in the case of Leather Manufacturers' Bank v. Morgan, supra, the question has been before the Court of Appeal of the state of New York in the case of Morgan v. United States Mortgage & Trust Co., 208 N. Y. 218, 101 N. E. 871, L. R. A. 1915D, 741, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 462, in which the legal principle in issue here was approvingly applied and clearly stated in the following language (syllabus):

"Primarily a bank may pay and charge to its depositor only such sums as are duly authorized by the latter, and of course a forged check is not authority for such payment. It is, however, permitted to a bank to escape liability for repayment of amounts paid out on forged checks by establishing that the depositor has been guilty of negligence which contributed to such payments, and that it has been free from any negligence. A depositor who sends his passbook to be written up and receives it back with his paid checks as vouchers, is bound, under certain circumstances, to examine the passbook and vouchers, and report to the bank without unreasonable delay any errors which may be discovered."

The facts in that case were very similar to those in the case at bar, and are stated in the opinion substantially as follows:

"The trustees of an estate had a deposit account with a bank, and checks drawn thereon were signed by a rubber stamp imprinting the name of the estate, authenticated by the actual signature of either trustee. The trustees had a clerk, who was their agent in dealing with the bank. He made deposits, filled out the body of the checks, and obtained from the bank the passbook and vouchers and accompanying check list whenever the account was balanced. During a period of about a year he forged a number of checks aggregating a large sum, and employed in his forgeries the rubber stamp, with the simulated signature of one of the trustees in authentication thereof. Whenever the account was balanced the clerk withdrew from the vouchers and destroyed the checks forged by him and also the check list, and after as long a delay as convenient delivered the passbook and the genuine vouchers to the trustees, who knew that the passbook was balanced frequently and returned with the paid checks as vouchers and with a detailed list thereof. The trustees also had a journal and ledger account, * * * upon the stubs of which were entered the genuine checks presented to and paid by the bank. The trustee who examined the passbook and vouchers never asked for the check list, which he knew was returned with the vouchers, and which would have shown the payment of the forged checks. He did not examine the balances shown by the passbook which were struck after the payment of the forged checks, but contented himself with a comparison of the genuine checks with the check book and with the books of the estate, which comparison disclosed no signs of the forgeries. The bank also paid interest on the account, and an examination of the passbook would have shown that the amount of interest credited thereon was much less than that on the books of the estate and less than would have appeared except for the payment of the forged checks."

On this state of facts in that case the Court of Appeals of New York held that the depositors, by their own negligence in failing properly to examine their passbook and vouchers, contributed to the payment of the forged checks, and hence that the plaintiff could not recover from the bank the amounts so paid. That case settled the question in New York, overruling the earlier case of Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731, relied on by appellant. It seemed necessary to so settle the question as the authorities were in some confusion in that state upon this subject previous to the adjudication of Morgan v. United States Mortgage & Trust Co., supra.

In Pennsylvania the leading case of Myers v. Southwestern Natl. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 44 Atl. 280, 74 Am. St. Rep. 672, held in conformity to the views of the United States Supreme Court and of the Court of Appeals of the state of New York in the case above cited and other cases, upholding the same doctrine, and stated that if the plaintiff's duty to the bank had been performed at the proper time, the fact would have appeared that the bank had charged the plaintiff on his bank book with the payment of two items for which no vouchers appeared among the checks handed to him by the clerk, and that, no objection having been made at the time of the presentation of the statements by the bank, the latter had the right to assume that everything was correct, including the two checks purporting to have been forged, and that the silence of the plaintiff was tantamount to a declaration to that effect, and that in afterwards honoring checks signed by the same person the bank had a right to consider the fact that these signatures had been at least tacitly recognized by the plaintiff as genuine. Further the court in that case said:

"In view of the uncontradicted evidence as to the foregoing facts, it cannot be doubted that as between the bank and the plaintiff the latter alone should be held responsible for the consequences resulting from the failure to examine the checks in question and approve or reject them within a reasonable time. In contemplation of law, the delivery of the checks to plaintiff's clerk was a delivery by the bank to the plaintiff himself, as the basis on which its credits were claimed. The bank was therefore entitled to have them examined, and, if rejected, returned within a reasonable time. That was not done, and because of plaintiff's failure to perform his duty in that regard, he should not be permitted to recover. Any other rule would be inconsistent, not only with general and long-established custom, but also with well-settled principles of law on the subject."

Without quoting further, it may be said that the great weight of authority in the United States supports the conclusions arrived at in the cases above cited. It is true that those cases were based upon bank books written up, but there is no distinction in principle between the old-fashioned bank book and the modern statements furnished by a bank to its depositors from time to time upon the balancing of their accounts and the return of the canceled checks to them. Improved methods of bookkeeping in banks do not render inapplicable the rule of law here invoked and applied. To lay down any other rule than that hereinabove stated would be to add an unjust burden to the duties of paying officers of banks. The greatly increased volume of business consequent upon the development of modern commerce, and the almost universal use of checks in settlement of every conceivable obligation, make the post of paying teller of a bank—compelled as he is to know the signature of every depositor of a bank—an exceedingly difficult one. If depositors may regularly at frequent intervals receive their vouchers and be notified, as was the appellant here, of reduced balances of their accounts in banks consequent upon the unfaithfulness of trusted employés during a period of nearly a year, and by neglecting to exercise reasonable supervision over their own business fail to discover fraud which has been perpetrated upon them and the bank, and may thus leave the bank in ignorance of the frauds thus committed, and charge the bank with the losses thus occasioned, then banks and their paying tellers face hard conditions indeed. We do not feel justified in establishing any such rule in this state.

In the case at bar there is an additional reason for the application of this principle arising from the fact that the statements and returned checks were accompanied by the following written request on the part of the bank:

"Please examine the inclosed account and return this at your earliest convenience signed by the principal, as this bank will not consider itself responsible for errors or discrepancies which are not advised within fifteen days after delivery of the statement."

The repeated failures of the appellant to heed this request speaks with much force in favor of the application of the principles above stated.

The claim that the plaintiff never received these statements is hardly worthy of notice, as its officers visited its branch house in San Francisco from time to time, as we have seen, and its manager, Mr. Ardery, was in charge of the branch house constantly during the time when these forgeries were being perpetrated. Their possession of and control over these statements and returned checks follow from their control of their branch establishment.

[2] The final contention of counsel for the appellant is that the trial judge should, even in his view of the law, have given judgment for $140 in addition to the $40 in favor of the appellant to cover three checks in that amount forged by Weeks and paid by the bank in September, 1912, they being the first forgeries, and having been paid by the bank in September, 1912, and included in the bank's statement of October 1st following. One of the defenses set up by the respondent was that provision of the statute of limitations embodied in subdivision 3 of section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which it is provided that an action against a bank by a depositor for the payment of a forged check must be brought within one year. This section was added to the statute by amendment in the year 1905. The three checks making up the $140 for which appellant claims an additional judgment should have been given him were paid more than one year before the beginning of this action, the action having been commenced on the 18th of May, 1914. They were also included in the statement rendered by the bank to the plaintiff more than one year before the beginning of the action. It is contended by the plaintiff that its cause of action against the bank upon these three checks did not ripen until discovery by it of the forgeries of Weeks, the argument being based, of course, upon the proposition that an action counting upon fraud does not ripen until the discovery of the fraud. There are three answers to this contention which seem to us conclusive. The first is that the action of plaintiff was not based upon the fraud, but rather upon the contractual relations of the parties. It is impossible to read into the plaintiff's complaint anything else than a simple action upon the contract between them. The forgeries of Weeks are not therein mentioned. The second answer to plaintiff's contention is this: The bank committed no fraud against the plaintiff. It concealed nothing from the plaintiff. The section of the Code providing that the time for beginning an action upon fraud is postponed until the discovery thereof does not apply between parties to this action, because the bank was not in any sense a party to the fraud. The third answer to this contention is found in the case of Masonic Benefit Ass'n v. First State Bank, 99 Miss. 610, 55 South. 408, in which the Supreme Court of the state of Mississippi, passing upon the question of the applicability of a statute providing that, where the cause of action has been fraudulently concealed by the person against whom it lies, the time for its commencement does not begin to run until the discovery of the cause of action, in a case where a depositor was suing a bank for cashing a check upon an unauthorized indorsement, said:

"There was no fraud perpetrated or concealed on the part of the appellee. It paid the check in good faith, believing the indorsement genuine. Neither the appellant nor the appellee were at fault in failing to discover the forged indorsement after the payment of the check. Appellee's failure to discover the forgery at the time it was presented, resulting in its payment, made it liable to the party defrauded to the amount of the check; but after that the duty rested equally on the appellant and appellee to discover the forgery, and appellant's opportunities for making the discovery were as good as appellee's, because appellant had in its possession the canceled check with the forged indorsement, which had been rendered to it as voucher. The running of the statute was therefore not delayed to the time of the discovery by appellant of the forged indorsement."

We therefore hold that the action on these checks aggregating $140 was barred at the time the complaint herein was filed. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; ZOOK, Judge pro tem.

GOODALL v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SANTA BARBARA COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 2681.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 3, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 29, 1918.)

1. CONTEMPT ⟸67—WRIT OF REVIEW—UNWARRANTED ORDER.
An unwarranted order, adjudging one guilty of contempt, may be annulled upon a writ of review.

2. INJUNCTION ⟸231—WRIT OF REVIEW—ORDER DISMISSING CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS.
Where beneficiary of injunction brings contempt proceedings against person violating injunction, court's order, dismissing proceedings without grounds being shown for such dismissal, should be annulled on writ of review.

3. INJUNCTION ⟸230(1)—PROCEEDINGS—AFFIDAVIT—ALLEGATIONS.
Affirmative allegations in affidavit submitted by defendant in contempt proceedings for disobedience of injunction cannot be deemed established without a trial to determine the issues so joined.

4. CONTEMPT ⟸46—LIMITATION—ACTS CONSTITUTING CRIME.
When act sought to be punished constitutes a crime, the court may by analogy adopt the limitation prescribed by statute for criminal prosecutions.

5. Waters and Water Courses ⊜63—Violation of Injunction — Time within Which to Bring Proceedings.

Beneficiary of perpetual injunction restraining obstruction of flow of water is not barred from instituting contempt proceeding against person violating injunction by failure to bring proceedings within particular period, unless obstruction has continued under circumstances and for a period of time from which a grant to obstruct the water would be implied.

6. Equity ⊜67—"Laches."

"Laches" is an equitable defense depending upon circumstances of each case.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Laches.]

7. Waters and Water Courses ⊜63—Violation of Injunction—Laches.

Failure of beneficiary of injunction restraining obstruction of flow of water to bring contempt proceedings until after obstruction had continued for four years did not in itself constitute laches.

8. Waters and Water Courses ⊜63—Violation of Injunction.

Willingness of beneficiary of injunction restraining obstruction of flow of water to waive his rights thereunder provided violator would pay expense of protecting his land from overflow, and his motive in instituting contempt proceedings to compel such payment, did not affect beneficiary's right to maintain proceedings.

9. Certiorari ⊜29—Writ of Review.

An order based upon conflict of evidence, being an error committed within court's jurisdiction, cannot be reviewed on writ of review.

10. Certiorari ⊜28(2)—Unwarranted Order—Absence of Jurisdictional Facts.

An unwarranted order is subject to review by direct attack on a writ of certiorari where court's power to make order depends upon existence of facts as to which there is no evidence; the question presented in such case being one of law.

Writ of review by Harry W. Goodall against Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Santa Barbara, and others. Order dismissing contempt proceedings annulled.

Kuster & Salisbury and S. A. McNeil, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner. G. H. Gould, of Santa Barbara, for respondents.

SHAW, J. A writ of review was issued herein upon a petition wherein this court is asked to annul an order dismissing a proceeding instituted in the trial court to have one Mrs. Lora J. Moore adjudged guilty of contempt for the disobedience of a judgment enjoining her from doing the acts of which petitioner complains.

The proceeding was instituted by the filing of an affidavit setting forth the fact that in the year 1908, in a certain action wherein petitioner was plaintiff and certain persons were defendants a judgment was rendered in favor of petitioner and against the defendants, perpetually enjoining them and their assigns, as the owners of a certain tract of land, from obstructing the natural flow of water in its usual course through a certain creek that extended across said tract of land which adjoined a parcel of land owned by plaintiff; that subsequent to the date of said judgment Mrs. Moore, by mesne conveyances, obtained title to said tract of land, and at all times since her acquisition thereof has been in possession of the same; that some time subsequent to June, 1913, Mrs. Moore, as owner of said tract of land through which the waters of said creek flowed, erected and caused to be erected across said stream and upon the land so acquired and owned by her certain concrete walls, dams, and bridges, by reason whereof the waters of said creek were obstructed and diverted from their natural and accustomed course, and caused to backflow upon and across the lands of petitioner, to his irreparable damage and injury; that prior to the doing of said acts, and ever since, Mrs. Moore had knowledge of the existence of said perpetual injunction, enjoining her predecessors in interest in said land and their assigns from doing the acts complained of; that Mrs. Moore has at all times, with full knowledge of said injunctive order, refused to obey the same or to remove said walls, dams, and obstructions.

Upon the filing of the affidavit the court issued an order requiring Mrs. Moore to show cause why she should not be punished as for a contempt of court for disobedience of the order contained in said judgment so rendered in the action wherein her predecessors in interest in said land were defendants. In compliance with this order she filed an affidavit, alleging affirmatively, among other things, as grounds why she should not be adjudged guilty of contempt: First, that petitioner was guilty of laches, "in this, that it appears by said affidavit that said plaintiff was cognizant of all the acts of said Lora J. Moore complained of in said affidavit, for over four years before the issuance of said order to show cause"; and, further, that petitioner caused to be made an estimate of the cost of labor and material which would be required in protecting his land from damage due to the obstruction of said stream by Mrs. Moore, and informed her that the cost thereof would be the sum of $3,500, and demanded that she should pay said amount to plaintiff; "and affiant is informed and believes that these contempt proceedings are undertaken to enforce said payment of $3,500 from affiant to plaintiff." Other matters of an affirmative character, as constituting ground why defendant should not be punished for the acts committed, are averred in the affidavit. On the return day specified in said order to show cause, and upon the presentation of the affidavit of Mrs. Moore, the court requested counsel for the respective parties to submit authorities upon the question of the sufficiency of the demurrer filed by Mrs. Moore, saying that in the event the demurrer was sustained the proceedings would be dismissed, and that in case it was overruled the matter would be set down for hearing on its merits. Thereafter the court, without further hearing, made an order as follows:

"It appearing to the court that the petitioner has been guilty of laches to such an extent as to cause this court to believe that this contempt proceeding ought not to have been inaugurated, and it further appearing from the affidavit of Mrs. Lora J. Moore, and the admissions made by the attorney for the petitioner, that this proceeding was inaugurated for the purpose of compelling Mrs. Lora J. Moore to pay to the petitioner money which he claims she ought to pay to him, it is ordered that the contempt proceedings in said action inaugurated against Mrs. Lora J. Moore, named in the affidavit of Harry W. Goodall as Mrs. Laura J. Moore, be and the same is hereby dismissed."

[1, 2] That an unwarranted order adjudging one guilty of contempt may be annulled upon a writ of review is conceded. The converse of the rule is likewise true. Hence where, in a proceeding instituted by the beneficiary in a judgment granting an injunction the disobedience of which is made to appear, the court without any ground shown therefor denies to such beneficiary the process of the court, which constitutes the only means of enforcing the judgment, such order should be annulled, since otherwise the judgment solemnly pronounced would be an idle act.

[3-7] In considering the order dismissing the proceedings we are not concerned with the affirmative allegations contained in Mrs. Moore's affidavit. Conceding the facts averred therein, if true, were sufficient to exonerate her from the charge, no trial to determine the issues so joined was had, and without such trial the affirmative allegations cannot be deemed established. In re Buckley, 69 Cal. 1, 10 Pac. 69. The grounds upon which the court made the order are: First, that petitioner had been guilty of laches; and, second, that it appeared from Mrs. Moore's affidavit "and admissions made by the attorney for petitioner" that the proceeding was instituted to compel Mrs. Moore to pay petitioner money which he claimed she ought to pay to him. As to the first ground, respondent insists that because, as shown by the petition, petitioner did not invoke the power of the court in protecting his rights until the lapse of four years after the erection of the walls and dams which obstructed the flow of water, his right to such means of enforcing the judgment is barred by laches. It is quite true that when an act sought to be punished constitutes a crime, the court may by analogy adopt the limitation prescribed by statute for criminal prosecutions. Gordon v. Commonwealth, 141 Ky. 461, 133 S. W. 206; Beattie v. People, 33 Ill. App. 651. This principle, however, has no application to the instant case for the reason that the acts complained of did not constitute a crime. The injunctive order was perpetual and if the acts of Mrs. Moore in obstructing the flow of water in the creek continued for four years constituted a disobedience thereof, petitioner was entitled to proceed against her in contempt proceedings at any time, subject to her right to plead a continuance of the obstruction under circumstances and for a period of time from which a grant so to do would be implied. Moreover, laches is an equitable defense depending upon the circumstances of each case. Conceding, but by no means holding, that in a case of this character one might, short of the time in which the law would imply a grant, lose his right to invoke the aid of the court by instituting contempt proceedings, the petition is wholly barren of any facts tending to show that petitioner was guilty of laches. As indicated in Mrs. Moore's affidavit, the delay might be fully explained by the fact that negotiations involving a continuance of the obstruction and means of protecting petitioner's property from overflow due to the same were pending for a considerable period of the four years.

[8] The other ground upon which the order is based is that it appeared from the affirmative fact stated in Mrs. Moore's affidavit, as to which there was no proof, and admissions made by the attorney for petitioner (whether in court or on the street is not made to appear), that the proceeding was instituted to compel her to pay to petitioner money which he claimed she ought to pay. As appears from Mrs. Moore's affidavit—and we assume counsel's admission was of like import—petitioner had expressed a willingness to waive his right to enforce the judgment upon condition that Mrs. Moore would defray the expense of constructing necessary walls to protect his property from damage due to the obstruction erected by her in the creek, which she refused to pay. Conceding this to be true, and that petitioner was willing, in consideration of the payment of such sum, to forego the fruits of his judgment, neither such fact nor petitioner's motive in legally invoking the aid of the court to enforce a lawful judgment could affect his rights thereunder.

[9, 10] Respondent further claims that since the court had jurisdiction of the matter the making of the order, even though unwarranted, must be deemed mere error committed within the exercise of its jurisdiction, and hence cannot be reviewed in this proceeding. From the very nature of the writ, this is true where the order is based upon a conflict of evidence touching the subject. Where, however, the power to make the order depends upon the existence of facts as to which, as here, there is no evidence whatever, the question presented is one of law and subject to review by direct attack on a writ of certiorari. Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, and cases cited. The record discloses no evidence whatever tending to establish facts upon which the court was warranted in divesting itself of jurisdiction to try the proceeding.

The order is annulled.

REUTER v. SAN PEDRO, L. A. & S. L. R. CO. (Civ. 2281.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 16, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS ⊜480(1)—FIRES—NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.
In an action against a railroad company for damages for destruction of property by fire, the burden of proving negligence as alleged is upon the plaintiff.

2. RAILROADS ⊜453—FIRES—LIABILITY.
A railroad company is not an insurer at all events against the consequences of fire set out by its locomotives, and is liable only for fires negligently caused.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1012(2)—REVIEW—SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT.
The appellate court cannot take the place of the trial court in determining whether the findings are supported by a preponderance of the evidence, but can consider the evidence for the sole purpose of determining whether or not the essential findings of fact are supported by satisfactory evidence.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1012(2) — REVIEW—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT.
In an action against a railroad company for damages for personal property destroyed by fire set by defendant's locomotives, held, that there was satisfactory evidence on which the trial court could find that the fire which destroyed plaintiff's property was communicated thereto by fire originating from defendant's engine.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by Charles F. Reuter against the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment affirmed.

James E. Kelby, of Los Angeles (A. S. Halsted, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. McNabb, Hartzell & Hodge, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover damages on account of loss of property, caused by fire negligently set out, through negligence of the defendant. On the 19th day of November, 1914, the plaintiff was the lessee and in possession of certain real property located in San Bernardino county, and was the owner of certain personal property located thereon of the value of $693.50. On that day and for some years prior thereto the defendant corporation was operating a railroad over the right of way and tracks of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company, which right of way passes within a distance of 2½ miles northerly from the premises on which said personal property of the plaintiff was located. On that day the defendant company was operating a train running easterly between the city of San Bernardino and the town of Daggett. While running through the territory north of the plaintiff's premises, the train passed through the station Devore, northwesterly through the station called Keenbrook, and thence northwesterly to the station of Alray. It is 4.7 miles from Devore to Keenbrook, and about 12 miles from Devore to Alray. There is an upgrade of about 2 per cent. from Devore to Alray.

In addition to the facts above stated, the findings of the court show the following facts, all of which are alleged in the complaint and denied in the answer: Finding V states that on the 19th day of November, 1914, while the defendant was engaged in running one of its trains on said right of way north of the premises of the plaintiff, at a time when a high wind was blowing in a southerly direction, the defendant so negligently and carelessly managed its train and failed to employ suitable appliances to prevent the escape of soot, sparks of fire, and fire from the engines hauling the train, that fire from one of the engines drawing the train was suffered to escape and did escape from the engine; that the defendant negligently and carelessly allowed burning soot, sparks, and fire to be thrown and dropped from the engine, and the same was carried by the wind and caused to fall upon dry grass and brush situate on the property adjacent and contiguous to the right of way over which the train was being operated; that this property to which said fire was communicated was adjacent to and in a northerly direction from the premises and property of the plaintiff. Finding VI states that the fire so set by reason of the defective engine and the carelessness and negligence of the defendant in operating said engine was by reason of such negligence and carelessness allowed to spread, and did spread, and was driven in a southwesterly direction from the point where it was first allowed to escape by the defendant, and spread and burned over and upon the premises in possession of the plaintiff, in consequence whereof all of said personal property of the plaintiff was burned and destroyed, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $693.50.

The defendant appeals from the judgment. Briefly stated, the substance of its contentions is that there is no evidence which tends in any way to connect the defendant with the fire; and that there is no evidence tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant or its employés with respect to the construction or condition of its engines or with respect to their operation thereof.

[1, 2] Counsel for appellant have directed our attention to certain rules, concerning which at the outset we will say that they are pertinent to this case. The gist of the action is negligence, and the burden of proving negligence as alleged was upon the plaintiff. A railroad company is not an insurer at all events against the consequences of fire set out by its locomotives; it is only liable for fires negligently caused by it. The facts upon which the liability of the defendant rests must be proved by satisfactory evidence; they cannot be established by mere conjecture.

[3, 4] Assuming that the foregoing propositions correctly state the law, we have carefully examined the evidence contained in the record before us. The witness Bortz was a section foreman for the Santa Fé Railway Company, who on the 19th day of November, 1914, at the noon hour, was on the west side of the east-bound track and about 150 feet off the right of way. What is called the east-bound track was at that point the southerly track of the railroad, and on that track what is called an east-bound train would at that point be moving in a northwesterly direction. Bortz testified that at 12 minutes past 12 o'clock the Salt Lake train passed him. Immediately thereafter he started down the track and within a minute after that time he discovered fire off the right of way and distant from him about a quarter of a mile. A strong north wind was blowing at the time. Bortz then went down to Devore station to report to the dispatcher to send men to put out the fire. Devore station is a mile and a quarter from the point where Bortz was located when he saw the fire. On his way to Devore he saw a man walking across the bridge toward Devore. Bortz was traveling in a gasoline hand car or motor car.

The witness Clock testified that at noon of that same day he was walking up the track from Devore station, and was passed by the Salt Lake train at the point where the county road crosses the Santa Fé right of way. The train had two engines, and there was a great deal of heavy, black smoke coming from the first engine. There was an extremely high north wind which was carrying the smoke away in a southerly direction. Between 5 and 10 minutes after the train passed the witness discovered a fire burning. He did not see any evidence of the fire before the train passed. This witness made two different statements with respect to the distance from the railroad of the fire that he saw, the greater distance being about 150 feet from the right of way.

It is admitted that all of the Salt Lake engines and all of the Santa Fé engines using that right of way at that time were oil-burning engines. The witness Rinder testified that in the evening on a day in October, 1914, he saw a fire started by a Salt Lake engine in front of his house, which was a mile and a half above Devore. He saw soot like long pieces of rags coming from the smokestack and coming inside his fence, where it set a fire. He saw smoke from the engine and sparks and flakes of soot flying, and saw the fire right after the train passed. The place where the fire was set out was from 125 to 175 feet from the railroad track.

The witness Eubanks was a locomotive engineer and familiar with the workings of oil-burning engines. He testified that when an oil-burning engine is in good working order and properly managed by the engineer and fireman, it would not throw any black smoke, but the smoke coming from the engine would be clear. He testified that he had seen an engine throw burning carbon from its smokestack, and on one occasion saw that carbon ignite other materials. He was familiar with the process of sanding out flues of locomotives for the purpose of removing carbon and what gathers in the flues. During the progress of sanding out flues the engine gives out smoke.

The witness Todd had many years' experience in running locomotive engines, and ran an oil-burning engine for about 2 years. He testified that if an oil-burning engine was in proper working condition and properly managed and handled by the engineer, it would not throw any black smoke, but that the color would be light or steam color; that an engine will choke up if it is not working properly or is not in a clean condition; that the material that accumulates in the flues is carbon, the same as any accumulation from fuel; commonly speaking, it is soot. The witness testified that he had seen what he called carbon or soot exhausted from the smokestack of an engine afire and carry fire to the ground on some occasions. Such occasions would happen when the engine was sanded out and the carbon would cut loose. The effect of that operation was to make the color of the smoke black.

Several other witnesses testified concerning their observations of trains of the defendant and of the Santa Fé Railway Company in and near the city of San Barnardino. According to these witnesses, they have seen smoke, soot, and fire thrown from oil-burning engines, and have seen fires started by them.

It is also shown in evidence that on the 19th day of November, 1914, trains of the Santa Fé Railway Company passed Devore at 28 minutes past 11 a. m., and at 14 minutes past 11 a. m.; and in particular, that a Santa Fé west-bound passenger train passed through Devore at 2 minutes before 12 on that day. Counsel for defendant place a great deal of emphasis upon this last-named train, because it must have passed the place where the fire occurred, and must have passed that point about a quarter of an hour before the defendant's train passed that place. Much evidence was introduced tending to show that when west-bound trains are coming down the grade the process of braking makes the brakeshoes red hot, so that shavings come off on account of the excessive heat, which are likely to set fire to waste along the track, and that such pieces of burning waste might have been carried by the wind to such distance that they might have set the fire complained of by the plaintiff. The defendant also introduced evidence tending to show that its engine was in perfect condition, and that it was properly operated. H. H. Harris was the fireman on engine 3703, which was the helper engine, from which, according to the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, the black smoke came. Harris testified that he sanded the engine out after leaving Devore, but, according to his testimony, he completed the sanding out at a point which, according to the scale of the map introduced in evidence, would be about one-third of a mile before the train came to the point opposite the place where the fire was afterwards discovered. Harris testified that when he sanded the engine it threw out black smoke, but not in great quantities. All of the witnesses to the point agree that the right of way was clear of grass and brush.

According to the testimony of expert witnesses produced by the defendant, and if their testimony had been accepted as the truth and the whole truth, by the court which tried the case, the fire which destroyed the plaintiff's property could not have been caused by the engines of the defendant or by anything which came from them. For, as stated by counsel for appellant, their testimony is to the effect, among other things, that it is physically impossible for sand or any other substance coming from the stack of an oil-burning locomotive to ignite anything; that it is physically impossible for a piece of waste or wood cast into the furnace to pass out of the firebox unconsumed; that smoke emitted from a smokestack while an engine is climbing a heavy grade, moving at from 24 to 28 miles an hour, is not symptomatic of defect in the engine or its management, since the emission of such smoke is a condition of the mechanical operation of an oil-burning engine while pulling a train; that it is contrary to the laws of nature for any fire that comes through the smokestack of an oil-burning engine to set fire along the right of way, the fuel consumed being 100 per cent.; that the oil-burning engines of defendant are equipped the same as are oil-burning locomotives wherever used; that it is contrary to natural law for a stream or sheet of fire to leave the smokestack and carry itself 150 to 175 feet.

It must be kept in mind that in considering the merits of this appeal we cannot take the place of the trial court for the purpose of determining whether the findings of the court are supported by a preponderance of the evidence. We consider the evidence solely for the purpose of determining whether or not the essential findings of fact are supported by satisfactory evidence tending substantially to establish the facts as found. "That evidence is deemed satisfactory which ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in an unprejudiced mind. Such evidence alone will justify a verdict. Evidence less than this is denominated slight evidence." Code Civ. Proc. § 1835. Notwithstanding the contention urged upon us, that the findings attacked by the appellant cannot be sustained except by the indulgence of mere conjecture, we have reached the contrary conclusion. It is true that counsel in their discussion of the evidence have raised a number of conjectures which, if approved as of equal weight with the evidence favorable to the plaintiff, might strongly uphold their argument. We have also kept in mind the fact that the witnesses who saw the engine and its smoke, on the occasion in question, under a noonday sun, did not testify that they saw any sparks, or flame, or burning soot. Nevertheless, our reading of the testimony leads us to the conclusion that there was satisfactory evidence from which the trial court had the right to become convinced and to find that the fire which destroyed the plaintiff's property was communicated thereto by fire which originated in the grass or brush adjacent to the right of way of the defendant; that these fires had their origin in fire which escaped with the smoke from the engine of the defendant; that the escape of the fire, and the consequent damage to the plaintiff, was occasioned by careless and negligent management of its engine by the defendant. From these facts, taken in connection with the other facts about which there is no controversy, to which we have referred, it follows that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

The judgment is affirmed.

37 Cal. App. 562

ZUCCO et ux. v. FARULLO. (Civ. 2278.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 17, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸865—REVIEW—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

On appeal upon a judgment roll from a default judgment, the appellate court will not consider misjoinder of causes of action in the manner it would if a demurrer had been filed in the case on that ground.

2. JUDGMENT ⟸101(1)—DEFAULT—PLEADING TO SUPPORT.

If a complaint states a cause of action sufficient as against a general demurrer to sustain the relief actually given in a default judgment, such judgment will not be held invalid because the complaint also states facts authorizing other relief.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(17)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

That a complaint in an unlawful detainer suit, wherein judgment was taken by default also states a cause of action for the reformation of a lease, and for damages for breach of its covenants, does not make the judgment invalid, where the complaint states a cause of action for unlawful detainer.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(17)—JUDGMENT—REFORMATION OF LEASE.

In an action of unlawful detainer, that the court attempted to reform the lease in a certain particular does not make a judgment based on a three days summons, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1167, unlawful, since the court might construe the lease to determine its true meaning, and its attempted reformation was immaterial.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(17) — DEFAULT JUDGMENT—EFFECT.

A default judgment in an unlawful detainer suit, entered without findings, must be taken to have established all the facts aptly pleaded in the complaint.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(1)—NOTICE TO QUIT—PERFORMANCE OF COVENANTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 3, a notice to a tenant to quit for nonperformance of covenants in the lease need not demand a performance of a covenant to take care of trees, cultivate the ground, or furnish the landlord vegetables, since such covenants could not afterwards be performed.

7. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(1)—NOTICE TO QUIT—PERFORMANCE OF COVENANTS.

Where a tenant has committed waste, a notice to quit under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 3, need not demand performance of the covenants against committing waste, in view of section 1161, subd. 4.

8. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(1)—NOTICE TO QUIT—SUFFICIENCY.

A notice to a tenant to quit for failure to perform a specified condition of the lease need not state the reason for terminating the lease.

9. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(8)—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

In an unlawful detainer suit, the complaint need not set out in full the notice to quit; it being sufficient to allege its legal effect.

10. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(10) — PLEADING—SERVICE.

In an unlawful detainer suit, plaintiff need only allege that he served notice in writing on defendant, or that notice in writing was served, and prove that he served it or had it served.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃931(5)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

On appeal in an unlawful detainer suit, in which defendant defaulted, it will be presumed that the trial court has taken evidence as to damages.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃932(1)—REVIEW—ABSENCE OF FINDINGS—DAMAGES.

On appeal in unlawful detainer suit, it will be presumed, in absence of findings, that the damages alleged were supported by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Action by Pierre Zucco and wife against Tommaso Farullo. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. White, of San Francisco, and R. N. Wolfe, of Pittsburg, for appellant. Titus, Creed, Jones & Dall, of San Francisco (W. K. Powell, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an action, primarily of unlawful detainer, in which the defendant defaulted, and judgment was thereupon taken against him for the possession of the premises demanded and for damages, and for some other relief hereinafter noticed. He appeals from this judgment, and makes three points for reversal, namely, that three causes of action are improperly united in the complaint, to wit, first, a suit in equity for the reformation of a lease; second, an action at law for damages for breach of the covenants of the lease; and, third, an action of unlawful detainer.

[1-3] This court, upon an appeal upon the judgment roll from a default judgment, will not consider the question of misjoinder of causes of action in the manner it would if a demurrer had been filed in the case upon that ground. If a complaint states a cause of action, sufficient as against a general demurrer, to sustain the relief actually given in the judgment, it will not be held invalid because it also states facts authorizing other relief. This follows from the rule laid down in Alexander v. McDow, 108 Cal. 25, 41 Pac. 24, and Amestoy v. Electric Railroad Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 Pac. 550. The complaint herein is not obnoxious to a general demurrer. It states a cause of action for unlawful detainer. It also attempts to state facts upon which it is claimed other relief might have been given; but, under the authority of those cases, this court will not, on appeal from a default judgment, where the complaint states a cause of action, as it does here, reverse the judgment because of an attempt to unite other causes of action with that of unlawful detainer.

[4] There are other and more serious questions which arise upon this complaint, and the summons and service thereof, on which this default judgment is predicated. The summons was the usual three-day summons provided in summary proceedings for the recovery of the possession of real property by section 1167 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was served on May 14, 1907, the day the action was begun. Default of the defendant for failure to appear was entered four days later, namely, on May 18th. Other relief than possession of the property and damages for the unlawful detainer was prayed for in the complaint and granted by the judgment; and it is contended on behalf of appellant that for this reason the three-day summons was not proper, but that the usual ten-day summons should have been issued in the case, and that ten days after service thereof should have been allowed the defendant in which to appear. The other relief consisted in reformation of the lease by substituting the word "second" for the word "first" in reference to the party whose duty it was to water certain trees planted on the premises and to take care of them. The party of the first part was the landlord; the party of the second part the tenant. The lease, recited literally in the complaint, contained, among others, this provision:

"The party of the second part is to plant trees over ten acres of the tract, and the party of the first part is to furnish the trees therefor. The party of the first part agrees to water all the trees planted on said premises and to take the best care of them. He shall cultivate the space between the trees and all other ground where no trees have been planted."

The lease gave the tenant (the defendant) exclusive possession of the entire property, except a residence, which the landlord (plaintiff) reserved for her own use. The entire care of the property devolved upon the defendant. He was to care for and keep in repair the pumping plant on the premises. As has been said, the particular in which the court undertook to reform this lease was to substitute "party of the second part" for "party of the first part" in the above-recited clause thereof as to watering and caring for the trees. Respondent claims in that behalf that under the rule of Gray v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 2 Cal. App. 653, 84 Pac. 280, where there is an obvious inadvertence in naming the party charged with a duty in the lease, and where the defect is so glaring in itself as to suggest the mutual character of the error, the court will, in an action of unlawful detainer, ascertain and enforce the real intention of the parties, without resort to a separate suit in equity to reform the lease. What the court did in that case was to find that the words "first party," used in the lease in connection with an option, were inadvertently used where the words "second party" were intended, and adjudged that the lease be corrected accordingly. While that action was one of unlawful detainer, the parties had appeared; and we doubt if the case is authority for holding that the equitable remedy of reforming a lease can be administered upon default under a three-day summons.

But, however that may be, we do not think it necessary to decide whether such is the rule of Gray v. Maier, supra, nor whether such rule should be applied here; for the trial court, having the right to construe the lease and, holding it by its four corners, to determine its true meaning, and it being unreasonable to put any other construction upon it than that the intention of the parties was that the tenant should water the trees and take care of them, it became unnecessary to reform the lease. The whole question was one of construing the lease and determining its meaning, and that, too, where the meaning was clear, for the landlord was a woman, and in the sentence immediately following, if this paper is to be construed with technical exactness, the pronoun "he"—evidently referring to the party who was to water the trees—can refer to only one person, and that the tenant, who was a man. The lease, it must be admitted, was open to this construction, and really it is impossible to say that any other construction could be placed upon it. The judgment, therefore, attempting to reform the lease, was immaterial.

It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant neglected and failed to perform various conditions and covenants of his lease, in that he failed and neglected during the calendar year 1916, and prior to the 5th day of May, 1917, to water all of the trees planted on said premises, or take the best care of them, and that he did not cultivate the space between the trees and all other ground where no trees had been planted, and that he did not furnish to the plaintiff vegetables and produce from said premises sufficient for the complete family use of the said plaintiff or to her satisfaction, and that he did not furnish all of the labor required to build a house, as agreed in said lease, and that he failed and still fails to furnish certain materials needed in the construction of said house, and that he had not kept in repair or good shape the pump, engine or fences on the premises; that he had not constructed roads and paths required to be constructed by his lease; that he had not kept stock at the required distance from the house on said premises retained by said plaintiff, and that he has not properly cultivated or cared for said premises, and that he has committed waste on said premises—all of which things he was required to do and perform by the terms of the lease itself.

[5] The default judgment, entered without findings, must be taken to have established all the facts aptly pleaded in the complaint, including a finding of the truth of the foregoing allegations. It is provided in subdivision 3 of section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure that a tenant of real property for a term less than life is guilty of unlawful detainer when he continues in possession, in person or by subtenant, after neglect to perform other conditions or covenants of the lease or agreement under which the property is held than the one for the payment of rent, and three days' notice in writing requiring the performance of such conditions or covenants, or the possession of the property, shall have been served upon him, and, if there is a subtenant in actual possession of the premises, also upon the subtenant. Within three days after the service of the notice the tenant, or any subtenant in actual occupation of the premises, or any mortgagee of the term, or other person interested in its continuance, may perform the covenants or conditions of the lease, or pay the stipulated rent, as the case may be, and thereby save the lease from forfeiture: Provided that, if the conditions and covenants of the lease violated by the lessee cannot afterwards be performed, then no notice as last prescribed herein need be given to said lessee or his subtenant, demanding the performance of the violated conditions or covenants of the lease.

[6] Under this proviso, if the defendant had violated conditions of his lease which could not afterward be performed, it was not necessary to include in the notice a demand for performance of such violated conditions or covenants. It is manifest that Farullo had violated conditions of his lease which could not afterwards be performed, among others that of watering the trees, of taking care of them; the covenant to cultivate the space between the trees and the ground where no trees had been planted, and to furnish Mrs. Zucco with vegetables and produce sufficient for her family use during the calendar year prior to the 5th day of May, 1907, and, perhaps, some of the other violated terms of the lease set forth in the above-quoted allegations of the complaint. These things could not afterwards be performed. Therefore a demand for the performance of these violated conditions, at least, was not necessary to the validity of the notice to quit. It is alleged in the complaint that Mrs. Zucco caused to be personally served on Farullo a notice in writing, wherein she canceled the lease, and demanded that within three days he vacate the premises and surrender the possession thereof. This, in the view we take of the matter, considering the character of the violations of the conditions of the lease, was all that was required in the way of notice.

[7, 8] The violation of these conditions of the lease terminated it. Especially is this true of the violation of the condition against waste. It is provided in subdivision 4 of section 1161, Code of Civil Procedure, that any tenant committing waste upon the demised premises contrary to the conditions or covenants of his lease thereby terminates the lease, and the landlord or his successor in estate shall, upon service of three days' notice to quit upon the person or persons in possession, be entitled to restitution of possession of such premises under the conditions of this chapter. No alternative notice was therefore necessary. The notice to quit was all that was required. A notice to quit, such as is sufficient in this case, differs from a notice to perform or quit. Where the violation is of conditions which upon notice the tenant might perform within the three days, notice to so perform must be given; but where, as here, the breach of the lease is of such a nature that the condition violated cannot be performed, no notice is required. Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 73 Pac. 449. So, also, no useful purpose could be served by stating in the notice that Farullo's lease was canceled for failure to perform a specified condition of the lease, and for this reason no doubt the statute does not require that the reason for terminating the lease be stated in cases of this nature.

[9] The allegations of the contents of the notice also are sufficient. It was not necessary to set out in full the notice served. The notice was alleged in accordance with its legal effect, and in the respect that it may be alleged either literally or according to its legal effect a notice to quit does not differ from other instruments.

[10] So, also, the service was sufficiently alleged, for it is said in Cowell v. Linforth, 10 Cal. App. 3, 100 Pac. 1071, that:

"It was only necessary for the plaintiff to allege that she served notice in writing upon defendant, or that notice in writing was served upon defendant, and prove that she served it or had it served. The statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1162) provides three different methods of serving notice, and the plaintiff was only required to allege the ultimate fact," to wit, that she had it served.

[11, 12] It is also claimed that the amount of damages given was too large. The trial court is presumed to have taken the evidence upon this point, and as the allegations of the complaint as to damages are presumed to have been supported by the evidence in the absence of findings, we cannot interfere with the trial court's decision upon that matter.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOPE MINING CO. v. BURGER.

(Civ. 1843.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 14, 1918.)

1. TRUSTS ⟸95 — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS — REALTY.

Where holder of option on mining claim transferred it to plaintiff, representing that purchase price was $15,000, whereas it was only $11,000, intending to keep the difference as a commission for himself without plaintiff's knowledge, and taking title in his own name, such holder became a trustee of the property for plaintiff.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸22(1) — EVIDENCE OF ACTS OF AGENT.

In an action to declare a trust in property conveyed to a promoter's brother for the corporation's benefit, the acts of the promoter were competent evidence of his agency.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸23(1)—EVIDENCE —SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to establish a trust in property conveyed, for the benefit of the corporation, to a promoter's brother, evidence held to sustain a finding that such promoter was the brother's agent.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸22(2) — EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS OF AGENT.

Where an agency is otherwise prima facie proved, the declarations of the agent are admissible in corroboration, where they are part of the res gestæ and made at the time of the transaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; John Hancock, Judge.

Suit by the Hope Mining Company, a corporation, against N. H. Burger, for specific performance. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Butler & Swisler, of Sacramento, for appellant. L. J. Maddux, of Modesto, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. It is difficult to consider seriously the contentions of appellant. The decision of the trial judge is so manifestly just and equitable, and the conduct of appellant in the transaction between the parties so reprehensible, that probably the only question which we ought to notice specifically is whether damages should not be imposed for a frivolous appeal.

However, largely out of respect for the learned counsel for appellant who has manifested zeal and ability worthy of a better cause we will devote some attention to the essential features of the case. There was some conflict in the evidence upon material points, but the conflict was created by the testimony of appellant and his brother, whose statements on the witness stand are apparently characterized by equivocation, evasion, and misrepresentation. It is therefore not surprising that their testimony carried no conviction to the mind of the trial judge. From the opinion filed in deciding the case in the lower court we take the following facts:

The action was brought to compel appellant to convey to plaintiff certain placer mining claims described in the complaint, paid for with the money of plaintiff, and the title to which was taken in the name of N. H. Burger, who is the real defendant in the case, the other names being fictitious.

In December, 1910, the property was owned by one Thomas Clark, who entered into an oral agreement with defendant for its purchase, which was reduced to writing at Placerville on January 3, 1911. The written instrument was somewhat informal, but it recited the receipt of $100 from N. H. Burger, "being a partial payment on the bond of property known as the Landecker mine and equipment on same. The price of said mine and equipment to be eleven thousand dollars to be paid as follows." Then followed the recitation of three installments, the first to be paid January 15 and the last April 1, 1911. It was agreed that a more formal contract should be prepared by Clark and delivered to defendant. This was done on January 14, 1911, and at the trial this agreement was introduced in evidence. According to its terms the purchase price was fixed at $15,000, to be paid in four installments, the last one of $4,000 to be made on or before the 1st of November, 1911. At the same time it was orally agreed between Clark and Burger that this sum of $4,000 was not to be paid to the former, but retained by the latter as a commission; it obviously being the intent that Burger should sell the property to another.

B. E. Burger, brother of defendant, undoubtedly knew of the terms of the agreement between Clark and appellant, and on January 3d he went from Placerville to Modesto, and informed the principal stockholders of a mining corporation called the Alliance Company, that defendant had an option on the Landecker mine, and wanted the stockholders to form a new corporation and take over the mine and option from his brother. He did this under an understanding with appellant. He had with him a copy of the Clark contract, afterward executed on January 14th, which copy he exhibited to the stockholders. At a meeting held the following night it was agreed that Wooten and Benton, two of the stockholders, with B. E. Burger, would examine the mine, and they proceeded to Placerville for that purpose, where they arrived on January 5th. The next day they and the defendant went out to the mine, and on the following night they met at defendant's store and discussed the advisability of forming a new corporation to take over and operate the mine. Defendant informed Wooten and Benton that he would turn over the contract if the new company was formed, and that he would sell the mine "for just what he had paid for it." After this meeting Wooten and Benton returned to Modesto and reported to the other stockholders of the Alliance Company. About a week later B. E. Burger arrived in Modesto, and the plaintiff company was organized. Under said contract of January 14th the first installment of the purchase price could be paid by a joint and several note of defendant and such additional makers as were satisfactory to Clark, said note to be payable on or before February 1, 1911. Two days prior to the execution of said contract of January 14th both defendant and B. E. Burger signed such note at Placerville, and it was by the latter immediately taken to Modesto, where on January 14th it was signed by Benton, Williams, and Wooten and returned to B. E. Burger and afterward delivered to Clark. As a consideration for the execution of this note 25,000 shares of plaintiff company were divided equally among the five makers of said note, and defendant thereby became a stockholder of said company. The Hope Mining Company was organized on January 13, 1911, and its articles filed with the county clerk of Stanislaus county. The company immediately took possession of the mine, and it made three payments on the purchase price of said property, amounting to $11,000, the last payment being made on April 1st. A large sum was also paid by it for work and supplies, and it repaid defendant the $100 which he paid Clark on January 3d. Neither the plaintiff nor any of its Modesto stockholders knew that the price of the mine as between Clark and defendant was $11,000 until the trial of the case at Placerville, when for the first time they learned that the last payment of $4,000 as set forth in the contract of January 14th was not to be paid Clark, but was to be treated by defendant as a commission for the sale of the property. The plaintiff believed at all times up to the date of the trial that the purchase price to Clark was $15,000, and that the only consideration to be received by defendant was a share of the plaintiff's stock. The deed to the property, dated January 12, 1911, from Clark to defendant was deposited in escrow, under the terms of which defendant could obtain it from the bank when the total sum of $11,000 was paid. He could therefore have obtained said deed at any time after April 1st, and he did secure it on August 30th, and had it recorded on that date. On that day he also made a deed of the property to plaintiff, but did not deliver it, and the latter had no knowledge of it until after the commencement of this action. Several weeks before the $4,000 were due Clark according to the contract of January 14th, plaintiff, through its officers, proposed to levy an assessment to make said payment. But defendant and his brother objected, and to avoid the necessity of levying an assessment it was agreed that the time for the last payment would be extended six months.

On October 30th Campbell and Perkins, two of plaintiff's stockholders, went to Placerville and ascertained that defendant had the deed from Clark, and in explanation of this he told them that he had borrowed the $4,000 from a friend named Smith living in San Jose. In March, 1912, and before the expiration of the six-month extension granted by defendant to plaintiff in September, 1911, defendant bonded the property to other parties, and the sum of $6,000 was received as an installment of the purchase price and divided equally between defendant and his brother.

[1] There is abundant evidence to support the foregoing statements, and it is quite apparent therefrom that defendant acted dishonorably with plaintiff, that by his conduct and actions he led plaintiff to believe that Clark was to receive the full $15,000 for the property, whereas defendant had a secret agreement to retain the said $4,000 which was to be paid by plaintiff. Appellant was guilty of a species of sharp practice which may be recognized as legitimate by some promoters, but it cannot be tolerated in a court of justice. It is plain enough that by agreement between plaintiff and defendant the former was subrogated to all the rights and privileges as well as the obligations of the latter under his agreement with Clark. Of course, this means the actual and not the ostensible obligations. Plaintiff believed that it was to pay the sum of $15,000, but this was by reason of the deception practiced by appellant, and when it had paid the sum of $11,000, the actual burden imposed by the original contract, it had discharged its full obligation, and was entitled to the deed from Clark. As plaintiff, therefore, paid the full consideration for the property, manifestly, appellant, in receiving the deed, became a trustee for respondent as the court below rightfully held. The case is essentially this: B. has an option to purchase the property of C. for $11,000, although it is apparently for $15,000. For a valuable consideration B. transfers the option to H., and the latter pays to C. the full consideration for the property, but the deed is taken in the name of B. There can be no difference of opinion as to the constructive trust thereby created. It is true that there was no formal written assignment of said option, but the agreement between plaintiff and defendant was such in effect, and, as it was fully executed by plaintiff, there could be no question of the statute of frauds.

[2] There is some contention made that the agreement contended for by respondent was made by it and said B. E. Burger, and that the evidence is insufficient to show that the latter was authorized to act for the appellant, and, furthermore, that the court improperly admitted as evidence of such agency the declarations of the said B. E. Burger. There is no merit in the contention. The circumstantial evidence was amply sufficient to show the authority of B. E. Burger to represent his brother in the negotiations and contract with plaintiff. Indeed, the conduct of himself and appellant in the whole transaction is entirely inconsistent with any other theory than that of agency. It is clear that the acts of said B. E. Burger were of such character and so construed as to justify the inference that appellant knew of them, and would not have permitted the same if unauthorized. Hence the acts themselves were competent evidence of agency. Cor. Jur. vol. 2, p. 958.

[3] Moreover, appellant testified to facts from which the inference necessarily follows that his brother was authorized to represent him in the sale. He testified that before his brother went down to Modesto the later said, "I can handle the proposition for you," and appellant gave him a copy of the contract with Clark, and he knew what his brother went down there for and the purpose for which he took the note and the copy of the agreement, and knew what his brother was going to do. Of course, there could be no possible doubt that there was, at least, an ostensible agency within the purview of sections 2300–2317 of the Civil Code. Dollar v. International Banking Corp., 13 Cal. App. 331, 109 Pac. 499.

[4] But actual agency was sufficiently established and there was no error in admitting the acts and declarations of B. E. Burger. Where the agency is otherwise prima facie proved, the declarations of the alleged agent are admissible in corroboration, where they constitute a part of the res gestæ and were made at the time of the transaction in question. They are admissible to show that the agent acted as such, and not on his individual account, and also to show the nature and extent of his authority. Robinson v. American Fish, etc., Co., 17 Cal. App. 212, 119 Pac. 388; 2 Corpus Juris, p. 930.

Moreover, the finding of the court below does not depend upon the agreement made between respondent and B. E. Burger. The evidence is sufficient to show that appellant directly agreed with the representatives of plaintiff that the latter should purchase the property for the price that the former agreed to pay Clark; in other words, that there should be a novation, a substitution of plaintiff for defendant in the contract with Clark. The question of agency may therefore be entirely ignored.

Some question is raised as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support certain specific findings. The material findings are amply supported, and the others need not be considered.

The judgment could be supported upon another theory, but we forbear to consider it further. The appellant appears in a very unfavorable light, and it is not surprising that the lower court believed that he was much more anxious to keep the property than to tell the truth or to act justly. We may add that, notwithstanding the judgment against him, he seems to have profited greatly by his cleverness. Without paying out anything, he received several thousand shares of stock of the plaintiff, about $1,000 in cash from the latter, and $6,000 from Everett and Ames to whom he bonded the mine. In good conscience the cash that defendant received should be paid over to plaintiff, but that consideration is not involved in this proceeding.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON et al. v. SACRAMENTO COUNTY.

(Civ. 1818.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 14, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 12, 1918.)

1. COUNTIES ⟹139 — "COUNTY CHARGE" — "OTHER SERVICES."

Services rendered by plaintiffs appointed by judge of superior court to prosecute a district attorney pursuant to Pen. Code, §§ 758, 771, for misconduct in office, constitute a "county charge" within Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 3, as to "other services" in relation to "criminal proceedings" for which no specific compensation is prescribed by law, being a county charge.

2. COUNTIES ⟹131 — COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES.

There must be some statutory or constitutional authority for compensation for services rendered to a county, however beneficial the services performed may be to the county or the public generally.

3. COUNTIES ⟹139 — "CRIMINAL PROCEEDING."

A "criminal proceeding" means some authorized step taken before a judicial tribunal against some person or persons charged with the violation of some provision of the criminal law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Criminal Proceeding.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Irving D. Gibson and another against the County of Sacramento. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Ralph W. Smith and Irving D. Gibson, both of Sacramento, for appellants. Hugh B. Bradford, Dist. Atty., and J. R. Hughes, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. The complaint alleges: The plaintiffs are attorneys at law, engaged in practice at the city of Sacramento; that on the 1st day of June, 1917, an accusation in writing against Hugh B. Bradford, district attorney of the county of Sacramento, was presented by the grand jury of said county, pursuant to the provisions of section 758 of the Penal Code, which was filed with the county clerk and presented to Honorable Malcolm C. Glenn, judge of the superior court of said county, who, on the 17th day of June, 1917, appointed plaintiffs as prosecuting officers in the matter of said accusation, pursuant to the provisions of section 771 of the Penal Code; that plaintiffs accepted said appointment, qualified as such prosecuting officers, and performed all necessary services and duties in the matter, and that said services were rendered at the special instance and request and for the benefit of said defendant; that the fair and reasonable value of said services is the sum of $1,400; that plaintiffs presented to the board of supervisors of said county their claim and demand for said sum of $1,400, duly authorized and approved by said judge, which was rejected by said board. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was entered in favor of defendant, from which judgment plaintiffs appeal.

Section 758 of the Penal Code reads as follows:

"An accusation in writing against any district, county, township, or municipal officer, for willful or corrupt misconduct in office, may be presented by the grand jury of the county for or in which the officer accused is elected or appointed."

Section 771 of said Code is as follows:

"The same proceedings may be had on like grounds for the removal of a district attorney, except that the accusation must be delivered by the foreman of the grand jury to the clerk, and by him to a judge of the superior court of the county, who must thereupon appoint some one to act as prosecuting officer in the matter, or place the accusation in the hands of the district attorney of an adjoining county, and require him to conduct the proceedings."

[1] The sole question presented for decision is: Do such services as were rendered by plaintiffs constitute a county charge?

Section 4307 of the Political Code declares what are county charges, and subdivision 3 thereof reads as follows:

"The expenses necessarily incurred in the support of persons charged with or convicted of crime and committed therefor to the county jail, and for other services in relation to criminal proceedings for which no specific compensation is prescribed by law."

[2] It cannot be doubted that "one who demands payment of a claim against a county must show some statute authorizing it, or that it arises from some contract, express or implied, which finds authority of law." Irwin v. County of Yuba, 119 Cal. 686, 52 Pac. 35; Woods v. Potter, 8 Cal. App. 41, 45, 95 Pac. 1125. Nor may the payment of such a claim be allowed upon the theory that the services performed for which compensation is claimed were beneficial. There must be some statutory or constitutional authority for compensation for services rendered to a county, otherwise it cannot legally be paid, however beneficial the services performed may be to the county or the public generally. Unless, therefore, the services performed by the appellants and for which they are here seeking compensation come within the language or the contemplation of subdivision 3 of section 4307 of the Political Code, no recovery can be had for such services; it being conceded that there is no other law or provision of law authorizing payment of compensation for such services.

It follows that whether the appellants are entitled to compensation for the services named must be determined upon what is ascertained to be the true meaning or the legislative intent at the bottom of the language of said subdivision 3, viz.: "And for other services in relation to criminal proceedings for which no special compensation is prescribed by law." Originally, that language was contained in section 4344 of the Political Code, being embraced in subdivision 3 thereof, which then read as follows:

"(3) The compensation allowed by law to sheriffs and constables for executing process on persons charged with criminal offenses; for services and expenses in conveying criminals to jail; for services of subpœna issued by district attorneys, and for other services in relation to criminal proceedings for which no specific compensation is prescribed by law."

See Newmark's Pol. Code, 1889.

[3] It is very clear that the language herein italicized and which, as seen, is now a part of subdivision 3 of section 4307 of said Code, originally had reference to the compensation to be paid to sheriffs and constables for services which might be performed by them and not enumerated and for which no specific compensation was prescribed. But, in amending certain sections of the Political Code relating to the compensation of county officers, the Legislature, as seen, placed the provision as to services not specially enumerated and for which no specific compensation has been provided, in an entirely different connection from that in which it was formerly or originally used. As the provision now stands, we find it, as it was before, under the heading, "Other County Charges," and employed in a connection to which it does not appear to have natural or relevant application. The two sentences in the subdivision, although conjoined by the conjunctive word "and," seem to relate entirely to different and dissimilar subjects; the one involving expenses necessarily incurred in supporting persons charged with or convicted of crime and committed therefor to the county jail, and the other involving other services in relation to criminal proceedings for which no specific compensation is paid. Obviously, the matter of the support of the persons mentioned in the subdivision is not a "criminal proceeding" within the meaning of that phrase as it is used and referred to in our law. A "criminal proceeding" means some authorized step taken before a judicial tribunal against some person or persons charged with the violation of some provision of the criminal law. The support of those charged with or convicted of crime and who are lawfully incarcerated in the county jail therefor is a duty which the state or the county, its agent, is required to discharge, and while it is true that the county officer whose duty it is under the law to provide such support performs services for the county, when furnishing such persons with necessary support, still such services cannot correctly be said to be performed in relation to a "criminal proceeding" within the true juridical meaning of that phrase. It follows therefore that the words "other services," as used in the subdivision, cannot justly or reasonably be held to refer to "services" like or similar to those referred to in the sentence immediately preceding that containing those words. Indeed, we are unable to conceive of any other services which would be involved in the support of the persons referred to than those specifically mentioned. "Support," in the sense in which that word is used in the subdivision, necessarily means that the persons referred to therein are to be provided with such necessaries as may be required to sustain them under the peculiar conditions by which they are surrounded, including, of course, such necessary medical treatment as may be required, and when such support is provided there are left no other conceivable services to be performed in that connection. Moreover, there is nothing in the entire subdivision indicating that the "other services" are to be performed by a particular county officer or any particular person. The provision simply declares, in effect, that any other services than those specifically enumerated by the law for which no specific compensation is provided, by whomsoever performed, shall be and constitute a charge against the county. The provision means and was intended to mean something, for that particular language was retained as a part of the law while the part in connection with which it originally appeared in the Political Code was either entirely eliminated from the Code and some other provision for the compensation of sheriffs and constables substituted therefor or was re-enacted in some other connection.

Our conclusion is that there is no natural or logical connection between the two sentences in said subdivision; that is to say, that the language, "and for other services in relation to criminal proceedings for which no specific compensation is prescribed by law," has no reference or application to the language in the same subdivision immediately preceding it or to any of the preceding subdivisions, but that said language was retained as a part of the law to operate as an independent, substantive provision thereof, to cover or meet contingencies which, it was conceived by the Legislature, from common experience, might arise and require the incurring of expense in the prosecution of criminal cases and which human prescience is unable to foresee so that specific provision for the expenses arising may be made. And that the provision, in its present form and connection, was designed, ex industria, to meet just such cases as the one before us and its language broad enough to include services of the character of those for which the appellants claim the right to be compensated by the county, we are in no doubt. If this be not true, then why is the provision in the Code? What other kind of services is contemplated by or included within that language? Certainly it must be assumed that the provision was enacted and inserted in the Code for some purpose. What is that purpose if it be not to provide for the compensation for services such as the appellants performed? Of course, it will not be questioned that an action growing out of either section 758 or section 772 of the Penal Code is a criminal proceeding, and that therefore the services performed by the appellants were "in relation to criminal proceedings." See Pen. Code, § 682; In re Marks, 45 Cal. 199; In re Curtis, 108 Cal. 661, 662, 41 Pac. 793; Matter of Shepard, 161 Cal. 171, 174, 118 Pac. 513; People v. McKamy, 168 Cal. 531, 533, 143 Pac. 752; State ex rel. McGrade v. District Court, 52 Mont. 371, 157 Pac. 1157, 1158.

The respondent, opposing the above construction of the provisions of the Political Code under consideration, undertakes to establish an analogy between a case where the court, exercising the authority conferred upon it by section 771 of the Penal Code, appoints an attorney to prosecute a district attorney on an accusation filed against him under either section 758 or section 772 of said Code and the case in which the court is authorized by section 987 of the same Code to name or assign an attorney to represent and defend the accused where the latter is himself without means to employ counsel and desires the court to assign counsel to defend him. But we perceive no such resemblance between the two cases as requires us to hold that the appellants must be denied compensation for the services performed by them upon the theory supporting the authority vested in trial courts by said section 987.

The central idea—indeed, the polestar—of every system of laws (in civilized countries), is the preservation and protection of such natural rights of mankind as have not necessarily been surrendered or given up in return for the benefits which men receive from organized society, and surely that system which has failed to provide for the full and complete protection of all the rights of person and property to which every member of organized society, whether rich or poor, when measured by the material things of life, is entitled, would fall woefully short of that degree of perfection which it is possible for man-made government to attain. Our state Constitution has therefore specially covered this matter with respect to persons charged with crime. In section 13 of the first article of that instrument it is provided, among other things, that, in criminal prosecutions, "in any court whatever," the party accused shall have the right to appear and defend "in person and with counsel." The federal Constitution (article 6) contains a like guaranty. Of course, the right so guaranteed would involve the granting of a special privilege to a particular class if the right to its exercise were confined to those persons charged with crime having the financial ability to employ and compensate counsel—a situation wholly at variance with the fundamental idea and the general spirit of our systems of state and federal governments as outlined by their respective constitutions—and therefore, in this state, to the end that all men in all circumstances shall have the equal protection of the law, as our Constitution commands, the Legislature has enacted section 987 of the Penal Code, whereby the trial courts are, as seen, vested with authority, in the case of an impecunious person prosecuted upon a criminal charge, to assign him counsel, selected from the membership of the local bar, to defend him without compensation, or to trust for compensation to the future ability and the disposition of the accused himself to pay for the services rendered. Rowe v. Yuba County, 17 Cal. 62; Lamont v. Solano County, 49 Cal. 158. The Legislature, for obvious reasons, has made no provision for payment for services rendered by an attorney in such a case, although it undoubtedly has the right to make such services a county charge, to be compensated for out of the treasury of the county. Of course, neither in the case of an attorney assigned by the court to defend an impecunious accused, nor in a case where an attorney is appointed by the court to prosecute the district attorney against whom an accusation has been filed, is there any contractual relation thereby or otherwise created or arising between the attorney so assigned or appointed and the county, since the county is not a party to either action and does not control the prosecution of either case; the prosecution in both instances being for the benefit of the county only in so far as it is part of the state, in the name of the people of which and not of the county the proceeding in both cases is prosecuted. Therefore there can be no implied assumpsit against the county—no obligation on its part to pay (Case v. Board of Commissioners, 4 Kan. 511, 96 Am. Dec. 190), notwithstanding that the Legislature, in the exercise of due authority, has made the expenses incurred in public prosecutions charges against the county. In brief, as stated, the whole matter of compensation in either case rests upon the proposition whether there is or is not a statute authorizing payment for the services rendered therein by an attorney assigned or appointed by the court to defend or prosecute the accused, as the case may be.

But, as above intimated, the authority given to superior courts to appoint an attorney to conduct the prosecution of a district attorney against whom an accusation has been filed does not proceed from the theory upon which like authority may be exercised in assigning an attorney to defend a pauper charged with and prosecuted for a crime. The county is not an indigent, but is amply able to compensate (and as of right should compensate) an attorney who is required to perform services which, under other circumstances, it is the duty of the district attorney to perform, and for which the latter is compensated. Naturally enough, therefore, the Legislature would, in such a case, make provision for compensating an attorney for services which the law compels him to perform, whether he desires to perform them or not.

There is, as we read the decision, nothing said in the case of State ex rel. McGrade v. District Court, 52 Mont. 371, 157 Pac. 1157, supra, in conflict with the views above expressed. In that case, under a statute substantially similar in its provisions to section 771 of our Penal Code, the trial court, in a proceeding in which an accusation had been presented and filed against the district attorney, appointed the district attorney of an adjacent county to conduct the prosecution. The latter asked and sued for compensation for his services; but he was denied the right to compensation upon the ground, as stated by the Supreme Court of Montana, that he had merely performed a duty in prosecuting the case that the law had placed upon him as a district attorney, and that the compensation allowed him by law as district attorney covered payment for all services performed as such by him, including services in such a case. The ruling in that case appears to be perfectly sound, but it does not fit this case. Under section 771 of our Code, the court could have appointed a district attorney of one of the counties adjoining Sacramento to prosecute the accusation in this case, in which event what is said in the Montana case would apply here.

It is further argued that the superior court has no authority to incur an obligation against the county, but that such authority is alone vested in the board of supervisors, referring to section 4041 of the Political Code, which, in the enumeration of the powers of such boards, contains the following provision, designated as subdivision 16:

"To direct and control the prosecution and defense of all suits to which the county is a party and, by a two-thirds vote of all the members, may employ counsel to assist the district attorney in conducting the same."

The foregoing, as is to be noted, refers wholly to suits to which a county is a party, and therefore to civil actions. A county is in no sense a party to criminal cases, for they involve "no interest of the county in any sense, other than such interest as the county may have in common with any other county and all the people of the state, in upholding the administration of the law." County of Modoc v. Spencer, 103 Cal. 498, 500, 37 Pac. 483; Conklin v. Woody, 33 Cal. App. 554, 165 Pac. 973.

The proposition, however, that there is no law authorizing a judge of the superior court to incur an obligation against or on behalf of the county is, in a general sense, quite true. But the right in the Legislature to confer such authority upon the superior court or the judge thereof, when it may be essential to the proper transaction of the business of the court, cannot be questioned; and this right has been exercised by the Legislature in the case of the employment and compensation of phonographic reporters of said courts. See sections 269, 274, and 274a, Code Civ. Proc. By those sections, the judges of the superior court are not only authorized to appoint and employ stenographic reporters to take down in shorthand and transcribe the proceedings of their courts, but are authorized to audit or order the payment of the claims of such reporters for their compensation for the services so performed by them. Indeed, by section 869 of the Penal Code, justices of the peace, sitting as examining magistrates, are similarly authorized to order the payment of claims of shorthand reporters whom they have appointed to report the testimony and proceedings taken and had at preliminary examinations. And, in a case where, as here, an accusation has been filed against the district attorney, the Legislature has expressly conferred authority upon the superior court to appoint an attorney to prosecute the action. Whether such an appointment amounts only to a mere "assignment" of an attorney to represent the people in the action, as in the case of an attorney "assigned" to defend an impecunious person accused of and prosecuted for some crime, or is an employment in the sense that it places an obligation upon the county or the state to pay for the services of the attorney in the action, must, of course, depend upon whether the Legislature has authorized payment out of the public treasury of compensation for such services. The Legislature could, obviously, make such services a direct charge against the state and the compensation payable from state funds. On the other hand, it is clearly within the power of the Legislature to make such services a charge against the county, as it has made all other expenses growing out of criminal prosecutions charges against the county, and, as declared in the outset of this opinion, we think that this is precisely what the Legislature intended to do and has done by the language of subdivision 3 of section 4307 of the Political Code.

The suggestion that the construction herein given subdivision 3 of section 4307 may result in a heavy drain on the county treasury is, of course, no argument against such construction of said section. A proceeding against a district attorney such as the one before us rarely arises, and we may add (more as the opinion of the writer than that of the court) that, if having no stronger reason, legal or moral, for its support than that which prompted this proceeding, no such a move should be made against a public officer; for under such circumstances its result can only be to harass and annoy without the slightest justification a public official who is trying to do his duty as the law lays it down. But, whether meritorious or justified or not, such a proceeding must be disposed of by the court before which it is pending in the manner and mode prescribed by the law, and, when against a district attorney, there is nothing left for the court to do but to appoint either the district attorney of an adjoining county or some other attorney to prosecute the proceeding; in other words, to perform services which, under other circumstances, it would be the duty of the district attorney himself to perform.

Our conclusion is: That the services performed by the appellants are among the "other county charges" contemplated by subdivision 3 of section 4307 of the Political Code, and that compensation therefor by the county is authorized by the latter part of said subdivision of said section; that the claim for such services is one which must be passed upon by the board of supervisors, in which body is lodged the discretion of determining whether the services for which the claim is made have been performed, and, if so, whether the amount of the claim is or is not reasonable in comparison with the character of the services performed; that, if the claim be rejected by the board, then the claimant may finally, as in the case of any other claim against the county and disallowed by the supervisors, either in whole or in part, have recourse to the courts for a judicial adjudication of the claim or the questions thereupon arising.

The judgment is reversed.

HUEY v. PATTERSON et al. (Civ. 2307.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 22, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⊂=262(1)—ACTIONS AGAINST STOCKHOLDERS — DISSOLUTION OF FORMER CORPORATION.

In an action against stockholders for debts incurred by corporation, it is no defense that a former corporation, whose business and assets the present corporation took over, new stock being issued for surrendered stock, was not properly dissolved, under Civ. Code, § 309, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1227–1232.

2. CORPORATIONS ⊂=269(1) — SUITS AGAINST STOCKHOLDERS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action by creditors against stockholders of a corporation for debts incurred in 1913 and 1915, an agreed statement of facts to the effect that defendants were stockholders in 1912 was sufficient on which to base a judgment against defendants, under Civ. Code, § 322, casting burden upon creditors to show who were stockholders "at the time the debt or liability was incurred"; it being presumed that the defendants continued to be stockholders.

3. CORPORATIONS ⊂=237 — LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.

The liability of stockholders of an insolvent corporation is not primarily predicable upon notes drawn by corporation to pay pre-existing obligations, but upon the enforceability of the pre-existing obligations themselves.

4. CORPORATIONS ⊂=237 — INVALID ASSESSMENTS—RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Where a corporation levies invalid assessments on certain stockholders, they are entitled to recover the same from the corporation, or, in case of insolvency, from the stockholders upon their statutory liability.

5. CORPORATIONS ⊂=178 — ADVANCES BY STOCKHOLDERS.

Where stockholders of a corporation made advances, stipulation in note that note was "to be paid from sales of merchandise or sales of treasury stock" did not make advances voluntary assessments, but amounted to nothing more than an indication of a willingness to await for some time the payment of the notes.

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊂=58(4)—STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY — ACCOMMODATION INDORSER.

Where, after corporation's failure to pay its note on demand, accommodation indorser and guarantor paid it, taking assignment thereof, a new obligation arose in his favor, and, as to his right to recover amount paid from corporation's stockholders, the applicable statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 338, began to run at time of such payment; the assignment being immaterial, as the claim was based upon the payment and not on the note.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by L. M. Huey against A. T. Patterson and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Manning, Thompson & Hoover and Andrew M. Strong, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Herbert W. Kidd and A. W. Ashburn, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This is an action to recover judgment upon the statutory liability of certain stockholders of the Growers' Home Canneries Company, a corporation, which will hereafter, for convenience, be referred to as "Second Company." That company was, under an arrangement which later will be stated more fully, the successor in business of the Growers' Home Canning Company, a corporation, which will be called, henceforth, "First Company." The plaintiff sued as assignee of various holders of claims against Second Company, consisting of seven promissory notes, aggregating a total principal sum of $5,229, and a further claim for $750 principal, money loaned but for which no promissory note was given, or, in all, the principal sum of $5,979. Judgment was rendered against the defendants for their proportionate shares of this amount. The appeal is from the judgment.

One of the contentions of the appellants is that the arrangement by which Second Company succeeded to First Company was void. That arrangement is set forth in an agreed statement of facts found in the record and was, in effect, as follows: At a meeting of the stockholders of First Company there was passed a resolution providing that Second Company be organized with a certain capitalization; that the president and secretary of First Company be instructed to incur the expense necessary for the incorporation of Second Company; that the stockholders of First Company be asked to consent to the transfer of its assets to Second Company and to accept stock in the new company in lieu of their stock in the old in the proportion of ten shares for one, on account of the difference in the par value of the shares; and that all of the stockholders of First Company be given stock in Second Company in proportion to their holdings. All the appellants were holders of stock in First Company, were present at the meeting, and voted in favor of the resolution. At the same meeting it was voted that First Company offer to sell its plants, business, and all its property and to transfer its cash on hand and outstanding accounts to Second Company, the latter to assume the liabilities of First Company, all in consideration of the shares of stock of Second Company to be issued to the stockholders of First Company in proportion to their holdings of its stock, and that the president of First Company be authorized to execute the deeds, assignments, bills of sale, and other papers necessary to carry out the terms of the offer. The motion included a draft of a letter to be transmitted to Second Company, setting forth the terms of the offer, and was carried unanimously. At the same meeting, Second Company already having been incorporated, a letter was received from it, by which the offer of First Company was accepted. Thereupon, a motion was adopted by which the communication from Second Company was ordered received and placed on file and by which the president of First Company was authorized to execute the instruments necessary to effectually carry out the transaction. On the day on which the meeting of the stockholders of First Company was held, there was also convened the first meeting of the stockholders of Second Company. The agreed statement of facts shows that on or about that day each of the appellants subscribed for small holdings of the capital stock of Second Company and each of them was present at the meeting. A resolution was adopted which recited a receipt of the above-mentioned offer from First Company and which authorized the directors of Second Company to accept the proposition, to purchase the property of First Company upon the terms of the offer, and to issue stock in accordance therewith. The appellants each voted for the resolution. The corporations thereafter executed and issued all the instruments and certificates of stock necessary to effectuate the contemplated transaction.

[1] The contention that this arrangement was invalid is based upon section 309 of the Civil Code and sections 1227–1232 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Speaking generally, but yet in terms sufficient for our present purpose, the section of the Civil Code forbids directors of corporations to make dividends on stock except from surplus profits, or to divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders any part of capital stock; and the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure provide a scheme for the dissolution of corporations upon notice and by a special proceeding instituted in the superior court.

Dealing with the question of the validity of the transaction between the corporations as measured by the provisions of both section 309 of the Civil Code and sections 1227–1232 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we need concern ourselves only with an inquiry as to whether the appellants are in a position to invoke the terms of the statute. The point made by the appellants goes only to the alleged attempt to divide the capital stock of

First Company among its stockholders and to work a dissolution of that corporation, and has no bearing whatever upon the question of the existence of Second Company or upon the query as to whether the appellants are stockholders in it. Any infirmity in the arrangement between the two corporations because of the sections of the Codes which are cited, is of concern only to those having an interest either as creditors or stockholders, in the property of First Company. The appellants, objecting alone as stockholders of Second Company, and in an action to which First Company is a stranger, are in no position to present the question. These considerations are based on O'Dea v. Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n, 154 Cal. 53, 67, 97 Pac. 1.

[2] The obligations which are the basis of this action were incurred by Second Company in January and September, 1913, and in May, 1915. Under the language of section 322 of the Civil Code, relating to the liability of stockholders for corporate debts, the burden of proof was upon the respondent to show the number of shares of the stock of the corporation held by each stockholder "at the time the debt or liability was incurred." The agreed statement of facts shows who were the stockholders on or about December 11, 1912, and shows the number of shares owned by each; but it does not make such a showing as of any other time. The appellants contend that this condition of the agreed statement does not sustain the burden cast upon the respondent; but the rule is established in a number of cases that, where the state of the title to property is shown as of a particular time, the same condition is presumed to exist until the contrary appears. Under this rule there appears to be no distinction between the different classes of property, as some of the cases relate to realty (Hohenshell v. South Riverside L. & W. Co., 128 Cal. 627, 631, 61 Pac. 371; Jennings v. Jordan, 31 Cal. App. 335, 339, 160 Pac. 576), while others apply the doctrine in the case of personal property (Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 Pac. 750; Newlove v. Pond, 130 Cal. 342, 62 Pac. 561). We are satisfied that the showing in the agreed statement of facts, there being no evidence to the contrary in the record, is sufficient to support the judgment.

[3, 4] Several of the notes sued on were executed by Second Company for the purpose of reimbursing the payees, who were stockholders in the corporation, in amounts paid by them into the corporate treasury upon a certain invalid assessment upon the corporate stock. The appellants contend that there can be no recovery upon these notes for the reason that the stockholders who advanced their respective portions of the void assessments had no cause of action against the corporation for the recovery of their money, antecedent to the execution of the notes; and it is, of course, true that the liability of stockholders, in such an action as this, must be measured by the question whether an original obligation of their corporation is enforceable by its holder. The liability of stockholders is not primarily predicable upon notes, the execution of which is based upon pre-existing obligations (Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 Pac. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87; Santa Rosa Nat. Bank v. Barnett, 125 Cal. 407, 58 Pac. 85; Gardiner v. Royer, 167 Cal. 238, 139 Pac. 75), but upon the pre-existing obligations themselves. Was there, then, a legal liability upon the corporation to return the amounts advanced on account of the void assessment? It appears that this specific question has never been answered in California, nor have we, despite the fact that appellants cite cases from other states to the point, been able to ascertain that it has been passed upon elsewhere, even after some research of our own. There are principles of law, however, announced in decisions of the California courts, which furnish an analogy giving us much aid in the determination of the question. For instance, it is well settled that a corporation which receives and retains the fruits of a contract ultra vires cannot be heard to assert the invalidity of the contract in an action brought to recover upon it. Main v. Casserly, 67 Cal. 127, 7 Pac. 426. See, also, Standard Oil Co. v. Slye, 164 Cal. 435, 445, 129 Pac. 589. Also, there is a long line of cases beginning as early as Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 255, laying down the very just rule that a municipal corporation which has obtained the money or property of another through mistake or without legal right may be compelled to return it as upon an implied contract. Some of these cases are on principle closely allied to the one now before us. County of Los Angeles v. City of Los Angeles, 65 Cal. 477, 480, 4 Pac. 453; County of Colusa v. County of Glenn, 117 Cal. 434, 49 Pac. 457; Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 555, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670; Contra Costa Water Co. v. Breed, 139 Cal. 432, 73 Pac. 189. The language used in the opinion in the first case of this group is particularly apposite. Certain fines belonging to Los Angeles county had been paid into the treasury of the city of Los Angeles by mistake. The county sued the city to recover the diverted moneys, and the Supreme Court said, in disposing of the question:

"Under a mistaken belief that they were legally liable to pay over these fines into the city treasury, the officers reported and paid them to the city, and the city treasurer doubtless received them under the same mistake. But this disposition of them was not authorized by law; and as the city, by the mistake of its officers in the performance of their duty, has obtained money which under the law ought to have been paid into the county treasury, it ought not in justice to be kept; it is the duty of the city to refund it. 'If,' says Mr. Justice Field in Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 255, 'the city obtain money of another by mistake or without authority of law, it is her duty to refund it—not from any contract entered into by her on the subject, but from the general obligation to do justice which binds all persons, whether natural or artificial.'"

We conclude that, under the facts of the present case, the stockholders who paid the amounts attempted to be charged against them by reason of the invalid assessment could have maintained an action against the corporation for their return, and that therefore the liability of the stockholders attaches.

[5] It is objected by appellants that a liability against them as stockholders does not exist in the case of certain other promissory notes upon which respondent sues. These notes were originally given to stockholders of the company for advances made by them and the question arises, upon the point made by appellants, as to whether the advances were loans or were voluntary assessments by the stockholders against their own stock. The appellants make much of the fact that the advances were in amounts equal to 5 per cent. of the par value of the holdings of the stockholders, and they cite cases to the effect that a voluntary contribution by stockholders to the funds of a corporation, to tide it over financial difficulties, is for the betterment of their stock and does not create a debt against the corporation. These authorities are not in point, for the records of the corporation show that the advances were loans, pure and simple. At a special meeting of the directors it was stated that it was necessary to raise a certain sum of money "in order to pay off current and past due bills." A resolution was then adopted authorizing the president and secretary to borrow the amount and to execute a note for it. Some of the directors then indicated a willingness "to make the loan to the Company," whereupon the money was paid over and a note was taken by a certain individual as trustee for the lenders. The promissory note was given in the ordinary form, as the resolution authorizing its execution required the insertion of no special terms in it; but the minutes show, after what they disclose as to the willingness of the stockholders to lend the needed money, that:

"It was further stipulated above-mentioned note * * * is to be paid from sales of merchandise or from sales of the treasury stock of the corporation."

This "stipulation" is no part, in form, of any resolution or motion; but, even if it be treated as a motion, it could not operate to limit the terms of the promissory note. If it be conceded to have any operation whatever as to the lenders, it can amount to nothing more than an indication of a willingness on their part to await for some time the payment of the note. Under all these circumstances, it plainly appears that the advances by the stockholders were not voluntary contributions, but that they fixed the relation of creditors and debtors between the stockholders and the corporation.

[6] It is contended by the appellants that the claim for $750, not evidenced by a promissory note, is barred by the statute of limitations, section 338, Code of Civil Procedure fixing a limitation of three years for the commencement of a certain class of actions, which includes those like the present one. The question arises under the following facts: Second Company was indebted upon a certain promissory note executed by First Company, which Second Company had assumed, and on which one of the stockholders of both corporations, E. B. Rivers, was an accommodation indorser and guarantor. This note was dated more than three years before the commencement of the action. The note was for $1,750, and $1,000 had been paid upon it at a certain time. At a date within three years before the commencement of the action, demand was made upon Second Company for payment of the balance due; but the demand was not complied with. Thereupon, demand was made upon Rivers, and he paid, taking an assignment of the note. A new obligation arose in favor of Rivers upon the payment of the note by him, and the statute began to run at that time upon that obligation. Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 Pac. 68, 65 Pac. 1094; McDonough v. Nowlin, 17 Cal. App. 45, 118 Pac. 463. The fact that Rivers took an assignment of the note cannot affect the principle just stated, for the reason that the claim for the amount paid by him is not based upon the note. The claim is not barred.

There are two or three other points presented by the appellants, but they do not merit a specific consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

BEKINS v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 2502.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 29, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸781(2)—REVIEW—MOOT QUESTION—VALIDITY OF STAY BOND AFTER REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT.

Where judgment of appellate court in reversing lower court's judgment for plaintiff has become final, an appeal by plaintiff from an order overruling motion to strike out the undertaking and vacate stay of execution raises a question of mere abstract interest, and appeal will be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by R. M. Bekins against Ella Smith, also known as Ella Smith-Trull and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appealed. From an order overruling motion to strike out the undertaking and to vacate the stay of execution, plaintiff appeals. Plaintiff's appeal dismissed.

Winslow P. Hyatt and David G. Kling, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. R. D.

McLaughlin, J. B. McLaughlin, and Earl Rogers, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this action plaintiff had judgment in the court below and defendant Ella Smith appealed. An undertaking was given to stay execution and a stay followed. Plaintiff moved to strike out the undertaking and vacate the stay. That motion was denied and this appeal was then taken. The appeal in the main case has been determined by this court and the judgment of the lower court reversed. Bekins v. Smith et al., 174 Pac. 96. The judgment made on determining that appeal has become final. It would serve no purpose affecting the rights of the parties litigant to now take up the questions discussed as to the validity of the stay bond given in the case. Such questions have become of mere abstract interest. Adams v. Prather et al., 167 Pac. 867.

The appeal is dismissed.

RAISCH v. REGENTS OF UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA. (Civ. 2398.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 29, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 26, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜426—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENT — UNIVERSITY LAND.

A strip of land owned by a state university and adjoining land, used for educational purposes, cannot be subjected to street assessment lien, unless it is divisible from land used for educational purposes, and can be separated therefrom without impairing use to which such land is being put by university.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜426—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENT — UNIVERSITY LAND.

A trip of land fronting on a street, and constituting about one-seventh of a block owned by a state university, six-sevenths of which was occupied by college buildings, held not separable from the remainder without impairing its use, and hence not assessable.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜426—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENT — LAND OCCUPIED BY COLLEGE BUILDINGS.

Land occupied by college buildings of a state university, being devoted to public use, is not subject to street improvement assessment.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜458 — IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENT.

Street improvement assessment must not be confiscatory.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜290(1)—DUE PROCESS—LOCAL IMPROVEMENT ASSESSMENT.

The tax for local improvements must not be so disproportionate to the value of the property to be subjected thereto as to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜456(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENT — ASSESSMENT — DISTRICT PLAN.

Where costs of street improvement exceeded more than half of assessed value of property assessable on the frontage plan, the city could have adopted the district plan of street improvement provided for by Vrooman Act, § 3, where city, not having been organized under General Municipal Incorporation Act, was not required to follow such plan, but was authorized so to do by San Francisco Charter, art. 1, § 5.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜467—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENT — VALUE OF PROPERTY.

Under San Francisco Charter, art. 1, § 5, authorizing city to adopt district plan for street improvements as provided for by Vrooman Act, § 3, where cost of improvement exceeded one-half of assessed value of assessable property subject to assessment on the frontage plan, city and county, in assessing property, could take into consideration the value of property back of frontage.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜519(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—VOID ASSESSMENT—WAIVER.

Where assessment of a block of land for street improvement was void because six-sevenths of the land was occupied by college buildings, contractor cannot waive his lien as to the six-sevenths and enforce it against the one-seventh, inasmuch as, assessment being void, he had no lien to waive.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜488, 489(8)—STREET IMPROVEMENT ASSESSMENT — PROTEST.

Property owners whose land is assessed for street improvements are not required to protest the actual assessment in order to protect their rights in court, but have the right to do so.

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜514(11) — STREET IMPROVEMENT—INVALID ASSESSMENT.

Where assessment for street improvement was invalid, owner of property cannot be required to face, without the power to protest, a new assessment entirely different.

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜488, 489(4) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENT — ESTOPPEL.

Property owner was not estopped from asserting the invalidity of a street improvement assessment because he failed to protest to city council or because he remained silent while the work was being done.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by W. C. Raisch against the Regents of the University of California. Demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint sustained, and from judgment for defendants entered upon plaintiff's refusal to further amend plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

P. F. Dunne, of San Francisco, for appellant. Warren Olney, Jr., of San Francisco, for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The regents of the University of California were on April 1, 1911, and still are, the owners of an irregular shaped block of land in the city and county of San Francisco, bounded by First avenue, Parnassus avenue, Kirkham, sometimes called K, street, and Fourth avenue, embracing about 13½ acres of land. Raisch, a street contractor, did street work, consisting of grading and sewer construction, on Fourth avenue along the entire front of the university property, and also upon the intersections of that avenue with Kirkham street and Parnassus avenue. This work was done under a resolution of intention of the board of public works providing for the assessment of its cost on property fronting on the improvement. Legal steps followed leading to an assessment for the cost of all this work. The entire tract of land belonging to the university was assessed to pay $3,681. The entire tract having been so assessed, the plaintiff in his amended complaint sought to foreclose, not upon the whole of the university's property, but upon the Fourth avenue frontage to a depth of 120 feet only.

The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the amended complaint, raising questions hereinafter discussed, and entered judgment for defendants, when plaintiff refused to further amend. From that judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff concedes that the assessment is void against all of the university property except that portion upon which he now seeks to foreclose. The reason which exacts this concession from the plaintiff is that all of the block except that portion last referred to is used by the regents in the performance of their public functions; but the plaintiff contends that the strip fronting on Fourth avenue to a depth of 120 feet is not so used by the regents, and that it, therefore, should be subjected to his lien as prayed. The plaintiff attempted to frame his amended complaint so as to state a cause of action within the rule of City Improvement Co. v. Regents, 153 Cal. 776, 96 Pac. 801, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 451. In that case the rule was stated to be that the regents, being a private corporation charged with the public trust of the general government and superintendence of the University of California, "private property held by them, when actually devoted to public use, is exempt from taxation for street improvement; otherwise not." And it is said that "the principle is well established that where any such lands are not directly and necessarily used for a public purpose they may be subjected to the payment of special assessments for benefits." Much other learning is embodied arguendo in that opinion, which is by Mr. Justice Henshaw; but the above statement is the simplest, and, as to the defendants' position, the most favorable, statement of the rule to be found in the case. An examination of the record in that case indicates that the property there assessed was an entire lot held and devoted, as therein alleged, solely to private uses of the defendants; that it was entirely vacant and unoccupied; not actually nor necessarily incidental nor appropriated to the performance of any public function, and not directly nor necessarily used for any public purpose. Allegations to similar effect are embodied in plaintiff's complaint as to the property affected in this case; and plaintiff seems to concede that before land, a portion of which is actually in use by the university for educational purposes, may be subjected to the lien of an assessment for street improvement, it must be separable from the remainder of the property for the public use of which it is a part without impairing the value of the property for the public use to which the occupied portions of it are already put; for he has alleged that the 120-foot strip is not an indivisible portion of the block described in the assessment, but, on the contrary, is easily divisible therefrom, and when severed will in no way affect the value or use of the remainder of said land for a public purpose or the performance of a public function.

[1] It goes without saying that this allegation was necessary to a statement of a cause of action by plaintiff; for, if the land sought to be subjected to the assessment, and to be sold in a foreclosure proceeding to pay the same, is not divisible from the remainder of the tract without injuring it for the uses to which the university is devoting such remainder, then, of course, the portion sought to be severed is necessary to the use of the remainder of the tract.

[2] Now, in the view we take of this matter, these bald allegations of this complaint, avowedly made for the express purpose of bringing the case within the rule of the case cited, cannot change the patent facts which appear on the face of the complaint itself. It is conceded in the brief of appellant that the whole eastern portion of this block—more than six-sevenths of its area—is occupied by the buildings of the Affiliated Colleges of the University of California. To allege under such circumstances that the other one-seventh of the area is severable and not necessary to the use of the remainder, considering the admitted character of the actual present use of almost the entire property, does not make it so. It is plain that the severance of this frontage on Fourth avenue from the remainder of the property would necessarily impair the present as well as the future usefulness and value of the remainder of the block to the university for its public purposes; and the point of view from which this question must be examined is upon the assumption that the strip is to be sold to satisfy the lien, and thus severed from the remainder of the tract.

When the case of City Street Improvement Co. v. Regents, supra, was decided the Supreme Court had before it no question of the division of a parcel of land upon which, and covering and using nearly all of which, as here, were buildings of the university. Upon this ground alone, then, the cases are distinguishable, and the demurrer was properly sustained.

There is, however, another ground upon which the trial court correctly sustained the demurrer.

[3] It is, as indeed it must be, conceded by appellant, under Witter v. Mission School District, 121 Cal. 351, 53 Pac. 905, 66 Am. St. Rep. 33, that the assessment as to the six-sevenths of this block in actual occupation

—adopting counsel's construction of that term as meaning occupied by buidings in use for university purposes—was void. But the Supreme Court has gone further than this, and has held that where a street assessment covered too much land the whole assessment was void; and in Benson v. Bunting, 141 Cal. 462, 75 Pac. 59, Mr. Justice McFarland stated the rule in this language:

"Appellant contends that he should have been allowed the amount of an alleged street assessment against the land, which alleged assessment the court found to be void. We do not see that the court erred in so holding. The assessment was against too much land, and therefore void (Ryan v. Altschul, 103 Cal. 177 [37 Pac. 339]); and it is unnecessary to consider respondents' contention as to the insufficiency of the engineer's certificate."

It is argued that in these cases the assessment was upon lands not only not assessable for the improvement, but belonging to other parties than owners of assessable lands, and that therefore those cases are distinguishable from the case at bar. We find nothing to indicate such a state of affairs in the case of Benson v. Bunting, supra; and, further, the Supreme Court applied the same rule in the case of Parker v. Reay, 76 Cal. 103, 18 Pac. 124, where an assessment for street work was levied against a lot known as lot No. 13, when it should have been levied against only the easterly half of that lot. This assessment also was declared void because it included too much land, and it does not therein appear that the assessable and nonassessable parts of lot 13 belonged to different parties.

Counsel for the appellant meets these cases with the contention that the basis of the assessment is the frontage only, without relation to the depth of the lot; and hence the enforcement of a lien on the shallow frontage in this foreclosure suit does not injure the defendants, and that they may not complain; and depends for support of this contention upon the case of Diggins v. Hartshorne, 108 Cal. 154, 41 Pac. 283. In the opinion in that case it is said that the owner cannot be said to be aggrieved merely because the superintendent, while correctly giving the frontage of his lot and assessing the proper amount thereto, has incorrectly delineated its interior lines, since the amount of the assessment is in no wise affected thereby. And it is further said that the basis of the assessment is the frontage upon the work, and the frontage of each lot determines the amount of the assessment against a lot, irrespective of its size, shape, or depth.

But the main question in that case was as to the proper location of Channel street in San Francisco. The court, having settled the proper location of Channel street, used the language above referred to. This language must be read in the light of the facts which were before the court. Those facts are thus stated in the opinion:

"The appellant does not contend that, if Channel street is properly located on the diagram, any other property than that designated therein is assessable. His contention in this respect is based upon his claim that Channel street is erroneously located thereon. The precise distance from Berry street at which Channel street is laid down on the maps named in the statute has never been officially declared, and the different measurements given at the trial were reached by measurement with a scale. One of these distances was less and the others more than is shown upon the diagram. These discrepancies, however, do not of themselves invalidate the assessment. They are ascertained only by evidence outside of the assessment itself, and in such a case the assessment is not felo de se, but, if defective, is to be remedied upon an appeal."

It is apparent that all that the court intended to hold in that case was that if errors were made by the street superintendent in delineating the depth or lateral lines upon the assessment map, such errors were trivial, and could have been cured by an appeal to the supervisors. We undertake to say that the court did not mean that an assessment should be upheld in a case where, without mistake but intentionally, the assessment embraced a tract of land with a depth of approximately 800 feet, an area of 13½ acres, and of which only 120 feet in depth on one front could be legally assessed. That the court did not intend that the language referred to should be given the meaning attached to it by appellant is clear from the following statement from the opinion:

"It is only the land assessed which is subject to the lien, and the judgment directing the sale, as well as the complaint for its foreclosure, must be limited to the description of the lot as found in the assessment."

[4-7] Adopting further the language of Diggins v. Hartshorne, supra, as applicable to this case (in which we think he is mistaken), counsel contends that the basis of the assessment here is the frontage upon the work; that the frontage of each lot determines the amount of the assessment against that lot irrespective of its size, shape, and depth. Viewed from the standpoint of the state of this proceeding at the present time, there seems to be much force in this argument, for this is a front-foot proceeding, and such is the rule as to the method of levying assessments in front-foot proceedings. Nevertheless, the statement is not correct in the sense that the frontage was all that the board of public works was permitted to consider when the proceeding was instituted and the method of assessment determined. To so hold would be to lose sight of the relative cost of the improvement compared to the value of this property, and of the legal principle that the assessment must not be confiscatory, and that fundamentally, in all cases of assessments for local improvements, the taxing powers must not levy a tax that will be so disproportionate to the value of the property to be subjected thereto as to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law. The board of public works, at the inception of this proceeding, and while considering the method to be adopted for raising the money with which to do this work, had the right, if it was not their duty, to consider the value of the taxable portions of the property assessable for the work. The board of public works had at least two distinct methods provided by law for raising this money. It could, as it attempted to do here, levy the assessment upon the frontage; but it was also provided by an amendment to the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, adopted in 1910 (Stats. 1911, p. 1689, article 1, § 5), that the city might proceed with street improvements under the general street law of the state, which at that time included the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 148) section 3 of which then authorized street improvement under what is known by the common name of the district plan. In that section of the Vrooman Act it is provided that whenever, according to the estimates of the engineer, the total estimated cost and expenses of a street improvement will exceed one-half of the total assessed value of the lots and lands assessed, if assessed, as here, upon the frontage, according to the last assessment roll of the city, the district plan must be adopted. While the city was not bound under the charter, as a municipality organized under the General Municipal Incorporation Act (St. 1883, p. 93) would have been, to follow this district plan in such a contingency, nevertheless it might have done so, provided the cost would exceed one-half the assessed value of that portion of the property assessable and fronting on the street. It must be clear from this that the city and county at the beginning of this proceeding were permitted to take into consideration not only the extent of the frontage, but also the value of the property back of the frontage; and where, as here, the value of the 120-foot strip does not appear, we are not called upon to assume, in order to reverse this judgment, that the board of public works would not have been warranted, and would not, under the circumstances that existed here, have adopted the district plan had its attention been called to the fact that its assessment against the six-sevenths of the property on which the buildings stand was void.

[8-10] Counsel contends that plaintiff has the right, by waiving his lien to the remainder of the property—as he expressly undertakes to do by an allegation of his complaint—to foreclose against the 120-foot strip. We think this contention unsound for the reason that the appellant in this case is waiving nothing, even in his own view of the case, by foregoing a right to foreclose upon the six-sevenths of this property upon which he confessedly can have no lien, and which admittedly was not subject to this assessment. What is really being attempted is to collect by this indirect method an invalid assessment which the board of public works evidently thought would be of benefit to the entire property of the Affiliated Colleges, and the cost of which they assumed would be levied upon that entire property measured by its frontage on Fourth avenue. They were mistaken in this, and had they known of their mistake it is not possible to say at this time that they could have levied this assessment at all. What is really asked of the court here is to make a new assessment for this street contractor, or that he be permitted to make a new one for himself, which the respondents in this case will have no opportunity to protest. While they were not called upon to protest the actual assessment in order to protect their rights in the courts, they had, nevertheless, the right to do so, and they cannot now be compelled by the court to face, without the power to protest, a new assessment entirely different, so far as the property is concerned, from the assessment actually levied.

[11] At the oral argument appellant's counsel contended that the "equities" of the case were all with appellant; that the respondents had stood by and permitted the appellant to expend his money on improvements in front of respondents' property without protest or objection, and should not now be heard to question the legality of the assessment. There is nothing in the complaint in this action to sustain this contention. It does not appear from the complaint that no protest was made, or that no objection was offered; and, further, in the case of Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Jurgens, 170 Cal. 273, 149 Pac. 560, the Supreme Court held that a property owner is not estopped from asserting the invalidity of an assessment because of his failure to protest to the city council, or because he remained silent while the work was being done. The principle there enunciated applies to this case. City officials when levying assessments act constantly under the advice of their attorneys; and the language of the case last cited, to the effect that the presumption of knowledge of the previous acceptance of the street, and consequent invalidity of the assessment, did not attach to the property owner with any greater strength than it applied to the city or the contractor, is an apt response to the contention of counsel that the regents should be estopped from asserting the invalidity of this assessment if they remained silent while the work was being done.

We feel, in conclusion, that the language of the late Judge Seawell when he sustained the demurrer is appropriate in this case. He said: "I do not understand upon what theory the plaintiff can expect to have the lien enforced over this limited area, the assessment covering a much larger one."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; ZOOK, Judge pro tem.

CITY OF OAKLAND v. ADAMS et al.

(Civ. 2025.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 24, 1918. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1918.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸191(6)—COMPLAINT—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—REFERENCE TO DEED.

Reference in complaint in eminent domain proceedings to deed to plaintiff city as matter of description has same effect as if description were inserted in complaint.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸191(6)—DESCRIPTION OF LAND IN COMPLAINT.

Complaint, describing line of lands sought to be condemned by reference to a deed, held sufficiently to describe the lands.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸191(6)—DESCRIPTION OF LAND IN COMPLAINT—REFERENCES.

References to deed and patent, with description of line in patent, in complaint of city, seeking to condemn land, taken with allegation that the tract as a whole was to be condemned, held sufficient to inform defendants accurately of land plaintiff sought to take.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸221—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDING—CONSTRUCTION OF TESTIMONY—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In city's proceeding to condemn land, question of construction of landowner's testimony as to his intention in fencing, whether or not to mark boundary, and what jury saw on premises, and question of construction of other testimony on subject, were for jury.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸996 — REVIEW — FINDING BASED UPON INFERENCE.

If a finding of fact is based upon a reasonable inference from facts proved, it is not within the power of the appellate court to set it aside.

6. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸221 — LOCATION OF BOUNDARIES ON GROUND — DUTIES OF COURT.

In a city's proceeding to condemn land, the court should have determined the boundaries of the land sought to be condemned, and have located such boundaries upon the ground.

7. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸262(5) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR.

In city's proceeding to condemn land, where jury found boundary of land sought to be condemned to be at fence line, and court adopted such finding, and jury evidently based its verdict on that line, court's failure to locate boundaries on ground was harmless to defendants.

8. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸262(5) — APPEAL — REVERSAL.

In city's proceeding to condemn land, where record fails to indicate insufficient damages were awarded, and it does not appear there has been miscarriage of justice, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, judgment of condemnation cannot be set aside, because city rested without introducing evidence to identify land, which landowners did.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸206(2) — RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—REQUEST TO ADMONISH JURY.

Error cannot be predicated on question on cross-examination to expert witness, on ground that matter prejudicial to appellants was brought before jury, where trial court was not asked to admonish jury to disregard implication of question.

10. EVIDENCE ⟸558(2) — EXPERTS — LIMITATION OF CROSS-EXAMINATION—DISCRETION OF COURT.

In city's proceeding to condemn land, trial court did not abuse discretion, when it refused to permit city's expert witness to answer questions on cross-examination as to character of land and its suitability for residence purposes; matter having been gone into already.

11. EVIDENCE ⟸558(1) — EXPERTS — LIMITATION OF CROSS-EXAMINATION — DUTY OF COUNSEL.

It was duty of counsel to point out to court, in lengthy trial, and on ruling as to scope of cross-examination of expert based on desire to limit examination, the fact, if it was a fact, that question had not been previously asked, particularly where court stated they had gone over same ground previously.

12. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸202(1)—EVIDENCE—VALUE—PART OF TRACT.

In city's proceeding to condemn land, city attorney could ask of witness value of part of property less in extent than that described in complaint, also less than described in the judgment, particularly where question was asked when boundary had not been settled.

13. EVIDENCE ⟸558(9)—EXPERT—CROSS-EXAMINATION—VALUE OF PROPERTY.

In proceedings to condemn land for park, court properly sustained city's objection to question to one of landowners' witnesses on cross-examination, whether in estimating value he considered purpose for which city was endeavoring to acquire land; any increment in value from intended purpose of city being immaterial to damages it should pay.

14. EVIDENCE ⟸558(7) — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF EXPERT—SHOWING OF INTEREST.

In city's proceeding to condemn land for park, real estate agent, who had estimated value of property for city, should have been permitted to answer landowner's question on cross-examination whether he was interested in sale of land that would be benefited by park.

15. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸262(5) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR.

In city's proceeding to condemn land for park, error in sustaining objection to question, on cross-examination of city's witness as to value, as to whether he was interested in sale of land that would be benefited by park, was not reversible, where jury did not adopt witness' estimate of value.

16. EVIDENCE ⟸558(8)—EXPERTS—QUESTION ON CROSS-EXAMINATION—GENERALITY.

In city's proceeding to condemn land for park, question asked by landowners of one of city's expert witnesses on cross-examination as to whether he was acquainted with geology of estuary in that locality was too general.

17. EVIDENCE ⟸558(8)—EXPERT—CROSS-EXAMINATION — ANSWER TO GENERAL QUESTION.

In city's proceeding to condemn land for park, court's action in permitting city's expert witness on cross-examination to answer general question of knowledge of geology of estuary in question was not erroneous, in view of testimony he had given as to depth of mud or marsh, etc.

18. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸262(5) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTION.

In city's proceeding to condemn land for park, instruction that duty to prove location of boundary line rested on landowners, abstract and improper, held harmless to landowners' substantial rights.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Condemnation proceeding by the City of Oakland, a municipal corporation, against Edson F. Adams and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. P. O'Brien, of San Francisco, for appellants. Paul C. Morf, City Atty., and John J. Earle, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. [1, 2] In this eminent domain proceeding by which defendants' property was condemned by the city of Oakland for a public park, the judgment is attacked on this appeal by the defendants on the ground that the description of the property found in the complaint is insufficient.

"The complaint," says appellants' counsel in his reply brief, "does not specifically describe the easterly boundary of this land, but it refers to a deed made by the Oakland Water Front Company to the city of Oakland for such description. This deed fixes the easterly boundary as being the easterly line of the rancho San Antonio as finally confirmed and patented to V. and D. Peralta between stations 131 and 134. * * * Nowhere in the patent are stations 131 or 134 or intervening stations mentioned or referred to."

The reference to the Oakland Water Front Company's deed to the city of Oakland as matter of description has the same effect as if the description were incorporated in the complaint. Vance v. Fore, 24 Cal. 435. This deed describes the westerly line of the park lands as the easterly line of rancho San Antonio, as finally determined and patented to V. and D. Peralta by the United States of America, between stations 131 and 134; and the easterly line of the Peralta grant of the San Antonio rancho between the stations mentioned was described in the patent as follows:

"Thence meandering the west shore of San Antonio creek at the line of ordinary high water" to a station.

Under the authority of Oakland v. Oakland Waterfront Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277, and City of Oakland v. Wheeler, 34 Cal. App. 442, 168 Pac. 23, this description must be held sufficient so far as the complaint is concerned.

[3] It was further alleged in the complaint that the tract sought to be condemned was the whole of an entire tract, and three boundaries of this tract were admittedly described with certainty, except as to the length of two of them. What may be called the two side lines extending from the Fallon street or western frontage of the property sought to be condemned to the easterly line thereof, which is the line in dispute, were described as so many feet, more or less, in length; and this easterly boundary—which may be called an end line of the tract for convenience—would have been left uncertain, but for the references to the other deed and the patent, and the description of this line in the patent as the meander line of ordinary high tide of San Antonio creek, which is a tidewater stream. But these references, taken with the allegation that the tract as a whole was to be condemned, were sufficient in the complaint to inform the defendants accurately of the land the plaintiff sought to take.

[4] As contended in the case of City of Oakland v. Wheeler, supra, so here it is claimed that the line could not be located on the ground. The force of this objection is weakened by the fact that the city sought to condemn the whole of defendants' tract, and that they themselves, as one of them testified, knew their land extended to the Peralta line, and had always paid taxes on and claimed all the land to the Peralta line. As in the case of City of Oakland v. Wheeler, so here, certain engineers testified that the line of the land could not be located on the ground by the description; but the court and jury visited and inspected the premises. What they found or saw does not appear in the record. There was some evidence as to the location of this tide line upon the ground. There was also a fence on the property erected by the defendant Edson F. Adams, which the jury found in a special verdict, in answer to a question submitted to them, was the Peralta line, and this Peralta line, as we have seen, was the line of ordinary high tide. It does not appear that the jury may not have been able to determine for themselves upon an inspection of the property that this fence was erected upon this line; the natural place for a fence marking the boundary of a man's property to be. It is true that Mr. Adams testified that he did not erect the fence for this purpose, and gave various reasons which, it is claimed, show that he did not erect it with the intention of placing it upon the boundary of the defendants' property; but the question of the construction of this testimony and what they saw when they visited the premises, and of the weight and construction of other testimony on this subject, was for the jury. It is well settled in this state that knowledge gained by the court from a view of the premises is independent evidence, to be taken into consideration in determining the issues of the case. People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833; Hatton v. Gregg, 4 Cal. App. 537, 88 Pac. 592.

[5] "If a finding of fact is based upon a reasonable inference, it is not within the power of this court to set it aside, any more than it is within its power to set aside any other finding supported by sufficient legal evidence; for a finding of fact based upon reasonable inferences drawn from facts proved with legal sufficiency is as much and as completely as any other finding of fact a finding based upon good and sufficient evidence." Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. 791, 158 Pac. 753. If the court and jury discredited Mr. Adams' explanation as to this fence, and found evidences upon the ground which indicated that the fence was actually placed upon the high tide line, their finding in that respect cannot be here reviewed; and it may be added that the jury found this fence line to be the Peralta grant line, and that the court, in findings made up by it, adopted this finding of the jury.

[6, 7] The appellants contend that the court and not the jury should have determined the boundaries of the land sought to be condemned and have located these boundaries upon the ground. While it may be said that the court should have done this under well-settled authorities in this state (Vallejo, etc., v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 147 Pac. 238; City of Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber Co., 171 Cal. 392, 153 Pac. 705; San Joaquin Irrigation Co. v. Stevenson, 26 Cal. App. 274, 147 Pac. 254, 258), nevertheless, as the jury found the boundary to be at the fence line, and as the court subsequently adopted that finding as a fact, and as the jury evidently based its verdict for damages done to the defendants upon that line, no harm can possibly have come to the defendants by reason of the court not following the course which the defendants insist it should have pursued in settling the location of the boundary. The question of the sufficiency of this description was raised in many ways during the trial, but all these objections are answered by the foregoing considerations.

[8] At the close of plaintiff's testimony the defendants made a motion for a nonsuit. The plaintiff had rested its case without introducing any evidence whatever to identify the land described in the complaint. It may be conceded, although we do not so decide on this record, that the plaintiff should have introduced in evidence the deed of the Oakland Water Front Company to the city of Oakland, and the Peralta grant from the United States government heretofore referred to, at least before resting its case; but these instruments were subsequently offered in evidence by the defendants, and much evidence was taken as to the location of the boundary line, including the examination of the premises by the court and jury. We have examined this entire record with care; and it seems to us that, conceding that the defendants' motion for a nonsuit should have been granted, nevertheless this case comes squarely within section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, providing that no judgment shall be set aside in any case for any error as to any matter of procedure unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. An examination of the record here fails to indicate that sufficient damages were not awarded by the jury to the defendants, nor does it appear from an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, that there has been in any other respect a miscarriage of justice. It seems to us that, even conceding defendants' position as to the error of the court in denying their motion for a nonsuit, this is on that point a proper case for the application of the constitutional provision.

[9] The appellants' next ground for reversal is that their objection to a question asked on cross-examination of one of their expert witnesses as to the value of the land was improperly overruled. The question was whether or not the witness' opinion of the value of the property would be affected, if it were shown that 6 acres of property situate in the neighborhood of the property sought to be condemned had been sold on December 4, 1905, to the city of Oakland by the defendants for the sum of $15,000. The witness answered, "No." Of course, this answer could not have injured defendants; but the defendants complain that the question itself was injurious to them, in that by means thereof the city attorney got before the jury the fact that they had sold to the city of Oakland a similar piece of property for a much lower price than that claimed by them for the property sought to be taken in this proceeding. The answer to this is that the court was not asked to admonish the jury to disregard the implication of the question.

Another similar question objected to by the defendants was whether, if it should be shown to the witness that the property was assessed by the assessor of the city of Oakland at the sum of $5,500, that would affect his estimate of value. The witness answered that it would not, and added to his answer an explicit and lengthy statement of the reasons supporting his opinion as to the market value of the land.

Again, the defendants complain that the question was an attempt to get before the jury evidence of what the property had been assessed for by the city of Oakland, and thus to prejudice their judgment as to its value. But, as with the former question, the defendants did not ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard the insinuation contained therein, and cannot now complain of the effect that may have been produced upon the jury thereby.

[10, 11] Mr. Woodward, one of plaintiff's witnesses, was asked if it was not a fact that certain property in the neighborhood of the property sought to be condemned was marsh land, and all built in and improved with residences and business property, and the further question if it was not a fact that substantial residence existed on marsh land filled in on Harrison street. Objections to these questions were sustained by the court. Mr. Woodward had testified in chief that in estimating the value of the land sought to be condemned he had taken into consideration the character of the land, and that his objection to the property for residence purposes was not only that it could not be sewered by gravity, but also because it was generally undesirable for residential purposes, as it was marsh and low land. This would indicate that these questions should have been answered. But this witness had been examined at great length, and the court undoubtedly, in passing upon this question, as appears from a colloquy between the judge and the defendants' counsel, was attempting to exercise its discretion in limiting the cross-examination of the witness within reasonable bounds. The record in this case is a bill of exceptions, questions and answers do not always appear therein, and much of the evidence of this witness on cross-examination, found in the record in narrative form, indicates that the witness may have been asked similar questions previously and which were allowed to be answered; and we cannot say from this record that the trial court abused its discretion when it refused upon this ground to permit these questions to be answered. Further, it may be said that it was the duty of counsel to point out to the court, in a lengthy trial such as this, and upon a ruling based, as this was, upon a desire to limit the examination, the fact—if it was a fact—that the question which counsel sought to have answered had not been previously asked. This is especially true in view of the fact that the court, in sustaining the objection, said:

"I think we went over this ground practically the other day. It is a matter of repetition."

[12] It is contended that three witnesses called by the plaintiff in rebuttal upon the question of value, were asked to give their opinions of the value of certain land which is essentially different from that described in the complaint. It is sufficient in answer to this, without reciting these very long questions in this opinion, to say that the city attorney evidently attempted in the question to ask as to the value of the property as bounded on the easterly side by the fence which was afterwards found by the jury and by the court to be the easterly boundary line of the property sought to be condemned; but, whether counsel succeeded in doing this or not, he did ask the value of a part of the property less in extent than that described in the complaint, and also less than that described in the judgment in the case. This he had a perfect right to do. It may be added that the question was asked at a time when the boundary of the property had not been definitely settled, nor had the court been asked up to that time to definitely settle this boundary. Counsel were trying the case upon the theory, evidently, that the jury was to settle the location of this boundary line. That being so, the questions of counsel must necessarily have been somewhat indefinite as to the boundaries of the property, and no substantial right of the defendants seems to have been transgressed by the answer to this question.

[13] The court, it is claimed, erred in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the following question asked of one of defendants' witnesses on cross-examination:

"When you made your estimate upon the value of this property did you consider as a basis of your estimate the purposes for which the city was endeavoring to acquire it?"

There is a fundamental distinction between the question asked in the case of Spring Valley Water Works v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 528, 28 Pac. 681, upon which counsel rely, and the question above quoted. It was shown in the case mentioned that the land was valuable for reservoir purposes; and, of course, its value for reservoir purposes should have been taken into consideration (as was there held) by the jury in fixing the value of the property. But here it does not appear that this particular property had any distinct value for park purposes over any other property that might have been acquired by the city of Oakland; at least we find nothing in the record indicating that it had such distinctive value. It does not seem that the fact that the city intended to acquire this property and use it for park purposes should cause it to be penalized, or that the increment in value which might attach to it, because of the fact that the city desired to acquire it to convert it into a city park, should raise its value to the city for that purpose. We think the objection was properly sustained. Indeed, it appears from this record that this property could only be made suitable for park purposes by an expenditure of a great deal of money on it. We think the value to be placed on property situated as this was should not be raised because the city was endeavoring to acquire it for the purpose of a public park.

[14, 15] A. J. Snyder, a real estate agent who had estimated the value of the property for the plaintiff, was asked if he was interested in the sale of land that would be benefited if the land sought to be condemned was acquired for park purposes. An objection to this question was sustained. This objection should have been overruled, as its answer, if in the affirmative, would have shown an interest on the part of Snyder in the acquisition by the city of this property for park purposes; but in view of the fact that the jury did not adopt Snyder's estimates, but on the contrary gave a verdict several thousand dollars higher in amount than the estimate placed by Snyder upon the property, we do not feel inclined to reverse this case because of this error.

[16, 17] The question "Are you acquainted with the geology of the estuary in that locality?" asked by the defendants of one of plaintiffs witnesses on cross-examination, was too general in its nature. The witness had stated that in fixing the value of the property he had taken into consideration the depth of the mud or marsh upon portions of it, and that the value of the property depended upon the depth of the mud and the cost of filling the land. He also testified that he did not know what the depth of the mud was, but had assumed, in making his estimate of value, that the mud was 15 to 20 feet deep. There was no error in not permitting him to give an answer to the general question of his knowledge of the geology of the estuary, in view of the testimony which he had given. If counsel wished to know more about the depth of the mud and the condition of the marsh, he should have directed his questions specifically to those factors of the situation, and should not have asked a general question, such as the one propounded here.

After reciting considerable testimony concerning the value of the property, defendants' counsel contends that the character of this testimony was such that it fell far short of the legal measure of sufficiency which the law requires to sustain a judgment; but an examination of the record shows ample testimony of value to sustain the judgment in this case.

[18] We do not think that the instruction to the jury that the duty to prove the location of the Peralta line rested upon the defendants, falls within the rule laid down in the case of Aliso Water Co. v. Baker, 95 Cal. 268, 30 Pac. 537. The question in that case was the certainty of the description of certain water rights to be condemned. The description of the water rights in the complaint was held uncertain, in not showing definitely what water rights were proposed to be condemned. The case arose on a demurrer for uncertainty to a complaint to condemn certain rights to the water of Sycamore creek; but neither the quantity of the water sought to be condemned, nor the rights thereto which the plaintiff undertook to take from the owners by the proceeding, were definitely set out. In this case the complaint does, as we hold, sufficiently describe the property to be taken. The court and jury, in hearing the evidence, definitely found the boundaries of the property. Conceding that the instruction was in the abstract an improper one, nevertheless we cannot see that the defendants were prejudiced in any substantial right thereby.

These considerations, at the expense of much space, seem to us to dispose of this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; ZOOK, Judge pro tem.

37 Cal. App. 415

PEOPLE ex rel. BRADFORD, Dist. Atty., v. DILLMAN et al. (Civ. 1771.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 3, 1918.)

1. NUISANCE ⊂⊃84 — DISORDERLY HOUSE—ABATEMENT—EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding under St. 1913, p. 20, to enjoin the use of real property for immoral purposes, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the house was used for prostitution, and that such use had not been abated at the time of the proceeding.

2. NUISANCE ⊂⊃80 — DISORDERLY HOUSE — ABATEMENT.

In proceeding under the Red Light Abatement Act, to enjoin the use of premises for immoral purposes, if it appears that the nuisance has been abated before the action was commenced, proceeding will be dismissed.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃995 — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Upon the question of the weight of testimony a very large discretion is committed to trial courts, with which interference by Courts of Appeal is not justified, unless upon the face of the testimony itself it may be said to be unworthy of belief.

4. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃317(8)—HEARSAY.

In a proceeding to abate a nuisance under the Red Light Abatement Act, testimony of a police officer as to an explanation made by a man, caught in a room with a prostitute during a raid, as to his reason for being there, was hearsay and inadmissible.

5. NUISANCE ⊂⊃84 — DISORDERLY HOUSE — ABATEMENT—EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding under the Red Light Abatement Act, considerable latitude is allowed the people in the proof, but there is no legal justification for a radical departure from the long-established rules of evidence.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1051(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding to abate a nuisance under the Red Light Abatement Act, admission of hearsay testimony as to the purpose for which a man was occupying a room in the house was harmless, where other evidence established his purpose for being there.

7. WITNESSES ⊂⊃414(1)—CORROBORATION.

It is not proper to corroborate a preceding witness by testifying that witness heard testimony of the preceding witness, and "it was correct" or true in all particulars.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1050(1) — HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

It was harmless error to permit a witness to corroborate a preceding witness by testifying simply that his testimony was correct, where there was a great amount of other testimony to the same point.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1073(1)—HARMLESS ERROR.

A decree under Red Light Abatement Act, enjoining defendants from using certain realty for immoral purposes, but not closing the premises or ordering sale of furniture or taxing costs, could not be prejudicial to defendant, as creating a cloud on the title or otherwise.

10. NUISANCE ⊂⊃88—DISORDERLY HOUSE — PROCEEDING TO ABATE—COSTS.

In a proceeding to abate a nuisance under Red Light Abatement Act, where it appeared that defendant, as owner of the premises, had no knowledge that they were being used for immoral purposes, the court properly imposed no penalty for costs in a decree enjoining the nuisance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Proceeding by the People of the State of California on the relation of Hugh B. Bradford, District Attorney of the County of Sacramento, State of California, against Chas. F. Dillman and Ludwig Mebius, as trustees of the Marguerite Home, and the Marguerite Home, to enjoin the use of certain real property for immoral purposes. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for appellants. Hugh B. Bradford, of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was commenced, on July 13, 1917, by the district attorney of the county of Sacramento to secure an injunction enjoining the use of certain real property in the city of Sacramento belonging to appellant Marguerite Home, for immoral purposes under the so-called "Red Light Abatement Act." Stats. 1913, p. 20. A trial was had, and the court found that, on and prior to July 8, 1917, the building referred to was used for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, and was a nuisance. Judgment was entered that appellants "do perpetually and absolutely desist and refrain from conducting and maintaining and using, for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution" said premises. The appeal is from said judgment.

The facts are: The building, which the petition alleges was used for purposes of assignation and prostitution, is situated in the city of Sacramento, and is the property of the "Marguerite Home," an institution founded and maintained for the care and support of aged women, and of which the appellants Dillman and Mebius are trustees. On the 9th day of March, 1916, the trustees leased said premises for the term of three years, beginning on said date, to one Peter Gilarducci, said lease being evidenced by an instrument in writing, duly executed by the parties thereto. Among the provisions of the lease is one to the effect that the lessee shall not let or underlet the whole or any part of said premises without the written consent of the lessors. Some time after the execution of said lease, Gilarducci, with the consent of the trustees, sublet the building to two men by the names, respectively, of Valentina and Gabriella. It appears, however, that, on the 16th day of November, 1916, Gilarducci, without the consent or knowledge of the lessors, sublet the upper floor of the building to one Joe Caci. This sublease was in writing, and referred to the building as a "lodging house." The lower floor of the building was used as a saloon by Valentina and Gabriella.

On the 8th day of July, 1917, the portion of the premises so sublet to Caci was raided by the police, who found in one of the rooms thereof a woman named and known to the police as Kitty Gray, who was also known by the officers to be a prostitute. The officers thereupon placed the woman under arrest. She was the only female found by the officers in the building on that occasion. On the 13th day of July, 1917, five days subsequently to the raid above referred to, this action was begun by the district attorney of Sacramento county under the act of the Legislature above mentioned, which is popularly known as the "Red Light Abatement Act."

Upon the close of the case of the people, the defendants asked for a nonsuit, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to make out a case under the act in question. The court denied this motion, and here the appellants complain: (1) That the evidence does not support the findings; (2) that, conceding that, on the 8th day of July, 1917, the time at which the raid was made and the said Kitty Gray put under arrest, the premises were used for the purposes of prostitution, and thus a nuisance therein maintained, the evidence clearly and unquestionably shows that such nuisance was abated by the tenants, Valentina and Gabriella, themselves, and that therefore, at the time this proceeding was instituted, there existed in and on the premises no nuisance to abate; (3) that the trial court made certain erroneous rulings respecting the evidence, from which serious detriment to the rights of the defendants in the trial resulted.

The testimony introduced by the people was given by the police officers who raided the premises on the 8th day of July, 1917, and in substance is as follows: That, on going to the upper floor of the building, they met the woman, Kitty Gray, just as she was emerging into the hallway from her room. Asked by the officers whether there was any one in her room, she replied in the negative, but they proceeded on into her room, and therein found a man, who was in the act of pulling his pantaloons from his lower limbs to his waist. This man, whose name was not given, stated that he had only a moment previously given the woman some money upon an agreement that she would have sexual intercourse with him, but declared that up to that time no sexual relations between them had been had. One of the officers testified that, at some time before the 8th day of July, the premises had been raided by the police and the place closed. At that time there were three or four women of bad repute in the building, one of whom was Kitty Gray, who was then cautioned by the officers against resuming in Sacramento her occupation as a prostitute. The same officer —and the only officer who so testified—said that the general reputation of the premises prior to and on the 8th day of July was that it was a house of prostitution. Each of the officers testified that he did not know, nor had he heard, of any acts of lewdness or prostitution being committed in said building after the said 8th day of July, and that so far as he knew no such acts had been committed in the building after that date.

The foregoing embraces a synoptical statement of all the testimony presented by the people in support of the charge set out in the petition.

The defendant, Dillman, testifying for the defense, testified that he did not know Caci had been given a sublease of the upper portion of the building by Gilarducci until after the Gray woman was arrested on the 8th day of July; that the sublease to Caci was made without the consent of the trustees of the Marguerite Home; that, upon learning of the raid by the officers on the 8th day of July, Valentina and Gabriella dispossessed and put out of the premises the said Caci; that, so far as he knew, there had been no prostitution or lewdness practiced in the building since the said 8th day of July.

The court found that on and for some time prior to the 8th day of July, 1917, the premises in question were used for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, and that said building was a nuisance under the laws of this state. The judgment thereupon entered decrees that the defendants and their agents, etc., "do perpetually and absolutely desist and refrain from conducting and maintaining and using, for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution," the said premises.

[1] It is plainly apparent from the evidence that the trustees of the Marguerite Home were entirely ignorant at all times of the immoral use to which the upper portion of the building was put by the sublessee, Caci, and we think it is very clear that had they known that Caci or any other person was using the building for the purpose of carrying on the immoral traffic which appears to have been practiced in said building, the trustees would promptly have evicted the transgressor and have stopped the illicit business. But we are further of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to support the decision of the trial court.

[2] It may be observed that it must be true, as counsel for the appellants contend, that where a nuisance has been abated before action to abate it has commenced and it does not exist at that time, the trial of the action will be without a foundation for its support, and utterly barren of substantial results, for in such case, obviously, there would be no nuisance to abate. And if there had been evidence sufficient to support a finding that the nuisance had been abated before this action was commenced, we doubt not that the court below would have dismissed the proceeding or found against the averments of the petition.

[3] It is true that one of the trustees testified that upon learning of the raiding of the building by the officers and of the discovery that prostitution was going on therein, on the 8th day of July, 1917, Valentina and Gabriella, subtenants of the building by consent of the trustees, immediately put Caci out of the possession of the upper story of the building, and thus stopped further prostitution therein. It was further made to appear that, so far as the officers or trustees knew or were advised, prostitution or other acts of lewdness were not practiced in the building after said date. But, while this is all true, there is by the law committed to trial courts, upon the question of the weight or evidentiary value of testimony, a very large discretion, with which interference by Courts of Appeal is never justified or justifiable unless upon the face of the testimony itself, as necessarily it must be presented to the latter courts, it may be said to be unworthy of belief or entitled to no weight. In this case, however, the trial judge was not required to, and most probably did not, disbelieve or discredit the testimony of the appellants who testified to the suppression of the nuisance by the subtenants, Valentina and Gabriella, on the 8th of July, upon learning of its maintenance upon the premises. There was testimony, as we have shown, which tended to establish the fact that prostitution had been carried on in the building prior to and on the 8th day of July. There was no testimony affirmatively showing that prostitution had not been practiced in the building after the 8th day of July. The showing on that question was of a negative character—that is to say, it consisted of statements of witnesses, who had not been about the premises after the 8th day of July, that they had no information that the illicit business had been prosecuted in the building after that date. So upon the question whether the building was used for the purposes of prostitution and assignation at all times down to the filing of the complaint, there was before the trial judge positive proof of circumstances from which the fact might justly be inferred, which proof was negatived only by testimony of a very indefinite, vague, and unsatisfactory nature. Hundreds, no doubt thousands, of witnesses could be produced who would testify that they had no knowledge, either from direct or indirect sources, of the existence or maintenance of immoral practices in the building either before or after the 8th day of July, 1917.

[4] Two only of the several rulings as to the evidence complained of by the appellants were erroneous, but they were manifestly without prejudice to the rights of the appellants. The first of these was the ruling permitting the police officers to testify that the man they found in the Gray woman's room at the time of the raid had told them that he was there for the purpose of having sexual relations with the woman, and had paid her for the service, without receiving the same. This testimony was plainly hearsay and inadmissible.

[5] In this connection, we may, in view of the many cases arising and which will probably in the future arise under the Abatement Act, make these observations: That, while considerable latitude is allowed, and allowable, the people in the proof of a case arising under said act, there is no legal justification for a radical departure from the long-established rules of evidence to establish such a case. The act itself expressly provides that testimony of the general reputation of the place against which the action is brought—a species of hearsay testimony, quite essential, it is true, in most cases under that act and in some otherwise arising—may be received. But, however laudable the purposes of the act may be, no more in a case instituted under the provisions thereof than in any other class of cases should the established rules of evidence be relaxed. Indeed, a trial court, it seems to us, should be specially careful in the trial of such a case, for under said act the personal property of the person charged with keeping a place prohibited thereby may be confiscated and sold, and the right of the owner of the premises against which the action is directed (the action being one in rem as well as in personam) to use the same for the period of one year may be foreclosed, thus depriving the owner of the income which may be derived from the property. Hence, while the people should not be unduly hampered in a proper effort to suppress the social evil which the act was designed to eradicate, and should be accorded in the trial full legal opportunity to do so, the rules of evidence long established, and the wisdom and efficacy of which for eliciting the truth in forensic controversies involving disputed questions of fact have been well confirmed by the test of long experience, should not be twisted or distorted or departed from merely for the achievement of some special end. These observations have no application to the present case, which, generally, appears to have been well and fairly tried, but are made merely with the view of emphasizing the important proposition that neither in a case under the Abatement Act, whose penalties are indeed severe, nor in a case under any other act, should a citizen's rights be so lightly treated or regarded as that he may be deprived of them by a failure to recognize and apply those substantial forms of procedural law which are intended to protect alike the rights of individuals and those of the public.

[6] In the present case, however, the declarations of the man referred to could not have prejudiced the rights of the appellants, since there was other testimony (his presence in the room in a seminude condition with a known prostitute) which appears to have been sufficient conclusively to establish the immoral purpose for which he was in the room, a circumstance strongly supporting the charge that the place was being used for purposes of prostitution. His explanation of the reason for which he was in the woman's room, therefore, was unnecessary to be shown to prove the circumstance to which it related.

[7, 8] The second ruling was in allowing one of the police officers called as a witness for the people to testify that he had heard the testimony of the witness who had just preceded him on the stand, and that "it was correct" or true in all particulars. Of course, such a method of corroborating a witness is not proper. A witness should be examined as to the facts of which he has knowledge, and so give the adversary party an opportunity to cross-examine him and thus test the accuracy of his knowledge of the facts to which he testifies and his memory, etc. But there was so much testimony to the same point that the method adopted was not prejudicial.

[9, 10] We have now examined and disposed of all the important points to which our attention has been directed by counsel. We may well add, however, that the decree itself is without prejudice to the appellants.

There was not made, as a part of the judgment, an order, which may be made under the provisions of section 7 of the Abatement Act, directing "the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, musical instruments and movable property used in conducting, maintaining, aiding or abetting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof," or an order directing the closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose and so keeping it closed for the period of one year, etc.

It will be observed that the decree goes no further than to perpetually enjoin the defendants from allowing the building in question to be used for the purposes of prostitution or lewdness of any kind or character. In other words, the effect of the decree is merely to prevent the defendants from using the building as a place for the commission of unlawful acts, or, expressing the proposition in another form of language, the effect of the decree is only to require the defendants to obey a legislative mandate, viz. not to use their property or permit it to be used for the purposes of prostitution or other like acts of immorality. It adjudges nothing as against the defendants which is not a duty, per se, resting upon all the people of the state—a duty which the defendants, trustees, unquestionably desire and intend, and have always desired and intended, to respect and at all times religiously adhere to. Very properly, since it is apparent that the appellants at no time had any actual knowledge of the existence and maintenance of the nuisance complained of on their premises, the decree does not contain a provision or an adjudication that the appellants shall pay any of the costs of this proceeding. People v. Barbiere, 33 Cal. App. 770, 166 Pac. 812. There is therefore imposed by the decree upon the appellants no penalty in the way of costs.

The claim that the effect of the decree is to cloud the title of the appellants to the property is clearly devoid of merit. It is as obvious as any proposition can be that a judgment the only effect of which is merely to enjoin the use of real property for unlawful purposes cannot be to put a cloud upon the title to such property. Such an adjudication might affect the reputation of the property upon which it directly acts, and so cause the depreciation to some extent of the value of the property for renting or even selling purposes, but most certainly in no conceivable way can it have the effect of disparaging or affecting in the slightest way the title of the owners.

We have found no just reason for disturbing the decree, and it is accordingly affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

WEISSHAND v. CITY OF PETALUMA.

(Civ. 1803.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 18, 1918. On Petition for Rehearing, June 17, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 15, 1918.)

1. ACTION ⟸45(3)—JOINDER OF CAUSES—INJURIES TO PERSON AND TO PROPERTY—CODE.
Under Code Civ. Proc. § 427, as amended by St. 1915, p. 30, providing that causes of action for injuries to person and to property growing out of the same tort may be joined, causes of action for damages to property and injury to health arising out of the defendant city's damming up the water on plaintiff's land were properly united.

2. ACTION ⟸46—JOINDER OF CAUSES—RELIEF—INJUNCTION.
Where a complaint shows damages to property and injury to health from the flooding of plaintiff's land by the defendant city's grading of the street, and that the damage to both would be continuing, unless relieved, and that it could be relieved, a request in complaint for mandatory injunction did not work a misjoinder of actions.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸293(1) — STREET GRADING—DAMAGES—COMPLAINT.
In an action against a city for damages from the grading of a street, an allegation that defendant caused the work to be done is sufficient, where the law vests power in the city to authorize the work according to plans it adopts.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸731(5)—REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF RECORD—"BILL OF EXCEPTIONS."
A record wanting in specifications of particulars wherein evidence is claimed insufficient to justify the decision is not a "bill of exceptions," under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 648, 650, and the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings cannot be reviewed thereunder, where the full record has not been sent up as provided by section 953a.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bill of Exceptions.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸556 — REVIEW—STATEMENT ON APPEAL.
St. 1915, pp. 201–207, amending procedure as to the preparation of records on appeal, which were in force July, 1916, make no provisions for "statement on appeal"; the only methods being by bill of exceptions (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 648, 650), and the alternative method of bringing up the full record, under section 953a.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸731(5)—RECORD — BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—AIDED BY MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.
An appellant, having failed to set out in the bill of particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, is not aided by its notice of intention to move for new trial, when that, too, fails in the same particular, since a general specification is insufficient, where there is more than one finding.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸671(1)—REVIEW—RECORD — QUESTION RAISED BY FINDINGS AND ADMISSIONS OF APPELLANT.
In an action against a city for damages resulting to property in grading a street, held, that the question whether defendant was liable under the facts could be considered by reference to the facts found by the court and admissions of the defendant, appellant, although the record was deficient.

8. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸92—STREETS—GRADING—DAMAGES FROM WATER.
Where the work of grading a street was done strictly in accordance with plans and specifications adopted by defendant city, and they did not provide for drainage, and water was thereby prevented from flowing from plaintiff's land, to his damage, the city is liable.

9. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸101(1) — TAKING PROPERTY FOR PUBLIC USE — GRADING STREET.
The grading of a street by a city in a way preventing the flow of water through a natural water course, damaging plaintiff's land, constitutes an invasion of private property rights for public use without compensation, in violation of Const. art. 1, § 14, and of Const. U. S. Amend. 5.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸931(1)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EVIDENCE — FINDINGS — PRESUMPTIONS.
All findings of fact, against which the bill of exceptions contains no specifications of their being unsupported by evidence, will be presumed on appeal to be sufficiently supported by evidence.

On Rehearing.

11. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸101(1) — GRADING STREETS—DAMAGES.
Where the defendant city, in grading a street, dammed up a natural water course, backing water on plaintiff's land, rendering it necessary to raise plaintiff's house, the city is liable for the expense thus incurred.

12. TRIAL ⟸392(1)—FINDINGS — SEGREGATION OF DAMAGE—ITEMS.
In an action against a city for damages to property in grading street, a finding of fact among the conclusions of law as to the whole amount of plaintiff's damage held sufficient; it not being necessary to segregate the items of damage, in the absence of a request therefor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by Carl F. A. Weisshand against the City of Petaluma. Upon plaintiff's death, Theresa Weisshand, as executrix of his will, was substituted as plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. P. Hall, of Petaluma (E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, of counsel), for appellant. Fred S. Howell, of Petaluma, and W. D. L. Held, of Ukiah, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff's testator brought the action to recover damages alleged to have been caused by the improper grading of a street in the city of Petaluma and the consequent flooding of his land. The original plaintiff died, and Theresa Weisshand, as executrix of his last will, was substituted as plaintiff. The general facts as shown by the findings are, in substance, as follows:

The defendant, during the months of June and July, 1914, by due legal proceedings authorized and caused to be graded, filled, and improved Keller street, between Oak and West streets, in the said city of Petaluma. The plaintiff was the owner of certain premises, which abut upon the street so graded and improved; said premises having a frontage on said Keller street of 184 feet, said frontage beginning at the point of intersection of the southerly line of Kent street with the westerly line of said Keller street. The plaintiff's said lands extend through the entire block to Liberty street, and slope downward in a southerly direction from Kent street in such manner as to cause a small ditch or gully over and upon plaintiff's said lands, and into which, "for time immemorial," the flood waters and drainage of plaintiff's land flowed in an easterly direction from the said lands and over and across said Keller street. Said ditch or gully formed a natural water course over and across Keller street, and by it, for many years prior to the improvement of Keller street as above stated, the plaintiff's lands were thoroughly drained. These lands were suitable for and adapted to agricultural purposes, and for many years prior to the improvement mentioned, and down to the winter of 1914, the plaintiff had cultivated, raised, and harvested on said lands crops of green vegetables and potatoes, and had maintained thereon a full-bearing orchard, consisting of pear, apple, and prune trees, and harvested crops of fruit therefrom.

In the grading, filling and improvement of said Keller street the defendant, or the contractor to whom the contract for performing said work of improvement was awarded, filled up, dammed, and thus obstructed the lower end of said "ditch, gully, and natural water course," and raised the said dam to the height of 21 feet "which said fill extended across the entire lower and easterly side of plaintiff's lands and premises and abutted thereon. The plans and specifications adopted by said defendant for the doing of said street improvement work on Keller street make no provision for any bulkhead or retaining wall to hold or retain the said fill, and to prevent the same from caving in or sliding onto the lands of adjoining private property owners, and accordingly it was impossible to do the said work without extending the said fill, at the base thereof, at least 25 or 30 feet onto the lands of private property abutting upon said Keller street, on either side thereof, including the said lands of plaintiff. The contract for doing said work, which was duly accepted and let by said defendant, provided for a culvert 70 feet in length. A culvert of such length was obviously unfit and insufficient for any purpose whatever, for the reason that in doing said work according to the plans and specifications it was necessary to encroach upon the property of abutting private owners at least 25 feet at the base of the fill on either side of the street, in order that the surface of said street 20 feet above the lowest point of the fill could be held in place. Hence it was apparent, at the time of the doing of said work and of the adoption of the said plans and specifications and the letting of the contract for the doing of said work, that a culvert or drain at least 120 feet in length was necessary, in order that it might extend through the toe of the fill and thus permit the intake of water from the said ditch or gully on plaintiff's lands, and the exit on the other side of the street opposite to plaintiff."

The defendant failed to provide or construct a culvert, conduit, or other adequate means for carrying away the flood waters and drainage from plaintiff's lands and premises, as the same had theretofore been carried away for many years by means of the said natural water course. The result of the fill and the obstruction so caused by the defendant, and its failure or omission to provide a sufficient or adequate culvert or conduit whereby the surface waters could be carried away, was to flood and inundate the lands and premises of plaintiff to the depth of approximately 10 feet during the winters of the years 1914 and 1915, thereby causing to form on said premises a lake or mud pond, which remained upon said lands during the summers of 1915 and 1916. In the summer months of the years 1915 and 1916 said lake or pond "became filthy and contaminated with slime and scum and disease-producing bacteria, and created a stench offensive to the smell and dangerous and injurious to human health." By reason of the unsanitary and unhealthy condition arising from said polluted lake or pond, the premises of plaintiff have been greatly deteriorated in value as residence lots, into which the plaintiff intended to divide said premises and so sell the same, when he bought said premises long prior to the time at which said Keller street was graded and improved under the authority and by the direction of defendant; and because of the flooding of his premises as the result of said grading and improvement of Keller street, and the obstruction of the said natural water course as a result thereof, he was compelled to raise his dwelling house several feet, in order to prevent the surface waters accumulating upon his premises from flowing therein; that, by reason of the conditions above described, and which were created by the acts of the defendant in grading and improving Keller street, and in omitting to establish adequate means for carrying off the surface waters from and draining said premises, the plaintiff has been deprived of the use of his said premises for raising and harvesting fruits and vegetables thereon; that his orchard has been destroyed; that the waters standing upon plaintiff's lands and premises as aforesaid, during the summers of 1915 and 1916, became stagnant and contaminated, and said unhealthy condition of said lands "is liable to subject plaintiff to continuing damage, and is dangerous to public health in the neighboring district."

While the plans and specifications adopted by the defendant for the grading and improvement of Keller street did provide for an 8-inch corrugated iron culvert 70 feet in length at the bottom of the fill, yet, so the court found, "from said plans and specifications it was obvious that a culvert of such length and size was wholly inadequate, and would serve no purpose whatever, for the reason that the plans as adopted for such improvement would reasonably have required a bulkhead or retaining wall to prevent said street from caving in or sliding onto the lands of adjoining property owners, or in the absence thereof would reasonably have required a drain pipe of at least 120 feet in length, in order that the intake and outlet thereof would have cleared the toe of the embankment, so as to have permitted water to flow through the same."

The defendant demurred to the complaint on both general and special grounds. The special grounds of demurrer involve, among other special objections, an attack upon the complaint for the reason, as set forth in the demurrer, that there are therein several causes of action improperly united and not separately stated. The particular objection on special grounds is that a cause of action for injury to property and a cause of action for personal injury are united in said complaint, and also that a cause of action for damages is improperly united with a cause of action for an injunction.

The demurrer having been overruled, the defendant answered, by denials of the material facts stated in the complaint, and by an amendment of the answer set up a special defense by way of an estoppel—it being alleged that the plans and specifications adopted by the defendant for the construction of the work referred to above provided an ample drain for carrying away the surface waters from plaintiff's lands and for the placing of the said drain in a proper place to accomplish that purpose; that the same was suitable and proper to carry away all of said surface waters, but that the plaintiff requested the contractor and superintendent of streets to change and alter, and upon such request the latter did change and alter, the location of said drain pipe, and place the same at an elevation above the location adopted by said defendant; that plaintiff requested and directed said contractor to dump and deposit the unused dirt and earth caused by the construction of said street onto his land on the west side of Keller street, and at the request of plaintiff said contractor did dump and deposit a large quantity of dirt and earth thereon, by reason whereof the end of said drain pipe was filled up.

The court found that the damage suffered by the plaintiff amounted in money to the sum of $475, of which the sum of $100 constituted the expense necessarily incurred in raising plaintiff's dwelling house to a height which would prevent the flowing of the surface or flood waters therein. Judgment was entered accordingly, and also that the defendant be required to place a suitable drain or culvert of sufficient size and length through and over Keller street as will effectually drain and carry away the surface waters from plaintiff's lands. The appeal is prosecuted by the defendant from said judgment.

As to the special defense that the plaintiff consented to and directed the change in the location of the drain pipe, and instructed the contractor and superintendent of streets to deposit the unused earth upon his premises, the court found:

"That the plaintiff did not request or instruct the contractor or superintendent of streets or any other person to change or alter the proposed location of said drain pipe, or to place the same at an elevation above that adopted by said defendant in the plans and specifications; that the said drain pipe was not located and placed in the position where the same now is, to wit, at a point one foot above the lowest part of plaintiff's premises, at the special instance and request of plaintiff; that plaintiff did not request or direct the said contractor or any other person to dump or deposit the unused earth and dirt caused by the construction of said street on his said lands on the west side of Keller street."

[1] The first point urged for a reversal grows out of the order overruling the demurrer. The defendant claims that the complaint is clearly amenable to the objection that in it are improperly united a cause of action for injury to property and a cause of action for injury to person. It is further claimed, as seen, that it is obnoxious to the same objection, because a cause of action for damages and a cause of action for injunctive relief are united. Section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by the Legislature of 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 30), provides, among other things, that:

"Causes of action for injuries to person and injuries to property, growing out of the same tort, may be joined in the same complaint, and it is not required that they be stated separately."

It is clear from the averments of the complaint that the two causes of action—one for damages to property and the other for injury to health—grew out of and are the direct result of the same tort; hence the objection to the complaint upon that ground is obviously without force.

[2] Nor was it improper to unite a cause of action for damages with a cause of action for injunctive relief. That a party is entitled to sue for any relief which properly comes within the facts stated in his pleading is an elementary rule in our practice and procedure. The specific relief asked for is in the nature of a mandatory injunction. The complaint clearly enough discloses by its averments that, if the condition existing on plaintiff's premises, which was created by the manner in which the street was authorized and caused to be improved by the defendant, continued, it would result, not only in permanent injury to plaintiff's freehold, but would operate as a continuing menace to the health of the plaintiff and the people of the neighborhood of the premises affected; and from the averments of the complaint it is clear that the condition in which the defendant left the premises of the plaintiff could be corrected or changed, so that neither the property nor the health of plaintiff and others residing in his neighborhood would be injured. There is nothing said, in Rooney v. Gray Bros., 145 Cal. 753, 79 Pac. 523, which militates against the conclusion thus announced. The demurrer on special grounds was properly overruled.

[3] It is next contended that the general demurrer should have been sustained, for the reason that it does not disclose that the grading and the improvement of Keller street was done by the defendant and that it is responsible for the damage to plaintiff's property. The complaint merely alleges that the defendant caused the work to be done. We think that this allegation was sufficient to indicate that the work was done under the direct authority of the defendant. The case of Krause v. Sacramento, 48 Cal. 221, cited by the appellant, does not support the view that the complaint in this case should fall because it fails directly to state that the work was done by the direct authority of the defendant, although such a statement, it must be admitted, would have improved that pleading. At the time of the decision of the Krause Case (see, also, O'Hale v. Sacramento, 48 Cal. 212), the charter of the city of Sacramento provided that the work of improving streets and constructing sewers should be done by contract, except in certain cases as to the first-mentioned character of street improvement, where the street commissioner might have required the work to be done by the owners of abutting lots. Under the present general state laws authorizing the improvement of streets in municipalities, under which the improvement herein involved was admittedly done, power is expressly conferred upon the governing or legislative boards or bodies of municipalities to order such work to be done according to plans and specifications prepared under their direction and adopted by them. Therefore, in considering the complaint here, we must view it by the light of the power vested by law in the defendant as a municipal corporation to authorize such work to be done according to plans adopted by it, and thus viewing the complaint the averment that the defendant caused the work complained of herein to be done plainly means that the work was done by its direction and according to plans and specifications adopted by it for that purpose.

[4, 5] It is further insisted, however, that under no view of the evidence can the defendant be held liable for the damages claimed by the plaintiff in the complaint. But, in so far as this proposition involves the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, there is no proper record for the review thereof. The form of the record here is not a statement on appeal, for, as we will show, there is now no statement on appeal. Nor is it a bill of exceptions, because it is wanting in one of the essential requisites of a bill of exceptions, viz. a specification of the particulars wherein it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision. Code Civ. Proc., § 648; Coveny v. Hale, 49 Cal. 552; Watson v. San Francisco H. B. R. Co., 50 Cal. 523; Bonner v. Quackenbush, 51 Cal. 180; Eltzroth v. Ryan, 89 Cal. 135, 140, 26 Pac. 647; Winterburn v. Chambers, 91 Cal. 170, 185, 27 Pac. 658; Commercial Bank v. Redfield, 122 Cal. 405, 55 Pac. 160, 772; Estate of Behrens, 130 Cal. 416, 418, 62 Pac. 603.

This action was instituted in the month of July, 1916. The Legislature of 1915 so amended the procedure as to the preparation of records on appeal that, at the present time and at the time this action was commenced, there is and was no provision in our law for a "statement on appeal." See Stats. 1915, pp. 201 to 207, inclusive. The result is that, since the changes made by the Legislature of 1915, above referred to, there are two methods only whereby the evidence may be brought up for consideration and review, on appeal, to wit: (1) By a bill of exceptions, as provided by sections 648 and 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) under what is commonly known as the alternative method, as provided by section 953a of said Code.

It is obvious that the record here was not prepared in pursuance of the provisions of section 953a. Indeed, it is not pretended that the record was prepared under said section; but, to the contrary, counsel designate it as a "statement on appeal after a denial of motion for a new trial, made on the minutes of the court." But, as shown, there is no such a record on appeal now, and the record here was evidently intended as a bill of exceptions, and is in legal effect, if anything at all, a purported bill of exceptions, but, as stated, is fatally deficient as such, in that the particulars in which it is claimed that the evidence does not support the findings are not specified as required by the Code section above named.

[6, 7] Nor is appellant aided in the matter by its notice of intention to move for a new trial, since therein it has also failed specifically to point out the particulars in which it claims the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision. And a general specification is insufficient where there is more than one finding. See cases above cited and also Matter of Baker, 153 Cal. 537, 541, 96 Pac. 12; Hawley v. Harrington, 152 Cal. 188, 92 Pac. 177; Meek v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 7 Cal. App. 606, 95 Pac. 166; Dawson v. Schloss, 93

Cal. 194, 29 Pac. 31; De Molera v. Martin, 120 Cal. 544, 546, 52 Pac. 825. It follows that it must be assumed by this court that all the findings of fact have been correctly found or were based on sufficient evidence. Winterburn v. Winters, supra.

[8] But the point made by the appellant, that the defendant is not, under the facts, liable for the damage sustained by the plaintiff, may be considered by reference to the facts as found by the court and certain admissions by the defendant. The contention is that the case here falls within the rule enunciated and applied in the case of Sievers v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 648, 47 Pac. 687, 56 Am. St. Rep. 153. In that case a contract had been let, after due legal proceedings by the authorities, to grade Van Ness avenue, in the city of San Francisco, to the "official grade," which was 75 feet above base. A futile attempt had been made by the supervisors to change the grade to 83 feet above base. The city engineer and surveyor, whose duty it was to furnish grade lines and levels (Stats. 1891, p. 206), assumed 83 feet to be the official grade, and the contractor filled in accordingly. The result of going beyond the true grade was to dam a well-defined channel through which surface water had always flowed, and back the water upon the land of plaintiff, doing the damage complained of. It was conceded that no such consequence would have followed the grading of the street to the official grade of 75 feet above base. Action against the city of San Francisco was brought by plaintiff for the damage thus occasioned to his premises; the complaint averring that the city wrongfully caused and procured the crossing to be filled with soil, sand, and rock to a height of 83 feet above base. A nonsuit was granted by the trial court upon the showing thus made, and an appeal from the judgment of nonsuit was rejected by the Supreme Court. The court in that case said:

"It does not appear that the supervisors, in any of their proceedings, called for any grading except 'to the official grade and line.' The bids were received under this call, and the contract ran in the same language. Precisely as in Warren v. Riddell, supra, the contractors, through error induced by the city surveyor, or superintendent of streets, or by both, graded 6 or 8 feet above the line called for by the contract. The extra 6 or 8 feet of filling, which alone it is admitted caused the injury, were not placed under any contract with, or directions from, the city. The case, then, differs radically from the many cited and relied upon by appellant, where the injury has resulted from work done for, and as directed by, the municipal authorities. Thus, in Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492 [6 Pac. 317], 56 Am. Rep 109, the injury resulted from street filling done exactly in accordance with the contract. In Conniff v. San Francisco, 67 Cal. 45 [7 Pac. 41], Montgomery avenue was graded as the city directed. But the work dammed a natural water course, and the city was held responsible for the resulting injury to property. In Spangler v. San Francisco, 84 Cal. 12 [23 Pac. 1091], 18 Am. St. Rep. 158, the city had diverted the waters flowing in a natural waterway into a sewer, and had negligently permitted the sewer to fall into a defective condition, whereby the escaping waters caused damage, for which the city was held liable. In Eachus v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614 [37 Pac. 750], 42 Am. St. Rep. 149, the grading was properly done to the official grade, but, for resulting damages, defendant was held responsible. In Tyler v. Tehama County, 109 Cal. 618 [42 Pac. 240], a bridge was built as and where the supervisors directed. But it was constructed upon private property, for the injury to which the owner received compensation. In all of these cases, the act or omission had the sanction, express or implied, of the municipal authorities. In the case at bar, the injury resulted from the act of the contractor, neither contemplated nor called for by the supervisors."

In this case the findings disclose, as above shown, that the work of improvement was done strictly in accordance with plans and specifications adopted by the defendant for the work, but that said plans and specifications did not provide for adequate means for taking care of the surface waters accumulating on plaintiff's lands. Moreover, counsel for defendant, at the trial, stipulated that the work was done by the contractor according to said plans and specifications, and in their brief on file herein practically admitted such to be the fact in the following language:

"The work done on Keller street, which resulted in the damming up of the so-called water course on the Weisshand property, was a work of public improvement, done under the general laws of the state of California. All of the proceedings leading up to the work were legal and regular in character. The contract was let and the work was to be done in accordance with plans and specifications adopted by the council of the city of Petaluma."

It is nowhere made to appear that the improvement was not done in accordance with the plans and specifications adopted by the defendant therefor. Herein, therefore, lies the distinction between the Sievers Case, relied upon by the appellant, and the present case. The facts of the case here, in other words, bring it within the doctrine announced in Reardon v. City of San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 6 Pac. 317, 56 Am. Rep. 109; Conniff v. San Francisco, 67 Cal. 45, 7 Pac. 41; Spangler v. San Francisco, 84 Cal. 12, 23 Pac. 1091, 18 Am. St. Rep. 158; Eachus v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149, and Tyler v. Tehama County, 109 Cal. 618, 42 Pac. 240, all cited in Sievers v. San Francisco, supra, and therein differentiated from the Sievers Case upon precisely the same reason that the latter case is to be differentiated from this.

[9, 10] In Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 789, 127 Pac. 50, 53, the court said:

"Upon the other hand, if the act is one commanded by the municipality itself, if inherently wrong, the municipality and the agent who performed will both be liable."

Again, in that case the court, at the same page, says:

"One important principle, however, is to be noted in this connection. Wherever the injury complained of is the taking or damaging of private property for public use without compensation, then under the guaranty of the federal Constitution against such invasion of the private rights of property, neither the state itself nor any of its agencies or mandatories may claim exemption from liability. Amendment Const. U. S. art. 5; Hopkins v. Clemson College, 221 U. S. 636 [31 Sup. Ct. 654, 55 L. Ed. 890, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243]."

And it might therein have been added, as we here suggest, that such invasion of the private rights of property is also violative of section 14 of article 1 of our own state Constitution, upon which the right of a person to be compensated in damages for injury to his freehold resulting from the act of a municipality in making a public improvement was sustained in Reardon v. City of San Francisco, supra, and in the other cases above named.

The point as to an estoppel is covered by what is said above, that "all findings of fact against which the bill of exceptions contains no specification of their being unsupported by the evidence," we are authorized to presume derive sufficient support from the evidence.

The same reply is to be returned to the contention that the amount of damages awarded by the jury is excessive. The points last made are as to rulings of the court admitting certain evidence. These rulings we have examined and have not found them subject to the objections urged against them.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Petitioning for a rehearing of this cause, counsel for the appellant insist that we were mistaken in the statement contained in the former opinion filed herein that:

"The court found that the damage suffered by the plaintiff amounted in money to the sum of $475, of which the sum of $100 constituted the expense necessarily incurred in the raising of plaintiff's dwelling house to a height which would prevent the flowing of the surface or flood waters thereon."

[11] It is argued that the reference by the trial court in its findings to the raising of the house, at a cost of $100, "is not a finding as to damage, for the reason that the property may have been worth more after the house was raised at this expense than it was even before the alleged flooding." It is further contended that the alleged finding in the conclusions of law that "plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $475 is purely a conclusion of law, which must be drawn, if drawn at all, from a reading of the findings of fact and conclusions of law in their entirety."

As to the first proposition, a ready reply thereto is that it can make no difference what the effect of raising the dwelling house upon its value was, if, as the court found, the raising of the house and the expense necessarily incident thereto were absolutely required to prevent the overflow water from entering the dwelling. If a man purposely or negligently sets fire to another's house, and it is wholly or only in part destroyed, it would obviously be no answer to a claim against the wrongdoer for damages for causing the injury so inflicted to say or show that, in rebuilding the house or patching up the portions burned, the owner had thereby become the possessor of a better house than he had before the fire.

[12] With respect to the second proposition, it is to be observed that, while the specific finding of the total damage suffered by the plaintiff is among the "conclusions of law," the finding may nevertheless be treated as a finding of fact as well as a conclusion of law. Counsel in their petition concede that:

"A finding of fact, even though improperly included in what is generally denominated 'conclusions of law,' will be held to be, nevertheless, a finding of fact, if it is in fact clearly and unequivocally made."

But it is contended that the finding is equivocal, and it is argued that "where it is equivocal, and may be either a finding of fact or a conclusion of law, the appellate court will not take it out of the place where it was put by the trial court, but will give it the same effect as the trial court gave it," citing Figg v. Mayo, 39 Cal. 265, where it is said: "In such cases, where the facts are so obscurely found or are so blended with legal conclusions as to render it doubtful whether the facts are only hypothetically stated, we must disregard it as a finding of fact."

There is nothing equivocal or obscure in the finding in question. Particularly is this true when viewing it in connection with the specific finding that the trees, orchard, vegetables, etc., were damaged by the acts of the appellant, in addition to the damage of $100 suffered by reason of being compelled to raise the dwelling, as above indicated. It involves an unobscure, unequivocal statement that, for all the damage specifically found to have been inflicted upon his property, the plaintiff had suffered in the aggregate damages in the sum of $475. This sum is far below that claimed in the complaint, and, so far as we may determine from the findings, the amount found as damages is not excessive. But, to support the judgment, we do not think it absolutely necessary that the findings should contain a segregation of the several items of damage alleged in the complaint, in the absence of a request for such segregation. Foley v. Martin, 142 Cal. 260, 261, 71 Pac. 165, 75 Pac. 842, 100 Am. St. Rep. 123.

Of course, our conclusion here is not to be accepted as an unqualified approval of findings of the character of those in the present case, where, as here, there are presented by the pleading several different issues upon the matter of the damage complained of. Still, we cannot persuade ourselves that, conceding, for the sake of the argument, the findings should have been more specific as to the damages suffered by the plaintiff, the appellant has been prejudiced thereby, since the findings clearly show that the plaintiff's property was seriously damaged by the acts of appellant and since, furthermore, the damages awarded are far below those claimed. Code Civ. Proc. § 475.

We are satisfied with the conclusion announced in our former opinion in other respects.

The petition is denied.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

HART v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 8780.) (Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1918.) In Bank. Application by Loretta B. Hart for a writ of prohibition against the Railroad Commission of the State of California and others. Application denied. Wm. H. H. Hart and T. John Butler, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The within application for a writ of prohibition is denied. See section 67, Public Utilities Act (St. 1915, p. 161); Sexton v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 173 Cal. 760, 761–765, 161 Pac. 748.

37 Cal. App. 683

PEOPLE v. FLACCO. (Cr. 441.) (District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 27, 1918.) Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge. Stefano Flacco was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed. A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. There has been no appearance in this court for appellant. An examination of the record thoroughly convinces us that he was fairly tried and justly convicted. The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

HEYDENFELDT et al. v. OSMONT et al.
(S. F. 7954.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 3, 1918. Rehearing Denied Oct. 3, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸843(2)—REVIEW—MATTERS NOT NECESSARY.

The reviewing court need not concern itself with other findings, where fraud is essential to recovery, and the finding of its absence is supported by the evidence.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸315(5)—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—OMNIBUS CLAUSE.

Decree in terms distributing the residue known or hereafter known or discovered passes title to land omitted from particular description.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸315(6)—DISTRIBUTION—DECREE UNDER AGREEMENT.

Decree of distribution made under a compromise agreement is a contemporaneous interpretation thereof to which the parties agreed, and so may not afterwards be complained of by them; they having known or had the means of knowing its terms and their significance.

4. FRAUD ⟸17—SILENCE—CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS.

In the absence of confidential relations, mere silence without fraudulent acts or omissions connected therewith is not unconscionable.

5. TRUSTS ⟸103(4)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—FRAUD.

There was no fraud against devisees, giving rise to a constructive trust, from the fact that, in the distribution of the estate, under a compromise agreement, under which there was decreed to an attorney, who had previously represented heirs given nothing by the will, the residue, known or hereafter known, such attorney failed to disclose his knowledge, acquired from papers in the executors' possession of lands belonging to the estate, but not listed.

6. TRUSTS ⟸95—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—SUBSEQUENT ACTS.

Where there was no fraud in defendants' procurement of a decree distributing to them the residue of an estate, there was no ground for the impressment of a trust in favor of plaintiffs because of subsequent concealment by defendants of their claim of title.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt and others against Augusta C. Osmont and others. From an adverse judgment and order denying motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Edward E. Cothran, James G. Maguire and R. P. Henshall, all of San Francisco, for appellants. Drown, Leicester & Drown, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiffs, who are appellants here, began this action in equity in which they prayed for a judgment declaring that defendants hold only the bare legal title to five parcels of real property in the city and county of San Francisco. Plaintiffs also asked for judgment that defendants have no right, title, or interest in the property, and they prayed also for general equitable relief. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying the motion of plaintiffs for a new trial.

The basis of this litigation is the same fraud on the part of the predecessor of defendants which these plaintiffs sought unsuccessfully to set up in their petition to vacate the judgment in a suit quieting the title of the successors of Thomas M. Osmont to this very property. Osmont v. All Persons, 165 Cal. 587, 133 Pac. 480. Although many of the allegations contained in the complaint in this case are essentially the same as those pleaded in the petition considered by this court on the appeal in the case cited above, it may be well to outline briefly the circumstances leading to this litigation.

The controversy in this action involves only the fee-simple title to the reversion in certain "city slip lots" following the expiration of the grant from the state of California to the use and occupation of the property for 99 years after March 26, 1851. The record reveals the following facts: Solomon Heydenfeldt died testate in 1890, owning at the time of his death the fee-simple title to the land here in controversy, subject to the grant above specified. His will contained a residuary clause, devising and bequeathing to his wife, Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt, a life estate in all property not otherwise disposed of, with remainder over to her children (the other plaintiffs herein), said property to be distributed to them share and share alike at the death of their mother unless by her will she should make a different and unequal distribution. Litigation arose over the estate, and was in progress for a number of years. In it Thomas M. Osmont, Esq., an attorney and counselor at law, represented Thomas O. Heydenfeldt and Zeila O. Hellings, who were children and heirs (but not devisees or legatees) of Solomon Heydenfeldt, deceased. In 1901 a compromise agreement was made whereby the devisees, legatees, heirs at law, and others who had claims against some of them bound themselves to abide by a certain settlement and adjustment of all litigation and of their respective shares of the estate. This agreement contemplated the filing of a petition for final distribution in the Estate of Heydenfeldt, praying for division of all the property in accordance with the terms of said contract. One of the claims against Mr. Osmont's former clients was for fees. This was made, however, by his assignee, G. H. Mangels, who was his clerk. In the compromise and the negotiations and court proceedings connected therewith Mr. Osmont appeared as attorney for said Mangels. It is cheerfully conceded by appellants that:

"At all times pending the administration and settlement of the estate of Solomon Heydenfeldt, deceased, and at the time of the execution of said compromise agreement and of the making of the decree of distribution of said estate, all the attorneys of all the parties were in a position to ascertain the right, title, and interest of Solomon Heydenfeldt, deceased, as disclosed by the public records."
